The resolution expressed satisfaction that the party "fully represents farmers, workers and other liberally-minded groups and individuals," and commended it "not only to organized labor, but to all sections of our society, as a party capable of serving faithfully the best interests of all the people of Canada."

The first impetus toward formation of the NDP was voted by the 1958 CLC convention in Winnipeg, Man., which instructed officers to sound out the Co-Operative Commonwealth Federation, farm groups and other liberals on setting up an "effective alternative" to the older political parties. The response was favorable, and two years ago, in Montreal, the following CLC convention authorized the officers to go ahead with formation of the party.

The founding convention was held in Ottawa last August. Eamon Park, assistant Canadian director of the Steelworkers and chairman of the convention Political Education Committee, called the resolution the culmination of the 1958 decision.

He said the objective in the first year was the affiliation of unions with 200,000 members; some eight months after the founding convention, he continued, "more than 175,000" had affiliated.

Unions Pay Per Caps

The CLC itself does not affiliate to the NDP. Local unions, which do, pay 5 cents per month per member, with a proviso permitting individual dissenters to contract out. Individual NDP membership is $2.50 annually.

Earlier the delegates had weighed problems posed for some Canadians by provisos restricting political action in the constitutions of some unions with headquarters in the U. S. They directed CLC officers to take up with the AFL-CIO-CLC Liaison Committee "the amendment of union constitutions so as to give Canadian unions political freedom."

NDP National Leader Thomas C. Douglas, former CCF premier of Saskatchewan, was cheered repeatedly as he urged support for the new party and tore into the Chamber of Commerce's "Operation Freedom," which he characterized as an effort to "perpetuate the myth of alleged economic freedom" under "supposed free, competitive enterprise."

"Our country cannot survive politically free and economically enslaved," he said, declaring that only the NDP can supply leadership in planning for social and economic goals.

Pres. Arne Geijer of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions said that the good relations labor and management enjoy in his native Sweden rest in the final analysis on labor's political strength. Geijer, who thanked the CLC for its support of the ICFTU Intl. Solidarity Fund, was presented with a check for $25,000 by Sec.Treas. Donald MacDonald which raised to $75,000 the payments on a pledge of $200,000.

The fraternal delegates of the British Trade Union Congress, Pres. J. H. Southall of the National Union of Mineworkers and Pres. J. L. Simons of the Locomotive Engineers & Firemen, congratulated the CLC on getting into the political field.

Canadian Minister of Labor Michael Starr strongly endorsed the recent proposal of Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers for a program of retraining production workers whose jobs have vanished for white collar work.

In other resolutions, the convention rejected efforts to open the CLC doors to Communist-dominated unions and upheld the Steelworkers in its fight for workers represented by the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; urged broad programs of tax reform and housing; called for a comprehensive health care plan; demanded federal inspection of all meats; denounced "monopolistic" control of press, radio and TV; approved a far-reaching campaign to organize white collar workers and asked for full disclosure of the true interest rate on consumer credit.

Pres. Claude Jodoin was re-elected by a 695-152 vote over G. L. Lambert of Auto Workers Local 199, St. Catharines, Ont. MacDonald and Executive Vice Pres. William Dodge were re-elected without opposition. Joe Morris, Woodworkers' West Coast district president, was unanimously chosen for the other executive vice presidency in place of Stanley Knowles of the Typographical Union, who is NDP candidate for Parliament from a Winnipeg district.

The Carpenters delegation walked out of the convention in dissatisfaction with a CLC executive council report that did not reach the floor until the following day on a dispute with the IWA over organizing Newfoundland loggers.

James Black, AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. director for Eastern Canada, said after a meeting of building trades delegates that issues involved would be considered by the department's executive council, already scheduled to meet in Washington on Apr. 24.

OVERALL VIEW shows Pres. Claude Jodoin presiding at a session of the fourth biennial convention of the Canadian Labor Congress in Vancouver, B. C. Others on the platform are CLC vice presidents and guest speakers.

CLC Calls for Peace 'In Freedom, Justice'

Vancouver, B. C.—The Canadian government was urged to work for peace in freedom and justice with "vigor, imagination and utmost perseverance" in a carefully-phrased resolution on international affairs passed after more than an hour of debate by the Canadian Labor Congress convention.

On cessation of nuclear weapons testing, the delegates asked for "the necessary control and enforcement measures, to be adhered to and observed by all nations with atomic capability." This is a major objective of the United States and Great Britain in current negotiations with the Soviet Union.

"Ideally the best defense against a thermonuclear war with all its consequences," the resolution added, "is general, simultaneous and complete disarmament."

A section of the resolution that touched off considerable debate called on Canada to join the Organization of American States, "ending thereby the isolation of our country in the western hemisphere of which we are an integral and inseparable part."

Opposition to this proposal came from Communist-oriented delegates and was beaten down.

OAS Record Cited

James Bury, of the Toronto Packinghouse Workers, who formerly was education director for the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), declared the OAS was making "a positive contribution to lifting the standards of living of the people" and asserted that Canada can do more inside OAS than out. Pres. Stanley Little of the National Union of Public Service Employes, who recently spent several weeks in Latin America, said workers there "can't understand" why Canada is not in the OAS.

In other areas the resolution:

- Proclaimed the United Nations "the best hope of progress for a lasting peace" and urged the government to back it and its agencies.
- Warned that Canada "cannot disarm on her own while the rest of the world remains armed," but deplored the equipping of Canadian forces with tactical nuclear weapon carriers, and asserted that "Canada does not need and cannot maintain atomic weapons."
- Urged the government to spend at least 1 percent of the national income for aid to economically less-developed nations and branded aid already given such nations "inadequate and insufficient."
- Called for reopening of formal negotiations on German unity based on self-determination, and preservation of the freedom of West Berlin with free access controlled by the four powers.
- Asked peace between Israel and the Arab states based on the former's territorial integrity, removal of the economic blockade and "substantial assistance" to economic development of the entire Middle East.
- Reiterated the stand of past conventions for recognition of Red China and its admission to the UN, and at the same time demanded preservation of India's borders, "under attack by the People's Republic of China."
- Opposed outside military intervention in Cuba and the severance of normal non-strategic trade and diplomatic relations.

4-21-62

IUD Presents IUE With Data On Radiation

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has presented the first library of books and documents relating to industrial radiation hazards to the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' General Electric Conference Board.

The presentation was made by James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the IUD and president of the IUE, at an IUD safety training course for atomic energy workers employed at GE's Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory in Schenectady, N. Y.

Carey said the material had been obtained from the World Health Organization, the U.S. Public Health Service, the Atomic Energy Commission and the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy. He said it would give affiliated locals the best material available on the subject and would help their members "understand the steps they must take to protect themselves, their families, and their communities."

The IUD Atomic Energy Technical Committee, Carey said, will supply on request a bibliography of the material in the library, all of which is available to interested groups.

Victoria Union Leader Dies at CLC Parley

Vancouver, B. C.—Victor Midgley, 48, an international representative of the Carpenters and a prominent Victoria, B. C., labor leader, died of a heart attack during the Canadian Labor Congress convention here.

Shortly before he was stricken, he had been named secretary of the convention organizing committee. The delegates observed a minute of silence in his memory upon announcement of his death. A widow, two sons and two daughters survive.

Labor to Open Official UN 'Friendship' Post

New York—An AFL-CIO "friendship" office, devoted to maintaining liaison with trade unionists who may be members of government delegations to the United Nations, will be opened officially Apr. 23, with a reception and luncheon for UN delegations, UN secretariat members and AFL-CIO leaders.

Honorary chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee for the United Nations Inc. is federation Pres. George Meany, who will attend the luncheon. Toastmaster will be Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., president of the New York City Central Labor Council and chairman of labor's UN Committee. A guest at the opening ceremonies will be Omer Becu, general secretary, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The office is being financed jointly by the national AFL-CIO and the city labor council, representing close to 1 million members of AFL-CIO unions in the metropolitan area.

A major purpose is to introduce UN delegates from foreign countries to the American labor movement, particularly those who have a trade union background and interest. Among many UN delegations are government officials, notably from Africa Asia and Europe, who entered public life via trade union activity. In addition, some government delegations on a temporary basis frequently include as delegates and advisers trade union officials.

The committee will be used also to establish social relationships among delegates with New York City unions.

The New York council will be primarily responsible for developing the liaison. It will be assisted by Irving Brown, former AFL-CIO overseas representative, who is now spokesman at the United Nations of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Labor Dept. Issues '62 Union Directory

A new edition of the Labor Dept.'s biennial directory of labor unions in the United States is off the press, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has announced. Copies may be purchased at 50 cents each from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

The directory lists the address, phone number and other information on national and international unions; a survey of union membership; the names of AFL-CIO state and national representatives; and an index of unions and principal officers.

The directory reports 18.1 million members as of 1960 in 184 unions. It lists about 1.1 million outside the U.S. and mainly in Canada who are affiliated with U.S.-headquartered unions.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII — Issued weekly at Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year — Saturday, April 28, 1962 — 17 — No. 17

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

Fraud Charge Filed On 'Work' Petitions

Signatures Contested By Oklahoma Group

Tulsa—Oklahoma sponsors of a so-called "right-to-work" constitutional amendment have been accused by opponents of "misrepresentation and fraud" in collecting signatures to put the proposal on the November election ballot.

The "right-to-work" group filed petitions containing 213,716 signatures, some 77,000 more than the minimum required for an initiative. But opponents, in a formal protest, charged that the number of valid signatures was actually below the legal requirement of approximately 137,000. Oklahoma Sec. of State William N. Christian scheduled a hearing for May 11.

The protest, signed by a group of union, business, farm and professional leaders in the state, marked the third stage in the battle against the effort to impose a union shop ban in Oklahoma.

See pictures on Page 6.

Right-wing groups were rebuffed last year when the Oklahoma legislature buried "right-to-work" proposals in committee and rejected repeated efforts by proponents to force them to the floor.

The next stage came when a petition campaign was launched after a new U.S. Chamber of Commerce Committee for Voluntary Unionism held its first meeting in Oklahoma City and met with a group called Oklahomans for 'Right-to-Work' to plan the signature drive.

Joining the State AFL-CIO in a counter-attack on the "right-to-work" drive was a citizens group including educators, clergymen and other civic leaders. Through this group, known as Oklahoma Citizens to Preserve Free Marketing & Bargaining, hundreds of thousands of pamphlets and leaflets were distributed—door to door, through the mail, and at shopping centers—

(Continued on Page 8)

Porters Get Backing on Workweek

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has voted organized labor's full support to the Sleeping Car Porters in national negotiations for a shorter work month, job protection and income security.

The union is seeking a work month of 173 hours—the equivalent of a 40-hour week—for members who now work in excess of 200 hours a month.

Its proposals, the Executive Council said, "come well within the framework of the moral principle of equity" and "will pose no inflationary threat to the nation." The cut in the work month, it added, fits in with standard practices on railroads and in U.S. industry generally.

The backing was given by the council at its quarterly meeting Apr. 26 in Washington. The Sleeping Car Porters are bargaining with the Pullman Co. and three major railroads—New York Central System, Rock Island and Soo Line.

The achievement of the union's goals, the council said in a resolution, "will strengthen the entire economy, as well as benefit all of the American people, by increasing job opportunities for railway porters and attendants now furloughed as a result of sharp decreases in passenger-train operations."

The resolution continued:

"If the U.S. is to demonstrate to the peoples of the world that our democratic processes, in industry as well as in politics, provide an equitable and continuous rising standard of living within the area of freedom and justice for workers . . . as opposed to the methods, tactics and strategy of Communist or fascist totalitarianism, then it is imperative that the Pullman Co. and the railroad companies recognize their socio-economic responsibilities."

Vote Drive Launched By COPE

The AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education kicks off its 1962 register-and-vote campaign with a Big Cities Conference in Washington Apr. 30-May 2.

The conference, expected by COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt to draw delegates from labor central bodies in the nation's 30 largest cities and 21 states, coincides with the opening of COPE Dollar Drive Month as designated by the federation's Executive Council.

"The outcome of the important November congressional elections could well be decided in May . . . by the amount of voluntary dollars contributed to COPE by union members," McDevitt observed.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will address the opening meeting of the Big Cities Conference, devoted largely to workshop sessions, discussion and exchange of ideas.

"The twin purposes of this conference," McDevitt said, "are to help our registration and vote campaigns assure maximum participation by union members . . . and to help elect good candidates."

He said other conferences are

(Continued on Page 2)

MARY ELLEN ROBINSON

EDWARD M. HOLPUCH, JR.

RICHARD J. HASHER

PAUL I. MEYER

JOHN D. FERRELL

PAUL C. JEFFERSON

4th Annual Awards:

Six Win AFL-CIO Merit Scholarships

Six students—a girl and five boys—who will be graduated from high schools in June have been awarded 1962 AFL-CIO college merit scholarships.

The winners, picked on the basis of competitive tests conducted by the National Merit Scholarship Corp., raise to 24 the number of awards made since the program was inaugurated in 1959. In accordance with past practice, two scholarships were awarded in each of three geographical sectors of the country.

Selected from both union and non-union families for awards ranging up to $1,500 a year, the winners were:

John Daniel Ferrell, 18, Walnut Ridge, Ark., son of Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt Ferrell of Walnut Ridge. His mother is a member of Ladies' Garment Workers Local 579. The youth, regarded by his teachers at Walnut Ridge High School as an exceptionally superior student, has distinguished himself in the field of mathematics and expects to attend Harvard University in preparation for a teaching career.

Richard J. Hasher, 18, Euclid, O., whose late father, Irving, was a member of the Meat Cutters when he died in May 1960 and whose mother is employed by the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Talented as a creative writer, he also played football at Euclid High School, edited the school yearbook and led the tuba section of the school concert

(Continued on Page 8)

Living Costs At New High In March

Increases in the cost of medicine and medical care services helped send the consumer price index to a new high in March for the second straight month.

Helping move the index to 105, a two-tenths of 1 percent increase over February, was the higher cost of women's and girls' apparel, mainly spring wear, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

The medical care index has increased by about 3 percent from March 1961 levels, the report said, "mainly because of higher prices for all medical services."

(Continued on Page 2)

$1 Million Goes to Underpaid Workers

Albany, N. Y.—The New York State Labor Dept. has reported collections of more than $1 million from employers last year for back pay to meet standards of the state's minimum wage law.

The record collection was attributed to the broadening of the state's wage-hour law in 1960 by including employes of non-profit institutions. The state law protects workers in establishments not covered by the federal minimum wage act.

Last year 7,334 firms were found to have underpaid a total of 26,779 workers.

U.S. Warns Two Firms On Race Bias in Jobs

The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity has notified two companies that they will be required to undergo non-discrimination compliance reviews before being awarded government contracts.

The firms are the Comet Rice Mills with plants in Houston and Beaumont, Tex.; Stuttgart, Ark., and New Orleans; and Danly Machine Specialists, Inc., Cicero, Ill.

The actions are the first of this type the committee has taken.

Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman, executive vice chairman of the committee, who signed the compliance review order, said the companies are not barred from federal contracts, nor have they had federal contracts cancelled.

But before new contracts are awarded them, he said, the special reviews will be undertaken to determine if they are in compliance with Executive Order 10925, requiring government contractors to make job opportunity available to all comers equally, without regard to race, creed or color.

The Brewery Workers for several years have had contracts covering about 130 Comet Rice employes at Beaumont and 70 workers at Houston, and are now on strike for a new contract at Houston. They formerly had a local at the Stuttgart plant, but it was broken several years ago under pressure from a rice growers' association. The New Orleans plant is unorganized.

Complaints of job discrimination against Negroes were filed against

(Continued on Page 3)

Physicians For Health Plan Name Director

The recently organized Physicians Committee for Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security has established a Washington headquarters and named Mrs. Genevieve Goldy as executive director.

Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn, chairman of the committee formed to enlist physicians' support for social security health insurance, said the group's headquarters office has been opened at Room 226, 704 Seventeenth St. N. W., Washington, D. C.

Dr. Esselstyn said committee members believe that "under existing legislation—or the lack of it—all but the extremely wealthy live under constant fear that unpreventable or unpredictable medical disaster can destroy them financially."

It is the consensus of the group, he added, that the social security approach "is the most sound and practical method of financing health benefits for elderly Americans, whose number is growing at a rate of 3,000 a day."

The Physicians Committee was organized among a group of prominent doctors who visited Pres. Kennedy last month to offer their backing in his campaign for the social security health care program for the aged.

The move—a sharp break from the official position of the American Medical Association against the social security approach—represented the first concerted opposition to the AMA stand within the medical profession, although most of the doctors on the committee are AMA members themselves.

Ousted Unions Agree On Future Relations

Chicago—A special convention of the Laundry Dry Cleaning & Dye House Workers has approved an earlier executive board decision accepting an affiliation agreement with the Teamsters.

Both unions were expelled by the AFL-CIO in December 1957 on charges of failing to clean out corrupt elements of leadership. The federation subsequently chartered a new organization in the laundry field, the Laundry & Dry Cleaning Intl. Union.

Under the announced terms of their agreement each expelled union will remain autonomous, with no change in officers, and the laundry union will pay a monthly per capita tax of 5 cents a member to the Teamsters.

Rohan Wins Election In Printing Pressmen

Pressmen's Home, Tenn.—Alexander J. Rohan of Washington, D. C., was elected secretary-treasurere of the Printing Pressmen in a referendum election held Mar. 28, the union board of electors has just announced.

GM Cuts Big-Brass Pay To $696,820 and $629,613

Detroit—Lots of people got pay raises last year, but not the top officers of the world's top corporation.

Board Chairman Frederic G. Donner and Pres. John F. Gordon of General Motors had to take pay cuts.

Donner had his annual pay clipped for $2,000 less than he got in 1960. Less unfortunate was Gordon, who was slashed only $1,000.

The figures were revealed in a proxy statement mailed to GM and Du Pont Co. stockholders. They showed that Donner's total was driven down to $696,820, while Gordon had to make do with a mere $629,613.

Donner's pay packet was made up of $201,475 in salary and director's fees, $356,250 in bonuses and $139,095 in contingent credits. Gordon got it divided into $181,200 in salary and fees, $322,500 in bonuses and $125,913 in contingent credits. Contingent credits are paid at the end of 10 years if the officer does not exercise stock options granted him.

On stock options, the statement said 263 executives were granted option rights last month on a total of 344,385 shares at $56.82 a share. In 1961, it added, 58 officers and directors were paid $3,977,040 in salaries and fees, plus $6,979,192 in bonuses. The year before 19 officers and directors got $3,896,835 in salaries and fees and $7,681,000 in bonuses.

Handicapped Found in Every 3d ACWA Home

New York—One in every three households that includes a member of the Clothing Workers also includes a handicapped person, a survey made for the rehabilitation program undertaken by the Sidney Hillman Health Center has disclosed.

Every second household that includes a retired member of the union also has a disabled person, the study showed, with heart ailments leading all causes. Following in importance were arthritis, back trouble and chest ailments.

The program was set up by the center as a pilot project to provide guidance for other unions and to seek advances in the field of rehabilitation. The center, established by the ACWA and the clothing industry in memory of the first president of the union, is contributing $75,000 in staff time and other services. The Office of Vocational Rehabilitation in the U. S. Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare has made a grant of $60,000 a year for three years.

An advisory board includes industry and union leaders, officials of the Amalgamated Insurance Co. and the New York district Vocational Rehabilitation office.

Returns Average 63%

The survey, to determine the extent of disabling conditions among the households of ACWA members in the New York City area, was the program's first major project. A questionnaire in four languages, including a self-addressed return envelope, was sent to a sample of 6,600 households.

ACWA organizers went from shop to shop urging the workers to fill out the forms and the two union newspapers carried articles describing the project. The result was that more than 63 percent of the questionnaires were returned, among the highest return records for such a health survey.

The health center's next program will be to screen more than 300 of the disability cases for possible rehabilitation services. Cases involving disabled children will be reported to the city Health Dept.'s Bureau of Handicapped Children.

The center said that close working relations have been established with the Amalgamated Insurance Co., enabling the center to move in quickly when disability claims are filed so that early rehabilitation services can be started where feasible.

Meany Names Nine To Disputes Panel

Nine members have been named to the mediation panel set up to serve in the internal disputes program of the AFL-CIO, Federation Pres. George Meany has announced.

The panel includes all members of the Executive Council except three who serve on the subcommittee created to weigh appeals from the determination of the impartial umpire, and their three alternates. It includes, in addition, a number of general officers of international unions.

The new additions bring the total number of members to 50.

The nine named by Meany are: Howard Coughlin, president, Office Employes Intl. Union; Charles M. Crooks, president, Masters, Mates and Pilots; H. E. Gilbert, president, Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; Patrick E. Gorman, secretary-treasurer, Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen; Paul Hall, AFL-CIO vice president and member of the Executive Council; Ralph Reiser, president, Glass and Ceramic Workers; A. J. Rohan, secretary-treasurer, Printing Pressmen; Clarence N. Sayen, president, Air Line Pilots; Joseph J. Delaney, president, Operating Engineers.

Living Costs At New High For March

(Continued from Page 1)

Medical care costs have risen about 70 percent from the 1947-49 averages.

The March overall index was 1.1 percent higher than a year ago, rising in February and March after remaining relatively stable over the preceding 10 months. In February the increased cost of fresh fruits and vegetables sent the index upward.

Labor Dept. spokesmen indicated they anticipated another small rise in the index for April because of a continuing increase in service costs.

Housing costs were unchanged over the month on the average, and food increased only slightly while the transportation index moved down.

About 67,000 workers are scheduled to receive 1 or 2 cent an hour increases on the basis of the latest index level, primarily those employed in manufacturing, including chemical and aircraft companies.

An increase in working hours was reflected in the spendable earnings and purchasing power of workers. A worker with three dependents had spendable earnings of $85 a week after tax deductions, or about 60 cents higher than the previous month. Real earnings were about 41 cents a week higher than a month earlier.

Compared with March 1961, the average factory worker last month had $5 more in spendable earnings and $4 more in terms of real purchasing power.

On Labor News Conference:

Steel Price Policy Hit as 'Excessive'

The pricing practices of the steel industry are forcing the people to pay for its plants, machines and equipment while the companies chalk up "excessive profits," Nathaniel Goldfinger, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, has charged in a radio broadcast.

"All business and all companies need profits and the AFL-CIO certainly isn't opposed to fair profits," he said. "The problem here is large profits, excessive profits at fairly low levels of operation," he declared.

Goldfinger appeared on Labor News Conference, broadcast over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

"What the U.S. Steel Corp. and the steel industry generally have been telling the public is that high prices are needed, large profit margins are needed, to reinvest in new plant and equipment," he said.

"Well, most of us were taught in economic courses that when a company needed money for investment it went to the stock market and issued stock. The steel industry—and particularly U.S. Steel—hasn't issued stock in years and years and years. Most of the money for new plant and equipment is generated internally from profits and from depreciation allowances."

Profits Up, Sales Low

Goldfinger cited economic studies to show that steel industry profits instead of declining in the past eight or nine years actually have climbed, although sales and production have been "fairly low."

The economist Gardiner Means, he said, has estimated that in the past few years U.S. Steel has begun to make a profit when operating at only 30 percent of capacity. The Kefauver Anti-Trust & Monopoly subcommittee, about four years ago, put the break-even point at a little less than 40 percent, he added. The reason this "very large profit margin" did not result in "fabulous profits," he explained, was because the industry operated at but 60 to 75 percent of capacity.

Goldfinger flatly charged that "the major corporations in the key industries of the U.S.—such as steel and autos—set their prices on a basis of what's called 'administered' pricing," with the dominant corporation moving first and the rest of the industry following along.

He recalled that the AFL-CIO stand on high "administered" prices is to make the facts known through "public opinion, public disclosure and public investigation."

Rigid Policy Questioned

"Lay the facts clearly before the public," he said, "and perhaps the pressure of public opinion would react against the pricing policies of these corporations."

The specifics of what Pres. Kennedy meant when he called for wage restraint in collective bargaining are not clear, the AFL-CIO economist asserted.

"If it is any kind of a rigid policy, then it certain would hurt the unions and more than hurting the unions, it would hurt the working people of the United States," he said.

"If, however, it is a flexible policy, then it certainly would hurt the price stability, while at the same time the government makes similar attempts to move rapidly to full employment and to eliminate large-scale unemployment, then this is in line with what the trade union movement has been asking for."

Goldfinger was questioned on the program by Lee Cohn of the Washington Evening Star and Alan Adams of McGraw-Hill Publications.

Major Gains Won By UFWA Local

Memphis, Tenn.—A new three-year contract that includes total wage increases of 13 cents an hour and major improvements in fringe benefits has been signed on behalf of some 625 members of Furniture Workers Local 282 and the Ivers & Pond Piano Co., a subsidiary of the Winter Piano Co.

Benefits include coverage of workers and their families by the UFWA Insurance Fund, with the company paying all costs. The union is engaged in a long-range plan to equalize wages and working conditions in all plants of Winter affiliates.

Big Cities Conference To Open COPE Drive

(Continued from Page 1)

planned which will include additional cities and states. COPE also is conducting a series of 14 area conferences, eight of which already have been completed, to help train unionists across the country in tested techniques for the upcoming registration, voting and dollar drives.

At its February meeting, the Executive Council voted to raise $750,000 to finance the register-and-vote effort.

The registration campaign is being directed by Roy L. Reuther, on leave from his post as administrative assistant to Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther and director of the UAW Citizenship Dept.

Despite a late start in the 1960 presidential election campaign, the COPE drive that year helped add some 2.5 million qualified voters to the election lists, far more than the popular vote margin won by the Kennedy-Johnson slate.

The 1962 COPE campaign, McDevitt said, will be aimed at "liberalizing Congress" to help win enactment of labor's legislative program.

"A COPE dollar invested by a union member this year," he continued, "could reap dividends next year in the form of more job security, better schools for the children of workers, health care under social security for our elderly people, a higher minimum wage, better housing programs, and more protection for the unemployed.

"It could mean a better standard of living for all working people."

Coalition Strong

The COPE director said that, at maximum strength, the House coalition of Republicans and southern conservatives now numbers 285, or 65 percent of House membership.

"Any addition to the strength of the conservative coalition," he declared, "would spell disaster for progressive legislation for the next two years."

McDevitt pointed to a number of pro-labor candidates who narrowly lost election bids in 1960 and suggested that more effort and money contributed by working men and women might have tipped the scales in their favor.

Plant Reopening Blocked:

Labor Rally Backs Alabama Strikers

Sheffield, Ala.—Assembly lines and construction work in this highly-industrialized area came to an almost complete halt for two hours as 8,000 union members put down their tools to march side by side with 300 striking aluminum workers in a dramatic demonstration of trade union solidarity.

Workers from virtually every organized craft and industry marched 10 abreast, in a column stretching eight blocks long, through the streets of Sheffield to circle the gates of the ironically-named Union Aluminum Co.

They marched to protest preparations to resume production at the struck plant, closed since Nov. 16, 1961, when members of the Aluminum Workers struck in an effort to win a first contract and boost wage rates above a $1.15 to $1.33-an-hour level.

Two days after the demonstration, joined in by union members in the Tri-City area of Sheffield, Tuscumbia and Muscle Shoals, the company's attorney notified Aluminum Workers Vice Pres. Claude R. Mitchell that no attempt would be made to resume production or recruit outside strikebreakers.

The demonstration, described in the Tri-Cities Daily newspaper as "a mighty show of strength never before seen" in the area, was called on less than 24 hours notice after utilities had been reconnected at the plant and foremen ordered to report for work.

Utilities' Connection Protested

The utilities were turned on by the manager of the Sheffield Power, Water & Gas Board after members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers refused to cross the Aluminum Workers picket line. The rally and march were called to protest the reconnection of utilities as a "strikebreaking" move, facilitating the company's planned attempt to resume production without a union contract.

Mayor C. L. Beard addressed the protest rally and declared he "neither ordered, sanctioned nor condoned" the restoration of utility services by the autonomous board. The board had said earlier that it had no choice under its TVA power contract but to provide service on request.

The biggest contingents in the protest demonstration represented construction workers and other craftsmen at nearby Tennessee Valley Authority operations, who took annual leave—deducted from their vacation time—from their government jobs to join the demonstration, and fellow members of the Aluminum Workers at the Reynolds Aluminum plant who closed down all but essential operations during the march.

Both the Tri-Cities Central Labor Union and the area Building Trades Council joined in sponsorship of the demonstration.

The company's apparent abandonment of plans to reopen came after only half its foremen crossed the picket line to report for work.

Pledge in 1945 Cited

The strike was called in an effort to get the firm's owner, William King, to keep a promise made in 1945.

At that time, when King began his business with a handful of men making aluminum windows in an old warehouse, he told the union he would be "glad" to work out a union contract as soon as his business was established. He had just got out of the service, he said, and was operating on borrowed money.

Three years later, when the company moved to a modern building and appeared firmly established, the union reminded King of his pledge. His reply, Mitchell said, was that he now wanted no union at his plant. When the Aluminum Workers carried out an organization drive, union supporters were fired.

After three more attempts to organize—once by the Iron Workers and twice by the AWIU—the union won an election in April 1961 by a four-vote margin. Despite the narrow victory, within a week after the union was certified virtually every employe had signed up. Since the strike was called after four weeks of unsucessful negotiations, not a worker has crossed the picket line.

Mitchell said the only increase in pay production workers had received since 1955 was the mandatory raise to $1.15 an hour when the federal minimum wage was lifted.

TRADE UNION SOLIDARITY with 300 striking aluminum workers at Sheffield, Ala., was demonstrated when 8,000 workers joined a rally and march protesting the Union Aluminum Co.'s preparations to resume production with no contract. Two days later, the company notified the Aluminum Workers that it would not hire strikebreakers or attempt to operate otherwise.

U.S. Warns 2 Firms on Race Bias

(Continued from Page 1)

Comet's Houston plant over a period of several months in 1961 and 1962, Holleman said.

The President's Committee determined there was reasonable doubt that the company was in compliance in its various facilities, and was making "no discernable effort" to get in compliance, Holleman said.

An investigation of a complaint of discrimination at the Danly plant also resulted in a determination of "reasonable doubt" of compliance.

Holleman said both firms were informed of the review order before it was made public. He stressed that the pre-award reviews and reports required do not bar either firm from seeking a government contract. The reports will be analyzed when they are received, he said, and additional information gathered if required.

Before any company is barred from contracts or before a contract is cancelled, he said, hearings must be held.

Civil Defense Budget Gets Labor Backing

Civil defense is not an area for budget-cutting, the AFL-CIO has declared in testimony urging Congress to appropriate the full amount requested by Pres. Kennedy.

Legislative Rep. George D. Riley told a House Appropriations subcommittee that "workable plans and facilities" must be ready for an attack "we prayerfully hope will never occur."

He said adequate preparation for the nation's survival would, in itself, help deter aggression while weakness might encourage an attack.

Riley asked the committee to vote to appropriate the $695 million asked for the Office of Civil Defense and the $8 million sought for the Office of Emergency Planning.

Declaring that "millions of lives can be saved with adequate fallout shelters," Riley said funds are needed to provide:

- Financial assistance to state civil defense programs.
- Emergency operations.
- Warning and detection.
- Shelter research and construction and incentives for construction of shelters.
- Adequate designation of shelters in existing structures.

Haggerty Renews Call Against Sites Walkouts

Labor's record in minimizing time lost due to work stoppages in missile site construction is "good, but not good enough," Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. has declared in a message in the department's monthly Bulletin.

"We must have no work stoppages on missile bases," he emphasized in describing the missile effort as "a vital program to America" which "is now in the critical stage."

"I realize that the authority and discipline of our building trades unions have been weakened by legislation, but our unions must do all in their power to see that this vital missile work proceeds uninterrupted," Haggerty asserted.

He recalled that voluntary efforts of the department and its affiliates in response to Pres. Kennedy's 1961 State of the Union message had succeeded in cutting time lost due to work stoppages from 1.5 percent of total time worked to one-half of 1 percent.

Since the establishment of the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission in May 1961, time lost has been further reduced to .108 percent of total time worked, or 1 man-day lost for every 927 worked, a record which Haggerty described as "five times better than construction generally."

Called Almost Perfect

He noted that Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg had praised the June through December record of 1 man-day lost for every 1,518 worked "as almost perfection," but added:

"This is a good record, but it is not good enough."

He urged a complete end to work stoppages at the sites and reliance on local Missile Sites Labor Commissions to help resolve grievances and other disputes.

"Building tradesmen have always responded quickly and vigorously to the call of national need and we are confident that this missile site program will receive a similar and wholehearted response," Haggerty declared.

The Building Trades president and the heads of five international unions intervened recently to help end a work stoppage at the Walker Air Force Base missile site at Roswell, N. M. The three-day dispute involved a non-union contractor.

No-Strike Pledge

Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, one of the unions involved, in directing IBEW members to return to work under the union's pledge to avoid stoppages, cited a clause in the IBEW constitution barring strikes without approval of the international president.

IUE Ousts Teamsters In NLRB Balloting

The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers topped a series of representation election victories over the unaffiliated Teamsters by winning representation rights in a Woonsocket, R. I., electronics plant where the Teamsters were installed three years ago without an opportunity for a choice by the employes.

The culminating vote at the General Instrument Co. plant was ordered by Reg. Dir. Bernard L. Alpert of the National Labor Relations Board's Boston office on the basis of IUE intervention in a petition filed by the Independent Trades Union (ITU), an unaffiliated group, during a wage reopener.

The tally showed IUE 507, Teamsters 136, ITU 32 and no union 39.

The Jewelry Workers organized the plant in 1958 and the business agent, James Manzo, moved the local into the Teamsters without the formality of a members' vote. At the pre-election hearing this year, Robert Bowles, in charge of personnel for the company, said four or five "contracts" were around the plant, with one kept in the office and the others shown to select employes, most of whom are women. It was brought out that there never was a general distribution.

The employes, who asked the IUE to come in last September, were aided during the drive by IUE Local 253 at the General Electric Co. Telechron plant; IUE Local 280 at the Grand Money Meter Co., Providence, and by members of the Clothing Workers and Ladies' Garment Workers. The General Instrument employes have been chartered as IUE Local 225.

In NLRB balloting at the Aemco Div. of Telex, Inc., the Teamsters polled one vote while the IUE won bargaining rights with 173 votes and 134 employes voted for no union. Three other recent victories were scored.

About 450 cab drivers in San Diego, Calif., pulled out of the Teamsters and have received a charter directly from the AFL-CIO as the Cab Drivers of Greater San Diego & Vicinity. The drivers expressed dissatisfaction with a contract negotiated last fall.

Guidelines Set Up on Pay at Missile Bases

The Labor Dept. has issued "interpretive guidelines" on the application of prevailing minimum wage provisions in two federal laws—the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act and the Davis-Bacon Act—to certain work at Minuteman missile site facilities.

Walsh-Healey governs the prevailing wage for work on materials and equipment, including manufactured items, supplied to the government under contract. Davis-Bacon covers prevailing wages in construction of federal facilities.

The guidelines were set forth by the department's solicitor, Charles Donahue, in a letter to Col. Raymond J. Disher, chief of the Air Force's Contract Management Div.

The Walsh-Healey Act would apply, Donahue said, to "delivery and incidental installation" of Minuteman equipment where this involves "no more than a minimal amount of job-site activity."

The ruling was directed specifically to a dispute over installation of launching equipment and controls at Malstrom Air Force Base in Montana. Donahue emphasized that other cases "may involve different factual considerations" and should be judged in the light of the particular facts as well as the broad guidelines he had set forth.

Meanwhile, the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission ruled on a number of wage cases referred to it by the Defense Dept. The decisions found, among other things, that hazard pay premiums are "not unreasonable" when applied under conditions of actual hazard, and that an off-site pay differential granted employes of industrial prime contractors for extended work at operational and test sites was "within acceptable limits."

In the latter case, the commission also outlined criteria to be applied in future considerations of off-site differentials.

Let's Halt the Talent Waste

THE ANNUAL AWARD of six AFL-CIO college merit scholarships is one facet of organized labor's ever-expanding concern with the inequality of educational opportunity that faces the nation's senior high school classes every June.

By the time the current school year ends, unions will have distributed over half a million dollars in scholarship aid, mostly to highly qualified students who lack the means to secure a college education.

But despite this intense and growing interest in furthering educational opportunities, no single group in our society can cope with the problem of providing every qualified high school graduate with the opportunity of completing a college education.

The AFL-CIO has fought vigorously for greater financial aid to higher education through federal legislation. Such legislation has passed both houses of Congress but is presently stuck in the House Rules Committee awaiting clearance for a conference committee to resolve differences in the measures.

Passage of a federal aid-to-higher-education bill could be the jumping-off point for a massive national attack on inequality in educational opportunities and provide support for the programs of the trade unions and other groups to give every youngster the chance he deserves.

The Right to Vote

THE CURRENT SENATE DEBATE on legislation to abolish arbitrary and discriminatory literacy tests as a bar to voting marks the third time in the past five years that Congress has attempted to protect and extend the right to vote to all citizens regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.

In 1957 and again in 1960, civil rights legislation was adopted with new safeguards of the right of all citizens to vote. The argument advanced when these acts were debated was that if only the right to vote was assured to all persons without discrimination, it would not be necessary for Congress to deal legislatively with discrimination in education, jobs, housing and other areas.

Now the Administration, supported by a number of liberal Republicans, is attempting to plug another loophole in voting rights legislation by forbidding the states to use literacy tests specifically designed or manipulated to bar minority groups from the right of suffrage.

The Administration's solution is essentially to use a standard of six years of primary education as proof of literacy for federal election purposes and to require that literacy in a foreign language be accepted as ground for qualification.

According to a Civil Rights Commission report, 19 states now require that voters demonstrate their literacy as a condition of being allowed to exercise the right to vote.

On the foreign language issue, thousands of Spanish-speaking Puerto Ricans were denied registration under New York law in 1960.

The southerners have begun a filibuster along now-classic states' rights lines. But the basic position in this case is that the right to vote for federal officers is a right protected by the U.S. Constitution and a state has no constitutional license to impose such conditions as to disfranchise citizens on the grounds of race or color or arbitrary refusal to accept literacy in a language other than English.

Plugging the literacy test loophole in the voting laws is essential if there is to be any meaningful equity in the nation's universal suffrage. But elimination of restrictions on voting rights cannot and must not be a substitute for legislation to abolish discrimination and segregation in education, jobs and housing.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned.

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, April 28, 1962 No. 17

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Help for the Unschooled:

New Kennedy Plan Would Aid 2.5 Million Untrained Adults

The following is excerpted from the Education News and Views section of the April 1962 American Federationist.

IN HIS MESSAGE TO CONGRESS on education, Pres. Kennedy asked for federal action to reduce adult illiteracy, a serious national problem which too often in the past has been swept under the rug. In line with the President's request, Rep. Carl Perkins (D-Ky.) has introduced an Adult Basic Education Act which is being actively supported by labor.

Compared with the other nations of the world, America has done such a good job of reducing illiteracy that many people would be surprised to know the extent to which it remains an important problem.

It is no small achievement that we have succeeded in reducing illiteracy in the United States to 2.2 percent of the adult population. Yet the greatness of this achievement should blind no one to the size of the problem which still exists.

That 2.2 percent of our population adds up to a total of more than 2.5 million adult Americans who are completely unable to read and write. That is more than the total population of New Zealand, Liberia or Israel.

Actually the situation is much worse even than these figures suggest. There is general agreement among educators that anything less than a fifth grade education leaves a person with so little basic education that, even though he may be technically able to read and write, he is for practical purposes illiterate. Educators use the term "functional illiterate" to describe such people. Functional illiterates, by definition, are those who have completed no more than four years of school. There are 8 million functional illiterates in the United States. This is more than the total population of Ghana, Kenya or Saudi Arabia.

AMONG NEGROES, the rate of illiteracy is four times as high as among white people. Approximately one out of every 10 Negro men in the United States is completely illiterate. This is one of the serious consequences which flow from racially segregated schools.

The Adult Basic Education Act is designed to assist the states in providing the necessary instruction for adults who lack the basic educational skills needed both for citizenship and meaningful employment. Under the bill $5 million would be appropriated the first year and $10 million for each of the next four years. These funds would be distributed to the states in proportion to the number of adults in each state who have not completed six years of school.

The funds which would be appropriated under the bill are modest enough compared to the enormous social cost of functional illiteracy. The relationship between illiteracy and unemployment has been clearly established. Industry is increasingly coming to demand higher levels of education among its workers. The adult of little or no education is condemned to work in low skill, underpaid jobs. In fact, more often than not, he has no job at all because fewer than half of the functional illiterates are gainfully employed. Among the unemployed, as many as 12 percent have less than five years of schooling and 35 percent have had no more than seven years of schooling.

When technological changes displace workers, those of little education are the most difficult to retrain for new jobs. In 1959 a joint committee on automation in the meat-packing industry was established by Armour and Company, the Packinghouse Workers and the Meat Cutters. The committee was created to assist in retraining and relocating displaced workers. But when the Armour plant in Oklahoma City closed, the Automation Committee found that of 170 workers who were tested for retraining, only 60 had enough educational background to show promise of benefiting from some form of vocational training. The balance—65 percent—were simply told that the best chance of employment would be in casual labor.

Evidently lack of education has also been a barrier to retraining under the area redevelopment program. There has not been as yet any detailed study of the reasons why workers have been rejected for training under this program. Yet the fact that, of the first 1,100 accepted for training, 82 percent had nine or more grades of previous schooling indicates that most of the under-educated were among those who either did not attempt retraining or were rejected.

The best planned retraining program is of little use to workers who can neither read nor write. Functional illiteracy places the workers in a social caste with little chance for escape.

Illiteracy is not only a limitation upon the ability of the individual worker to improve himself but it is also a blight upon his children.

Chances appear to be good for the successful passage of the Kennedy Administration's Adult Basic Education Act, especially if members of Congress find there is active support for such legislation among workers and other voters.

Morgan Says:

Nation's Capital Fast Becoming Petrified Forest of Concrete

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

AFTER THE FORM 1040s are filled and the house mortgaged or the savings liquidated to raise the funds to pay what the government demands, the hapless American taxpayer surely has earned the right to bite the hand he feeds. One of the more eloquent testimonials to the stable, long-suffering qualities of the genus Americanus is the fact that after the ordeal of Apr. 15, we don't all flock in droves or gaggles to join one of those right-wing societies that advocate so alluringly the abolition of the income tax. But let not the public servant, either elected or appointed, toy or dawdle with our patience indefinitely for it is not unlimited and one of the areas in which it is—or should be—reaching the breaking point has to do with the construction of government buildings in Washington, D. C.

Morgan

It is not that the federal structure does not have a place on the horizon of the nation's capital. But at the rate at which this massive art form is multiplying on every avenue, Pierre L'Enfant's fair city is fast becoming a grand canyon of stricken stone, a petrified forest of concrete colossuses or colossi. And as if this solid affront to aesthetics and simple good taste were not enough, these new buildings inevitably cost millions more than the government, on behalf of the taxpayer bargained for, and then, to crown the outrage, they unfailingly develop construction bugs that cost vast additional funds to eradicate.

Take, for example, the New Senate Office Building. This marble monstrosity, a happy marriage of the neo-fascist architecture of Mussolini's time and the graceful lines of a dockside warehouse, was supposed to cost modestly upwards of $20.5 million. Final cost, more than $30 million. That word "final," however, is misleading. Alteration bills have hardly ceased coming in.

First there was the item of the fancy rubber tile floors. Capitol Architect J. George Stewart and his fellow-planners had failed to calculate the resonance they would create for the echo of countless electric typewriters or the danger their slick surface presented to high-heeled secretaries. So they put in for $150,000 for wall-to-wall carpeting to deaden the noise and protect the nyloned limbs of senatorial help. But then all the massive hardwood doors had to be unhinged and planed down to clear the carpets.

Then senators found they couldn't commandeer the automatic elevators and special button arrangements were installed; the ornate electric clocks in the hearing rooms wouldn't work because the fancy, heavy hands were too much for the motors to lift; bugs developed in the public address systems which persist to this day.

And, of course, everybody is familiar with the story of the subway connecting the New Senate Office Building with the Capitol, perhaps the world's most expensive railroad, above or underground, a distance of a little more than four well-hit home runs at a cost of more than $6 million. Original estimate: $2 million plus.

These items are not new but they unfortunately seem to reflect the trend of planning and building on Capitol Hill. The controversial projection of the east front of the Capitol, which many leading architects condemned, cost $24 million instead of the expected $17 million. Now Stewart proposes to build a 1,900-car garage under it at a cost above $41 million which the Senate's leading economist, Paul Douglas of Illinois, estimates will work out to more than $22,000 per car.

A NEW GLEAM IN STEWART'S EYE is the possibility of extending the west, or downtown side, front of the Capitol. In an editorial pointedly entitled Let Bad Enough Alone, The New York Times last week denounced the idea, described the east front extension as a "hard, grotesque vulgarity."

But if this is grotesquery now, it may look enchanting alongside the gigantic, fortress-like third House Office Building being completed on a slope of Independence Avenue southwest of the Capitol. Original cost estimates: $65 million. Current estimates: almost, but not quite, double that.

Residents of a choice and lovely two-block area back of the Capitol are in an uproar over plans to build a Library of Congress annex there. On an adjoining site already acquired by the government it is planned to erect a memorial to James Madison.

The question is whether to raise a monument to short-sighted, graceless and expensive planning on Capitol Hill, as well. As its inspiration some critics blame Stewart but he can't do anything that Congress, that arbiter of federal taste, doesn't go along with, subways and all.

Washington Reports:

Used Car Buyers Seen Paying Up to 180% in Interest Charges

USED CAR INTEREST RATES have been found to be as high as 180 percent without the buyer realizing the rate he is paying, Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.), sponsor of the Senate truth-in-lending bill, asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"These hidden interest costs on used cars are almost never lower than 30 percent," Douglas asserted. "The truth-in-lending bill would require that in the fields of personal credit, consumer credit and real estate credit, the seller or lender tell the buyer or borrower the total amount to be financed, the finance charge expressed in terms of dollars and cents, and the percentage that the finance charge bears to the total amount to be financed, expressed as a simple annual rate on the oustanding upaid balance."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) on the same program said he agreed to the principle that "we must have truth in lending and in respect to what people are paying for the cost of credit," but reserved for further study the issue of whether legislation should require statement of the interest percentage charge.

Douglas declared that the total of consumer credit outstanding today is $216 billion.

"This is increasing at a very rapid rate," he said, "and in a few more years will be as great as the national debt itself."

Douglas said that most used car advertisements state the monthly payment for a car without stating how many months the payment must be made, how much of the total is for the car itself and how much is a finance charge. Small loans, he said, are usually quoted in monthly terms.

"THREE AND A HALF PERCENT a month seems low," he continued, "but that is actually 42 percent a year. Also, 6 percent a year on $1,000, charged upon the original amount while the principal is paid off in monthly installments, is actually 12 percent. The borrower should know that."

Javits said that New York State already has a similar law, except for the interest item. He said that much of the opposition is stated in terms of being against specifying "the percentage per annum."

Douglas said the Senate Banking Subcommittee which has been conducting hearings on his bill is now split, but that he believes, once the public is informed about the measure, the tie will be broken. "I am confident that this is a proposal so essentially fair that ultimately it will carry," he declared.

"The principle is simple, that the borrower or the buyer is entitled to the truth. The truth is a very firm foundation."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

EVENTS HAVE MOVED swiftly following the Supreme Court's Tennessee-case decision that federal courts have a duty to hear complaints by under-represented urban citizens that they are denied equal protection of the laws by state legislatures which gerrymander election districts to concentrate power in rural voters.

The high court itself ruled, in a Michigan case, that the supreme court of that state must reconsider a decision that the state courts could not hear charges of discrimination.

The case involves a Michigan constitutional amendment, adopted in 1952, freezing state senate districts into the organic law without regard to existing or potential population differences. This was challenged as a violation of the federal constitution's guarantees. The state supreme court upheld rejection of the challenge by the lower courts.

Said the U.S. Supreme Court, it got the "impression" a majority of the Michigan justices believed that no matter what the merits of the constitutional claim, a remedy was "not enforcible in the courts." This is not correct, in the light of the Tennessee decision, said a 6-1 majority, and it told the Michigan courts to take a hard look at the facts and at potential remedies.

* * *

IN MARYLAND, the state court of appeals took action on its own. Maryland's legislature is gerrymandered to deny equal representation to heavily-populated suburban counties. In addition, a "county unit" system applied in party primary elections allows a candidate for statewide office to be denied nomination even though he gets a majority of the popular vote.

The Maryland Committee for Fair Representation attacked the system, charging that 76 percent of the people live in cities and suburbs but have only 34 percent of members of the state senate and 49 percent of the lower house. A trial court dismissed their petition, holding that prevailing law forbade the judges to enter this "political thicket."

The court of appeals reversed this decision in the light of the U.S. Supreme Court's precedent. It ordered an immediate hearing of the charges and suggested that the state legislature had better be called into special session if the charges were found correct. Maryland politics is thrown into turmoil in an election year, but the claim of urban citizens that they are denied equal protection of the laws at last gets a hearing in a forum with power to order relief.

* * *

THE EXACT PATH by which the federal and state courts will seek to mark out a new and valid policy is not clear.

The Maryland court of appeals said that no "precise, inflexible and intractable formula" could be stated for "constitutional representation." It did, however, point to the Supreme Court's Tennessee-case language suggesting "some reasonable relationship of population, or eligible voters, to representation in the state assembly."

This promptly became interpreted in a Georgia legislature's special session as signifying only some slight reform. That state's "county unit" primary system would be revised, legislative leaders decided, so that the eight largest counties with more than 41 percent of the population would be allowed 26.4 percent of the state house of representatives.

But a three-judge federal court was scheduled to begin hearings on a suit directly challenging the county unit system, and on May 21 a federal court will hear an argument for a judgment ordering immediate legislative reapportionment, and on May 23 still another federal court case is set, demanding changes in unequal districts for the U.S. House of Representatives.

The lower courts, state and district, must try to frame formulas for relief that will stand the test of appeal to both the highest state and federal courts. The end is going to be greater representation for urban voters, with results that should refreshen our political life.

FEDERAL TRUTH-IN-LENDING legislation is needed, Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), left, and Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.), right, declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. Douglas specified that borrowers and purchasers have the right to know exact annual interest charges on used cars, small loans, furniture and other items.

Oklahoma Labor Battles 'R-T-W' Drive

OKLAHOMA LABOR'S answer to the so-called "right-to-work" drive on the state is brought to the voters by volunteers from union and auxiliary ranks. Here, Mrs. Ethel Jones and Mrs. Iva Rice pass out pamphlets in downtown Tulsa. Initiative petitions filed by the "work" supporters have been challenged as "fraudulent."

MANY AFL-CIO AUXILIARIES furnished womenpower to challenge the drive to put a proposed "right-to-work" constitutional amendment on the ballot. Mrs. Fannie Webster, former state auxiliary president, is shown making a call to explain labor's opposition.

FAR INTO THE NIGHT, these union members assembled packets of literature for other volunteers to distribute the following day. An impressive group of business, professional, religious and educational leaders joined with labor in opposing the effort to ban the union shop.

AT GATES OF TEXACO REFINERY in Tulsa, union volunteer distributes literature challenging the "right-to-work" propaganda.

40 CARS A DAY were dispatched by the Tulsa Labor Council to cruise shopping centers and sububran areas with messages opposing so-called "right-to-work." With most of the state's big newspapers lined up behind the drive to bar union shop agreements, labor and its allies had to take their story directly to the people.

AT SUPERMARKET ENTRANCE, attractive Louise Bookout, Sharon Carl and Patsy Smith distribute brochures to counter the arguments of "right-to-work" groups, who launched their petition drive after the state legislature refused to pass legislation outlawing union shop agreements.

NLRB Examiner's Finding:

'Sympathetic Lockout' Pact By Publishers Held Illegal

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has ruled illegal an agreement among employers to suspend operations and lock out all unionized employes when one company is faced with a grievance strike by a single union.

In a decision breaking new ground, Trial Examiner Charles W. Schneider found that 10 New York City newspapers violated federal labor laws by threatening citywide suspensions of publication—and actually engaging in two brief shutdowns—when individual papers were confronted with a series of work stoppages in 1961 over disputes with individual crafts.

Schneider's intermediate report held that such a lockout, or the threat of one, unfairly penalized neutral employes and "interfered with, restrained or coerced" them in the exercise of their legal rights to engage in or refrain from "concerted activities for collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection."

The newspaper pact, which unions have labeled a "massive retaliation" policy, further violated the labor law, the examiner found, because it threatened reprisals for work stoppages only on union members.

Schneider likened the compact to "a kind of secondary boycott with the classical roles reversed" and said the action it contemplated amounted to a "sympathetic lockout."

The effect, he said, "is that the employer compulsorily enlists or impresses the neutral [union] employes as his allies in the labor dispute," thus compelling them to aid him in opposing a grievance strike by members of another union.

Schneider did not rule on lockouts by a multi-employer unit when only one firm is struck by a union in the course of negotiating a contract with the group, but he cited an earlier NLRB decision holding such a lockout to be legal.

'No Precise Precedent'

The same situation was not present in the New York publishers' case he noted, and there "is no precise precedent."

Executive Sec. Donald R. McVay of the Publishers Association of New York City said the newspapers would challenge the trial examiner's intermediate report before the full NLRB.

The unfair practice charges were filed by the New York Mailers Union No. 6, an affiliate of the Typographical Union, and the Newspaper & Mail Deliverers Union, unaffiliated.

Also considered in the examner's hearings were the contracts negotiated by the publishers association with locals of the Pressmen, ITU, Photoengravers, Paper Handlers, Stereotypers, Machinists and Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. The Newspaper Guild bargains separately with each daily.

The publishers argued that they were within their legal rights in locking out union members, or threatening to lock them out, as a defense against wildcat work stoppages during the course of their contracts with the unions. They argued further that their action was justified because the strikes involved allegedly were violations of contracts.

Schneider found, however, that not all of the contracts contained no-strike provisions, either expressed or implied, and that even if they did, the publishers were wrong in penalizing members of the third-party unions.

Legal Principles Cited

He cited legal principles that "one may not sacrifice another and disinterested person to protect oneself from harm" and that the right of self-defense "does not extend to the infliction of advertent, willful and substantial damage upon innocent third persons."

He further noted that if it was a violation of union contracts for employes to strike, "it is equally so for the publishers to lock out."

The newspapers, Schneider declared, seemed to be insisting "that the unions must use the contract machinery for rectification of their grievances but the publishers are not required to."

He described lockouts as "the exercise of unreasonable force" while other remedies were available to management, including arbitration, labor board proceedings, disciplinary action against offenders and injunction suits.

The NLRB examiner noted, too, that the work stoppages cited all were repudiated by responsible union officials who strove to end the walkouts, but that the publishers' compact nevertheless was directed against unions.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY for women was the chief topic at the recent meeting of the President's Commission on the Status of Women. Shown conferring with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, commission chairman, and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg are Mrs. Mary R. Callahan, left, a member of the executive board of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, both members of the commission. Discussions at the meeting centered on federal employment practices affecting women.

Labor Backs U. S. Aid For City Transit Plans

Federal grants for mass transit facilities in metropolitan areas are needed to prevent the "slow strangulation" of cities and their suburbs, the AFL-CIO has told Congress.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller urged a Senate subcommittee to approve an Administration bill authorizing $500 million over a three-year period to help states and cities plan, develop and expand transit facilities. He termed the legislation "vital to our national welfare."

The Housing subcommittee, a unit of the Senate Banking & Currency Committee, also heard Housing Administrator Robert Weaver testify to the need for a "public contribution" to help localities finance improvements in transit systems which are needed for the "healthy growth and renewal of cities."

Weaver said the legislation introduced by Sen. Harrison J. Williams (D-N. J.) would carry out recommendations made by Pres. Kennedy in his recent message to Congress on transportation.

Ratio Now 3-1 Urban

Biemiller pointed out that three out of four Americans now live in urban areas and the ratio will soon reach four out of five. He said it is "absolutely essential" to make a start in developing mass transportation systems to meet present and future needs. Biemiller added:

"Traffic congestion threatens the welfare and prosperity of city and suburb by checking central city business and commerce, by lowering retail sales and real estate tax revenues, by speeding urban blight and suburban sprawl . . . and by wasting human and economic resources in futile, frustrating traffic jams."

A provision of the bill providing federal relocation assistance to families displaced by mass transit projects was endorsed by the AFL-CIO as "only fair."

Biemiller also asked that the legislation guarantee the right of workers in transit systems supported by federal funds to bargain collectively with management, whether public or private.

Bond Guarantee Backed

A related bill, by Sen. Clair Engle (D-Calif.), to enable the federal government to guarantee the transit revenue bonds of local public agencies was also endorsed by the AFL-CIO as a "sound" approach.

Biemiller told the subcommittee, headed by Sen. John J. Sparkman (D-Ala.), that the Administration proposal is "moderate and reasonable," and represents the "minimum" needed to get development of new transportation facilities under way.

Inquiry Into Detroit News Closing Asked

Detroit — Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) has urged the Justice Dept. to investigate suspension of publication by the Detroit News during a strike by the unaffiliated Teamsters against the Detroit Free Press, which began Apr. 11.

Legality of the News shutdown and lockout of its employes has been challenged by the Detroit Council of Newspaper, Broadcasting and Associated Industries Unions, composed of 16 labor organizations.

The council said the suspension was "uncalled for, ill-advised and illegal under the circumstances and is nothing more than a showing of indifference to both the public and our union members."

Its statement also noted that the Teamsters negotiate individual contracts with the two papers and have not struck or picketed the News. Union members nevertheless were locked out at both papers. The News, however, retained unorganized editorial, advertising and business office employes on its payroll.

The Supreme Court recently agreed to review a suit by the Newspaper Guild on behalf of its members in the News maintenance department who were laid off during a six-week strike in 1955 while nonunion employes worked. The paper has retained the maintenance employes on the payroll during the current dispute.

AFL-CIO Issues New Publications List

A new, revised AFL-CIO List of Publications containing over 60 titles of books, pamphlets and leaflets is currently available from the federation.

Pertinent data on each of the publications, including a brief description, date of publication and price, is contained under each listing.

The April 1962 List of Publications is available without cost from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 16th St. N.W., Washington, D. C.

Court Holds Lockout Is 'Legitimate Weapon'

New Orleans—The lockout is a "legitimate economic weapon" an employer may use to buttress his position in collective bargaining, the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled in reversing a National Labor Relations Board decision.

The Taft-Hartley Act does not compel the employer to refrain from "tipping the scales" in his own favor, the court said, so long as the employe rights the legislation protects are respected.

The case grew out of negotiations for a new contract between Stone Workers Local 113 and the Dalton Brick & Tile Corp. of Dalton, Ga. The company refused to grant wage raises and higher overtime benefits the union demanded, claiming a precarious financial position and inability to increase its costs.

All hourly-paid production and maintenance workers were laid off soon after the union voted down a company proposal to renew the old contract. The employes were then justified, the court conceded, in inferring that failure to reach agreement was behind the closing and that the plant would remain shut until a new contract was negotiated.

After another bargaining session and a second union vote to reject renewal of the old pact, federal mediators were brought in and eventually a contract was signed which gave the employes substantial benefits, including pay hikes of 10 cents an hour and premium pay for Sundays.

Court Disagrees

The NLRB ruled that the plant was closed to force the union to accept the terms the company offered and that this was illegal coercion. The court said it disagreed with the board on the "correct applicable legal principles and the legal significance of the facts."

It held that while negotiations are in process, an employer "may engage in a lockout as an economic weapon to enhance the acceptance of its, rather than the union's, proposed terms." A lockout is illegal, it went on, only when it violates a specific provision of T-H.

The appeals court said it could "find no basis" for the NLRB conclusion that the lockout in this case constituted failure to bargain in good faith. It concluded that so long as the parties "seriously and earnestly go forward in a genuine desire to work out a final settlement," they have complied with the act, and it is not the board's duty to "balance the scales, equalize or neutralize pressures under the guise of a lack of good faith attributed to the party resorting to forces of a kind the board thinks undesirable."

"The objective—the collective bargaining agreement—is by the very nature of things an annealing process hammered out under the most severe and competing forces and counteracting pressures," the court added.

"Unless Congress has proscribed a given pressure, or unless its exertion or the manner of its exercise collides with some other specific policy of the act, its use may not be transmuted to make what is in fact good faith at the bargaining table into something less."

U. S. Bars Use Of Segregated Trade School

The Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training has announced it will no longer register apprenticeship programs which use a segregated private trade school in St. Louis for classroom instruction.

Dir. Edward E. Goshen said a bureau investigation had revealed that the David Ranken Jr. School of Mechanical Trades, a privately endowed non-profit institution, bars Negroes from the student body under conditions set down by its founder.

He said the bureau would withdraw registration from apprenticeship programs which continue to use the school after the current semester. This would disqualify apprentices studying at the school from work on federal construction projects covered by prevailing minimum wage laws.

Withdrawal of registration, Goshen said, also will apply to apprenticeship programs using segregated schools in other parts of the country.

Screen Extras Seek Members in Hawaii

Honolulu, H. I.—The Screen Extras Guild has begun a drive to unionize motion picture extra players in the Hawaiian Islands following a survey by Pres. Jeffrey Sayre and Executive Sec. H. O'Neil Shanks.

At Welcoming Luncheon:

AFL-CIO Opens UN Office of Friendship

New York—Formal opening of the Friendship Office of the AFL-CIO Committee for the United Nations took place here in the presence of distinguished diplomats, ranking UN officials, and national labor leaders headed by federation Pres. George Meany.

In a message to a luncheon sponsored by the national AFL-CIO and the New York City Central Labor Council, Pres. Kennedy hailed the creation of the committee, declaring that it "is further evidence that the AFL-CIO remains alert to the prospects for the free world."

In a handwritten postscript, the President said:

"I think it is especially important to stimulate visits by labor leaders from Latin America to this country."

The newly-formed labor committee is headed by Meany as honorary chairman and Central Labor Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., as chairman. Its function will be to introduce UN delegates from foreign countries to the U.S. labor movement, particularly those delegates with a trade union background.

The focus of activity will be the million-member New York City labor movement, whose leaders are part of the AFL-CIO committee and who have pledged to help establish social relationships between interested UN delegates and their labor organizations.

UN Acting Sec.-Gen. U Thant in a message read by Dr. Hermane Tavares de Sa, undersecretary in charge of public information, said:

Cites Common Interest

"The program which you are inaugurating today is a demonstration of the common interest which binds those who serve the United Nations directly, whether they be members of delegations or of the secretariat, and the vast numbers among the citizens of New York who belong to trade unions. I know that it will help to achieve a fundamental purpose of the United Nations, which is to foster greater understanding and personal contact among peoples of all countries and all walks of life."

Major address of the luncheon was made by Meany, who told the UN delegates, many of them from newly-established countries, that American labor favors "generous assistance to the new nations and their young trade union movements."

"And we do want something in return for our help," he said, "but I must first tell you what we do not want from you. We are not seeking, in return, any military support from the developing countries. We are not asking you to align your military forces with our defense establishment.

"What do we want in return for our friendship and aid? We want you to build healthy and prosperous democracies, so that your workers and peasants, your entire people, can enjoy the fruits of freedom and the benefits of modern industrial progress.

"There can be no fully creative African personality, Asian personality, or European or American personality—or human personality which is the highest personality of all—without personal liberty, without human dignity. This truth holds with equal force in every country of the world."

Congratulations to U.S. labor came from Omer Becu, general secretary of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, who attended the luncheon en route to ICFTU headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, from a conference of the Inter-American Organization of Workers (ORIT) in Mexico City.

"It is fitting that trade unions, free trade unionists, should pay particular attention," said the ICFTU leader, "to the development of friendship. In the most fundamental sense, it is a trade union which brings people together, people of different faiths, origins, language, color, religion and belief, in order to achieve the aspirations which are embodied, for example, in the charter of the United Nations or in the constitution of our free trade union organization."

Van Arsdale, who acted as toastmaster at the luncheon, assured the UN delegates present that "we mean to do everything within our power to make your stay in our city a memorable experience."

He pointed out that across the street from the new AFL-CIO office, at the corner of First Ave. and East 46th St., are the UN buildings where are employed members of AFL-CIO unions—cooks, waiters and waitresses, elevator operators, building tradesmen and other trade unionists. In a facetious aside, Van Arsdale said:

"The day may come when representatives to the UN may want to consider the possibility of forming a trade union to ensure higher pay, improved working conditions and particularly time-and-a-half overtime for those long, long committee meetings."

Invited to the inaugural luncheon were all UN member countries except those definably totalitarian—Communist, Fascist or militarist—and South Africa.

AFL-CIO FRIENDSHIP OFFICE, established by federation's Committee for the United Nations, was formally opened across the street from the UN with luncheon attended by many diplomats and ranking leaders of the world organization. Left of Federation Pres. George Meany, shown at microphone, are Omer Becu, general secretary of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and New York City Labor Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, chairman of the AFL-CIO committee.

Civil Rights Voting Bill Sets Off Southern Filibuster in Senate

By David L. Perlman

An Administration bill to prevent the use of "discriminatory" literacy tests to bar Negroes and Spanish-speaking Americans from voting has touched off what is expected to be the major civil rights battle in Congress this year.

As a southern Democratic Senate filibuster got under way, a well-organized "three platoon" line-up prepared to keep the floor to prevent a vote on the legislation. To cut off debate, under the Senate's "cloture" rule, requires a two-thirds vote.

Mansfield said he will move to limit debate when he considers "that all the wisdom of which the Senate is reasonably capable has been exhausted."

If his cloture motion fails by a "substantial margin," he will drop the bill for this session. If the vote to limit debate comes "close to the required two-thirds," he will file a second cloture motion when debate becomes "unduly repetitive."

The mood of the Senate discussion contrasted sharply with the "friendly" 10-day filibuster last month which delayed, but did not attempt to prevent, approval of a constitutional amendment to abolish poll tax requirements for voting.

Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), field general for the southern opponents, served notice that his group will "oppose this legislation with every measure at our command." He accused civil rights groups of trying to "drive" the South "out of the Democratic Party" and said if that is the result the southerners will set up a party "that will appeal to more than the temporary passions and prejudices of the great mass of people who live in the cities of the United States."

Committee Bypassed

To keep a pledge made early in the session that the literacy bill would not be permitted to remain buried in the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) moved to substitute it for an unrelated private claim bill that is the pending business before the Senate. A similar maneuver was used last month to bring up the poll tax measure.

Key provisions of the Administration bill, as introduced by Mansfield with the co-sponsorship of GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), are as follows:

- No person who has completed the sixth grade of school may be denied the right to vote in a federal election on the basis of a literacy test or any other type of performance test.
- No person seeking to vote in a federal election shall be required to meet more stringent standards than are required of other voters.
- Congress "finds" that American citizens who were raised in parts of the United States where Spanish is commonly spoken have adequate access to information from Spanish-language news sources and therefore cannot be barred from voting because of "lack of proficiency in the English language."

In Senate testimony, the AFL-CIO previously supported key provisions of a bipartisan measure introduced by Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.) and 14 co-sponsors which would apply to state as well as federal elections and sharply limit and define the grounds on which voting rights could be denied.

The last full-scale civil rights battle in the Senate came in 1960, when a voting rights bill was before that body from Feb. 18 until Apr. 8, when a watered-down bill was passed. Midway in the debate, after a series of 'round-the-clock sessions, a liberal effort to invoke cloture—opposed by the Senate's Democratic and Republican leaders—fell 22 votes shy of the required two-thirds of senators present and voting.

Last September, at the tail end of the session, the Senate went through the motions of considering a change in the rules to permit curtailment of debate by only three-fifths of senators voting. When southerners began a filibuster, a cloture motion by Mansfield failed to get a majority and the issue was sidetracked.

4-28-62

Fraud Alleged in 'Work' Petitions in Oklahoma

(Continued from Page 1)

urging Oklahomans not to sign the petitions.

Wives and daughters of union members, through auxiliaries, played a major role in the campaign.

The legal battle over the validity of the "right-to-work" petitions is expected to be a long one. In addition to charging that the use of "paid solicitors and over-zealous persons" by the "right-to-work" group resulted in a high proportion of invalid signatures, opponents also alleged:

- The petitions were filed after the legal deadline.
- The design of the petitions, in red, white and blue, was "misrepresentation" in that it was "intended to associate the petition with patriotism."

The formal challenge was signed by State AFL-CIO Pres. Roy Tillman; Mrs. Ima Finley, women's division chairman of the citizens' group; B. M. Voss, an electrical contractor; Joseph Coughlan, a farm leader, and Homer Bishop, an attorney.

Under the state's procedures, the secretary of state will hold a hearing at which evidence of irregularities can be presented. After a decision is handed down, the losing party is entitled to appeal to the state supreme court.

Six Students Awarded AFL-CIO Scholarships

(Continued from Page 1)

band. He has not decided on a career but would like to teach.

Edward Matthew Holpuch, Jr., 18, of Issaquah, Wash., oldest of the nine children of a building contractor who was a member of the Carpenters. He will be graduated first in a class of 154 at Issaquah High School, where he has been active in sports and as a debater, and plans to study engineering at the University of Michigan.

Paul C. Jefferson, 18, of Chicago, whose mother, Mrs. Helen C. Jefferson, is a high school teacher of French and a member of Teachers Local 1. He has been a student at the private Francis W. Parker High School, to which he had won a scholarship. Deeply interested in reading and model-building, he will enter Harvard University to study aeronautical engineering.

Paul I. Meyer, 18, of University City, Mo. son of Mr. and Mrs. Gabriel Meyer. His father is a proprietor-member of the Typographical Union and formerly was a Newspaper Guild member. The youth will be graduated third in a class of 469 at University City High School, where he was president of the student body, yearbook editor and a basketball player. He expects to major in mathematics at Harvard.

Mary Ellen Robinson, 18, of Hickory, N. C., who will be graduated second in a class of 301 at Claremont Central High School. Her father was crippled by an injury in 1953 and her mother, Mrs. Lucy Robinson, works in a local factory. A creative writer who also is active in church work, Miss Robinson will enter the women's college at the University of North Carolina to specialize in languages.

After-School Workers

Several of the winners helped work their way through high school. Miss Robinson clerked weekends in a clothing store. Holpuch worked afternoons and Saturdays in a laundry, and spent last summer clearing the trees from a tract of land in partnership with two other youths. Ferrell works after school and weekends in a supermarket. Jefferson worked each summer while Meyer has been a counsellor at a children's camp.

"The AFL-CIO is still looking forward to the day when all of America's young people have the opportunity to complete a college education," said AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in commenting on the scholarship awards.

Anti-Bias, Pilot Organizing Projects Backed by Council

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII Issued weekly at Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year

Saturday, May 5, 1962 17 17 No. 18

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

New Disputes Plan Progress Reported

By Saul Miller

The AFL-CIO has called on its affiliates to support a union-government program to help eliminate racial discrimination in employment and to cooperate in a pilot organizing project.

The civil rights and organizing projects topped a number of major actions at the spring meeting of the federation's Executive Council in Washington in the legislative and collective bargaining areas.

The council's actions were formulated against a background of marked success in using mediation and voluntary agreements in handling internal disputes under the machinery adopted at the last AFL-CIO convention and a unanimous vote in the first justification case to come before it under the disputes plan.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference that on the basis of the council's action in the civil rights field he will send a letter to all affiliates urging them to work out agreements with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity that will help implement the federation's civil rights program.

Each affiliate will be urged to work with the committee in terms of the different problems involved in its activities. The basic objective, said Meany, is to accelerate cooperation between the unions and the government committee with the greatest possible flexibility so that the objective of stamping out discrimination in employment can be moved forward.

The committee established by Pres. Kennedy is committed to providing equal employment opportunities in all areas where government contracts are involved. A number of employers have signed agreements with the committee to cooperate toward this objective.

Los Angeles Area Picked

The pilot organizing project, Meany told reporters, will be set up in the Los Angeles area on the basis of a working paper presented to the council by its Committee on Organization headed by Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther. Meany said the committee did not ask for council adoption of the organizing plan but urged the pilot project keyed to getting a number of unions in various fields to join in a joint, comprehensive organizing campaign under AFL-CIO Director of Organization John W. Livingston.

The federation will direct the overall campaign, with the unions cooperating in the project supplying funds and manpower. The objective will be 750,000 unorganized workers in manufacturing, wholesale and retail trade, government, food, drink and hotels, and soft goods industries. These 750,000 constitute about three-fourths of the unorganized in the Los Angeles area, Meany said. Another 750,000 are now trade union members.

The pilot project will be based on voluntary cooperation and participation of the unions in the five industry areas. Under Livingston's direction, the first step will be to secure an agreement at the national level for the Los Angeles organizing drive.

Meany reported to the council that the first four months of experience under the internal disputes plan was marked by successful mediation efforts with nearly half of the 48 complaints received settled voluntarily or by the mediators.

ILGWU Claim Upheld

He announced the council's action in voting unanimously to uphold the claim of the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union that it was justified in attempting to organize into the ILGWU workers now members of the United Garment Workers at Brewton Fashions,

(Continued on Page 3)

Advisers Urge T-H Reforms

By John M. Barry

Pres. Kennedy's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy has recommended major changes in the Taft-Hartley Act's emergency disputes section to give the Chief Executive more power and flexibility in dealing with industrial disputes deemed to "threaten the national health or safety."

With but one dissent, the 20-member committee representing labor, management and the public proposed amendment of the law to:

- Give the President direct authority to halt or delay such work stoppages for 80 days without going to court for an injunction.
- Authorize him to empower emergency boards to make recommendations for settlement of a dispute, a function which fact-finding panels do not now have.
- Eliminate, "in view of its demonstrated ineffectiveness," the "last offer" ballot procedure now required by the law.

While the committee was virtually unanimous on these and other recommendations, a basic conflict developed over the charge of union "monopoly power" injected by several management representatives. The group agreed to undertake a separate study of the question for a future report.

The clash grew out of charges by management members that "a concentration of power in certain unions" impairs collective bargaining. A statement by Board Chairman Joseph L. Block of Inland Steel Co. urged legal curbs on the "monopoly power" of large unions and Board Chairman Henry Ford of Ford Motor Co. argued that

(Continued on Page 8)

IN WHITE HOUSE ROSE GARDEN, Pres. Kennedy welcomed COPE Big Cities Conference delegates and urged hard work on registration drive. Shown with him before he mingled with the delegates are, left to right, Deputy Dir. Al Barkan and Dir. James L. McDevitt of COPE, and Roy Reuther, chief of the AFL-CIO registration drive.

COPE Opens Dollar Drive:

Meany Sees '62 Goal As Liberal Congress

Labor's "most important activity at this time" is to get workers and their families to register and vote, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told union delegates from the nation's largest cities.

In a keynote to a three-day Big Cities conference called in Washington, D. C., by the federation's Committee on Political Education, Meany said labor's goal in the 1962 election is to elect a Congress which will "advance the interests of the entire people."

The 100 delegates heard labor's non-partisan registration drive praised by representatives of both political parties and by Pres. Kennedy, who addressed the group in the White House rose garden.

"The country should be indebted to you," the President said. "What happens in November will really be very much due to the work you do in the next months."

Meany told the conference, which also marked the kickoff for a month-long COPE dollar drive, that "the most important part of political action is at the local level."

The AFL-CIO president described labor's 1960 registration drive, conducted in 14 key industrial states, as "very, very encouraging" despite a late start. The increased vote in those areas, he said, can be "directly attributed to the work of the trade union movement."

"We have that experience to build on this year," Meany declared.

Election Was Answer

The 1960 election, he added, also provided a convincing answer "to those who say one vote doesn't count."

Pres. Kennedy, Meany said, has

(Continued on Page 12)

NLRB Lost Pay Rule Upset After 26 Years

The National Labor Relations Board has overturned a 26-year-old back pay practice it found was benefiting an employer at the expense of an employe discharged for union activity.

The board ruled to allow full reimbursement of an employe for loss of income due to an unlawful discharge rather than reduce the back pay award where an NLRB examiner finds no violation but is later reversed by the board.

Past practice had been to "toll" back pay awards in discriminatory discharge cases—reducing the amount of back pay for the period involved between the trial examiner's report finding no violation and the board's later order reversing the examiner.

The new rule, handed down by a three-man board majority, is that back pay will be made from the date of the discrimination—an unlawful discharge—to the date of an offer of reinstatement, the date of placement on a preferential hiring list, or other cut-off date found in the particular case, "regardless of the nature of the trial examiner's recommendation."

The majority of Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown found that failure to provide a worker unlaw-

(Continued on Page 9)

Bolder Action Urged:

Jobs Pickup Seen Slow Throughout '62

The economic outlook for the rest of 1962 is for a "slow-down" in the pace of what has been an "unsatisfactory upturn" from the 1960-61 recession, the AFL-CIO Executive Council warned, and the need is for "more immediate action."

The council's statement on the present state of the national economy reviewed the various indicators and declared that "actual developments have unfortunately borne out the AFL-CIO warnings during the past six months of weakness in the pickup" from the recession.

It stressed that "improvements in employment and unemployment have lagged far behind" other factors, such as national production, adding that with productivity at high and rising levels "a reduction in unemployment takes considerably more affirmative and aggressive actions than at other points in time."

The statement "heartily" commended Pres. Kennedy for recognizing the unsatisfactory na-

(Continued on Page 3)

UNUSUAL OVERALL PHOTO shows AFL-CIO Executive Council in one of its sessions during recent meeting in AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington. Among other important matters, the council called on all affiliates to back a union-government plan to help eliminate race bias in employment.

Mediation of Internal Disputes Off to Good Start, Meany Says

Successful use of mediation by trade unions officers and voluntary agreements highlighted the first four months of the AFL-CIO's internal disputes plan, Federation Pres. George Meany has reported to the Executive Council.

Since the first of the year, 48 complaints on disputes have been filed of which 14 were settled by the president's office, 23 were sent to mediation, 4 were referred directly to the impartial umpire, and action is pending in 7.

Meany praised the mediators, drawn from a panel of 50 trade union officers, for settling 9 of the 23 cases assigned them and referring only 4 to the umpire. Mediation, he said, is still in progress in 10 of the cases.

The degree of success achieved by the mediators is remarkable, Meany declared, because the cases sent them had not been settled during the informal discussion stage and presented many difficult issues.

The AFL-CIO president told a press conference that he hopes "we can continue to make good use of mediation and keep as many cases as possible from going to arbitration."

The internal disputes plan was adopted at the December 1961 AFL-CIO convention and made part of the federation's constitution. It calls for mediation, determination by an impartial umpire if mediation fails, and the imposition of sanctions by the federation's Executive Council for non-compliance with a final decision. The plan covers established collective bargaining relationships, established work relationships and attacks on the public repute of other affiliates.

In other action relating to the disputes plan:

● The Executive Council voted unanimously to uphold the claim of the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union that it was justified in attempting to organize into the ILGWU workers now members of the United Garment Workers at Brewton Fashions Ltd., Brewton, Ala.

The council acted under the justification section of the internal disputes plan, which requires a two-thirds vote of the council to give one union permission to engage in action otherwise barred under the plan.

Applies Only to Brewton

Meany told reporters that the decision applies only to the Brewton plant. In reviewing details of the case, he said the dispute arose when Judy Bond, Inc., manufacturer of blouses in New York City, terminated a 29-year bargaining relationship with the ILGWU, bought the Brewton plant and moved its operations there. The ILGWU struck the company.

The UGWA had represented the 300 workers at the Brewton plant manufacturing men's clothing. The ILGWU asked the UGWA not to make blouses at Brewton because of its strike against Judy Bond but the union signed a three-year agreement with the Bond company.

The AFL-CIO president characterized this action as "deliberately" going to the assistance of "this runaway employer" after the ILGWU had invoked the disputes machinery and while the ILGWU was on strike.

The council's action was the first under the justification provisions of the internal disputes plan. These provisions state that "in the event that any affiliate believes that such special and unusual circumstances exist that it would be violative of its basic jurisdiction or contrary to basic concepts of trade union morality or to the constitutional objectives of the AFL-CIO or injurious to accepted trade union work standards to enforce the principles which would apply in the absence of such circumstances, such organization shall nevertheless observe such principles unless its claim is upheld in the manner prescribed in Section 17 of this article."

● The council also adopted a policy governing proceedings under the justification sections of the plan, declaring that it will not hear oral arguments but will act on the report of the impartial umpire and written arguments submitted by the parties containing exceptions to the umpire's report. The written exceptions must be filed within 15 days following the issuance of the umpire's report.

The policy statement said also that "if members of the Executive Council are involved in a case, they will withdraw during its consideration by the council and will disqualify themselves from voting on the case."

In his report to the council on the operation of the disputes plan, Meany said that of the 8 cases referred to the impartial umpire, 2 fact-finding reports were submitted to the council, there were 4 determinations by the umpire, one determination is pending and another case is awaiting a hearing. The fact-finding reports involve justification section cases; one of them involved the ILGWU-UGWA case.

Of the four cases where the umpire issued a determination, no violation of the disputes plan was found in one case, another was appealed by the union found in violation, and in two cases a union was found in non-compliance. The two cases of non-compliance involve the Journeymen Stonecutters as the offending party. The Stonecutters have thus joined the Bookbinders on the list of non-complying organizations against whom automatic sanctions provided for in the plan are now in force.

The report pointed up the fact that nearly 50 percent of the cases filed were settled through voluntary action—23 of 48—without the necessity of a hearing and determination by the impartial umpire. Of the 17 cases still in doubt, Meany said, there is every reason to believe that a substantial number will be settled voluntarily.

Support Pledged to Alabama Strikers

The Aluminum Workers' five-month strike against the Union Aluminum Co. in Sheffield, Ala., a major manufacturer of aluminum windows, won the unanimous support of the AFL-CIO Executive council and a pledge to alert the entire federation in support of the strikers.

The council voted a contribution to the strikers and instructed Federation Pres. George Meany to solicit further support from all federation affiliates.

The 300 Aluminum Workers struck the plant Nov. 16, 1961, in an effort to win a first contract. The company last month prepared to resume operations with strikebreakers but support from 8,000 union members in the area resulted in the firm changing its mind.

S. B. Axtell Dies; Helped Sea Union

Silas Blake Axtell, lawyer who helped the late Andrew Furuseth found the old Intl. Seamen's Union in 1912, died in Bethesda, Md., a Washington suburb, after suffering a heart atack on his way home after a trip to Tampa, Fla. He had homes in Dongan Hills and Little Britain, N. Y., and was 77.

Soon after graduating from law school he started work with the seamen's division of the Legal Aid Society, initiated maritime legislation in Congress, studied maritime laws in Europe and took several cases involving seamen to the Supreme Court. He often opened his home to convalescing seamen while taking their cases to court. The ISU was succeeded by the present Seafarers Intl. Union.

Council Hits Loopholes:

Vastly Strengthened Tax Measure Urged

The AFL-CIO has charged opponents of a withholding tax on dividend and interest income with a "vicious campaign of misrepresentation" aimed at getting the Senate to eliminate "loophole-closing provisions" of the House-passed tax revision bill.

If the tax bill is "to justify the support of the American people," it must be "vastly strengthened" by the Senate, not "emasculated," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared at its spring meeting in Washington.

The council pointed out that the dividend and interest provision "would impose no new tax on anyone; it would simply enforce payment of what has long been due."

If the withholding provision is rejected by the Senate, the council stated, "a gross injustice against wage and salary earners . . . will be perpetuated." Because of unreported—and therefore untaxed—dividend and interest income, wage earners presently carry a "disproportionate" share of the tax burden, the AFL-CIO noted.

Changes Proposed

The council also warned against efforts to weaken provisions in the House bill aimed at ending "the expense account racket," terminating "special tax privileges" of businesses operating overseas and Americans living abroad, and ending "profiteering" based on "the unjustifiable capital gains treatment of profits from the sale of depreciable business assets."

Declaring the Senate should make these provisions stronger, the council also called for:

● Ending the "inequitable dividend credit" as requested by the President. The House failed to repeal this tax credit, which the AFL-CIO termed a "scandalous loophole."

● Elimination of the House-passed investment tax credit as "a costly scheme" which would "dangerously distort the stable growth of the American economy." At the very least, the AFL-CIO said, the investment credit should be "recast to provide a temporary investment incentive solely for businesses substantially engaged in international trade."

● Dropping a House-passed provision which would exempt lobbying expenses from taxation.

Failure to strengthen the bill, the AFL-CIO said, "will make a mockery of any pretense at tax reform."

The Executive Council statement pointed out that the dividend and income withholding provision provides exemption for persons who certify that they expect no tax liability for the year, and speedy refunds for others if the amount withheld is greater than their tax obligation. These safeguards, the AFL-CIO noted, refute the argument that withholding "would cause hardship" for low-income groups.

The statement added:

"In simple justice, since withholding applies to those who work for wages and salaries, it should now apply to those who enjoy dividend and interest income as well."

Stonecutters Named In Noncompliance Case

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has notified all federation affiliates that the Journeymen Stonecutters Association has been found to be in non-compliance with the decisions of an impartial umpire under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes procedures and is subject to sanctions set forth in the federation's constitution.

The finding was reached by a subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council consisting of Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge. It was the second case of non-compliance since the internal disputes plan was adopted as Article XXI of the AFL-CIO constitution at the federation's convention last December.

Meany said the subcommittee's ruling followed the refusal of the Stonecutters to withdraw from raids upon the Intl. Association of Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers at Candora Marble Co. and Tennessee Marble Co., Knoxville, Tenn., and upon the United Stone & Allied Products Workers at the Georgia Marble Co., Tate, Nelson and Marble Hill, Ga.

Impartial Umpire David L. Cole had found these actions to be violations of the no-raiding provisions of Article XXI. Complaints of non-compliance with the umpire's decisions were brought by the Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers and the Stone & Allied Products Workers.

In his notification to affiliates, Meany said the Stonecutters, effective Apr. 25, 1962, were subject to the following provisions of Sec. 15 of Article XXI:

"1—The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this Article until such non-compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Section 16;

"2—The Federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be in violation of this Article;

"3—The Federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the Constitution;

"4—No affiliate shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this Article."

ILPA Convention Set for Cleveland

Milwaukee—The Executive Council of the Intl. Labor Press Association has voted to hold the association's annual convention in Cleveland Nov. 29-30 and Dec.1.

Walt Davis, ILPA vice president in Cleveland, will handle the arrangements for the convention.

At its semi-annual meeting here the council elected Raymond G. Dickow, managing editor of The Butcher Workman, official journal of the Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen, a vice president and member of the council to replace Al B. Harrington, editor of the CWA News, monthly newspaper of the Communications Workers of America. Harrington has joined the public information division of the Area Redevelopment Administration.

Anti-Bias, Organizing Projects Backed

Progress Seen Under Internal Disputes Plan

(Continued from Page 1)

Ltd., Brewton, Ala. The council acted under the justification section of the internal disputes plan which requires a two-thirds vote to give one union permission to engage in action otherwise barred under the plan.

In reply to a number of questions at his press conference Meany:

● Supported Pres. Kennedy's decision to resume nuclear testing as "regrettable" but necessary "to keep us ahead of the Soviet Union."

● Repeated his appeal, made in an American Federationist editorial, that U.S. surpluses be given directly by American administrators to famine-stricken people behind the Iron Curtain in a "practical humanitarian" plan modeled on the post-World War I efforts of Herbert Hoover's American Relief Administration. He made clear that the plan to share U.S. surplus food with hungry people in Communist countries hinged on "direct" distribution by American teams so that recipients "know where it's coming from."

He expressed doubt that the Communist countries would now agree to such a plan, but stressed his opposition to giving surpluses to the governments themselves "because there is no guarantee" that they would actually distribute the food and not "sell it for arms."

In the legislative area, the council:

● Commended Pres. Kennedy for "his quick and successful mobilization of public opinion" against the basic steel industry's $6-a-ton price hike and declared that the situation in steel pointed up the need "for statutory and formal procedures involving price increases in basic, strategic industries in which prices are administered by the top executives of the dominant corporations." (Story page 4.)

● Warned of last minute efforts to "emasculate the loophole-closing provisions" of the House-passed tax bill and called, instead, for amendments to strengthen the measure. (Story page 2.)

● Declared that the economic outlook for the rest of 1962 is for a "slow-down" in the pace of the "unsatisfactory upturn" from the 1960-61 recession and called for "more immediate action." (Story page 1.)

Meany told reporters that the nation's long-term unemployment outlook is "just as bad now as it was some months ago" and may dictate a shorter workweek if the jobless "slack" is not taken up.

Must Take Up Slack

While the AFL-CIO has taken no formal position on the shorter workweek, he observed, "somewhere down the road, if we don't conquer the unemployment problem—if we don't take up the slack of jobs eliminated by automation and technological progress—it is quite obvious that the shorter workweek must be considered as an answer."

On the collective bargain front, the council:

● Pledged the rail operating unions the AFL-CIO's full support in their fight against drastic work rule changes sought by management and recommended by a presidential commission. (Story page 5.)

● Voted labor's full support to the Sleeping Car Porters in national negotiations for a shorter work month, job protection and income security.

● Supported the boycott of the Distillery Workers against the Stitzel-Weller company, manufacturers of a number of well known whiskeys. The union has been on strike for nine months.

● Called on all unions to support the strike of the Aluminum Workers against the Union Aluminum Co. in Sheffield, Ala.

In other actions the council:

● Voted $25,000 for the National Institute for Labor Education, $25,000 for the National Housing Conference and $5,000 for the Palestinian Arabs Vocational Fund of the United Nations Work & Relief Agency to help train young refugee Arabs.

● Set the next meeting of the council for Chicago starting Aug. 13.

2 Unions Sign Pact On Rail Signal Pipe

The Plumbers & Pipe Fitters and the Railroad Signalmen have signed an agreement to eliminate jurisdictional disputes arising from pipe work used in railway signaling devices or systems.

The agreement was announced jointly by Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters and Pres. Jesse Clark of the Railroad Signalmen.

It terminates a jurisdictional dispute going back a number of years and is believed to be one of the first between a building trades and a railroad union.

The pact provides that work installed at a plant or facility located on property owned by a railroad, which is not used as a part of its operation as a common carrier, is recognized as the work of the Plumbers.

Pipe work used primarily for signaling purposes will be installed by members of the Signalmen. Pipe work used for purposes other than signaling on railroad property is the work of the Plumbers.

In other circumstances spelled out in the agreement both unions will perform part of the work, depending on the nature of the installation.

Matters not covered will be brought to conferences in an attempt to reach agreement based on the broad principles in the pact.

PILOT ORGANIZING PROJECT for the Los Angeles area was discussed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany (before microphone) at press conference during Washington meeting of Executive Council.

Council Sees Slowdown Lasting Through 1962

(Continued from Page 1)

ture of the upturn by urging Congress to approve an immediate $600 million public works program, but added that more action is needed quickly.

The council urged a standby program of public works to take effect if unemployment remains over 5 percent of the labor force during the next six months. The standby program would step up public works expenditures by an additional $2 billion.

The council urged again a temporary reduction in individual income taxes through a reduction of the withholding tax on wages and salaries. It stressed that "reasonable increases in wages and salaries should be encouraged to provide the basis for growing markets which are the decisive incentive for increasing business investment in new plants and machines."

The statement noted in addition that "in order to maintain low interest rates on long-term loans to encourage home-building, business investment and state and local government programs, the Federal Reserve Board should pursue policies to insure continued ease on the money market.

"Ceilings on interest rates paid by banks and savings and loan associations to their depositors must be imposed at lower levels. Until this is done, the high cost of securing savings will result in forcing the lending institutions to seek out loans that will earn enough to enable them to pay high interest rates on savings deposits. This is a vicious circle that can only result in chaos in the money market."

Meany Named Trustee Of National Arts Center

Pres. Kennedy has appointed AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the board of trustees of the National Cultural Center. Meany, in accepting, pledged labor's "enthusiastic support" to the project.

"I regard this as far more than a personal honor," Meany said. "It is, as I see it, a direct recognition by the President of American labor's interest in the arts."

The objective of the Cultural Center is to raise $30 million in voluntary contributions to construct a complex of facilities for the performing arts in Washington, D. C. A telecast next Nov. 15 will climax the campaign. The federal government will provide land just off the Potomac River.

"Labor unions have long expressed their appreciation of the importance of the arts in American life," Meany said.

"Repeatedly, through the years, labor organizations in every part of the nation have sponsored or joined in supporting community projects in music, the theater and every other area of cultural expression. I know the President was cognizant of this role when he appointed a representative of the American trade union movement to help make the National Cultural Center a reality.

"The project will have our enthusiastic support. We view the National Cultural Center as the visible symbol of America's dedication to the arts. Its program will encourage artistic talent in every state, in every town, by offering it the goal of a national showcase in our nation's capital.

"The creation of these kinds of facilities for the performing arts in Washington will meet a long unmet need. It is a project in which all Americans can join with a sense of national pride. I welcome this opportunity to serve on its board of trustees."

Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the Center's trustees, welcomed the Meany appointment as "most fitting" because "trade unions increasingly have encouraged cultural activities in communities all over the country."

Stevens said he has invited Meany, in addition to the role of trustee, to meet regularly with the Cultural Center's executive committee so as to bring him directly into the planning of the project.

Jailed Union Leaders Freed by Liberians

Monrovia, Liberia—Two leaders of the Liberian Congress of Industrial Organizations, Joseph Juma and J. Kottey, have been released from the custody in which they had been held since their arrest in last September's general strike.

The two had never been formally charged and they never were tried. A third labor leader arrested at the same time, Jake Wayne, was freed in December. The strike was called to support a wage increase demand.

Employer Unit Backs 40-Hour Overtime Bill

A management association has urged the Senate to approve a labor-backed bill requiring employers to pay overtime rates for all work performed on government construction contracts after 40 hours in any week.

The National Constructors Association said the legislation, which has passed the House, is "fair, reasonable and in the public interest."

It is needed, Association Exec. Sec. E. D. Hoekstra told a Senate Labor subcommittee, to protect contractors with union agreements from "unfair competition on the part of open-shop contractors" in bidding on contracts.

While the existing law requires payment of premium rates after 8 hours in one day, Hoekstra pointed out that the open-shop contractor "is free to schedule six and seven-day operations on a straight-time basis."

The legislation, he said, will "merely extend to the [construction] industry the fair, reasonable and sound workweek standard . . . which has been established by law and custom for most of the American economy."

Council Votes Support to Vaccine Bill

Pres. Kennedy's proposed program to eradicate polio, diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus (lockjaw) and the enabling legislation now pending in Congress were "heartily" supported by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting in Washington.

"The AFL-CIO has long urged that more be done to make the benefits of medical discoveries widely available to all the American people," the council said in a resolution. "We are gratified that the federal government is exerting its leadership in this direction. We . . . expect to cooperate with other voluntary groups and public agencies in implementing in all communities the immunization program contemplated by the legislation."

Specifically endorsed were bills sponsored by Sen. Lister Hill (D-Ala.) and Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) which would authorize federal funds to cover the full cost of vaccine for all children under five years of age and to help meet the cost of organizing vaccination campaigns.

"Improved techniques to control infectious disease have not, up to now, benefited all Americans," the Executive Council asserted.

"While the advent of Salk vaccine has greatly reduced the incidence of paralytic polio, among children under five—a group particularly susceptible to polio—less than half have been adequately protected through vaccination. Children who live in slums and other blighted areas remain unprotected in even larger numbers, and these are the areas where the remaining cases of polio are predominantly to be found."

ICFTU Aids Niger Fight on Meningitis

Brussels—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has given 25,000 Central African francs to the Republic of Niger to help fight an epidemic of meningitis that has numbered many agricultural workers among its victims.

ONE OF SEVERAL PANELS on international labor training during recent conference at American University in Washington, D. C. Left to right, Howard Robinson, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions; Everett Kassalow, research director, AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Gordon Chapman, coordinator of labor affairs, Dept. of State; William Doherty, Jr., international representative, Postal, Telephone and Telegraph Intl.; and Bertram Gottlieb, AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

U.S. Steel, Bethlehem Charged With Price-Fixing, Bid-Rigging

New York—The nation's two biggest steel producers—U.S. Steel and Bethlehem—have been indicted by a federal grand jury here on charges of fixing prices and rigging bids on sales of forged steel to the government and to private firms.

The anti-trust indictment also named two smaller firms, five company executives, and an industry trade association which allegedly served as a cover for a price-fixing conspiracy.

Justice Dept. officials said the investigation had begun a year ago and was unrelated to the controversy between Pres. Kennedy and steel companies over the price increase recently announced and then revoked.

The grand jury charged that U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and the Open Die Forging Institute had engaged in a "conspiracy" to fix prices "at least as early as 1948," with the Erie Forge & Steel Corp., Erie, Pa., participating since April 1950 and the Midvale-Heppenstall Co., Philadelphia, a party since December 1955.

The four firms account for nearly half of the $220 million annual sales in open die steel forging, which is defined as steel which is hammered or pressed into a desired shape and which in the process develops exceptional strength.

Trade Group Accused

According to the indictment, all of the companies charged except U.S. Steel used the trade association, the Open Die Forging Institute, as a vehicle for price-fixing and allocation of business.

U.S. Steel, the indictment charged, did not take part openly in the multi-company discussions but used Bethlehem Steel Co. as its "liaison."

The indictment charged that the defendants:

- "Agreed on the low bidder, or on who would submit the low cost estimate, on open die steel forgings sold to the United States, such as ship-shafting sold to the Navy Dept. and ordnance sold to the Army."
- "Reported all requests from private customers for quotations on forgings of a value in excess of $500 to the Open Die Forging Institute." Each manufacturer reporting a price inquiry would receive from the institute the names of other manufacturers who reported the same inquiry. The firms involved then "communicated with each other, usually by telephone but sometimes at meetings, and agreed on the price to be quoted."

In order that the minutes of the institute would not show discussions of prices, the institute secretary was "excused" from portions of the meetings, the indictment stated.

Bethlehem representatives would transmit price and bidding information received from U.S. Steel to the other firms, the grand jury charged, and would inform U.S. Steel of price information submitted by the smaller companies.

Individuals and their identifications named in the indictment are:

Erb Gurney, a sales manager with Bethlehem Steel Co.; Robert S. Barnes, assistant sales manager, Bethlehem; Homer Lackey, identified as forged products manager of U.S. Steel prior to Sept. 1, 1960, and thereafter president of Erie Forge & Steel Corp.; Emil Lang, board chairman of Erie Forge; R. B. Heppenstall, Sr., president of Midvale-Heppenstall Co.

Lawbreaking Denied

U.S. Steel and Bethlehem issued statements following the indictments declaring that the policy of their companies is to comply with anti-trust laws.

U.S. Steel Pres. Leslie B. Worthington said his firm's employes "have no authority" to enter into agreements with competitors to restrict competition. A Bethlehem spokesman said the company would be "greatly concerned" if any of its employes had been violating the law.

Price-Fix 'Victims' Were in Recent 'Fix'

The anti-trust indictment of four steel companies, including U.S. Steel and Bethlehem, charges the firms "fixed and maintained identical prices," or agreed on which company was to be the low bidder, on sales made to General Electric Co., Westinghouse Electric Corp., and Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co.

Ironically, a little more than a year ago GE, Westinghouse and Allis-Chalmers pleaded guilty in federal court to anti-trust violations, including fixing prices and rigging bids on sales to their customers.

On the basis of the dates listed in the indictment, the steel companies' alleged conspiracy took place at the same time the electrical equipment manufacturers were engaged in their own price conspiracy against others.

Labor Helps to Sponsor Training in New Skills

Battle Creek, Mich.—Unions, employers and educators here are moving into a second year of cooperative sponsorship of one of the nation's most unusual schools.

The student body is made up of both unemployed and employed workers seeking new skills to meet job demands of the Battle Creek area.

They go to school at night, attending special classes in subjects ranging from blueprint reading, automotive repair and welding to retail selling.

The "school board" which supervises the program is a committee representing labor, management, the local school system and the state employment service. The chairman is W. Scott Ensign, president of the AFL-CIO central labor body, the local chamber of commerce president is secretary.

Labor Planned It

It was the central labor body which initiated the project as a program for upgrading skills of workers which would cover fields not duplicated by apprenticeship programs or existing training facilities.

Ensign and Michael F. Smith, a veteran trade unionist attached to the Office of Civil Defense, then headquartered in Battle Creek, developed the details of the program.

The vocational division of the Battle Creek school system conducts the classes. Students are registered and advised through the state employment office. Much of the equipment is donated and low student fees cover the cost of instruction.

To date more than 300 workers have completed courses and the number is expected to pass the 500 mark by the end of the year.

Ensign reports that a number of the school's graduates have found jobs which utilize their new skills. He said the committee has sought to keep the program flexible and provide special courses on short notice as job opportunities develop. Suggestions are solicited regularly from both local unions and employers.

Kennedy Backed on Steel:

Council Urges Law To Spotlight Pricing

Commending Pres. Kennedy for his "quick and successful mobilization of public opinion" against basic steel's $6-a-ton price boost, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared that the situation in steel points up the need for "formal, statutory procedures" to focus public attention on the pricing practices of key industries.

The absence of such procedures, and of effective price competition in steel, left the President "extremely limited" alternatives in securing withdrawal of the price hike, a statement by the council observed.

Citing steel as one of the key industries where prices are set "by the top executives of the dominant corporation . . . and in puppet fashion the other companies follow the leader," the council declared:

"The President had to act as he did or passively observe the entire steel industry follow the . . . price boost. By acting quickly and boldly, Pres. Kennedy challenged U.S. Steel's domination over a key and non-competitive sector of the American economy. For the first time in decades, the corporation's vast economic and financial power was vigorously and successfully challenged."

While administered pricing may be inevitable in industries with vast investments in productive capacity and raw material resources, the statement said, the manner in which these prices are set to produce large profits at relatively low levels of operations "poses a problem for society."

And the problem still remains, it added, despite Kennedy's "courageous action."

"The series of events that started with U.S. Steel's price-boost announcement," the council said, "points up the need for statutory and formal procedures involving price increases in basic, strategic industries, in which prices are administered by the top executives of the dominant corporations."

Lessons Seen Useful

Such procedures, the statement suggested, would give the federal government adequate machinery, including full public investigation and disclosure, to focus public attention on the pricing policies of such industries.

"The recent steel situation will have served the American people well if its lessons are used to develop adequate government statutory tools, with proper safeguards, for future eventualities," the statement concluded.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said at a news conference that the council discussed no specific legislation in connection with the steel price statement.

Meany added, in response to a question, that the statement should not be construed as support of price controls.

"We are not looking for a control of prices," he said. "We think there should be some public knowledge of what goes into the price policies of, certainly, major corporations like the steel companies."

Hill and Monroney Win Senate Renominations

Democratic Party voters in Alabama and Oklahoma renominated all incumbent U.S. representatives and senators except one in primary elections and selected two candidates in each state for gubernatorial runoffs.

In Alabama, Sen. Lister Hill (D) easily won renomination and the three incumbent representatives facing opposition also scored easy victories. All nine representatives nominated must now run in a statewide "low-man out" primary May 20 in which one will be eliminated to conform with the redistricting law adopted by the state legislature. Under the 1960 census, Alabama loses one House seat.

In the gubernatorial contest, George C. Wallace, a former circuit court judge with a reputation as an ardent segregationist, chalked up the most votes but not enough to avoid a runoff. He will face Ryan deGraffenried, a state senator who edged out former Gov. James Folsom by 631 votes, on the basis of complete unofficial returns.

In Oklahoma, Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D) easily won renomination as did all incumbent representatives except Rep. Victor Wickersham (D), who faces a runoff contest with State Rep. James Bullard.

Raymond Gary, a former governor, and W. N. Bill Atkinson will fight it out for the gubernatorial nomination in a May 22 runoff. They led 10 other candidates, with Gary and Atkinson together polling more than half the votes cast.

Atom Tests 'Regrettable But Necessary'—Meany

The recent resumption of U.S. nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere was "regrettable" but necessary "to keep us ahead of the Soviet Union," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany asserted at a news conference during the Executive Council meeting.

"Like everyone else, I regret that Pres. Kennedy had to make the decision [authorizing a new series of tests in the Pacific] but I certainly approve of his making the decision," Meany answered a questioner.

He noted that the Soviet Union had broken a moratorium on atmospheric tests "without warning and with months of advance preparation" and said he was "quite sure" that it was these tests, and the new knowledge they gave the U.S.S.R., that compelled the President "to protect our security and order further U.S. weapons tests."

"If the Soviet Union would agree to a ban on tests with adequate inspection provisions, I am sure the President would drop our tests tomorrow, and the nation would applaud him," the AFL-CIO president said.

In the absence of such an agreement, however, "we've got to keep up—and a little bit ahead," Meany concluded.

Executive Council Acts:

Rail Labor's Fight On Rules Backed

Rail operating unions have been pledged the AFL-CIO's full support in their fight against drastic work rule changes sought by management and recommended by a presidential commission.

The federation's Executive Council, meeting in Washington, backed the 200,000 rail workers in current negotiations after hearing a spokesman for the five operating unions—Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen—describe the presidential commission report as "a harsh, inhuman, retrogressive attempt to neutralize the collective bargaining power of the rail brotherhoods."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a news conference that the commission's recommendations, if put into effect, would "arbitrarily wipe out 40,000 to 50,000 jobs and on that score alone are bad."

Gilbert told the council that proposals for elimination of locomotive helpers (firemen) and reduction of crews will mean that "more men will be killed and injured."

Describing the railroad industry as "still one of the most hazardous" in the nation, Gilbert pointed out that 190 employes were killed and 13,245 injured in 1960.

Safety Record 'Not Good'

"It is not a good record, but it could be worse, a lot worse, if the employes were denied their present contractual voice in the determination of crew size and work assignments," he added.

He warned, also, that commission proposals for binding arbitration on changes in existing work rules and recommendations which would result in wage cuts "for a majority of workers" pose a threat to the entire labor movement.

"To submit to binding arbitration the basic agreement controlling a worker's seniority, job asignment and working conditions subverts the mission of the labor movement," Gilbert declared. "We have a great respect for arbitrators . . . but we are unwilling to relieve ourselves of the responsibility of negotiating the best conditions possible for the men we represent."

He added:

"The railroad operating unions realize they are the first line of defense against the management-oriented thinking rampant in the report (of the presidential commission). They will do everything in their power to resist the imposition of the report on the men they represent."

Gilbert summarized the commission's recommendations under five categories:

Manpower—Eliminating the job of locomotive helper by canceling the existing agreement, in effect since 1937, and within 15 months furloughing 20,000 men who have less than 10 years seniority; question of the number of brakemen in crews refered to subsequent binding arbitration board; staffing of self-propelled work equipment left to management; national hiring pool recommended as central employment agency for 80,000 workers cut off from regular jobs; disruption of present seniority districts; compulsory retirement at 65.

Wage Structure—New wage structure to change the incentive basis, with employes required to work more hours to maintain present earnings; pay cuts for road employes averaging 16 percent; pay increases for certain yard workers of less than 2 percent; reduction to a 12-hour day, 56-hour week; denial of the principle of maintenance of pay while reducing the workweek.

Work Assignments—Railroads given unilateral right to establish length of runs and to establish, move, consolidate or abolish crew terminals; road crews could be required to perform yard and station switching with possible reduction of crews by 2,500.

Technological Changes—Railroads given unlimited, unchallenged right to introduce technological changes; employes' right of protest subject to binding arbitration; arbitration board would be able to break down craft lines; use of unmanned trains allowed with no right of protest by employes working on other trains or in yard.

Employes' Requests—Holiday pay denied for road employes,night and shift differential pay denied all workers; expenses away from home denied all road employes with exception of lodging allowance to those laying over five or more hours; job security and stabilization and minimum safe crew provision denied.

Plant in South Gets First Pension Fund

Charlotte, N. C.—The first jointly administered pension fund for workers in the southern textile finishing industry has been agreed to by Local 1355, Textile Workers Union of America, and the Cranston Print Works Co. plant at Fletcher, N. C.

The program is that of the TWUA Dyers & Printers, which covers 10,000 workers in mid-Atlantic plants and 3,000 in New England. Cranston is paying the full cost of the plan, which became effective May 1.

The contract settlement provided a package of 8 cents an hour, of which 5 cents was earmarked for a wage increase that became effective Apr. 30.

NLRB Test Filed On Strike Checkoff

General Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board has authorized an unfair labor practice complaint to test the legality of an unaffiliated union's demand for checkoff of a strike fund assessment.

Employes of Frito-Lay, Inc., in Cleveland, O., filed charges that Local 19 of the ousted Bakery & Confectionery Workers violated the Taft-Hartley Act by causing the employer to deduct a strike fund assessment from their wages. They claimed checkoff cards which they had previously signed did not provide for such deductions.

Rothman said he questions whether an authorization permitting deduction of "any monies owing" to the union—the language of the contract—over and above dues and initiation fees is valid.

Building Trades Push Average Rate Up 1%

Union building trades workers gained an average increase of three-tenths of 1 percent in their wage scales during the first three months of 1962, according to the quarterly report of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The increase pushed the estimated average hourly wage scale to $3.87, an increase of 1 cent. An average raise of 2.9 cents an hour gave the painters the greatest gain of the crafts. Plumbers and laborers were next with average advances of 1 cent.

RAIL OPERATING UNIONS were given backing by AFL-CIO Executive Council in their dispute with carriers over work rule changes after their case was presented to recent meeting by Pres. H. E. Gilbert (left) of the Locomotive Firemen & Engin men. Shown with him are, from left, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and George M. Harrison. Harrison also is president of the Railway Clerks.

McDonald Hails Steel Negotiations As 'Healthiest' and 'Most Fruitful'

By Gervase N. Love

Recent negotiations between the Steelworkers and the basic steel industry "were the healthiest and most fruitful in years," USWA Pres. David J. McDonald has declared.

"We made substantial progress in many areas," he said, and "in many ways we provided more real benefits for our members than in years when the cents-per-hour cost of settlement was higher."

McDonald's statement was read at a press briefing in Washington by USWA Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel, who with union staff personnel commented on the new two-year contracts. It emphasized that the union was concerned with "improving job and income security and creating job opportunities" in the negotiations, which were concluded with no wage increase but with a wage reopener next year.

McDonald said the approach taken in the bargaining sessions was as important as the solutions reached.

"We and the steel companies demonstrated the practicality of joint study of critical issues between negotiations," he explained. "We proved that this process could lead to informed and intelligent bargaining, which would, in turn, provide new and imaginative contractual provisions to deal with difficult problems—as in the new seniority and grievance provisions of our 1962 agreements, as well as the new savings and vacation plan."

McDonald referred to the Human Relations Committee which was set up in the agreement that ended the union's 1959-60 strike. It held meetings during the interim at which labor-management problems were discussed without the pressure of contract negotiations.

"Because of the success of this new approach to collective bargaining," McDonald continued, "we agreed this year to refer to the Human Relations Committee certain problems which have long been of great concern to us, such as the contracting-out of work, the performance of bargaining-unit work by supervisors or other non-bargaining unit employes, the excessive assignment of overtime work while employes are on layoff, etc.

"Although we signed a two-year agreement, we agreed to study these issues during the first year in an effort to find the facts and develop mutually satisfactory solutions. At the end of that year these matters, as well as certain economic matters (wages, insurance, pensions), will be open for bargaining.

"This idea of approaching complex non-economic subjects by a joint study, followed by reopening, is, I believe, a significant contribution to collective bargaining.

"In short, we began in 1962 what I personally hope to be a new era in collective bargaining between the basic steel companies and the USWA."

McDonald decried the tendency to measure contract gains solely in terms of cents-per-hour price tags.

Like any other responsible union, he stated, the USWA "must address its bargaining not to costs or to prices (over which we have no control whatsoever) but to the needs of its members."

"We have had and we undoubtedly will have again differences with the companies as to costs," he said. "But we do not bargain for increased costs or even to maintain costs on a unit basis. Cost is a limit, not an objective."

The union goal, McDonald declared, is to create a "healthy, secure relationship" with adequate protection against the hazards of joblessness, sickness, accident and old age, as well as an adequate income.

"The degree to which we succeed in making progress toward this goal simply cannot be measured in cents per hour," he insisted.

"Some security" against unemployment can be provided by an expanded supplemental unemployment benefit (SUB) plan, he explained, and the overall cost of SUB can be measured in cents per hour.

"But security can also be provided by changes in plant seniority systems, by expanded on-the-job training for new jobs, by interplant preferential hiring of laid-off employes, and in a host of other ways," he said. "These may contribute more than SUB toward achieving the goal of job security. They may even reduce SUB costs. Obviously, therefore, the cost of SUB cannot be used to evaluate a settlement in terms of its contributions toward job security."

Another union goal, he continued, is establishment of "an efficient, effective and speedy method" of dealing with grievances.

"Contractual guarantees of justice on the job are meaningless unless they can be enforced effectively and promtply," he pointed out. "Yet improvements in this area certainly cannot be measured in cents per hour.

"The point is simply that the quality and success of any collective bargaining settlement cannot be measured in the cents-per-hour result of the bargaining."

TWO CHILDREN saved from death when Locomotive Fireman Bernard O'Neil pushed them out of the path of a Rock Island locomotive at an unprotected crossing in Colona, Ill., show their gratitude to their rescuer. The Quad-City Federation of Labor showed its appreciation, too, by presenting O'Neil with a special "citation for heroic achievement." The youngsters, Pamela Mooney, age 3, left, and her four-year-old brother, Rusty, are children of Wilbur Mooney, Jr., a member of Local 856 of the Auto Workers. The central labor body noted that railroad management is attempting to eliminate the jobs of locomotive firemen and asked: "Would the industry call O'Neil's act 'featherbedding'?"

Alexander Film Co. Signs Union Contract

Colorado Springs—The Alexander Film Co. has signed contracts with the Screen Actors Guild and has been removed from the SAG "unfair list" which it headed for many years.

Dollars for COPE

MAY IS A MONTH of political decisions. A number of important states are holding primary elections this month. In others, candidates are taking soundings and organizing campaign machinery for later primaries. In many respects May ranks only below November as a vitally important month on the political calendar.

Because of the political awakening and activity taking place this month, the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education has designated May for "a full, coordinated drive to collect voluntary dollars" for the 1962 elections.

These voluntary dollars will be critical in the congressional and gubernatorial elections. While unions can support non-partisan register and get-out-the-vote drives and produce educational material on important issues as part of an overall political education program, they cannot use union funds for partisan political activities.

The distinction is important. If a state or district COPE endorses a congressional candidate, the actual work of supporting that candidate's campaign can come only from voluntary COPE dollars.

The full potential of the COPE program cannot be realized unless there is a large flow of voluntary dollar contributions by union members. No degree of COPE activity, no amount of literature, no number of well-meaning resolutions can do the job of voluntary dollar contributions to carry on labor's political activities.

The labor movement is a trustee of the national interest—the people's lobby—dedicated to the progress of the nation as a whole.

To discharge that obligation to the nation requires the fullest participation by every trade union member. That obligation is to be a registered voter, a voter who turns out at every primary and general election, an informed voter who knows the issues and the candidates, and a voter who has made a contribution to give force and direction to his views.

Labor Helps the Farmer

THE LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS Union has taken an historic step toward strengthening the mutual interests between farmers and workers and stressing their economic interdependence by using its pension and welfare fund reserves to finance family farm mortgages.

The $100 million made available by the union for investment in Farmers Home Administration mortgages over the next four years marks the first time that a union has ever invested its funds in this area.

One of the major purposes of the program is to strengthen the independent family farm, which has been slowly disappearing as large corporate-type farms swallow up the smaller units. The AFL-CIO has strongly supported legislation to help the family farm unit maintain its economic independence.

In the past decade there has been a concentrated attack by the corporate farm and producer interests to split the independent farmer and the trade union member by launching campaigns designed to weaken and destroy unions through punitive legislation.

The identity of interests between the family farmer and union members has survived these attacks. The ILGWU's decision to invest workers' funds in loans for farmers is the latest evidence of labor's continuing concern for the economic security of all segments of the nation.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned.

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, May 5, 1962 No. 18

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Commonweal Magazine Writes:

Prescription for All Hospitals: Comply With Fair Labor Laws

The following is excerpted from an editorial in "The Commonweal" entitled "Prescription for the Hospitals."

SHOULD HOSPITAL WORKERS be permitted to engage in collective bargaining? Or, to put the question in more dramatic but no less accurate terms, should hospitals be exempt from the federal and state laws which require other employers to pay a minimum wage, maintain decent working conditions and recognize legitimate employes' organizations for purposes of collective bargaining?

We are convinced, on every count, that hospitals should not be exempted from state fair labor laws. We are convinced that the present exemption is unjust and abusive, that it denies hospital workers a fundamental right, that it leads not only to the exploitation of the workers involved but to evil consequences for the hospitals themselves, for their patients and for society at large.

Spokesmen for the hospitals maintain that their institutions should be exempt from fair labor laws because they are charitable organizations. This is an obvious illogicality, in the first place, because many other kinds of charitable institutions are not exempted from such labor laws, but more fundamentally because the employes of a charitable institution are not voluntary donors of their time and labor.

They are workers, seeking through their wages to maintain themselves and their families in decency. They have a right to a decent wage and to the freedom of deciding, as others do, what and how they will give to charity.

The second argument of the hospitals is simply that they cannot afford to pay the higher wages which collective bargaining would bring. What this amounts to, it seems to us, is an attempt to justify the exploitation of workers in the name of a noble end.

IF MANY HOSPITALS are already in financial straits, which is true, and if the cost of hospital care is already so high that patients need some kind of subsidy to help pay for this care, which is also true, it nevertheless does not follow that this subsidy should be supplied by one small segment of the community, namely the unfortunate workers who are least able to carry such a burden.

Another argument against recognizing hospital workers' right to collective bargaining is that such a step would lead to strikes, slowdowns and interference with hospital procedures. The easiest reply to these charges is that the record of labor-management relations both in and out of hospitals indicates quite the opposite. The recognition of nurses', technicians' and other professional workers' organizations in hospitals has not led to these dire consequences at all.

In the case of New York hospitals, it seems clear that the denial of orderly means of negotiation left the workers with no recourse whatsoever except to strike. It was, therefore, not the presence of unions so much as their absence which made the strike a necessity for the workers.

We do not lightly countenance a hospital strike; we do not deny that many of our hospitals are in urgent need of financial assistance; but the exemption of hospitals from state labor laws is not a just or proper solution to the problem. We think it is important that this exemption be removed, for the sake of the workers involved, but also for the sake of the hospitals and the communities which need them so badly.

"Which wise guy has been filling the packages all the way to the top?"

Morgan Says:

Business Will Have Confidence Of Public When It's Deserved

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

AT AN IMPRESSIVE social gathering of businessmen in New York, Roger Blough, board chairman of U.S. Steel, said: "One of the most necessary things this country must have is confidence in the business of this country."

Would, Mr. Blough, that we could. Let us cast a glance at only major developments:

Morgan

In February 1961, climaxing the largest anti-trust action ever tried, heavy fines and even prison terms for individuals involved were meted out to 29 major manufacturing firms of electrical equipment — including brand-name leaders of the industry—and 44 of their officials who had pleaded guilty to criminal charges of price-fixing involving more than $8 billion worth of government and commercial contracts.

Last May a father-son brokerage team, Gerard A. and Gerard F. Re, was expelled from the American Stock Exchange on charges of illegal stock manipulation. An investigation by the Securities & Exchange Commission is still in progress, but an interim report in January was sharply critical of several practices.

On Feb. 27, 1962, James Truman Bidwell, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange board of governors, was indicted by a federal grand jury on charges of evading more than $55,000 in U.S. income taxes. He has resigned his post; his trial is pending.

In New York, the nation's two top steel producer's, U.S. Steel and Bethlehem, were indicted by another federal grand jury with two other steel companies, five executives and a trade association on charges of violating the anti-trust laws.

In only 15 months of the Robert F. Kennedy regime at the Dept. of Justice, there have been 34 federal indictments for price-fixing and bid-rigging. Last month two big milk distributors in the state of Washington were indicted on these counts. In Boston three Massachusetts milk companies were similarly charged; in addition they were accused of defrauding the government. Also in March four ice carnival shows were indicted on the charge they had divided up the country to corner the trade. A New York venetian blind firm has just been indicted for price-fixing and allegedly paying off a union official.

AS FAR AS THE PENDING court cases are concerned, the defendants must be presumed innocent until proved guilty. But the wrong-doing already proved should be too shocking to tolerate.

In an article in the New York Times, the ex-president and board chairman of Inland Steel, Clarence B. Randall, who has served three administrations in Washington with distinction, wrote that "it is clear that industry in this country is facing a moral crisis." He went on to mention a little-publicized situation in which American companies doing business in the emerging nations of Asia and Africa were bribing officials of those fledgling governments in order to buy their way into mineral concessions or other operations.

It is well, in fact it is vital, to recall the counsel of a fair-minded man, Commerce Sec. Luther Hodges. In a speech on business ethics in February in Miami, he said it bears remembering that "business morality all through history has mirrored the morality of society as a whole. . . . Business ethics, as a whole, have never been singularly different from those of society at large. And they have changed and improved only as society . . . has evolved, by law or private conviction, a more enlightened standard of what is right."

None of us can escape the weight of that admonition. Labor has done much voluntarily to clean its own house but comparisons don't necessarily get us anywhere because it has been demonstrated that in our reactions to temptation, we are pretty much a classless society.

With the onus blistering on business for the moment, it would be inspiring to see it set a quickened pace toward better ethics for everybody.

Give us something to believe in, Mr. Blough, and we'll believe it; and please, make it more than a quarterly report to stockholders on earnings.

Washington Reports:

Federal Aid for Mass Transit Seen Key to Big-City Growth

THE NATION'S LARGE CITIES cannot depend on the automobile alone as their means of mass transportation, especially in rush hours, if the congestion in those hours is to be relieved, Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"Washington (as an example), which has the greatest value historically and is a beautiful city, just can't go the way of Los Angeles, which has given over to the auto two-thirds of the streets," Williams asserted, adding that there must be new mass transit facilities to meet the needs.

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N.Y.) said on the same program that "the strength and future growth of our cities depend on our ability to solve this problem. We desperately need urban transportation facilities."

Keating said that a start was made last year as part of the Housing Act, with $50 million set aside for loans at low interest rates and for grants to demonstrate new transportation ideas. A bill introduced for the Administration this year by Williams would provide $500 million over a three-year period.

Keating said he favors the Williams bill "if our mass transportation facilities are not to fold up and die," but he also advocates "some kind of tax legislation for transportation companies, particularly railroads, so that tax concessions granted by state and local governments will have their effect."

"Also I think we have to encourage and stimulate research on new transportation equipment and design," Keating said. "I am very much interested in this monorail that is running in Seattle now. That's an illustration. I also favor the establishment of a Dept. of Urban Affairs to deal with this problem among others."

WILLIAMS POINTED OUT that the real problem in most cities comes during the rush hours, two hours a day, five days a week.

"We know that the automobile is inadequate to deliver all of our folks from their homes to their places of work," he declared. "We know that all across the country mass transportation facilities are withering, becoming atrophied, because private carriers can't afford the heavy costs of full-week, round-the-clock operation when they are really only being used significantly for 20 hours a week.

"So into this situation we are now coming with money that we hope will stimulate states and other governments in cooperation with private carriers to develop those systems that will be there for the rush-hour traffic."

Williams gave as an example of what has been done: "A Chicago commuter railroad (that has) invested in better service, better equipment, better scheduling. Another Chicago program is a rapid transit line in the median strip of a highway which, while operating at 25 percent of capacity, carries as many people as the highway does—and the highway is bumper to bumper."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

AN UNPRECEDENTED REVOLT in the rank-and-file of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce—so it was described at least by officials—climaxed a somewhat sensational week for the chamber's 50th anniversary convention.

Earlier the businessmen from over the country had listened courteously but with a noticeable absence of warmth when Pres. Kennedy endeavored to persuade them that his Administration is not "anti-business."

The President assured his audience that he is not trying to make the government a price-fixer for private enterprise and is by no means hostile to profits by business.

He pointed out that his Administration is revising regulations so as to grant businessmen faster depreciation allowances on plants and equipment, which means a loss in government revenues. He pointed to the Administration's pending proposal to add an actual 8 percent tax credit for certain types of new investment. He reminded his audience that he had used Taft-Hartley injunctions against unions in work stoppages deemed dangerous to the national welfare and that he had urged moderation in contract negotiations.

Mr. Kennedy's personal charm is almost universally acknowledged, but the charm didn't get through to the businessmen any more than his arguments did.

The members showed their feelings adequately when they greeted with a good deal of enthusiasm a speech by Chamber Pres. Richard Wagner, who immediately followed Mr. Kennedy and openly criticized the President's actions in persuading the steel companies to roll back the price increase U. S. Steel had announced.

* * *

THE RANK-AND-FILE REVOLT in the chamber came on the pending Administration bill to expand foreign trade by broadening the President's reciprocal tariff-cutting powers. The chamber has officially endorsed the bill in testimony before Congress, but for a rough two hours the prospects were that the delegates would compel the leaders to go to Capitol Hill and reverse their stand.

The battle came, interestingly enough, when chamber officials sought formal approval of their endorsement of the trade bill's hardship-adjustment provisions. These are the provisions that labor says are "essential" to offer assistance to workers and business firms heavily damaged by any increase in imports from other countries that might go along with efforts to expand our own exports.

The rank-and-filers fell upon the proposal, termed a "trade adjustment" feature, with vengeful resentment. They called it a plan for "subsidies" and said they were opposed to subsidies. They argued that workers thrown out of jobs and plants forced into shutdowns should make their own "adjustments" through "free enterprise."

Officials finally got approval of their policy after it had twice been voted down, but the businessmen from the states and cities made it clear that enthusiasm was totally lacking.

* * *

OBSERVERS WITH MEMORIES of the relationships of business with the Roosevelt Administration in the Thirties must be thinking this is where they came in.

Business was flat on its back when Roosevelt came in, and it substantially recovered during his first two terms. Yet the businessmen's organizations always acted as if he was "against" them. They fought the social reform laws—the Wagner Act, the Social Security Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Security & Exchange Commission Act—that assured through democratic processes the enduring stability of our kind of country.

Now they think the Kennedy Administration is "against" them, or "against" profits, or "against" freedom. They apparently think the only way a government can prove good faith is lapse into do-nothingism, to retire from action to meet genuine national problems such as joblessness, economic deprivation, inequality in education and health and opportunity, and an adverse balance of payments.

RUSH HOUR TRAFFIC will strangle the nation's large cities and urban areas unless the nation helps them develop new mass transit facilities, Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.), left, and Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N. J.), author of a loan and grant bill, asserted in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

FREEDOM BOND DRIVE for U.S. savings bonds was inaugurated in Washington with inspection of replica of Col. John Glenn's space capsule, Freedom 7, which will tour the country. Shown with the model are, left to right, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Mrs. Thelma Dawson of the District of Columbia Building Trades Council staff, and Sec. of the Treasury C. Douglas Dillon.

'Pseudo' Union Denied New York Ballot Rights

New York—The New York State Labor Relations Board has ruled off the ballot the Association of Bookmen & Chargemen, Inc.—which it called a "pseudo" union—for a representation election among vendors of souvenir books at theaters and concert halls.

Chairman Jay Kramer said the board found the association is not a true labor organization and is employer-dominated. It overruled the contention of Dunetz & Lovett, the employers, that jurisdiction over the case rests with the National Labor Relations Board rather than the state body.

The group was challenged by Home Office Employes Local H-63 of the Theatrical Stage Employes.

The association is the successor of Bookmen & Chargemen Salesmen's Local 1115-D, a unit of the Retail Clerks, which expelled it in June 1961 for activities in violation of the international union constitution. The international found the local was made up largely of entrepreneurs, who often were employers of their fellow-members, rather than workers.

The SLRB said the "pseudo" organization was created by Leon Silver, who previously had "controlled" Local 1115-D, immediately after the expulsion.

"Among its activities at that time," said a board statement, "was the hiring of union members to work for him, and the unilateral fixing of their wages and working conditions.

"Evidence at the hearing disclosed that he had made no attempt to secure bona fide collective agreements or genuinely to represent those employes when they were employed by certain employers in the industry with whom he or his wife was sharing profits under private agreements."

Kramer said he and his colleagues, Members James Amadei and Martin Greene, were "most pleased" at the cooperation of the Retail Clerks which presented the evidence on the association's background and its control by Silver at hearings before Trial Examiner Oscar Forster.

The case is significant for several reasons, he said.

"First, it shows how organizations which are expelled from the AFL-CIO then may be recreated as independent, self-chartered organizations and persist in the very activities which have caused their expulsion from the mainstream of the labor movement," he explained.

"Second, this is still another example of a purported labor organization which, on the record and in light of evidence, actually exists not to engage in genuine collective bargaining but solely for the private profit of its founders.

"Third, the board has reaffirmed its doctrine that it will deny the use of board facilities to organizations which are not really bona fide labor organizations and which do not exist for the purpose of genuine collective bargaining."

Disability Aid Extended to Farm Labor

Sacramento, Calif.—California farm workers began receiving sickness and hospital benefits under the state's disability insurance program effective May 1, Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D) has announced.

Under a 1961 amendment to the state unemployment insurance law, some 250,000 agricultural workers are being brought under the program for the first time.

The California disability law since 1946 has provided basic disability benefits for workers in business and industry who are incapacitated by illness or off-the-job injuries not covered by workmen's compensation benefits. On Brown's recommendation, the legislature last year included farm workers under the program.

Disability benefits range from $10 to $70 a week, based on past earnings, beginning with the eighth day of disability or the first day of hospitalization, whichever comes first. Hospital benefits of $12 a day for up to 20 days are paid in addition to the basic disability benefit.

Rubber Union Names Field Representative

Akron, O.—Appointment of Elton Gladney as an international field representative for the Rubber Workers has been announced by URW Pres. George Burdon.

Gladney has been president of Local 222 since shortly after it was chartered in 1942 as bargaining representative at the U.S. Rubber Co. reclaiming plant in Buffalo, N. Y., and is a member of the international executive board. A former baseball player, he spent several years in the National Negro League in the 1930s.

'Monopoly' Charge Refuted:

Advisory Unit Asks Reform Of T-H Emergency Section

(Continued from Page 1)

"market-wide collective action can be permited only in special circumstances."

Six of the committee members drawn from labor bluntly responded that "whatever danger" exists in power concentration comes from the corporate side.

Labeled 'Name-Calling'

The statement filed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents David Dubinsky, George M. Harrison, Joseph D. Keenan, David J. McDonald and Walter P. Reuther, labeled the accusations "mere name-calling, unbuttressed by facts" and an example of "attributing to others characteristics which are in fact one's own."

The labor members declared that experience in the maritime and longshore industries, where Taft-Hartley's emergency procedures have often been applied, "demolish the notion that the cause of such disputes is the existence of a single union instead of several."

The statement also asserted that fregmentization of unions would lead not to "sounder" settlements, but simply to contracts more in keeping with management's desires. To thus equate management's views with the public interest, it continued, "is a blind assumption."

"There is no evidence that union bargaining power is today equal to, let alone in excess of, that of management, or that the use of what bargaining power unions do possess has resulted in settlements contrary to the public interest," the statement declared.

Recent events suggest that it is "the power of certain companies which is excessive" and that they have "sought to divert public attention from their abuse of power by falsely ascribing similar power to the unions which represent their employes."

The AFL-CIO leaders noted that business firms, contrary to a management suggestion, have the clear right to combine with each other in bargaining with unions. They further observed that unions already are subject to anti-trust laws should they attempt to control commodity markets.

If the management phrase "union market power" is meant as power over the market for labor, they continued, "it is based on the discredited concept that the labor of human beings should be treated as a commodity, to be traded in the market and purchased at the lowest possible price. Such a suggestion implies the destruction of all unions and a return to a low-wage economy and the other evils of 19th Century capitalism."

The divergence of views on this issue should not detract from the "important consensus" of the group on the broad subject of collective bargaining, the committee wrote the President.

Kennedy responded with a statement describing the committee's report, titled "Free and Responsible Collective Bargaining and Industrial Peace," as a "highly meaningful and significant document." He said the Administration would give the group's recommendations "serious consideration."

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, who rotates chairmanship of the committee with Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges, said later that the Administration could be expected to submit legislative proposals on the revision of emergency disputes procedures.

A broader discussion of bargaining and other aspects of labor-management relations and economic policy will take place at the tripartite White House National Economic Conference, to be held in Washington, May 21 and 22.

The President's advisers agreed that "freedom-of-choice elements in collective bargaining derive from the basic principles of the free society and must be carefully preserved," and they rejected such proposals as compulsory arbitration to solve critical disputes. But they also declared that to remain free, collective bargaining must be "responsive to the public, or common, interest" as well as to the interests of the parties themselves.

They expressed "regret" that their recommendations would inject the government further into the bargaining process, but found "a clear need for more effective governmental action" to guard against adverse effects on the public welfare and the national economy.

Ford Dissents

A dissent from this point was registered by Ford, who argued that Taft-Hartley's emergency disputes machinery had had "remarkable success" and that the proposed changes would "weaken the whole concept of free collective bargaining." He agreed, however, on the elimination of the "last offer" balloting.

Arthur F. Burns, a public member, said he regarded the report's recommendations as "subject to later revisions and qualifications."

In other recommendations, the committee proposed:

- Strengthening of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, as now planned, and broader use of government mediation at various stages of significant bargaining disputes "while continuing to remain an entirely voluntary process."
- Giving emergency disputes boards new authority to advise the President at his discretion on whether a work stoppage affects national health or safety.
- Permit the President specifically to order resumption of operations in part of a struck industry if he deems that sufficient to safeguard the public interest.
- Authorize emergency dispute boards to recommend at any time changes in terms or conditions of employment they feel should be put into effect during the 80-day injunction period "on a concurrent or retroactive basis."

This recommendation, the AFL-CIO officials said in a footnote to the report, "seems ineffective and illogical." They added:

"If the President has authority to order the employes to continue or resume work for 80 days, he should have authority to order whatever terms and conditions of employment he finds to be equitable."

The seventh labor member of the committee, Thomas Kennedy, president of the unaffiliated Mine Workers, did not take part in most of the deliberations because of illness.

Los Angeles Labor Runs Buyers' Classes

Los Angeles—The county AFL-CIO here is sponsoring a special series of classes designed to give union members practical advice on how to be intelligent consumers.

Entitled "Economics for the Consumer," the six-week program was planned by the county federation's Consumer Committee in cooperation with Los Angeles State College.

Topics for the two-hour discussion periods include "Problems of a Consumer," "What Are Your Family's Basic Needs?" "Keeping Automobile Costs Down," "Credit—Blessing or Curse?" and "Consumer Fraud—What Can You Do About It?"

For the opening program a retail merchandising executive, Marvin Schachter, keynoted ways whereby union members could get the most for their dollars.

Other guest instructors include Mrs. Helen Nelson, state consumer counsel; Police Lieut. William C. Hull on consumer fraud; and Robert Fall, Retail Clerks Automobile Salesmen's Local 1056, on automobile costs and financing. Other instructors are top faculty members from Los Angeles State College.

Co-chairmen of the Consumer Committee are Community Service Dept. Representatives Susan Adams and Charles Harding.

ECONOMICS FOR THE CONSUMER program inaugurated by the Los Angeles AFL-CIO had as its keynote speaker Marvin Schachter (second from left), retail merchandising executive who talked on "Getting the Most for Your Dollar." At far left is David Miller, Los Angeles State College coordinator for special programs. Rep. Susan Adams of the county AFL-CIO Community Services Dept. and William Cole, Los Angeles representative of the State Consumer Counsel's office, are at right.

'Volunteers' Proposed at Parley:

New Welfare Plan Advanced by Perlis

Chicago—The establishment of a "Corps of Volunteers" to assist in the rehabilitation of public welfare families was proposed here by Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, in a keynote address opening the federation's seventh annual National Conference on Community Services.

Perlis told some 400 trade unionists and welfare workers that local public welfare departments should "explore the possibilities of enlisting rehabilitated public assistance families" in an effort to help those still on relief. He said the plan would "speed up the process of rehabilitation a hundredfold."

Perlis attacked the Cook County (Chicago) Welfare Dept.'s widely-publicized program to require educational training for aid recipients, claiming it is "not an act of a democratic welfare state, but a state of frustration and oversimplification."

Cook County Welfare Dir. Raymond M. Hilliard, who devised the plan, described it as "social uplift through the exercise, where necessary, of social discipline." It is "proper and just" since the cause of dependency is usually a lack of training, he maintained.

He said the Welfare Dept. has become "the bridge which must carry the unemployed of today, with all their dependents, from what has been the old economy with plenty of jobs for common labor to the new economy which will have no place for the unlettered and the unskilled."

Tripartite Effort

Hilliard said the "gigantic job of planning and coordinating" efforts to create jobs can be centered in the U.S. Dept. of Labor, with labor and management as participants."

Fred H. Steininger, director of the Lake County, Ind., Dept. of Public Welfare, in Gary, cited easy credit practices and high pressure salesmanship as the "greatest single factor" creating problems for persons seeking public aid.

He said if credit buying was "not so easy in this country," you would not have persons "needing general assistance when they become unemployed." Advertising persuasiveness prevents people from saving for "a rainy day, such as periods of unemployment," he added.

Conference delegates gave a standing ovation to John Brophy, recently retired from the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., when he received a commemorative scroll from Perlis for his contributions to the community services program.

The scroll cited Brophy's 50 years of service to organized labor and its community services programs. Mrs. Brophy and their daughter, Jacqueline, were present at the luncheon session.

The public's opinion of public assistance is "more often based on fallacies than on fact," said Alfred Greenleigh, president of Greenleigh Associates, New York consulting firm on health and welfare matters, which has conducted studies of public aid in a number of cities.

Aid 'Facts' Called Wrong

"The facts of public assistance are invariably different from the public image," he said. "Objective and searching studies" have been "disturbingly revealing," he added, showing that what people believe about public assistance is "almost 100 percent wrong."

In his keynote address, Perlis said there is no easy solution to assistance problems but that aid directors could only hope to feed the hungry, rehabilitate all recipients who can be helped, and prosecute "chiselers according to the laws and with dignity to the individual."

The families enlisted for his Corps of Volunteers project would be called "aids" and would be carefully screened and trained by professional social workers, he said. The fathers would help head of families in retraining and in finding jobs; housewives could help in devising proper housekeeping methods; and children could cooperate in youth services and school programs, he elaborated.

Conference delegates were greeted on opening day by Paul A. Laccino, chairman of the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor & Industrial Union Council, and by AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Daniel J. Healy.

WORK FOR LABOR done by Louis F. Donato, retiring secretary of the Allied Printing Trades Council of New York City, was cited in a scroll presented by the Newspaper Guild of New York at a council meeting. Left to right are NYNG Sec.-Treas. M. Michael Potoker presenting the scroll, Donato, Council Pres. George McDonald and Charles F. McNally, Donato's successor.

AFSCME Convention Hears Bid For More Funds for Organizing

By David L. Perlman

Milwaukee—Delegates to the State, County & Municipal Employes convention here were told that their union has "proved it is possible to organize public workers" but that continued growth depends on whether the 225,000 members are willing to provide the resources to keep up the organizing pace.

Pres. Arnold S. Zander reported to the convention an increase of 43,000 members during the past two years, including 25,000 enrolled during the first quarter of 1962. This gain, he said, has been brought about largely through organizing funds and manpower loaned by other unions.

Appealing to the delegates to approve a 35-cent raise in the union's per capita tax—presently 65 cents—Zander declared:

"We can either raise our per capita tax, and set about the business of organizing, or we can pull down the blinds and go into semi-retirement. I've gone about as far as I can go in raising money. We can't organize the unorganized by tin-cupping other international unions."

A per capita increase—which requires a two-thirds vote for approval—was one of the key issues before the 13th biennial convention. The other was a sharp contest for international officers. Zander, who has headed the union since it was chartered in 1936, was opposed for re-election by Jerry Wurf, head of the union's New York City District Council.

Constitutional Proposals

Also scheduled to be acted on during the five-day convention were an administration-opposed proposal for regional elections of executive board members—now chosen by all convention delegates—and an administration-supported proposal to change the term of national officers from the present two years to four years, effective with the 1964 elections.

More than 1,000 delegates—a record for the union—are attending.

During the opening sessions, delegates heard:

- Housing Administrator Robert C. Weaver praise the union's sponsorship of non-profit moderate income housing projects which give priority to persons displaced by urban renewal or other governmental action.

Weaver announced that the Federal Housing Authority will refinance the mortgage on the AFSCME's Zander Apartments in Milwaukee, completed in 1960. Under the 1961 housing law, the interest on the $2.6 million mortgage is being reduced from 5.25 percent to 3.13 percent. The effect will be to reduce rents paid by tenants.

- Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, who praised the AFSCME for having given "unity, strength, guidance and encouragement" to public workers. In dealing with grievances, she said, "a union can have the courage that an individual often cannot afford to have."

Mrs. Peterson also congratulated the union for having promptly moved its convention to Milwaukee after discovering that discrimination in public accommodations and social facilities had not been completely eliminated in Kansas City, originally chosen as the site.

The battle over a per capita increase was a carry-over from the 1960 convention in Philadelphia, where the proposal was backed by 66 percent of the delegates — a handful below the two-thirds required for a constitutional amendment. A number of locals which supported the increase are now voluntarily paying the $1 per capita.

Labor Endorses Bill For State Safety Grants

A bill to initiate a program of federal grants-in-aid to encourage state occupational safety programs has been given strong AFL-CIO backing.

"The Administration has recommended a modest program and we believe a worthwhile one," Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair told a House Labor subcommittee.

Approval of the bill, sponsored by Rep. Charles S. Joelson (D-N.J.) would lead to "more accurate reporting" of accidents and "a more accurate reporting of their causes," Fair said. "We believe the states, encouraged by federal participation, will increase their efforts.

"We belive that industry will profit through reduction of industrial accidents. We believe lastly, if selfishly, that our members in substantial numbers will be freed from personal suffering and economic insecurity."

The program, endorsed earlier by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, would provide up to $6 million for grants-in-aid to the states during the first year and up to $12 million in four years.

Fair recalled that central labor bodies have supported state safety legislation for years and that as far back as 1911 labor backing was given Prof. John R. Common's proposal for a new Wisconsin industrial commission with quasi-legislative power to set up safety codes for the various occupations and make them enforceable by administrative order.

Fifty years later, he said, 10 states still have failed to adopt this principle and only 29 states "have expressly by law placed the general responsibility for occupational safety on the employer."

In addition, Fair told the subcommittee, administration of safety laws or regulations is often lax. He cited the report of one state labor commissioner that his staff could "make regular inspection of less than 50 percent of the manufacturing establishments each year," whereas the law requires "regular annual" inspections.

He also cited the fact—touched on by Goldberg—that "injuries are five to six times more common in small establishments than in the very large establishments."

"The insurance industry, highly competitive as it is, has no effective means of enforcing its safety recommendations," Fair observed.

If high safety standards are to be maintained, he insisted, "the state must assert its responsibility."

"An analysis of the statistics . . . makes clear," he added, "that the states and . . . small employers have been unsuccessful in effecting adequate safety programs."

The Joelson bill requires that before a state's industrial safety plan can be approved by the Secretary of Labor and become eligible for federal funds, it must include a program "for fostering the acceptance and observance of state laws or regulations respecting safe workplaces and work practices through the voluntary cooperation of labor and management, which program may include cooperation with any non-government safety organization in the state."

NLRB After 26 Years Upsets Back Pay Rule

(Continued from Page 1)

fully discharged full reimbursement was in effect "benefiting the wrongdoer at the expense of the wronged."

The dissenting members—Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom—found "no cogent reason" for abandoning a practice that "has been accepted and applied by the board as sound law for some 26 years."

The decision came in a case where a woman employe, Bernice Dagan, was found to have been unlawfully discharged Nov. 11, 1960, by the A.P.W. Products Co., Inc., Brattleboro, Vt., for her union activities on behalf of the Papermakers & Paperworkers. The company was ordered to offer her reinstatement and to pay her loss of income since the date of discharge.

The five board members were unanimous in finding a discriminatory discharge, reversing a trial examiner's recommendation, but disagreed on ending the "tolling" practice.

Loss of income in unlawful discharge cases is the difference between what the worker would have earned had he not been fired and his earnings in employment he obtained elsewhere—in short, back pay less interim earnings.

Lost Working Time Ties Post-War Low

The percentage of estimated total working time lost in industrial disputes in 1961 matched the postwar low of only .14 percent established in 1957, according to tabulations by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The total of 16.3 million man-days lost was the lowest since wartime 1944 and lower even than 16.5 million days of strike-caused idleness in 1957. The BLS listed 3,367 strikes during the year, lowest since 1942 except for 3,333 walkouts in 1960.

BARGAINING RIGHTS among office and clerical workers of Sea Land Services, Inc., in Ponce, Mayaguez and San Juan, Puerto Rico, were won by the Office Workers by a 55-1 vote in a National Labor Relations Board election. Pictured above during the voting are, left to right (standing) OEIU Rep. Heriberto Ortiz, AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Agustin Benitez, Jose R. Prado of the company and Pres. Mario Muniz of OEIU Local 392; (seated), Carlos Gonzalez, the union's chief steward at Sea Land, NLRB Rep. Santiago Paz, Jr., and Waldo Gil Vazguez, company observer.

AMA's Lecturer Challenged Here On Flow of Doctors from Britain

The American Medical Association, in a stepped-up campaign to block passage of medical care for the aged under social security, is sponsoring a lecture tour by a British doctor who has been telling American audiences that the National Health Service is driving doctors from Great Britain.

Back in Britain the AMA-sponsored Dr. John R. Seale has come under severe criticism on grounds he is using unreliable figures to blame the NHS for a variety of real or imaginary problems. Critics include the Minister of Health in the present Conservative government.

The AMA engaged Seale at his regular consultant's fee and sent him on a six-week tour across the United States. He has addressed state and local medical societies, chambers of commerce and business groups.

Seale disclaims any interest in or knowledge of the Anderson-King bill, now before the Congress, to provide hospital and nursing-home care for the aged through social security.

"The last thing I am attempting to do is to tell Americans what to do," he told a press conference sponsored by the District of Columbia Medical Society.

Material distributed by the AMA body, however, quotes him as saying in his speeches that his role is "to clarify the current debate on the part government should play in the control and finance of medical care in a democracy."

British Comment

The AMA News frontpaged a Chicago speech by Seale under this headline: "British Lecturer Calls NHS a 'Mistake.'"

The AMA also is distributing reproductions of conservative British newspaper comment on an article by Seale in the British Medical Journal for March 1962.

That article by Seale inspired these headlines: "Young British Doctors Flock Overseas"—London Daily Telegraph; "One New Doctor in Three Migrates"—London Daily Express; "How Many Have Flown the Medical Nest?" — Financial Times of London.

The New York Post on Apr. 18 ran a similar story by the Reuters news service from London and used this head: "MDs Stream Out of Britain."

Heavy fire has been directed against Seale's methods of collecting statistics and his interpretations and conclusions.

Minister of Health Enoch Powell labeled as "so much nonsense" the talk of doctor emigration. The number of general practitioners in NHS has risen in each of the past 5 years, a fact he called "utterly incompatible" with the charge of mass migration.

Sir Robert Platt of the Royal Infirmary, Manchester, estimated in a letter to the London Times of Apr. 14 that "Seale's calculations are as much as 400 to 800 percent in error."

Evidence Called "Weak"

Platt, who chaired the government's Working Party on Medical Staffing Structure in the Hospital Services, said in conclusion:

"We in this country may not take Dr. Seale's statements very seriously, but he is at present in the United States where I hope our American colleagues will realize how very weak his evidence is."

3-Year Peyton Strike Ends in First Contract

El Paso, Tex.—After three years and 51 days on the picket line at the Peyton Packing Co. here, 180 members of the Meat Cutters returned proudly to work under a union contract giving each of them a wage increase of at least 30 cents, a sizable back pay settlement and other major gains.

As the strikers—all of Mexican descent—returned to work, the company fired the strikebreakers it had hired to replace them.

On the Sunday before reporting back, the strikers along with their families and friends—nearly 600 men, women and children—took part in a daybreak pilgrimage to the top of near-by Mount Christo el Rey, on the border between Texas, Mexico and New Mexico, which is topped by a statue of Christ. There, led by the Rev. William Steffan, Catholic welfare director in El Paso, the deeply-moved workers gave prayers of thanks. The two-hour climb began at 5 a.m.

The pilgrimage was the climax to a vow the strikers made in March 1959 that they would not return to work without a union contract.

Election Won in '58

A precedent - setting decision handed down by a U.S. District Court last year helped pave the way for the settlement. The court ordered the U.S. Immigration Service to prevent commuting strikebreakers from Mexico from operating the plant. Mexican labor, crossing the Rio Grande River daily, had been the company's chief source of "substitute" workers.

The Meat Cutters won bargaining rights in a National Labor Relations Board election in September 1958. After six months of fruitless attempts to negotiate a contract, the Peyton workers struck the following March. Of the 250 original strikers, 180 remain in the El Paso area.

Terms of the new three-year agreement, announced by Meat Cutters Pres. Thomas J. Lloyd and Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman, include:

- Return to work of all strikers with full seniority and job rights. Time spent on strike will be added to their seniority.
- Termination of all strikebreakers.
- A back pay settlement totaling $104,000.
- Wage increases of 30 to 45 cents immediately, with additional increases of 6 cents an hour on Apr. 23, 1963, and another 6 cents in 1964.
- A 32-hour workweek guartee, improved vacations, paid holidays for the first time, company-paid life insurance, a seniority system and grievance procedure.
- Reinstatement of Julio Hernandez, a local union leader fired in August 1958 for organizing activities, with back pay estimated at $10,500.
- Termination by both sides of all court and NLRB cases.

Meat Cutters Vice Pres. Sam Twedell of Dallas directed the strike and headed the union's negotiating team.

Monthly Labor Survey:

Joblessness Static In Major Markets

The total of major labor market areas with "substantial unemployment" hung at 62 in April, according to the Labor Dept.'s monthly survey of the nation's 150 major areas.

In March, there were 63 major areas with 6 percent or more jobless.

The April total of 62 compares to the all-time high of 101 such areas recorded in March and April a year ago, when the 1960-61 recession hit bottom. The pre-recession figure for this time of year was 33 in March 1960, when surveys were made only bimonthly.

As the recession loosened last year, the total of major areas declined to 60 in November and December, then edged up to 61 in January, 62 in February and 63 in March.

The Labor Dept. survey also listed 204 smaller areas with unemployment of 6 percent or more. This total compared to 203 in March, 204 in February and a post-recession low of 199 in January 1962. The smaller areas' total a year ago was 199; it was 109 in March 1960.

The April report showed reclassification of only three major areas.

Tacoma, Wash., with "unusually early employment gains in the lumbering industry" leading a local job uptrend, moved from the 6 to 8.9 percent jobless category to the 3 to 5.9 percent grouping. This reduced the April total of major areas to 62 in this classification.

Atlantic City, N. J., improved from the highest unemployment group—12 percent or more jobless—to the category of 9 to 11.9 percent. The job gain was due to the opening of the resort season and to storm-damage repair work.

New Bedford, Mass., improved from the 9 to 11.9 percent group to the 6 to 8.9 percent group largely because of seasonal hiring in the fishing industry and smaller gains in manufacturing.

The total of smaller areas with substantial unemployment increased by one as two areas were added and one was removed.

Pascagoula, Miss., was added to the list as its longterm decline in shipbuilding continued.

Chincoteague, Va., was added because recent heavy storm damage "sharply cut payrolls" in seafood and vegetable processing plants.

Waterloo, Ia., was removed as local manufacturing picked up, the report noted.

The Labor Dept. said eight "very small" areas were added to the list of those with "substantial and persistent" unemployment, while four were removed. This list is based partly on the extent to which such areas are called to the attention of the Labor Dept. for special surveys.

The Labor Dept. listed a total of 491 areas with "substantial and persistent unemployment," that is, experiencing 6 percent or more joblessness over a period of time—20 major areas, 104 "smaller" areas, 367 "very small" areas.

Hillman Unit Gives Grants For $18,700

New York — Grants totaling $18,700 have been announced to open this year's program of the Sidney Hillman Foundation, created by the clothing industry in memory of the founding president of the Clothing Workers.

Last year the foundation distributed $65,000 in scholarships, lectureships and grants-in-aid to 30 educational and public service institutions in the United States, Puerto Rico and Israel.

This year scholarships totaling $10,500 have been awarded to American University, Washington, D. C.; Chicago Medical School; Fashion Institute of Technology; New York State School of Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.; Roosevelt University, Chicago; and the University of Puerto Rico.

The University of Rochester, College of the City of New York and Howard University, Washington, D. C., have been granted lectureships totaling $3,500.

Grants with a total of $4,700 have been made to Brotherhood-in-Action, Inc.; and to the New York School for Social Research, Kessler Institute of Rehabilitation, American Labor Education Service, New York University Civil Liberties Center, and the Mayor's Committee on Scholastic Achievement.

AIW Victor in Vote at Runaway Norge Plant

Fort Smith, Ark.—A major organizing victory was scored when Norge Div. employes of the Borg-Warner Corp. here voted by nearly 3 to 1 to be represented by the Allied Industrial Workers in a National Labor Relations Board election.

The vote was 1,152 to 442 for the AIW. The Norge plant moved from Muskegon, Mich., last year when this community voted a bond issue to construct new manufacturing facilities.

"The Norge vote for the AIW was heartwarming evidence that Arkansas workers desire to be treated as first-class citizens," commented AIW Pres. Carl W. Griepentrog.

Wages paid during the first four months of operation ran from $1 to $1.50 an hour less than Muskegon wages for identical jobs.

The union sponsored three 30-minute television programs during the closing hours of the campaign and ran frequent spot announcements with the theme that "union wages will make the cash registers of Fort Smith ring."

A "citizens' group" countered the union campaign by sponsoring radio announcements and newspaper ads which suggested that "another big factory" might come to the area and would be watching the outcome of the Norge vote.

Several things helped spur the AIW victory: wide circulation inside the plant of AIW Muskegon contracts with higher wages and better working conditions; active support by AFL-CIO affiliates in the Fort Smith area, and handbills which kept one step ahead of company propaganda, accurately predicting last-minute company moves.

May Day Message:

Meany Sees Divided Berlin As Democracy's 'Spearhead'

Berlin—This divided city was hailed as "the unbending spearhead of world democracy" by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a message to a gigantic May Day rally at which 750,000 free German workers marked the day dedicated to labor.

Less than a mile away, on the other side of the Communist-built wall, some 250,000 East German workers were dragooned into a demonstration for which the puppet state paraded modern armament, including ground-to-air rockets, given by Soviet Russia in violation of the four-power treaty under which the city exists.

Meany's message was read by Jay Lovestone, of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, over a battle of loudspeakers at the wall. The East Germans brought up a battery of powerful speakers when the West German demonstration started and the free Berliners retaliated in kind.

The all-out effort of the AFL-CIO was pledged by Meany to achieve three vital goals—maintenance of Berlin's freedom and security, removal of the "Wall of Shame," and attainment of German reunification in freedom.

The city, Meany asserted, "occupies the most advanced and exposed position in the defense of human dignity, freedom and lasting peace."

"The courageous workers and liberty-loving people of Berlin on both sides of the Khrushchev-Ulbricht wall," he said, "have won the admiration of American labor as well as of all the American people. The American people have not forgotten the heroic revolt of June 17, 1953."

Rights 'Not Negotiable'

He recalled Pres. Kennedy's emphasizing that freedom is not negotiable, and continued:

"In this light, the presence of the Allied forces in West Berlin and the freedom of access to Berlin for them and the German people are not negotiable. The right of your people to your own way of life and form of government is not negotiable. The present economic, legal and political relations between West Berlin and the German Federal Republic must continue and are not negotiable."

Meany said the Soviet Union's "brutal moves" against free Berlin and its "relentless opposition" to German self-determination are the "gravest expression" of the Red drive to gain world control.

"To defend the freedom of Berlin is to defend freedom everywhere," he declared. "Together, we can defeat the expanionist designs of world communism. There can be no doubt that free Berlin will be secure as a citadel of economic and cultural progress, social justice and genuine democracy—a fortress of free labor—as long as all men who love freedom stand together, strong and firm.

"In this spirit, I warmly salute you in the name of American labor."

The international free labor movement's greetings were sent by Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, who declared Berlin could never be considered "a pawn in the cold war."

'Unbreakable' Bond

"It is the home city of over 100,000 trade unionists whose basic human and trade union freedoms must be jealously guarded," he declared.

"I want to say to you now, and it will be demonstrated again in July when the ICFTU holds its world congress in Berlin, that the bond which ties the trade unionists of free Berlin with the trade unions in the rest of the world is an unbreakable one."

Best May Day Theme Is Freedom, Labor Told

The simple fact that the "one indispensable element in a free society is freedom itself" should be the theme of May Day, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in heralding the day observed as labor's holiday in most of the world.

"May Day has symbolized for generations the continuing struggle of workers throughout the world for liberty and a better life," he said. "While we in the United States have our own national holiday on Labor Day, we also give due recognition to May 1 as a truly international observance.

"May Day has retained its significance despite the efforts of totalitarian regimes, both Communist and Fascist, to subvert it. If anything its significance has increased; for the attempts to pervert it are proof that this symbol of free labor is so powerful that the enemies of freedom must do their utmost to corrupt it to serve their own ends."

Meany asserted that May Day this year points up more than ever the "dramatic contrast" between freedom and communism. Colonialism and "the old blight of western imperialism" have been "conquered by enlightenment" nearly everywhere in Africa and Asia, he said, "but not the new imperialism of the Communist world."

"When we look behind the Iron Curtain," he said, "we see no liberations, either national or individual. We see, as always, the iron rule of the state over the people and the unyielding domination of the Soviet Union over once-independent lands."

Workers in the new nations of Africa and Asia and also in Latin America, aside from Cuba, are "creating the tools of industrial democracy" by joining together in free trade unions, Meany noted. But what are called "unions" in Communist nations, he added, are not free, and are "simply mechanisms to reinforce the control of a dictatorial state."

Choice Seen Clear

"The contrast is clear," he said. "The choice is clear. Yet there has never been a time when the freedom to choose has been in greater jeopardy. Communism will not die out simply because it is wrong. On the contrary, the rulers of the Soviet Union and Red China are led toward new aggressions as a means of sustaining their power.

"The free world must face up to this danger with firmness and fortitude. We in the American labor movement will do our utmost to foster the cause of freedom by constantly seeking to perfect our own society and by extending all the help at our command to workers in other lands who are struggling to build free institutions."

ICFTU Hails Labor Pioneers On May Day

Brussels—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions observed May Day by hailing the pioneers who made possible the achievements of workers today and dedicating itself to the continuing struggle for bread, peace and freedom throughout the world.

It called for united efforts by free world labor—

- "For peace and an end to the nightmare of nuclear destruction through universal controlled disarmament."

Resumed discussions under auspices of the United Nations, the ICFTU said, have given fresh hope that this can be achieved.

- "For freedom and the final liquidation of the remaining vestiges of outmoded colonialism in Africa and Asia; freedom for the trade union movement . . . freedom, too, from the scourges of racial oppression and discrimination which still afflict too many peoples."
- "For full, productive and freely chosen employment; for job security, shorter working hours, decent housing, adequate protection against all the risks of old age, sickness and infirmity, and for steadily rising standards of living."
- "For a determined international effort to lift the 'have-not' countries out of the rut of economic stagnation and . . . to strengthen political freedom and to promote social progress."

Free labor must consolidate its forces, unite its ranks and review its techniques to achieve these aims, the ICFTU asserted.

INVESTMENT OF $100 MILLION in government-insured farm loans in the next four years was announced by Pres. David Dubinsky (left) of the Ladies' Garment Workers and Sec. of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman at a conference in Washington. The money will come from the union's pension and other funds.

ILGWU to Invest Funds In Family Farm Loans

The Ladies' Garment Workers will help finance family farms by making $100 million available for investment in government-insured loans over the next four years, ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky and Sec. of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman announced after a conference in the latter's office.

The money will come from the union's pension, vacation, severance pay and health and welfare funds at the rate of $25 million a year beginning with 1962. The union already has invested $7.5 million Farmers Home Administration mortgages this year.

"We are well aware of the tremendous amounts of industrial products consumed by farm families," Dubinsky said. "We are also delighted to play a part in strengthening and maintaining the independent family farm system upon which our nation was founded.

"We are especially pleased that this is being done with reserves from pension funds contributed by employers as a result of collective bargaining agreements."

The ILGWU investments are the first made in insured farm mortgages by a labor union. The principal investors thus far in the program, which was started in 1947, have been banks, insurance companies, trust funds and retirement funds.

The loans are made and serviced by the Farmers Home Administration. The borrowers pay 5 percent interest and the lenders receive 4.5 percent, the government retaining the difference to cover the insurance. The government collects the principal and interest payments when due, and lenders agree to hold the notes for at least three years. Loan funds may be used to purchase or improve family farms, refinance farm debts or develop water systems.

Freeman Sees Common Bond

"We welcome this evidence of a strong common bond between the farmer and the worker," Freeman said.

"American labor has supported farm programs which are in the interest of the farmer because they are in the long-range interest of all people. A healthy family farm economy means an abundant supply of food and fiber, and the family farmer has made food one of the greatest bargains in the marketplace today.

"Both the farmer and the worker support those efforts which contribute to a strong national economy. In this case, the ILGWU has made an investment in building a strong farm economy."

Pressmen First Union At Los Angeles Times

Los Angeles—The Los Angeles Times, for more than 80 years a bastion of the open shop in the newspaper industry, has the first certified union among its employes in the history of the paper following a victory by the Pressmen in a representation election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

Pressroom employes of the Times chose Local 18 of the Pressmen as their bargaining representative by a vote of 204 to 169, with 16 challenged ballots. A spokesman for the union reported that Times management insisted on two recounts of the ballots following the initial tally.

Negotiations for a first contract covering the unit of 397 employes are expected to open shortly, the spokesman added.

IPP&AU Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade, in hailing the vote, described it as "the result of a planned, organized, united and enthusiastic organizational program in which all segments of our union in the Los Angeles area participated."

The 'First Step'

Intl. Vice Pres. Walter J. Turner headed the organizing campaign, aided by Intl. Representatives Alson Bristol and Preston Wilson and a corps of Local 18 officers and members.

The Pressmen had lost three previous NLRB votes at the Times, dating back to 1944. The paper has never had a contract with any union.

Turner viewed the election victory as "the first step in the complete unionization of the Times" and DeAndrade said it came at "a most opportune time" in view of the suspension last January of the Times' companion publication, the evening Mirror, and Hearst's morning Examiner, which cost the jobs of hundreds of newspaper workers.

With the suspensions leaving the Los Angeles morning field to the Times and the evening field to Hearst's Herald-Examiner (formerly Herald - Express), the Times quickly gained more than 200,000 circulation, bringing the daily total to some 750,000 and the Sunday figure to 1.1 million, according to a recent report of Publisher Otis Chandler. He also said the Times had gained nearly 2 million lines of advertising in January and February over the comparable figures for 1961.

Chandler's great-grandfather, Harrison Gray Otis, bought the Times a year after it was founded in 1881.

UAW Man's Daughter Wins College Award

Toledo—Suzanne C. MacDonald, 18-year-old daughter of an Auto Worker, has been named the first winner of the Richard T. Gosser scholarship fund providing $500 a year toward a college education.

MOST IMPORTANT ACTIVITY of labor at this time is getting workers and families to register and vote, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told delegates to COPE's three-day Big Cities Conference in Washington.

Meany Rallies COPE To Elect Liberals

(Continued from Page 1)

shown "he's not afraid to stand up to the biggest of the biggest in the corporation world. We've got a courageous President. He needs a liberal Congress."

Labor's political weakness in the past, Meany declared, "was that our own members didn't vote."

"Labor's political power" Meany said, "is power dedicated to the common good. I don't know of any act advocated by organized labor that did not benefit people as a whole, not just the trade union movement."

On the crowded agenda of the conference were discussions of registration problems and techniques led by Roy Reuther, who is directing the registration campaign; COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt and key members of his staff, and outside specialists, including Lou Harris, whose public opinion polls in 1960 played an important part in furnishing information on which Kennedy based his campaign strategy.

Harris, dissecting the 1960 election returns, told the delegates that labor, both skilled and unskilled, made up 37 percent of the voting age population but cast only 26 percent of the ballots.

Persons in professional and executive jobs, he noted, also cast 26 percent of the votes in 1960, although they made up only 18 percent of the voting age population.

Bipartisan endorsement of the AFL-CIO get-out-the-vote campaign was expressed at an opening-day luncheon session.

Rep. Robert J. Corbett (R-Pa.), representing the Republican National Committee, said the drive "cannot help but contribute to the welfare of Americans."

Democratic National Chairman John M. Bailey hailed the campaign, said his party plans a major registration drive of its own, and invited the Republicans to join with the Democrats "in a unified effort to liberalize registration laws" throughout the nation "so that all the people will have an equal chance to register and vote."

Mansfield Moves to End Debate:

Showdown Nears in Senate On Voting Rights Measure

The Senate headed toward a showdown on the Administration's voting-rights bill as Sen. Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.), the Democratic leader, announced that he would file a cloture petition seeking to shut off the southern filibuster that has tied up the Senate and blocked a vote for two weeks.

Mansfield's move came as a slightly stepped-up pace was indicated by these other developments:

- The House Rules Committee after a three-month delay agreed to allow appointment of a Senate-House conference committee to work out a compromise version of a bill for federal aid to colleges and universities.
- The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to authorize the Federal Communications Commission to order that television sets produced hereafter be capable of receiving 82 channels rather than 12.

The effect would be greatly to expand the potential audience of both educational and commercial TV stations broadcasting on ultra high frequency (UHF) channels. Most existing sets can receive, without adapters, only signals from the 12 very high frequency (VHF) bands.

- A House Labor subcommittee approved a bill, expected to get prompt action by the full committee, to require equal pay for women workers doing equal work with men. A last-minute amendment barred employers from "equalizing" pay scales by cutting higher wages paid men.
- Pres. Kennedy signed into law a bill to encourage the growth of educational television by providing $32 million in federal assistance funds.

On the Senate voting-rights bill, which would require state officials to accept a sixth-grade education as proof of "literacy" for purposes of registering for federal elections, Mansfield said he would file his cloture petition on May 7 and seek to bring the motion to a vote on May 9.

Under the Senate's rules a two-thirds majority of senators present and voting is required to close off extended debate on a pending bill.

Observers have considered that prospects were dim that Mansfield could get that large a cloture margin. The Senate has not in recent decades actually approved a proposal to choke off debate.

Most northern and western Democrats, however, are expected to vote for cloture at some point and the Republican leader, Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), is reported seeking assistance from the GOP's ranks. Dirksen, a co-sponsor of the voting-rights bill with Mansfield, said that the record clearly reveals that state literacy tests have been "arbitrarily and caprciously applied" in some areas to deprive Negroes of registration.

Southern senators have argued that the bill would unconstitutionally infringe the rights of states to establish their own election rules. Mansfield and Dirksen, backed by the Administration, hold that the government has ample power to guarantee all citizens equal rights in federal elections.

Mansfield said that if his cloture motion got a majority, even though short of two-thirds, he would continue attempts to force the bill to a final vote.

The House Rules Committee action on the college aid bill was based on an agreement by House leaders that before accepting a Senate provision for scholarships, rather than loans, to help finance needy college students, they would allow the House a vote on this single issue.

Georgia Unit Vote Plan Outlawed by U.S. Court

A three-judge federal court has ruled Georgia's county-unit election system unconstitutional, even as modified recently by the state legislature.

The court ruled unanimously that in its present form the system violates the 14th Amendment's guarantee of equal protection of the laws. The system gives greater weight to ballots cast by rural residents than to those cast by urban voters.

Gov. S. Ernest Vandiver announced that the state would appeal to the Supreme Court.

The only other state with a county-unit voting formula in its primaries—Maryland—also was faced with a court challenge of the system. Anne Arundel County Circuit Judge O. Bowie Duckett said he would rule on the challenge as well as an attack on the state's legislative apportionment after the primary elections on May 15, probably during the week of May 21.

That would leave time for a special session of the rural-dominated General Assembly to reapportion itself before the June 5 party nominating conventions, where ballots ordinarily would be cast under a county-unit formula based on assembly representation.

The Georgia ruling was a direct outgrowth of the U.S. Supreme Court's recent decision in the Tennessee reapportionment case, which paved the way for court suits by voters challenging unequal representation.

The federal court panel, composed of Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle and Judge Griffin B. Bell of the Fifth Circuit and District Judge Frank A. Hopper, found in effect that changes in the unit voting system adopted only the day before did not go far enough in erasing discrimination against urban voters, which had given one citizen's vote in the state's least populous county the weight of 99 in the largest.

"A county-unit system for use in a party primary is invidiously discriminatory if any unit has less than its share to the nearest whole number proportionate to population, or to the whole of the vote in a recent party gubernatorial primary, or to the vote for electors of the party in the most recent presidential election," the court ruled.

If the Supreme Court affirms the decision, Vandiver said, new rules for the Sept. 12 Democratic primary would be set by the state executive committee of the party. Victory in the Democratic primary in Georgia is tantamount to election.

ILO Report to Stress Needs of New Nations

GENEVA, Switzerland—Activities of the Intl. Labor Organization in the field of manpower planning and organization have undergone major changes in the past year, ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse said in his annual report prepared for the Intl. Labor Conference scheduled for June 6-28.

"The widespread interest now being focused on human resources as a factor in economic development, and particularly in the newly independent countries of Africa, has made more apparent than ever the need for comprehensive and long-range manpower planning in relation to economic and social development," the ILO said in a summary of the report.

The particularly urgent problems of the developing countries have remained the ILO's main activities in the employment field, the summary said, but continued attention also has been paid to more general matters.

"The study of the changes in the employment structure brought about by economic and technical progress has been pursued," it said, "with particular reference to measures producing other employment for workers affected by the decline of certain sectors of the economy as a result of technical innovations or new forms of competition."

The report is divided into two sections, one dealing with "Older People—Work and Retirement" and the second with other ILO activities.

Expansion Continues

Morse reported continued expansion of technical cooperation activities, an increase in ratification of international labor conventions which saw the total rise from 2,242 to 2,452 during the year, and a rise in ratifications of conventions dealing with fundamental human rights. The freedom of association and forced labor conventions, he reported, now bind more than half of the ILO membership.

Slight Decline Shown In Canada Jobless

Ottawa, Ont.—Unemployment in Canada dropped 23,000 between February and March to 560,000, substantially less than the 705,000 Canadians who were looking for jobs in March 1961.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics said rates of joblessness ranged from 16.8 percent in the Atlantic provinces to 6.3 percent in Ontario and the prairie provinces. The labor force numbered 6.45 million, representing a slight rise from February.

$100,000 CONTRIBUTION from the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. marked a major step toward the $750,000 goal set by the federation's Executive Council for this year's register-and-vote campaign under the auspices of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. Shown at the presentation are, from the left: COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt, IUD Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and Roy L. Reuther, who is heading the 1962 COPE registration campaign while on leave from his post on the Auto Workers staff.

JFK Asks Bargaining 'Responsibility'

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 12, 1962 | No. 17

UAW Gives Support to Vote Drive

By Willard Shelton

Atlantic City—In a direct appeal for "responsibility" on both sides of the bargaining table, Pres. Kennedy told the Auto Workers convention here that wage gains should be sought from improved technology and "increased productivity" during this period of "ferocious" struggle to preserve the free world.

We face "two tasks in economic policy," the President told the 2,800 delegates to the UAW's 18th constitutional convention—"to create demand" so that consumers can furnish a market "for all we can produce," and to "avoid inflation."

Failure to avoid inflationary price rises, he declared, would endanger the competitive position of U.S. products, would drain capital and gold abroad, and would compel any President, "whoever he may be," to "cut and withdraw from our defense commitments."

Kennedy paid tribute to the "sense of public responsibility" evidenced on a "whole variety of questions" by the UAW membership "under the leadership of your distinguished president, Walter P. Reuther."

Both before and after Kennedy's speech, Reuther told the convention emphatically that the UAW had a historical policy of "making progress with the community," of seeking wage increases and fringe benefits "from the greater productivity of our developing technology and not out of the pockets of the American consumer."

The convention approved a resolution praising Kennedy for a "good beginning" and for his legislative program, and pledging all-out cooperation with the AFL-CIO register-and-vote drive to "elect a better Congress that will support" that program.

Reuther urged a harder drive and stronger policies toward "an economy of full employment and abundance," mobilizing "maximum economic potential" for a "massive offensive against poverty and human desperation" and the "total waging of peace."

In his presidential report, Reuther also warned that in the face of static high unemployment and a basic "imbalance" in the economy, the "production potential" must be considered, and that "for the immediate future" we must "improve

(Continued on Page 4)

Jobless Rate Still at 5.5%, Changes Called 'Seasonal'

CHEERS OF DELEGATES to Auto Workers convention in Atlantic City are acknowledged by Pres. Kennedy as he stands under a union banner. UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther applauds at right.

Goldberg Calls for Speedup in Growth

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's rate of unemployment hung at 5.5 percent in April—virtually unchanged since February—according to the Labor Dept.'s monthly report on the job situation.

This means 55 out of every 1,000 workers in the labor force were actively seeking work and could not find it.

The longterm unemployed—those jobless 15 weeks or longer—totaled 1.5 million in April, unchanged from March. Of these, 700,000 have been seeking work for over 6 months.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg reported the April changes were "mainly seasonal" as unemployment fell by 430,000 to 3.9 million and employment rose by 711,000 to a total of 66.8 million.

Held 'Encouraging Sign'

He told the press the jobless decline was "an encouraging sign" and this and the job gains were evidence of a continuing "vigorous" recovery.

He called the 5.5 percent jobless rate "still much too high." The 1.5 million longterm jobless total he labeled "unsatisfactory."

Asked if he was still optimistic about the Administration achieving its goal of reducing the unemployment rate to 4 percent by mid-1963, Goldberg replied: "Yes. I hope so." He said the rate of economic growth would have to be speeded up.

Goldberg said he expected the Administration's program to help. He cited the recent Manpower Training & Development Act and pending legislation on public works, youth employment opportunities

(Continued on Page 2)

Cloture Bid Fails; Vote Bill Stalled

The Administration's voting rights bill was still before the Senate after three weeks of debate, but prospects for choking off a southern filibuster and bringing the issue to a vote remained dim.

A first attempt to limit debate was rejected 53-43, short even of a simple majority and 21 shy of the two-thirds required to impose cloture.

The Senate then turned around and voted 64-33 not to table—and thus kill — the measure, which would bar states from using "discriminatory" literacy tests to keep Negroes and Spanish-speaking Americans from voting.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) and Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), who had sponsored the first attempt to limit debate, joined in filing a second

(Continued on Page 12)

Health Bill Passage Predicted:

Doctors' Boycott Threat Stirs Anger

By John M. Barry

An explosion of public and official reaction against the threat of a New Jersey physicians' group to boycott the treatment of elderly patients under the Kennedy Administration's social security health care plan has swelled the confidence of the plan's supporters.

Pres. Kennedy himself, addressing the Auto Workers convention, predicted congressional enactment this year of his proposal for hospitalization insurance for the aged, financed through the social security system.

"And," he added, "I am confident that the great majority, in fact all doctors, will treat those who may be covered by this national program."

The President spoke less than a week after disclosure that three dozen doctors at Point Pleasant, N. J., had signed a resolution declaring they will "refuse to participate in the care of patients under the Anderson-King bill or similar legislation." Some 200 additional New Jersey doctors later endorsed the move.

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, who also spoke to the UAW delegates, called the boycott threat "a disgrace to the country."

Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff labeled it "an attempt to blackmail Congress and the American people."

Threat Seen Failing

Pres. Vincent J. Murphy of the New Jersey AFL-CIO, in a telegram to Dr. Ralph Buchanan, president of the State Medical Society, urging him to disavow the action of the Point Pleasant physicians, termed it "a vicious scheme" which was "adding greatly to the already rapid decline of the medical profession in public esteem."

New Jersey Gov. Richard J. Hughes accused the doctors of violating the Hippocratic oath taken by all members of the profession and predicted the threat would be a failure.

The State Assembly voted overwhelmingly to condemn physicians taking part in the threatened boycott. Assemblyman John J. Kit-

(Continued on Page 3)

Meany Backs Pay Raise For Federal Employes

The AFL-CIO "stands four-square" behind its affiliated government employe unions in their campaign for a "decent, fair and equitable pay raise," Pres. George Meany told 1,500 delegates to a legislative conference here.

The conference, called by four unions of postal and federal employes, coincided with the opening of pay hearings by the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee. The Administration has asked for a three-stage increase, beginning next January, with the biggest percentage raise going to employes in the upper grades. The unions are asking a 14 percent average raise retroactive to last January.

Meany termed the Administration proposal a "forward step," but criticized it for "shortchanging" lower-paid employes.

Pledging the AFL-CIO's "full support" for an immediate pay raise, Meany said he doubted if creditors of federal employes would be willing to wait until next January to get their bills paid.

Taking part in the rally were delegates from the Postal Clerks, Government Employes, Special Delivery Messengers, and Post Office Motor Vehicle Employes. Earlier this year, the Letter Carriers held a similar conference.

Meany, in his keynote, also pledged support for another legislative goal of the delegates—a bill authorizing voluntary payroll deduction of union dues for civil service employes. This has been recommended by a Presidential task

(Continued on Page 12)

'Non-Op' Rail Unions Denounce Pay Proposal

By Gervase N. Love

The recommendations of the Presidential Emergency Board in the dispute between the nation's railroads and their non-operating employes have been denounced as a "bitter disappointment" by Chairman George E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association.

"The report fails to deal realistically with the issues," said Leighty, who also is chairman of the non-operating unions' bargaining committee. "It will not be helpful in settling this dispute.

"The report does not meet the needs of the workers involved. It does not meet their equity. We are greatly disappointed, but will study and analyze the report carefully, receive the reactions of our officers and members, and then determine our course of action."

The "course of action" will be decided upon at a meeting of the negotiating committee in Chicago on May 15.

The Presidential board was headed by Saul Wallen, prominent arbitrator. It recommended:

- A wage increase of 4 cents an hour retroactive to Feb. 1 and another 2.5 percent—estimated by the board at 6.2 cents an hour—effective May 1.
- A moratorium on new wage demands at least until May 1, 1963.
- Five days' notice of furloughs or lay-offs instead of the six months the unions had asked.

The board maintained its proposed wage increases were within the non-inflationary limits urged by the Kennedy Administration. Leighty said the 25 cents an hour

(Continued on Page 3)

COPE DELEGATES from nation's largest cities listen to Pres. Kennedy in the rose garden of the White House. The President, who later mingled with the delegates, told them that the outcome of the congressional elections in November will depend "very much" on their efforts during the coming months. On the steps, behind Kennedy, are COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt, Deputy Dir. Al Barkan, and Roy Reuther, head of the AFL-CIO voter registration drive.

Mediation Under Disputes Plan Plays Role in Victory at Norge

The mediation machinery set up under the AFL-CIO Internal Disputes Plan played an important role in helping the Allied Industrial Workers score a major organizing victory in Arkansas.

The AIW chalked up a 3 to 1 win in a National Labor Relations Board victory at the Norge Division plant of the Borg-Warner Corp. at Fort Smith, Ark., after an AFL-CIO mediator cleared the way by securing an agreement from three other federation affiliates to withdraw from the election.

The Norge plant moved from Muskegon, Mich., last year when the Fort Smith community voted a bond issue to construct new manufacturing facilities. The AIW, which had represented the Norge workers at the Michigan plant, opened a campaign to win representation rights at the Arkansas operation.

Three other unions in the Arkansas area also sought the right to represent the workers. The AIW filed a complaint under the disputes plan claiming that the union which had representation rights in a plant that moves to another location should have the right to continue to represent the workers at the new site.

The case was assigned to Paul Phillips, president of the Papermakers & Paperworkers, and a member of the panel of mediators set up under the plan.

Phillips met with representatives of the AIW, the Auto Workers, the Operating Engineers and the Laborers, the four unions seeking to organize the Fort Smith plant. An agreement was reached voluntarily that the three unions would withdraw and give the AIW a clear field in the campaign.

The AIW worked out a mutual cooperation agreement with the Laborers and the Operating Engineers. It agreed also to withdraw from an organizing campaign at the Springfield, Mo., plant of the Royal McBee Typewriter Co. involving the UAW.

The agreement was based directly on Phillips' recommendations, including a provision that the AIW and the UAW assist each other in the organizing campaigns at the respective plants. Both unions followed through, urging workers to vote for the single AFL-CIO union involved.

The UAW was defeated in the Royal McBee election by a narrow margin but won more votes for the union than had been anticipated or recorded in previous attempts to organize the plant.

Phillips wrote AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany:

Presidents Praised

"The full credit for finding a solution to this case . . . should go to the presidents of all the unions involved . . . I know that strong feelings existed and there was considerable pressure upon these people to resist any form of settlement . . . However, the welfare of the labor movement and high principles of union statesmanship prevailed."

Meany replied expressing his "deep appreciation for your very valuable service as mediator."

Mine-Mill Union Held Communist-Infiltrated

The Subversive Activities Control Board has upheld the finding of an examiner that the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers is a Communist-infiltrated union, making it ineligible to represent workers before the National Labor Relations Board.

"It is quite clear from the evidence that many important functionaries of the union are, and have been, members of the Communist Party," the board said, "and that other important functionaries are persons who are and who have been amenable to the Communist Party."

No direct link between the union and the party was found, the board said, but it added that there was a "strong showing" the union "has been and is working in behalf of the Communist Party upon a consistent basis over a long period of time."

"The aid and support flowing to the Communist Party from respondent, and its controlling leadership, has been real, substantial and significant," the report said. "Through respondent, the Communist Party has acquired and continues to have a dependable foothold in the labor movement in the United States."

The SACB said the international executive board of the union "is and for many years has been dominated and controlled by Communist Party members on the board."

"A substantial number of the staff members who assist the executive board are members of the Communist Party," the board asserted.

It added that party members "have gained and maintained the full faith, confidence and support of the majority" of delegates to union conventions.

The examiner's report that the SACB upheld was made by Francis A. Cherry, a board member sitting as an examiner. Cherry held hearings over a period of more than four years ending May 17, 1961. About 150 witnesses appeared before him; there were more than 300 exhibits and 9,721 pages of transcript.

Mine-Mill, with membership in the non-ferrous metal refining and mining industries in the U.S. and Canada, had about 200 locals with 100,000 members in 1959. Recent indications are that it has been reduced to between 50,000 and 60,000 members. Expelled because of its Communist domination from both the former CIO and the former Canadian Congress of Labor, it has been under frequent attack by other unions.

At Mine-Mill headquarters in Denver, Pres. John Clark declared the SACB decision "has no basis in fact" and that an appeal will be taken in the federal courts.

Meanwhile in Washington the NLRB staff weighed possible steps that could be taken against the union in view of the SACB finding. In addition to barring Mine-Mill from NLRB facilities, the SACB decision automatically requires the union to identify its publications and broadcasts as those of a Communist organization.

Legion Aid Asked For Health Bill

American Legion posts throughout the country were urged to register support of Pres. Kennedy's program of health protection for the aged through social security by Commander Herbert P. Newman of Washington Building & Construction Trades Post No. 54.

"The time is long past when the American Legion should remain aloof in this controversy," he said in support of his post's adoption of a resolution endorsing the Anderson-King bill. "There are 2.5 million veterans of World War I still lucky enough to be alive. Their average age is 68. The average age of the 15 million veterans of World War II is 43, and they and their families make up 45 percent of our population."

Business Journals Report:

1st Quarter Profits Approach New High

Corporate profits for the first three months of 1962 were up "at least 30 percent" over the same 1961 quarter and moved ahead of the near record-shattering figures for the preceding three months.

That's the story emerging from analyses of company profit reports by Business Week and the Wall Street Journal. Both financial and business publications agree that there was a sharp increase from the first quarter of 1961, but differ slightly on the comparison with the final quarter of last year.

Business Week declared that "earnings again topped the previous quarter and the outlook is for a continued, if slower, rise through the year." The first quarter of 1962, the magazine added, "put to rest some doubts industry had about a 'profitless' prosperity."

The Wall Street Journal said that profits in the first three months of the year topped the same period a year ago by 28 percent but reported its analysis of 472 corporations showed that earnings "slipped off a little from the peacetime record of the preceding three months."

Business Week estimated that first quarter profits hit a before-tax rate of $53 billion seasonally adjusted, or up from the fourth quarter of 1961 rate of $52.1 billion.

The Kennedy Administration has estimated profits for 1962 at $56.5 billion, but Business Week says the Administration unofficially has revised its estimate to $53.5 billion.

Would Smash Records

If profits hit this figure it would smash all previous records, says Business Week, pointing to the $46.8 billion before-tax profit record of 1959.

The Wall Street Journal, using after-tax figures, estimates a first quarter rate of $25.6 billion compared to $20 billion for the same quarter a year ago and $26.5 billion for the last three months of 1961. The $26.5 billion was the highest on record except for the last three montths of 1950 during the Korean War.

The Journal reports that, of the 37 industries measured in its report, 33 showed increased earnings in the first three months of the year compared to a year earlier and that 27 industry groups showed increases of 10 percent or more.

Rate of Unemployment Hangs at 5.5% in April

(Continued from Page 1)

and the extension of unemployment compensation. Passage of the tax and trade bills also would help, he added.

He noted that 165,000 persons had exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits in April, "bringing the total number of exhaustions for the first four months of this year to 670,000."

Jobless Rate Unchanged

The April jobless rate of 5.5 percent, adjusted for seasonal influences, was unchanged from the 5.5 percent of March and the 5.6 percent of February. The rate in April a year ago was 6.9 percent; the pre-recession rate was 5.1 percent in April 1960.

The low for postwar Aprils was 2.7 percent in 1953.

April's total of 1.5 million long-term jobless was virtually unchanged since February. In April 1961, there were 2.1 million long-term jobless at the recession low-point; the total was 1.2 million in pre-recession April 1960. The low for postwar Aprils was 242,000 in 1953.

The Labor Dept. report showed a total of 2.2 million workers on part-time for economic reasons. Some 1 million of these usually worked full time. The overall total was down 110,000 from March.

Of the job increase of 711,000 from March, about 450,000 occurred in the non-farm work force. The farm labor increase of 250,000 to a total of 5 million was smaller than usual for this time of year, the report said.

A more detailed report of April job changes will be issued May 15.

In a separate report on the factory labor turnover for March, the Labor Dept. reported that layoffs in manufacturing declined more than seasonally while hirings were unchanged.

Total hirings continued slightly higher than total separations—by 2 workers per 1,000 in March, reflecting further improvement in the manufacturing sector, particularly in durable goods.

'Needless Killings' Peril Algerian Truce—Meany

A warning that the "terrorist activities" of the Secret Army Organization are "seriously endangering" the cease-fire in Algeria was voiced by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a bitter denunciation of "the needless killings of Algerians."

Meany, attacking with particular vigor the "despicable and brutal assassination" of dock workers in the port of Algiers, called on the U.S. government to urge France and its army "to intensify all measures to smash the OAS terror once and for all."

"The self-restraint displayed by the Moslem population in the face of these atrocities," Meany said, "is further testimony to the fact that the Algerians are ready for self-government.

"One cannot, however, expect human patience to long withstand such extreme provocations. For its is quite clear that the OAS wishes to provoke a Moslem reaction that would force the French army to shoot down those who would seek to defend themselves against these senseless killings.

"In addition to these wanton killings is the growing disruption of the economy, the rise of unemployment and the danger of total collapse and chaos which can only contribute to the reinforcement of all tendencies of totalitarian forces threatening an eventual democratic and independent Algeria," he said.

Kennedy Predicts Health Bill Passage:

Doctors' Threat of Boycott Stirs Angry Public Reaction jewski (D) of Union City introduced a bill to provide a $100 fine, a 90-day jail sentence and revocation of license of any physician who refused to treat a patient.

(Continued from Page 1)

Criticism of the Point Pleasant doctors came even from medical groups opposing the Anderson-King measure, which would provide up to 90 days of hospitalization and 180 days of nursing home care for retired persons over 65, covered by social security or railroad retirement benefits, but would not pay any doctors' bills.

Dr. Eugene Webb, president of the San Francisco Medical Society, termed the boycott threat "a poor way to run a railroad."

Boyden Roseberry, executive director of the Westchester County Medical Society, said that while the group's board of governors opposed Anderson-King, they were "horrified" by the thought of boycotting patients.

The American Medical Association, however, said it would "neither condemn nor disapprove" the threatened boycott.

Meanwhile House Speaker John McCormack reported at a breakfast meeting with the President that House members returning to their home districts for the Easter vacation had found "overwhelming" sentiment among voters for the Anderson-King health care plan.

'No Compromise'

The co-sponsors of the measure, Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.) and Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. M.) issued a vigorous joint denial of a newspaper report that they were prepared to accept a compromise on the bill taken from alternative bills introduced by Rep. John V. Lindsay and Sen. Jacob K. Javits, both New York Republicans.

Lindsay and Javits have proposed that health care beneficiaries be given the option of insurance under the social security system or a higher pension benefit to help pay the cost of commercial health insurance.

Anderson and King said that while they welcome suggestions to improve their bill in line with its purposes and without harm to its basic principles," this rumored compromise is not in keeping with that position."

In charging the New Jersey doctors with a "blackmail" attempt, Ribicoff noted that the Point Pleasant group practices at two hospitals which have received more than a half-million dollars in federal aid.

"These doctors apparently believe it is all right for the federal government to help build hospitals in which they practice but that an insurance plan that would help their patients pay their hospital bills would not be good," Ribicoff commented.

Dr. J. Bruce Henriksen, leader of the boycott move, charged that the secretary's statement carried an implied threat to withhold federal funds from hospitals whose staffs oppose the Administration program.

Doctor Charges 'Twist'

"This thing has been twisted around to make us look like a bunch of stinkers, as if we are not going to take care of old people, but that isn't true," Henriksen said.

He added that the doctors' boycott resolution contained the statement: "We will continue to care for the medically indigent, young and old, as we have in the past."

Ribicoff, however, citing the resolution's declaration that the physicians would not treat patients whose bills were paid under social security, declared:

"It should be absolutely no concern to a physician where a patient gets the money with which to pay his hospital costs—whether from his private funds, from private insurance, or from the social security trust fund as provided by the Anderson-King bill."

In other criticism of the boycott move:

- Dr. Blue Carstenson, executive director of the National Council of Senior Citizens, sent a telegram of protest to the AMA, declaring that doctors "who have made these 'strike' threats are a disgrace to the medical profession."
- Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn, spokesman for the Physicians Committee for Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security, warned that the "final appraisal of the social conscience of the doctors must rest with the public."
- A California member of the Physicians Committee, Dr. Daniel Mishell, who formerly practiced in New Jersey, wired Gov. Hughes offering his services, and those of a number of colleagues, should the Point Pleasant group and their supporters persist in carrying out their boycott threat.
- New Jersey's six Democratic representatives in Congress observed in a joint statement that the Hippocratic oath says nothing to the effect that "if I cannot impose my will on Congress, I will let the sick and dying languish unattended." They added: "Our own lay advice to any physician who might join this movement is: 'Physician, heal thyself'."
- One of the six, Rep. Frank Thompson, called the doctors' action "the most contemptible, sordid and disgraceful kind of political pressure," and vicious, inhuman blackmail."
- A New York Times editorial declared that the doctors had engaged in an "attempt at political blackmail degrading to their profession," adding that while the physicians have a right to oppose the health care plan:

"The one thing they do not have a right to do is to threaten, to make the sick victims of their political dissent by depriving them of lifeguarding services. No legislative counter moves should be necessary to convince the doctors they are on the wrong track."

Kennedy to Go on Air At Health Plan Rally

Pres. Kennedy will pace a home-stretch drive to enact old age medical care under the social security system with an address over all three TV networks May 20.

He will speak at a rally in Madison Square Garden, New York, sponsored by the National Council of Senior Citizens. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will also be a speaker. About 30 other rallies will be conducted simultaneously in cities across the country.

The President's talk will be carried by ABC and CBS television and radio at 4 p.m. and by NBC television at 5:30. Mutual radio will broadcast the speech at 6:05. All are Eastern Daylight Time.

LABOR DEPT. AWARD OF MERIT was presented to Pres. James A. Suffridge (left) of the Retail Clerks by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg in recognition of the union's support of the arts. The union financed a second performance of Hansel and Gretel by the Washington Civic Opera Association last Christmas season after 6,000 children had been turned away from the standing-room-only first performance.

'Non-Op' Rail Unions Denounce Pay Proposal

(Continued from Page 1)

the union had sought likewise would not be inflationary if "handled" properly.

"These railway employes have had no increase in their real wages —in fact, their purchasing power has actually decreased — since 1958," Leighty said. "In this period the wages of all other groups of American workers have increased substantially."

In the last three years, he went on, productivity nationally has increased 9 percent; on the railroads, it has jumped 18 percent.

"There is no reason for not giving us at least 18 percent," he maintained. "Also, we are 1 cent an hour behind on the cost of living. It would require 25 cents an hour to make the men even as of May 1."

'Departs from Justice'

Leighty claimed that in failing to reduce "this grave inequity," the board "departs from all recognized standards of justice in wage determination."

"The guide lines to wage determination that have been nationally announced in recent months are based upon wage increases to accord with, but not to exceed, the rise in labor productivity," he pointed out. "To conform to that policy would have required a wage increase for these railway workers much greater than that which the emergency board recommends."

The 25-cent increase the unions had sought, he said, would not have been inflationary if there had been "selective price increases" by the railroads to help finance it. Freight rates, he pointed out, have not increased anywhere near as much as the Consumer Price Index of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics or the wholesale price index.

The emergency board's rejection of the unions' demand for six months' furlough notice and its recommendation of five days' notice Leighty termed "unrealistic."

The railroads often know their plans months or even years in advance, he said, and could give the longer notice at little or no cost to themselves.

"Our proposal was for treating workers like human beings, not like machines," he added. "We believe it would have cost the railroads very little and would greatly assist the workers."

Leighty also took issue with a section of the board's report that attacked past bargaining practices which had narrowed the gap between the wages of skilled and unskilled workers by agreements on flat rather than percentage increases. The comment, he said, apparently was based on employer reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which show averages of rates that may vary as much as $1 an hour.

"Until reasonable wage rates are attained," he added, "we feel the cents per hour raise is the best way. Then percentage increases might be better."

While expressing disappointment at the recommendations, Leighty said the unions refused to reject them as a basis for negotiations.

Meantime the railroads continued to claim there was no justification for any wage increase whatsoever. The average pay of some 450,000 non-operating rail workers is now $2.48 cents an hour. In Chicago, J. E. Wolfe, chief negotiator for the carriers, said the recommended pay hike would be inflationary and would impose on "the already hard-pressed railroad industry" $105 million in annual added wage costs.

Pres. Kennedy said he was "gratified" that the emergency board's wage recommendation fell within "the limits indicated by the guidelines for non-inflationary wage behavior" suggested by the Council of Economic Advisers.

Stores Open in Lockout Ordered to Pay Clerks

A lockout by four food firms in Carlsbad, N. M., during a strike of the Retail Clerks against another member of the same employers' association became illegal when the four firms continued to operate with supervisors, relatives and temporary employes, the National Labor Relations Board has decided.

In a 3-2 decision the board ordered the companies—Brown Food Store, Cashway Food Store, Safeway Food Store, Inc., and Thrifty Way Food Store—to pay the 65 locked out employes all the money they lost from Mar. 16 to Apr. 22, 1960, when the dispute ended and a new agreement was reached by the stores and RCIA Local 462.

The board majority held that, though employers who bargain through an association have the right to lock out their employes when another member of the association is struck, they lose that right when they hire temporary replacements to keep operating. This finding was made by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown.

The minority—John H. Fanning and Philip Ray Rodgers—dissented, saying that the employes were promised their jobs back and were not discriminated against.

Both sides cited a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in 1957 in the "Buffalo Linen" case. In that case the court upheld a board decision that members of a multi-employer unit may avoid being "whipsawed" by halting operations when one employer is struck.

The majority said the Carlsbad situation was different because there was no shutdown to protect a bargaining unit. When the union failed to get a satisfactory contract and struck Food Jet, Inc., the other stores continued to operate with non-union help.

Adopting the findings of Trial Examiner Wallace E. Royster, the majority found that all stores other than Food Jet violated the labor law by replacing employes while they were "still willing to work and were not on strike."

Puerto Rican Paper Picks ANG, 53-3

San Juan, P. R.—A unit of 60 editorial department employes of El Mundo, this commonwealth's largest daily, has chosen the Newspaper Guild as bargaining representative in an election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

The vote was 53 for the Guild, 3 for no union.

The unaffiliated Teamsters union had intervened after the Guild filed an NLRB petition, but withdrew from the ballot when it was unable to find an employe within the unit who would serve as its observer, ANG Intl. Rep. J. Ed Allen reported.

The Guild recently chartered a Puerto Rico local after negotiating an initial contract with the San Juan Star.

Union Leaders Tell Teachers About Labor

Rock Island, Ill. — More than 100 teachers from public and parochial schools in four nearby cities were guests of the Quad-City Federation of Labor at its fifth annual education and community relations program.

They attended a dinner given by the area central body and then heard Ray W. Taylor, editor of the Milwaukee Labor Press, trace Labor's historic support for education and discuss the AFL-CIO's advocacy of social legislation. Dr. A. J. Wann of the University of Illinois Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations chaired the session.

The following day, a group of union representatives visited schools in the four-city area of Rock Island, Moline and East Moline, Ill. and Davenport, Ia., to talk to students and answer questions about the labor movement.

SOCIAL JUSTICE AWARDS of Auto Workers were presented by Pres. Walter P. Reuther (right) to (left to right) Mary Heaton Vorse, veteran labor and liberal writer; Novelist Upton Sinclair and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. The presentations took place at a banquet during the union's convention in Atlantic City.

'Catch-Up' Program Sought in Aerospace

Atlantic City—The Auto Workers in convention here gave overwhelming endorsement to the joint bargaining program worked out by the UAW and the Machinists for upcoming contract negotiations with the aircraft and missile industry.

Charging that the aerospace companies have grossly evaded their responsibilities, the resolution declared that workers in the industry lag far behind employes of comparable industries in pay scales and fringe benefits such as insurance and job security, and called for a "catch-up" program.

The convention also said bluntly that in any "realistic appraisal," the federal governments of the U.S. and Canada hold "the power of life and death" over corporations in the industry yet the U.S. government "prefers to remain a ghost" at the bargaining table.

The effect, the resolution said, "has been to sustain management's profit position and to subsidize management's resistance to legitimate union demands." The government "must now," it declared, "undertake to assure aircraft and missile workers a reasonable degree of security."

Both Pres. Kennedy and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg urged that unions apply the standards of "responsibility" toward a "non-inflationary and peaceful settlement" in negotiations in aerospace.

"Your task like mine is never done," the President stated after praising the UAW's 1961 automotive industry contracts as contributing to price stability. "I am confident that you will meet (the) obligation of restraint" in aircraft and missile bargaining.

Goldberg said that in the "vital" aerospace industry, "our country expects the parties to negotiate through collective bargaining fair and reasonable settlements without interruption of work or production."

Recognizing the "problems and issues" to be solved, the secretary said they could be "amicably and sensibly settled" if both sides "discharge their plain responsibilities to the nation."

The convention resolution ripped the aerospace companies for taking advantage of their defense position to deny the union shop, and to reject standard job security, insurance, welfare and wage policies. It lashed government policies that allow actual reimbursement of struck firms "for excess costs incurred in breaking a strike."

The aerospace industry is a "public enterprise" run for "private profit," the convention declared, with the government the industry's "sole customer" and its "sole employer as well." The government must move to halt the "double standard" it has allowed the industry to impose on its workers, it stated.

TWA Pilots Bargain 8% Pay Increase

New York—Trans World Airlines pilots won an 8 percent retroactive pay raise and other major benefits after a strike which lasted 1 hour and 20 minutes.

The contract, which runs to Nov. 6, 1963, provides:

- A 5 percent raise retroactive to Nov. 22, 1960, expiration date of the previous agreement, and a 3 percent raise retroactive to Nov. 22, 1961.
- An additional increase for first officers—whose pay will be raised from 64 to 66 percent of the rate for captain—and second officers, who receive 50 percent of a captain's pay instead of the present 46 percent.
- A reduction in flying hours through greater credit allowed for stand-by time on the ground and time spent away from home.
- Improvements in vacations, pensions and health insurance.

The company and the Air Line Pilots agreed to defer action on the crew complement issue, which involves qualifications for flight engineers and jurisdiction.

Americans at Work Films Given to State

San Francisco — The California State AFL-CIO has presented 15 films in the Americans at Work television series produced by the AFL-CIO to the State Dept. of Education. Earlier films in the series were given to the state last year.

JFK 'Remembers' Who Elected Him

Atlantic City—Said Pres. Kennedy to the Auto Workers convention here as the delegates roared a welcome to him on their speaker's platform:

"Last week after speaking to the (U.S.) Chamber of Commerce and the president of the AMA, I began to wonder how I got elected. And now I remember."

The President was received with something approaching frigidity by the CofC convention in Washington, the delegates seeming to think his action in persuading steel companies to roll back a price increase indicated "hostility" to business. A delegation from the American Medical Association emerged from a White House conference protesting unaltered opposition to health care for the aged under social security.

RLEA Sees More Jobs in Trade Growth

The Railway Labor Executives' Association has voiced strong support for Pres. Kennedy's trade expansion program as in the interests of the "economic well-being" of railroad workers.

In a letter to Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee which is now considering the bill after hearings, RLEA Executive Sec. Donald S. Beattie noted that 1.6 million railroad carloadings in 1961 could be attributed to U. S. exports and imports.

"The President's proposals," Beattie said, "are intended to spur the exchange of goods among nations of the free world, and will, we believe, contribute toward job stability among those of us who have the responsibility for transporting so much of America's commerce."

He added that the RLEA recognized the potential problem the external tariff wall of the European Common Market creates for American workers and industry, and that the power to bargain down these tariffs "is the power to generate job opportunities in the United States."

'Guidelines,' Not 'Fixing':

UAW Hears Kennedy Ask 'Responsibility'

(Continued from Page 1)

the relative share" going to workers and groups in the low and middle-income brackets.

Warning of the dangers of "apathy" during off-year elections, Dir. Roy Reuther of the AFL-CIO COPE registration campaign emphasized that election results in 109 "marginal" House of Representatives seats may control the next Congress.

The convention resolution on citizenship, he declared, "is where we begin the job of supporting the President." Millions of voters in areas where unions are strong are not registered, he continued, and "we have work to do among our own members and their families."

Other Actions

In other actions the convention:

- Approved a constitutional amendment designating interest and dividends earned from the union's strike fund—an expected $1.4 million a year—to assist the worldwide effort "to establish effective unions in emerging nations, to establish minimum fair labor standards for all workers and improve their health, education and general welfare."

The money, put aside in an Intl. Free World Labor Defense Fund, would be invested in specific projects through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Intl. Metalworkers Federation on vote of the UAW executive board.

- Approved a resolution calling for major "catch-up" gains in wages, fringe benefits and employment security in coming negotiations for auto workers in the aerospace industry.

In his keynote address and president's report, Reuther pointed out that the UAW and the Machinists have formulated joint bargaining goals to meet their responsibilities for aircraft and missile workers now "plagued with job insecurities" and lagging far behind comparable workers in pay and benefits.

- Approved a resolution calling for a broad campaign to organize white collar workers in the automotive, farm equipment and aerospace industries.
- Heard Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey report an average dues-paying membership in 1961 of approximately 1 million—a decrease of 135,000 from 1960—with an increase of more than 90,000 for the first three months of this year. The membership loss last year "was due principally to heavy unemployment in the auto industry," he said.

The financial situation of the union is "the best in history," he said, with total assets of $60.3 million. This is "more than double" what was reported in 1960, when dues were raised from $3 to $5 largely to create a stronger strike fund.

- Passed resolutions calling for major efforts to increase and stabilize employment through double pay for overtime after 40 hours, a national reinsurance fund to finance shorter workweeks, and a national planning agency.
- Approved resolutions endorsing the internal disputes plan and organizing program adopted by the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach last December and calling for their full implementation.

Chief speakers at the convention included Gov. Richard J. Hughes of New Jersey (D), United Nations Assistant Sec.-Gen. Ralph Bunche and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

In a searing attack on critics of the "extreme left" and "extreme right," Bunche set forth the UN's constructive record and "peace achievements."

The UN was not intended to be a "substitute for diplomacy" or a "sewing circle," he said, and he repudiated rightist detractors whom he labeled "know-nothings, the John Birchers, Buckley and his National Review, Soldiers of the Cross, those muddled and addle-pated ladies of the DAR and other lunatic fringe groups."

Goldberg, given a warm greeting, urged labor to recognize the need for new remedies for today's problems. We have a "lot of unfinished business," he said, but "we have come a long way from the [Battle of the] Overpass [at the Ford Rouge plant] in 1937."

Kennedy got a tumultuous welcome from more than 10,000 people in balconies and on the floor of the huge auditorium.

The crowd roared as he predicted flatly that "this year we shall pass" health care for the aged under social security.

Disclaiming any intent to fix prices and wages legally or to seek a "single pattern" for every bargaining situation, Kennedy bluntly said he would continue to "suggest guidelines" to be sure that all parties are informed of the "public interest."

Speaks with 'Single Voice'

"There are some who believe the President should be the honorary chairman of a great fraternal organization and confine himself to ceremonial functions," Kennedy said. "That is not what the Constitution says, and I did not run to fulfill the office in that way.

"I speak with a single voice to management and to labor.

"I believe it is the business of the President to concern himself with the general welfare and the public interest. If the people feel that it is not, then they should secure the services of a new President."

Auto Workers' Convention Re-elects Top Leadership

Atlantic City—Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther was re-elected by acclamation to his ninth successive term by the UAW's convention here, and the union's team of top leaders also was renamed to office.

Re-elected without opposition were Sec-Treas. Emil Mazey, who has served since 1947, and Vice Presidents Richard T. Gosser, Leonard Woodcock and Duane (Pat) Greathouse. Norman Matthews, who has been a vice president, retired, and the constitution was amended to reduce the number of vice presidents to three.

The constitution also was amended to provide for the first time for three board members at large, elected by the convention rather than from regions. Named to the new posts were Kenneth Bannon, director of the UAW Ford Dept.; Douglas Fraser, co-director of Region I-A; and Intl. Rep. Nelson Jack Edwards, all of Detroit. Edwards is the first Negro to be elected to the UAW's top policy body.

Friendship Office Opened for UN Aides

THE NEW "FRIENDSHIP OFFICE" opened in New York by the AFL-CIO Committee for the United Nations was dedicated with a reception for delegates from many nations to the UN, for UN staff officials, and for officials of unions. The objective is to maintain the office as a place of communication between United States labor and the UN spokesmen of other countries, particularly those with backgrounds in their own labor movements. At top left is a general scene of the reception; at top right, Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the New York City Central Labor Council, chairman of the AFL-CIO committee, chats in the business office with Ladies' Garment Workers Pres. David Dubinsky and Vice Pres. Charles Zimmerman against the windows through which the UN building is seen. At lower left, General Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany greet visitors in a receiving line; at right, Maida Springer of federation's Dept. of Intl. Affairs introduces UN delegates to Pres. A. Philip Randolph of Sleeping Car Porters (second from right) and Pres. Peter Ottley of Local 144, Building Service Employes. The "Friendship Office" is only a few steps from UN headquarters.

ILO Finds 70 Nations Have Dismissal Laws

Geneva—Things aren't what they used to be for an employer who wants to fire one of his hands, the Intl. Labor Organization learned in establishing background for a general examination of employment termination at the coming ILO conference.

The ILO found that in more than 70 countries, dismissal procedures are regulated mainly by legislation. In about a dozen nations they are covered principally by collective agreements. In practice, the two are often complementary and may be supplemented by work rules, individual employment contracts and court decisions.

"In an increasing number of countries the will of the employer standing by itself is no longer regarded as an adequate reason for ending the employment relationship," the ILO said in an analysis of replies from 68 nations to a questionnaire on possible international dismissal standards.

"It is being accepted more and more that an employer wishing to dissolve the contract of employment must state the grounds of his action and that the worker may have the validity of these investigated by an authority independent of both parties."

However, the ILO report pointed out, some of the developing countries have not yet reached the point where the question has arisen. In them most of the population does not work under an "employment relationship," which usually grows out of industrialization, but works in agriculture or handicrafts "in social structures which are determined by national traditions."

In some of such countries or territories, the report noted, a more important concern of legislation is giving the worker a higher degree of freedom within his employment relationship, particularly by making it easier for him to quit.

Some interesting debate is anticipated when representatives of the governments, labor movements and industries of about 100 member-nations are called on at the ILO conference to define dismissal standards that might be applied universally. The discussion is the first since the ILO was organized in 1919.

SAG to Open New Office in Florida

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild is organizing a Florida branch to service members and to enforce contracts covering expanding motion picture production in that state, National Executive Sec. John L. Dales has announced.

British Unions Plan Job Security Study

London — The British Trades Union Congress has undertaken a study of procedures on dismissals of workers for reasons other than technological advances.

Unions are being asked what response they get from employers when they propose that job security be strengthened, particularly in those industries in which discharges are not governed by contract, by law or by past practice. Most unions have indicated they prefer stronger contract clauses to new legislation.

Chicago AFL-CIO Gives Scholarships

Chicago—Janet Marie Weatherwax and Ralph John Esposito, both of whose mothers are members of Teachers Local 1 here, have received the two of four 1962 John Fitzpatrick Memorial Scholarship Awards of the Chicago Federation of Labor & Industrial Union Council.

Checks for $500 each were presented the winners by Sec. William F. Cleary of the city central labor body. Two $500 grants are made to students graduating from high school in January and two more to June graduates, in memory of John Fitzpatrick, CFL president from 1905 until his death in 1946.

IUD Urges Release of Radiation Hazard Data

Immediate issuance of the revised report of the Surgeon General's National Advisory Committee on Radiation has been urged by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. in a statement expressing apprehension about "governmental failure to clarify the facts regarding radiation hazards."

"We wonder what pressures are withholding the report from the American people," the statement said.

The report, a revision of the committee's March 1959 report, has been rumored in the nation's press but has never been made public.

Officers of the IUD's Atomic Energy Technical Committee asked for the review and updating of the 1959 report at a meeting in February 1961 with Jerome B. Wiesner, scientific adviser to Pres. Kennedy, the statement said.

"Beginning with these consultations we were assured that the committee would be called back into session to review and update their March 1959 report," the department said.

The statement recalled that the original report recommended the establishment of "primary responsibility for the nation's protection from radiation hazards" in a single federal agency, "logically the U.S. Public Health Service."

"Instead of implementing this recommendation," it continued, "the government is diffusing responsibility under the Atomic Energy Commission's program of transferring some of its responsibilities to the states. The AEC has already made such a transfer to the state of Kentucky and is negotiating a similar transfer to the state of Mississippi."

No Implementation

Meantime, no steps have been taken or announced to implement the 1959 recommendations, the department observed.

"The AEC continues to assure the American people that it operates the safest industry in the country," it added, "while at the same time asking Congress not to hear witnesses on radiation damage due to accidents."

AFL-CIO Aide on Women's Study Unit

AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin has been appointed to a federal committee charged with evaluating the educational needs of American women and with reporting its findings to the President's Commission on the Status of Women.

The Doctor's Changing Image

THE IMAGE OF THE AMERICAN PHYSICIAN as healer, scientist and friend—an image that generations of Americans have come to respect and revere—is fading out and being replaced by the image of a political medicine man.

The irony of the changing image is that it has been created by the physicians' own organization—the American Medical Association.

It has been fairly evident for many years that the AMA does not represent the thinking of what may well be a majority of physicians on questions of the economics and cost of medical care. Yet a relative handful of doctors who have the time to become involved in the internal politics of the AMA, and who have won control of most of the state medical societies as well as the AMA, have created the new image of the doctor as political pitchman.

The deepening gulf between the AMA and the public is best seen in the battle over health care for the aged. The public, in poll after poll, is strongly in favor of such care being financed through the social security system. The AMA is hysterically opposed.

★ ★ ★

THE RESULTS OF THIS OPPOSITION tied to a "pull-out-all-the-stops" campaign, have cropped up in what is the ultimate position that a doctor can take—refusal to accept an elderly patient whose care might be financed through the social security mechanism.

A small group of New Jersey doctors has proclaimed in a formal statement that "we . . . do refuse to participate in the care of patients under the provisions of the Anderson-King bill or similar legislation."

By adding to their declaration the statement, "we will continue to care for the medically indigent, young and old, as we have in the past," the New Jersey doctors leave the clear inference that it is not the state of a patient's health that matters so much, but the source of his income.

This is a shocking stand to be taken by members of a profession which bases its ethical code on the ancient oath named for Hippocrates, the father of medicine.

"With purity and holiness will I pass my life and practice my art," the Hippocratic oath says. "Into whatever house I enter I will go for the benefit of the sick and will abstain from all wrongdoing and corruption. . . ."

There are no qualifications here, no footnotes limiting the definition of the sick to patients not covered by social security insurance for their hospital bills.

★ ★ ★

TO THEIR CREDIT, the governors of at least one medical society have expressed "horror" at the thought of refusing treatment to any ill person.

Yet, with few exceptions, the medical societies themselves—from the AMA down through the state and county organizations—have propagandized the public and the medical profession with misleading scare charges against the social security system to the point that the New Jersey doctors could make their boycott threat with no apparent qualms. Their dedication to the practice of a holy art now has been transferred to a cause that is merely political.

The image of the physician as healer, scientist and friend is down the drain when the physician's major concern is no longer the patient and his illness nor even whether he will be paid for his services but the method of payment.

We cannot believe that the physicians of America who have helped produce the highest health care standards in the world will allow this to become the mark of their relationship with the public—their patients.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned.

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, May 12, 1962 No. 19

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'He Just Doesn't Understand Me'

Meany Editorial Says:

Do Americans Want Kennedy's Health Care Bill? Write—Now!

The following editorial, "The Hour of Decision," by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany appears in the May issue of the American Federationist:

FOR ALMOST A GENERATION the social security system, born in the great explosion of human progress called the New Deal, has been an ever more significant part of American life. Forgotten now are the frantic warnings of the extreme reactionaries in 1936 that a national pension system would destroy the nation's liberties and lead to "government control over the lives and fortunes of the people."

No reasonable person holds that view today. Social security has proved its own case. And the prestige of the system is so enormous that many organizations which most frantically opposed it, including the large insurance companies, are presently numbered among its ardent supporters.

Now we come to the currently proposed extension of the social security system to cover hospitalization, nursing home care, outpatient services and home nursing for social security beneficiaries. What do we find? We find the same unreasoning, intemperate, deliberately untruthful opposition that was raised against the original concept of social security.

It is a temptation simply to be angry at this outrageous performance. But sorrow is more appropriate. It is sad indeed that Americans cannot discuss an issue of national importance in a rational way without casting imputations of subversion or even treason on the opposition.

AND THIS IS an issue of national importance. The passage of time has made it clear that the largest unfilled gap in our national program of independent, earned retirement for the aged is the cost of illness, especially illness requiring institutional care or the equivalent.

Let me put it in the most brutal terms. Old people do get sick more often than others, simply because they are old. Most of them are sick before they die, if at no other time. With hospital rates running above $30 a day, a week's confinement costs three times the average social security income for a month. This is beyond the means of the most frugal social security pensioner.

Someone has to pay. More often than not it is the dutiful son or son-in-law who cashes the savings bonds so carefully preserved for the education of his children, who borrows on his life insurance, who gets a second mortgage on his house. Where this kind of resource is lacking, the alternative for the old folks is public relief—a bitter end for independent retirement.

What is proposed by the Kennedy Administration, and set forth in the bill (H. R. 4222) now being considered, is simply an expansion of our national old-age insurance system to cover most of these institutional costs. To reverse one of the popular travel slogans, it is a matter of "pay now, collect later."

The details of this proposal have been set forth in publications of the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions time after time. I am confident that union members realize this is not "socialized medicine" or indeed any encroachment at all upon the prerogatives or practices of the medical profession.

BUT REALIZATION is not enough. The great need is for an expression of opinion, in volume, to bear out the findings of every public opinion poll that Americans of all ages want this extension of the social security system.

The hour of decision is near. The President himself is leading the fight but, as he has so often stressed, he needs your help. Write to your congressman and senators today; ask them to back the Kennedy program, H. R. 4222, the Anderson-King bill.

Whether you are young, middle-aged or old, this bill means more security for you.

"I could hardly wait until I got home, I'm so starved. As soon as I have a bite to eat, dear, I'll find out what happened."

Morgan Says:

Southerners' Senate Filibuster An 'Exercise in Blind Futility'

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

A MORE HOPELESS EXERCISE in blind futility than the Senate filibuster against reasonable voting requirements would be hard to imagine. On second thought, how blind is it?

The southern senators leading the fight against the bill to make a sixth grade education adequate proof for voter registration are intelligent men. They know that the right to vote is a fundamental right, protected by the Constitution. They know that many southern states have gone to fatuous lengths of subterfuge, to cruel lengths of intimidation, to keep Negroes from voting. And they know too—and here lies the crux of the matter—that this vicious make-believe is ending, that forces are at work from the grassroots up to the highest court to defeat the injustices which so long have denied the Negro his right of franchise as a citizen.

Morgan

It is further plain that these corrective forces cannot and will not be denied. So is the filibuster, which can do no more than delay reform by a mere twinkle of time—is it blind or is it the spiteful work of cantankerous men?

IF ONE BRIDLES at such a harsh judgment the only explanation remaining is that the filibusters are consciously engaged in a huge charade of self-deception. It is almost as if they were saying to themselves (if indeed they can be so candid), yes, we know we are on the wrong and losing side but our emotional reflexes are so conditioned by unreality that we must go through with the act of restaging the Civil War.

A measure of the futility and of the forces rising against it became clearer over a recent weekend. Negroes are not the only citizens who have been disfranchised. For generations rural politicians across the land have been able to rig state legislatures so as to deny urban dwellers of any and every ethnic origin a fair voice in government. In an historic decision the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that such grotesque apportionments violated the equal-protection-of-the-laws provisions of the 14th Amendment and further ruled that federal courts could intervene to correct such situations. In another decision involving Michigan, the high court indicated it would allow lower courts, state and federal, to develop general standards for "rational" apportionment.

Already more than half the 50 states are under mounting pressure to redistrict; suits are now in the courts in 17 states and are being threatened in 9 others. And the development that bears so dramatically on the filibuster against fair voting laws, led by Sen. Richard Russell of Georgia, is this: A three-judge federal court in Atlanta unanimously has ruled that a new county unit election system, which a special session of the Georgia Legislature had just cooked up, was unconstitutional. The court also issued a temporary injunction prohibiting Democratic Party officials from applying the system in the party primary Sept. 12—in which races for senator, governor and other state officers are at stake.

ALTHOUGH THE STATE attorney general prepared immediately to file an appeal to the Supreme Court it is obvious, as one news dispatch put it, that the decision will "bring on nothing short of a political revolution."

Caught up with some kind of poetic justice in this crisis is one of the South's most militant segregationists, Rep. James C. Davis of Georgia's 5th Dist. For the first time Davis is going to be obliged to run on a popular vote basis in a three-county district composed largely of urban and suburban residents.

There are some 42,000 Negro voters registered in Atlanta alone and on the comparison of records they would seem more inclined to vote for his primary opponent, a young and popular Atlanta liberal named Charles L. Weltner, than for Davis, whose racist attitude is reflected in the power he has wielded against Negroes on the House District Committee, which helps govern the capital.

And so, if they would only face it, are the leaders of the Senate filibuster. What canny politics it would be, and what statesmanship in the bargain, if instead of trying to talk better voting laws to death they would appeal for the support of the new Negro voters who are rapidly becoming their decisive constituents.

Morgan Program Cited As News Tops in '61

Edward P. Morgan and the News, sponsored by the AFL-CIO on the ABC radio network, Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT, was named by the National Association for Better Radio and TV as "the outstanding radio news program of 1961."

Morgan, who usually broadcasts from Washington, won the Peabody Award in 1960 as the year's outstanding radio commentator. He also has won the Alfred I. du Pont, the Headliners, the School Bell and the Sidney Hillman awards.

Washington Reports:

National Self-Help Seen Key To Latin American Progress

THE ALLIANCE FOR PROGRESS is "more than a mere holding operation against communism," Rep. Armistead I. Selden, Jr. (D-Ala.), pointed out in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

The Alliance is aimed, he continued, "at raising the standards of living in Latin America over a 10-year period" and is based on the self-help principle that countries participating in the program must make necessary reforms before funds are expended for them.

Rep. Horace Seely-Brown, Jr. (R-Conn.), on the same program, declared the Western Hemisphere is "reaping the harvest" of U.S. failure to effect social reforms in Cuba when the opportunity was first presented by the ouster of Spain.

The chance for reforms now in the rest of Latin America must not be missed, he added.

Both congressmen are members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. They agreed that many Latin American nations are dominated by wealthy groups which have blocked aid to their own needy. Seely-Brown pointed out that the demand for reforms before Alliance aid is given is one way of bypassing those at the top.

THE CONNECTICUT CONGRESSMAN said that "after meeting with the men who are representing us in these countries, I am of the opinion that there is a growing awareness not only on the part of the heads of government in those countries, but also of the people themselves, of our sincere interest in needed social reforms—reforms that must not be imposed from without, but come from within."

"This program," he declared, "is the very reverse of the dollar diplomacy that we carried on too long and too tragically."

Selden said that the Latin American countries are cooperating in the Alliance just as they cooperated at Punta del Este in condemning and isolating the Castro government in Cuba.

"The problem of infiltration and subversion from Communist Cuba," the Alabama representative said, "is being met. The next step is the Alliance for Progress, the long-range answer to the plans of the Communists."

Selden said he is "reasonably certain" that Congress will "meet its responsibility" in appropriating additional needed funds.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ON THE CLOTURE VOTE in the Senate, the Democratic leadership was deserted by a senator elected as a liberal from West Virginia, six liberals from western states, the two Tennessee senators who sometimes support moderate civil rights programs, the liberal from Texas, plus the two from Oklahoma. Plus, of course, the 18 from the South who have waged the filibuster against the Administration bill on literacy tests.

The Republican leadership, as represented by Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, was deserted by five GOP senators with some reputation for independence of thought—Senators Aiken and Prouty of Vermont, Cooper of Kentucky, Wiley of Wisconsin, Young of North Dakota.

A few of these senators may have been seriously impressed by the argument that a federal law regulating state laws on registration and voting would be unconstitutional. Sen. Cooper announced that he was, and he has a rare capacity to wrestle conscientiously with an issue before coming down on the wrong side, which is by no means intended as disrespectful.

As for the rest of them, one regrets to say that their votes probably resulted from a healthy respect for future election returns—either from the public or in the Senate itself, with the latter of somewhat more significance.

* * *

IT WOULD BE SURPRISING if the five Republican independent votes and the six Democrats from the western states were overwhelmingly influenced by a spurious issue of constitutionality. The Republicans are seniors, members of or close to the inner club that controls Senate matters, does favors or withholds them. Seniors do not like to desert other seniors, which most of the southerners are.

The alliance in the Senate between sparsely-populated Mountain States and the South is ancient and enduring. It is the alliance of the small for mutual self-defense against the overwhelmingly large, and the new generation of southwestern liberals shows distressingly little desire to think nationally on an issue about which the South thinks both narrowly and stubbornly.

Senators Gore and Kefauver of Tennessee and Yarborough of Texas certainly have shown concern in the past for the voting rights of all citizens. Apparently the temper of things in the South, where rightist forces are driving hard for control of the Democratic Party, makes them cautious.

The hard fact is that if Democratic Leader Mansfield of Montana had got on the cloture all 15 he might reasonably have expected from Democrats and Republicans, he wouldn't have had enough to win. He would have had only a 58-38 majority, with a switch of six additional senators needed for the required two-thirds of those present and voting.

* * *

THE UNHAPPY FACT is that the Senate's tradition of open and free debate has been twisted out of reason into a tradition that says less than 20 percent of the members can block a vote forever if sufficiently determined to talk and talk and talk.

Sen. Russell of Georgia cannot privately believe that the Supreme Court would void as unconstitutional a reasonable federal literacy standard required of the states. He no doubt himself reads the constitution in that way; he may wish the Supreme Court would read it that way. But his fear is that the court would uphold the law.

The Southerners, most of them very able men, are well acquainted with the long line of decisions—including the recent Tennessee apportionment decision—affirming federal power to safeguard federal voting rights against arbitrary and discriminatory state election laws, and even against fraud in elections.

So the literacy bill was headed down the drain. And an effort to alter the present cloture rule, with its requirement for an unobtainable two-thirds majority, will probably embroil the Senate in January—with a vote once again subject to the consent of the filibusters.

PUNTA DEL ESTE MEETING of American states left Cuba's Fidel Castro "stripped of influence," but the next step in helping Latin American needy is up to the U.S., Rep. Armistead I. Selden, Jr. (D-Ala.), left, said on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program. Rep. Horace Seely-Brown, Jr. (R-Conn.), on the same program, declared approval of funds for Alliance for Progress is urgently necessary.

SIDNEY HILLMAN PRIZE AWARDS for achievement in mass communications were presented at a luncheon in New York attended by some of the winners and judges. Left to right are Alan Barth, Washington Post editorial writer and one of the judges; Jane Jacobs, writer on city planning; Jacob S. Potofsky, Hillman's successor as president of the Clothing Workers; Patrick J. Owens, Pine Bluff (Ark.) Commercial editorial writer; Eugenia Rawls, who accepted an award for Novelist Lillian Smith; NBC-TV Producer Robert Young, and William L. Shirer, writer and one of the judges.

Hillman Awards Given 3 Writers, TV Team

New York—Two women writers, a 32-year-old editorial writer and a three-man television team received the 12th annual Sidney Hillman Foundation prize awards for achievement in the mass communications field at a luncheon attended by more than 350 persons.

The awards were presented by Jacob S. Potofsky, successor to Hillman as president of the Clothing Workers and president of the foundation set up to perpetuate the memory of the union's founder and his philososphy.

The winners were:

Jane Jacobs, writer on city planning and architecture, for her book, Death and Life of Great American Cities, which questions the benefits of urban renewal.

Lillian Smith, novelist, for an article in Redbook magazine, "The Ordeal of Southern Women," in connection with New Orleans integration riots.

Patrick J. Owens, for editorials on civil liberties, civil rights and other subjects in the Pine Bluff (Ark.) Commercial.

Albert Wasserman, Robert Young and Charles Dorkins, respectively producer, director and cameraman, for their NBC-TV "White Paper" program, "Angola: Journey to a War."

Miss Smith, who was to have spoken for all the winners, was unable to attend the luncheon because of illness. The address she had prepared was read by Eugenia Rawls, well-known actress and a close friend who has appeared in plays based on her works.

The judges were Alan Barth, Washington Post editorial writer who spoke briefly; William L. Shirer, noted author, and Lewis Gannett, well-known literary critic.

In presenting the awards, Potofsky discussed the function of mass communications in a democratic society.

"They play a major role," he said, "in equipping us with the knowledge to understand the great issues and to make right choices."

The winners, he maintained, "demonstrated a sense of social awareness and a willingness to grapple with controversial and significant issues."

Meany to Help Note Labor Dept's. 50th Year

Pres. Kennedy has formally proclaimed 1963 as U.S. Dept. of Labor Fiftieth Anniversary Year and has named AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as co-chairman of the President's Committee for the Dept. of Labor Fiftieth Anniversary Year.

The occasion, the President said in his proclamation, will "commemorate the contributions of the Dept. of Labor to the welfare of our workers and their families and to our nation."

He recalled that the Labor Dept. came into existence on Mar. 4, 1913, "to foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment."

"The success of our economy and the well-being of our nation are dependent upon the skills, energies, talents, and security of the individual American wage earner," the President declared.

"The department has striven faithfully over the years to shape sound policies for meeting the nation's manpower needs and for developing and utilizing the potentials of all our labor force in productive and satisfying employment.

"The department has judiciously used the instrument of law and custom to safeguard individual workers' rights, to protect and improve the nation's labor standards, to provide free and equal opportunity for all Americans, and to fight the economic hazards of industrial life.

"The department, as guardian of the public interest, has proven its dedication to sound labor-management relations, has clearly recognized its responsibility to assist the business and industrial community to achieve economic growth and stability, and has, for a half a century, kept the nation abreast of vital changes in our dynamic economy."

Kennedy himself will serve as honorary chairman of the President's Committee, with Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson and Speaker of the House John W. McCormack as honorary vice chairmen.

Payroll Tax Delinquency Rises Sharply

Employers illegally spent more than $268 million in taxes deducted from their workers' pay last year—and then couldn't produce the money when the time came to pay the tax collector, the Internal Revenue Service reported.

Both the amount involved and the number of tax delinquent employers — 316,612 — topped the 1960 totals, the IRS said.

Sen. John J. Williams (R-Del.), who each year reads the record of tax delinquency to the Senate, had harsh words for chiseling employers and chided the Internal Revenue Service for not doing a better job of cracking down on tax delinquents. The Delaware senator commented:

"This money, withheld by employers from their employes, does not belong to the employers and there can be no justification for any employer's diverting these funds for his own use or to the use of his business."

He noted that the amount of delinquent employment taxes—which includes both withheld income tax and social security tax—had risen 13 percent in 1961.

The loser in such situations is the government, rather than the employe. Once the money has been withheld from a worker's pay, the government credits his income tax and social security accounts with the full payment even if the employer has not handed over the money.

Becu Deplores Tests, Raps Soviet 'Breach'

Brussels—The free trade union movement, "well aware upon whom the responsibilities for the resumption of nuclear tests rests," has reaffirmed its "vigorous opposition" to atomic arms blasts.

Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in a statement recalled that Soviet Russia "broke the truce" on Aug. 31 of last year while the Geneva conference on nuclear disarmament was in progress. The Communist-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions, he said, supported the Soviet tests.

"The free trade unions speak in the name of ordinary people everywhere," he said, "in calling on all powers to halt all nuclear tests, which can only increase atmospheric pollution and sharpen the armaments race, and to conclude an agreement which would secure international control over the test ban."

AFL-CIO Fact Sheet Issued:

Banks Charged with Distorting Tax Plan

Banks and corporations have launched a "calculated campaign of confusion" in an effort to defeat an Administration proposal for a withholding tax on dividend and interest income, the AFL-CIO has charged in a "tax fact sheet."

The withholding provision was included in the tax revision bill passed by the House of Representatives earlier this year. It faces a hard battle in the Senate, with a flood of letters opposing the provision reflecting misunderstanding of what the withholding tax means and how it would be enforced.

One strong supporter of the withholding tax—Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.)—has received more than 30,000 letters from opponents, many of them based on the mistaken belief that the provision would either impose a new tax or increase existing taxes.

Sen. Harrison J. Williams, Jr. (D-N. J.) said he has been "deluged with mail" but much of it revealed "an incredible amount of misunderstanding and distortion."

Noting that savings banks in some areas have taken newspaper advertising encouraging taxpayers to write in opposition to withholding, Sen. John Sherman Cooper ((R-Ky.) told the Senate that the advertising is often "misleading."

To answer both the honest confusion and the deliberate distortions, the AFL-CIO made these points in its fact sheet:

Virtually all income received in salaries and wages is reported and taxed through the withholding system which has been in effect since 1942. Because there has been no comparable means of collecting taxes on income from stocks, bonds and bank accounts, the Internal Revenue Service estimates that nearly $4 billion in taxable income does not get reported—and the government loses more than $800 million a year in revenue.

This means, of course, that the people who do pay their full taxes are forced to pay more to make up for this revenue loss.

Dividend and interest withholding will impose no new tax on anyone, the fact sheet emphasizes. It simply will encourage payment of what always has been due under the existing law.

Opponents have charged that withholding will cause hardship to low-income groups, including widows, orphans and the aged.

To start with, only a small portion of dividend and interest income is received by low-income groups. And the bill provides a simple means of exemption from withholding for persons who would not be required to pay any tax because their total annual income is too low. In addition, married couples with less than $10,000 income and individuals with less than $5,000 can obtain a refund every three months if they expect their tax bill to be less than the amount withheld.

"In our judgment," the AFL-CIO fact sheet declared, "families who have little or no tax obligation will be fully safeguarded under the interest-dividend withholding proposal. Its real objective will be to collect from the forgetful and the deliberate chiselers."

Finally, the AFL-CIO noted, if the Senate rejects interest-dividend withholding, it will "perpetuate a gross injustice" against all wage and salary earners.

Labor "fully agrees," the fact sheet declared, with this statement by Internal Revenue Commissioner Mortimer Caplin:

"An individual whose income is exclusively from wages and salaries is withheld on. Why, in the name of common justice, shouldn't dividend-interest income also be withheld on?

"We do not promote voluntary compliance by tolerating a condition, year after year, under which most people pay and watch others, similarly situated under the tax laws, get a free ride—or ride at a reduced fare. Such a condition is not only fiscally unsound—it is equitably and morally unsound."

Dividend Withholding Tax Foes Denounced

Pres. Kennedy opened his May 9 news conference with a blast at groups which have "badly misinformed" the American people about the Administration's proposal for a withholding tax on dividend and interest income.

He aimed his fire specifically at "the paid advertisements and circulars financed by the savings and loan associations," which he noted "have made great profits in recent years and paid very little in taxes."

"To set the record straight," the President declared, "not a single one" of the charges made against the withholding proposal is true. Kennedy went on to say:

"This bill simply proposes to collect taxes on dividends and interest income in the same fashion that it has been collected on our wages and salaries for the past 19 years. This is not a new tax. It has been on the books for years.

"Those recipients of dividends and interest who already pay their taxes will not be affected in any way. Those whose income is too low to be subject to tax will not be affected for they can exempt themselves from withholding by a simple statement. The only ones affected will be those individuals who are not now paying the taxes they owe on this income, either through neglect or for some other reason."

All the King's Men Are in the Union Now

Stockholm — It's all very well to have a job in one of the royal castles, but about 100 employes of King Gustav VI have picked a trade union in order to have their conditions of employment settled.

Joining the Civil Servants' Union, an affiliate of the Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions (LO) were drivers, charwomen, kitchen workers, silver cleaners, butlers and table-layers. Negotiations have opened on a contract with wage increases and hours of work.

The LO said "the royal employer has asked for assistance during the negotiations by experts of the Ministry for Civil Service Affairs."

ALL SET FOR DISTRIBUTION is the new COPE film, "People and Politics," which traces labor's political history and shows how to conduct registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns. In photo above, Joel O'Brien, who produced the film, signals to camera crew (top right) as COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany await their opening appearance. At lower right is a scene from the film itself, showing members of the Women's Activities Division of the Greater Bridgeport, Conn., Labor Council checking registration lists. Ann Nappi and Mary Greneavitch are getting a practical tip from Madeline Matchko, state WAD director. Prints of the film, which has been widely praised at preview showings, can be ordered from COPE headquarters.

AFSCME Elects Zander, Chapman; Per Capita Increase Defeated

By David L. Perlman

Milwaukee—Delegates to the State, County & Municipal Employes convention here re-elected Pres. Arnold S. Zander but voted down a higher per capita tax sought by the union's officers and executive board.

Zander, who has headed the 225,000-member union throughout its 26-year existence, defeated Jerry Wurf of New York City, 1,490 to 1,085. Candidates running on his ticket won seven seats on the AFSCME's executive board, to four won by an opposition slate.

In a three-way contest for secretary - treasurer, delegates chose Gordon W. Chapman, who had resigned that office last year to take a State Dept. assignment as coordinator for international affairs.

Chapman defeated George S. Lima, the union's New England director, 1,583 to 1,004 in a runoff election. On the first ballot, Chapman led Lima, who had been nominated by Zander, 978 to 921. Thomas G. Morgan, a former AFSCME staff member running on the Wurf ticket, polled 689 votes on the initial ballot and urged his supporters to vote for Chapman in the runoff.

Resigns Post

After his election, Chapman resigned from the State Dept. to return to his AFSCME post.

A series of votes on increasing the per capita tax—the portion of each member's dues sent to the international union each month—fell short of providing the two-thirds margin needed for passage.

After rejection of the executive board's proposal for a 35-cent increase—from the present 65 cents to $1 — substitute proposals were defeated for a 25-cent increase, a 10-cent increase and finally a 5-cent raise. Only on the last vote were supporters able to muster a simple majority.

Although the convention had been scheduled to continue an additional day, delegates voted overwhelmingly to adjourn after the final vote on the per capita issue.

Earlier the delegates had turned down a proposal by the opposition caucus to provide for regional election of executive board members. Board members are presently elected by all delegates, with the provision that no more than one member can be from a single state. The convention also rejected a "bullet voting" provision, which would have enabled delegates to vote for fewer candidates than the number of vacancies to be filled.

Resolutions Adopted

Among the resolutions adopted were proposals for:

- Mandatory coverage of all state and local government employes by unemployment compensation. Under the present optional coverage, the vast majority of public employes are unprotected, the resolution noted.
- Premium pay for overtime work for all public employes to close a "serious gap" between conditions in private industry and in the public service.
- Establishment of employer-paid health and life insurance coverage for workers, dependents and retired employes as a major bargaining goal. Locals were urged to seek "comprehensive pre-payment plans with direct service arrangements based on the group practice of medicine" wherever possible.

Hatch Act Opposed

- Support of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education and repeal of the Hatch Act, which bars political action by both federal employes and state employes paid in part by federal funds. The convention also called for repeal of so-called "little Hatch Acts" adopted by various states and municipalities.
- Procedure for prompt investigation and action by the union's Civil Rights Committee on any complaints of discrimination.

Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.) won vigorous applause from the delegates when he called for passage of the Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the aged through social security.

Can't Afford to Live'

After quoting from letters he has received from both retired workers and persons with aged parents in need of expensive medical care, Proxmire declared.

"Hundreds of thousands of Americans are dying because they can't afford to live."

Other major speakers included Sen. Alexander Wiley (R-Wis.); Sir Thomas Williamson, general secretary of the General & Municipal Workers of Great Britain; Nicholas Zonarich, organization director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., Pres. Stanley A. Little of Canada's National Union of Public Service Employes, and Rev. Claire Cook of the Religion & Labor Foundation.

Re-elected to the AFSCME executive board were Mrs. Rena Ainsworth, Al Church, Steve Clark, William J. McEntee, Ambrose Raleigh and David Williams.

New members elected were James Broyer, John Caldwell, Neville Crippen, Robert Ferris and W. T. Hill.

Public Apathy Seen Civil Defense Threat

The decline of public interest in a nationwide system of shelters against nuclear fallout may affect the chances of the Administration's civil defense program in Congress, Assistant Sec. of Defense Steuart L. Pittman declared in an interview on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service program heard on the ABC radio network.

"I don't think public understanding of what is involved is sufficient at this time," said Pittman, who heads the civil defense effort.

One reason, he suggested, may lie in the early emphasis on private shelters—a program that has been de-emphasized in favor of public shelters in public structures. A survey authorized by Congress last year, he noted, already is providing communities with information on available public shelters.

And the President's program now before Congress, Pittman observed, seeks $450 million in grants for shelter space construction in certain types of institutions, such as schools and hospitals.

He added, however, that private shelters may still be desirable in rural areas, and noted that a booklet available from the Office of Civil Defense, Washington 25, D. C., describes home shelters that can be built with materials costing $75 to $150.

Labor Supports Plan To Save Wilderness

Establishment of a National Wilderness Preservation System will protect "the precious, dwindling storehouse of unspoiled, untouched nature in wilderness areas," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller testified before the House Public Lands subcommittee.

Biemiller spelled out organized labor's backing for enabling legislation the subcommittee is considering. A bill the Senate passed last year with bipartisan support, he claimed, "offers every reasonable concession" to those who fear that protecting some land against commercial exploitation may hinder economic development.

"There is something primitive in man's nature that finds happiness in the knowledge that there are still great areas of wilderness which he can visit to find solitude and peace of mind," Biemiller said in his testimony.

"We hope the federal agencies involved in the system—the Dept. of Agriculture and the Dept. of the Interior—will not weaken wilderness values by making it too easy to enter and travel through wilderness areas. We believe travelers in wilderness areas should accept the country as they find it—without easy-access roads, without developed campsites. Otherwise the purpose of this legislation would be defeated."

Biemiller pointed out the legislation does not require additional federal funds, but simply sets up a framework for a "rational, coherent system" by which existing federal agencies can better protect and preserve wilderness areas already under their jurisdiction.

"This is the kind of legislation which can enlarge and uplift the human spirit," he maintained. "It can provide opportunities for the American people to find silence and solitude, to find the beauties of nature in our great wilderness areas. We must protect these wilderness areas not only for our own generation and for our children, but also for many generations yet unborn."

Cleveland RCIA Local Has New Members' Kit

Cleveland—All new members of Local 880, Retail Clerks, receive a handy-size kit full of information about the union when they join under terms of the union shop contract with local stores. The kit holds a copy of the RCIA constitution, the current contract, and other information, with a message from local Pres. Cecil A. Dunlap.

THE END OF AN ERA was marked when the American Labor Education Service held its final conference in New York after 35 years of achievement. At right, Eleanor G. Coit, ALES director, looks over a book of letters from friends of the organization commemorating its service. From the left are Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Dir. Larry Rogin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, and Lucile Kohn, honorary chairman of the ALES board of directors.

ALES Record Saluted At Final Conference

New York—The American Labor Education Service held its final conference here recently, drawing to a close an era in workers' education.

The conference marked 35 years of achievement by the ALES and a national recognition is of benefit to the participants, their unions, and the country.

Miss Eleanor G. Coit, ALES director, told the concluding conference: "By helping workers to better understand the world in which they live, we have helped them to build self-confidence, self-respect, and a greater sense of dignity."

ALES was created in the late 1920's as the Affiliated School for Workers at a time when Bryn Mawr, the University of Wisconsin, and Barnard were experimenting in summer classes for working women. Under the direction of Miss Hilda Smith and Miss Coit, the organization acted as a service center through which the teachers at the summer schools could compare ideas and programs.

Miss Smith, who spoke at the final conference, traced the history of the group and spoke of the support given by the Young Women's Christian Association. She said the early goals of the ALES were to find and train teachers, conduct research in teaching, plan experimental courses, recruit students, and prepare study material.

In the 1930's, when Miss Smith served as director of the WPA's worker education project, Miss Coit was named head of ALES. The organization continued to cooperate closely with labor education programs at the university level and with union programs, but throughout its existence it remained independent of the labor movement.

More recent projects of the organization have stressed exchange programs for foreign trade unionists, white collar workshops, conferences dealing with economic and international problems, and efforts to build more active labor participation in community affairs.

Many Goals Achieved

With the unions and the universities stepping up their educational programs and many of the ALES goals achieved, the organization found it increasingly difficult to obtain adequate financing. It decided to close down its operations rather than strip its functions. ALES records are now being classified for transfer to the New York State School of Industrial & Labor Relations.

Speakers at the final conference included Administrative Dir. Jacob Clayman of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; NLRB Chairman Frank McCulloch; Samuel Gould, new president of New York's educational TV station, and Fred Sweet, public relations director of the Hotel & Restaurant Employees.

A panel discussion on labor education's future included Morris Weisz, Labor Dept.; Alice Cook, Cornell professor of industrial and labor relations; Brendan Sexton, special assistant to the president of the Auto Workers; and Everett Kassalow, IUD research director.

AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin chaired the dinner meeting and reminded conference delegates that the concept of ALES "will never die as long as those of us who gained so much from its activities continue to carry out its ideals."

Avro Machinists Win 13-Cent Raise

Toronto, Ont.—A new 28-month contract under which A. V. Roe Canada), Ltd., agreed to 13 cents an hour in wage increases and improvements in medical coverage was ratified by the 2,500-member Machinists Lodge 717.

The agreement was reached in five days of intensive bargaining under the auspices of a conciliation board convoked after the workers, who had not had a pay hike in three years, voted overwhelmingly to strike.

Lodge 717 represents workers at Avro Aircraft, Orenda Engines and Canada Applied Research, all Avro affiliates. They received 6 cents an hour retroactive to Aug. 1, 1961, and will get an additional 7 cents effective Aug. 1, 1962.

One of the factors in the strike vote was Avro's insistence on recission of a cost-of-living bonus clause which applied to employes of the two manufacturing affiliates. The new agreement retains it and applies it also to the research workers.

IAM Lodge 1922 also is bargaining on behalf of 700 office and technical employes. The dispute has been referred to a concilation board.

U. S. Unions Praised for World Role

Philadelphia—Confidence that U.S. unions will continue to play a vital role in preventing Communist infiltration of the international labor movement was expressed by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg in an address at the spring meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association.

"We will win the struggle on this front," he said, "not because of superior salesmanship but because of a fundamentally sound concept of trade unionism.

"Our unions have been free to bargain, and they have won recognition of the fact that labor is more than another means of production. Their strength lies in their progressive tradition and in the respect and recognition they have earned in providing economic opportunities, better living standards and dignity to our working men and women."

Goldberg emphasized that prospects for the free world among the developing nations "depend on each of the diverse institutions of our society."

"What government can do to secure the peace and preserve free institutions," he said, "the trade union movement can also do, and sometimes do better."

He expressed the belief "it is imperative to accelerate" the U.S. labor attache and labor information services in all parts of the world.

When he leads the U.S. delegation to the Intl. Labor Conference in Geneva next month, he said, he will carry "the pledge of our government to continue its support" of the ILO.

New Clerks Pact Restricts Hours

Newark, N. J.—A new five-year contract, notable for a provision that regular fulltime department store employes need not work nights or Saturdays, has been ratified, 714-22, by employes in the Newark and Morristown stores of the L. Bamberger Co. who are members of Retail Clerks Local 21.

The contract, called historic by Local Sec.-Treas. George Meisler, eliminates the 10-hour day, and provides that day sales workers shall be off at night and on Saturday. Night work will be done by a new shift of 450 employes to be hired.

Other contract improvements include wage increases of $7 a week in the next three years.

COPE Aide Interviewed:

Easy Registration Urged for Voters

It's easier for an American citizen to buy a gun or get a fishing license than it is to register for voting, Roy Reuther, director of the AFL-CIO register and vote campaign, told a nationwide audience in a radio broadcast.

Calling on cities to make registration facilities available in every neighborhood, Reuther commented:

"In the average big city of half a million or more, the only place where you can register the year 'round is the city hall or the board of elections, and those offices are usually open only from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. So if I'm working in the shop, or in an office, or in a department store, I can't register after work. Maybe I can go down there on Saturday but sometimes they are not open on Saturday.

"If I want to buy a gun to go hunting, or a fishing license, I can go in my neighborhood hardware store and get that. But if I'm an unregistered citizen and want to register and vote, I have to spend maybe an hour on a bus to go to city hall, and most of the time it is closed. . . .

"We have suggested that the election officials, without any cost to the public, ought to have deputy registrars in every fire station, every police station, every library, every high school—this sort of thing to make it easier," he said.

On leave from his post as director of the Auto Workers citizenship department, Reuther appeared on Labor News Conference, a public affairs production of the AFL-CIO in cooperation with the Mutual Broadcasting System. He was questioned by Tom Coman, an editor for the Bureau of National Affairs, and Peter Edson, syndicated columnist for the Newspaper Enterprise Association.

Door-to-door in Canada

He pointed out that within the next few days Canada will start registering people on a door-to-door basis.

"The federal government does this job just like the census," he explained. "They go from door-to-door and find out how many people in that home are eligible. They rap on the door; they get the name and address; they register them. If they are not at home, they come back.

"It seems to me that if they can afford to do that, and they have a much higher voter turnout, some system like this ought to be used in this country."

Throughout the broadcast Reuther stressed that the labor-sparked registration drive is non-partisan and is designed solely to get people to register and vote—not to induce them to vote for a particular candidate. He noted that one of every three persons of voting age did not cast a ballot in the 1960 presidential election, and added:

"We believe that we have an obligation and a responsibility to try to see that more citizens are registered and participating voters.

"We believe that the democratic process, that democracy itself, is a good reason for voting. We think that you cannot maintain a strong democratic society unless the voter participates.

"We don't like the Iron Curtain policy of having no free elections and we think you can't really guarantee that you will continue to have free elections unless the people exercise that franchise."

Harder Than in '60

In reply to questions, he conceded that the task of whipping up interest in registering and voting this year is more difficult than in 1960 because of the lack of the spur of a presidential election. Voters tend to identify themselves with a candidate for President, he said—and even for governor—but not with candidates for Congress, even though they make the laws.

"But we intend to work harder and that's why we're starting earlier this year," he said.

To finance the drive, the AFL-CIO is contributing $250,000; the international unions are raising a similar amount at the rate of 3 cents a member, and the state and local bodies are being asked to raise another $25,000—a total of $750,000.

"What we are trying to do," Reuther said, "is to mobilize the machinery and apparatus of the labor movement in each of the states (the state council, the county council, the city council and local unions) to get them to work at this."

A similar drive was conducted in 1960 and 10 to 11 million new voters were added to the rolls.

"We don't claim that the labor movement did all of that," Reuther said, "but we think we played an important part in that increased registration. But there were still 37 million people of voting age who did not participate in the 1960 election."

Signalmen Hit Railroads, ICC on Safety

Safety on American railroads is deteriorating because many managements "ignore and flout" the requirements of the Railway Signal Inspection Act, and the Interstate Commerce Commission "ignores and condones" violations of its own regulations, Pres. Jesse E. Clark of the Railroad Signalmen told a Washington news conference.

Chairman of the subcommittee on safety of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, Clark declared the rail unions will "insist" on a congressional investigation.

He made public a 62-page memorandum sent all members of Congress in which a long list of alleged violations of safety rules, by more than a dozen railroads, are given in some detail.

He charged that the ICC "simply is not complying with the law or performing the duties imposed on it" by Congress, and asserted that its Bureau of Safety & Service "is only playing at enforcement."

"All the way from the higher staff echelons in Washington down through the ranks of the field forces, compliance today is near zero," he charged.

"It almost seems as though some managements and the ICC have consorted to completely disregard the intent and purpose of the so-called Signal Inspection Act for the safety of trains and the safety of the traveling public and the employes.

Among "condoned" violations Clark cited was action of the Kansas City Southern Railroad in putting sheets of tin under the rails on about 30 bridges. The tin, he explained, carries signal current just as the rails do, and it would be possible for a rail to break, or even to be removed, without a warning being shown by the signal system.

The ICC cited the railroad and fined it "a couple of hundred dollars," he said—and then authorized it to keep the tin on the bridges without even requiring insulation from the track.

'One Dynamic Organization' Proposed:

Climate Is Changing in South, Pollock Tells TWUA Parley

Miami Beach—The Textile Workers Union of America, largest union in the nation's only basic industry which remains largely unorganized, has invited unions in the textile industry to end their "costly rivalries" and merge into "one dynamic organization."

The invitation was extended by Pres. William Pollock in his keynote address to TWUA's 12th biennial convention here. A resolution specifically instructing the union's executive council to pursue a merger program, and meanwhile to establish a cooperative working relationship with other textile unions, was cleared by the resolutions committee.

In a generally optimistic vein, Pollock asserted that "the climate is changing" with respect to organizing, thanks in part to the Kennedy Administration. He said the TWUA had organized nearly 9,000 workers in 145 plants during the last two years, including units in the South "where so much of our destiny lies."

He praised the AFL-CIO and its Industrial Union Dept. for their heightened interest on organizing, which he said makes "our prospects brighter than they have been in many years."

Upturn Seen

"There has been a decided upturn in union sentiment among unorganized workers, especially in the South," Pollock said.

"The brainwashing still goes on and the fear which employers have implanted over the years is still there, but more and more workers are beginning to throw it off."

The TWUA president made these other major points:

- Government's role in bargaining: If, as in the steel negotiations, the government "is going to curb the strong, it should help the weak" in their efforts to organize and bargain collectively.
- Foreign trade: International trade is "vital to our survival and growth," but there should be "adequate safeguards" to prevent the liquidation of the textile industry and a more vigorous effort to implement international fair labor standards, first proposed by TWUA in 1945.
- Technological changes: Thanks to automation and other scientific changes, the textile worker is no longer a "lint-head" but the peer of other industrial workers. "So we say to the managers of the textile industry . . . stop doling out 'lint-head' wages and substandard fringes. . . . Start observing the rules of decency in industrial relations."

Many of Pollock's points were supplemented by Lewis Wright, general secretary of the Amalgamated Weavers Association, Manchester, England. Wright drew an analogy between the shrinkage of the U.S. and British textile industries, stressing that for displaced workers "compensation is not enough . . . After the compensation is finished, there must be new jobs."

He predicted that the U.S. would find "exhortation alone will not induce employers to take industry into areas where it is needed . . . Some form of government pressure will be necessary." This has been the British plan, he said, with the result that in Lancastershire, textile employment was cut in half but unemployment is only 2 percent less.

"It is far better to direct industry to the people rather than dragging people out by the roots in search of industry," he said.

But Wright won the standing cheers of the convention with a stirring defense of Britain's National Health Service, which he said had been maligned by stories in the American press, "most of them warped, most of them misleading, some of them downright lies."

Doctors' Flight a 'Lie'

"It would not be my place to comment upon a matter affecting your country were it not for the attacks made upon our own program," he said. "You are being told that our National Health Service is driving doctors out of my country and lowering our standards of medical care. I say to you that this is a lie.

"We have had free medicine for 15 years. Is this not long enough to judge whether a program is a success? We have had free hospitalization for 12 years. Is this not long enough to be past the experimental stage?"

A resolution backing health care for the aged under the social security system was brought to the floor immediately after Wright's talk and was supported as a "bare minimum" by numerous delegates. It was passed unanimously.

The convention also called for unified administration of the surplus foods program for the unemployed, urging that clothing be included among benefits. Other resolutions backed the youth opportunities program and the Supreme Court position on legislative reapportionment. The convention also unanimously urged a cutoff of appropriations to the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Union Issues Warning Against Site Strikes

Members of the Plumbers & Pipefitters have been told by their president that they are expected to live up to the union's no-strike pledge at missile and space sites "come hell or high water."

The "vast majority" of locals and members have done so, Pres. Peter T. Schoemann declared in the union's publication, the United Association Journal.

Those "few" who haven't, he said, "have violated their solemn obligation as trade unionists" and have placed the entire labor movement in danger of "punitive legislation."

In an article titled "Last Warning," Schoemann said the international union is prepared to take "stringent action," if necessary, against those who walk off the job instead of using procedures set up to settle disputes.

Schoemann emphasized that the union's no-strike pledge was given voluntarily and supported "100 percent" by delegates to the union's last convention.

It was a "sacrifice . . . of a cherished trade union right in the national interest," he said, made in response to Pres. Kennedy's inaugural plea:

"Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country."

Schoemann added:

'Sacrifice' of 'Right'

"We expect our members employed at missile and space sites to stay on their jobs, whatever the cost and however meritorious their cause may be in terms of traditional union objectives.

"We call upon all members of local unions performing work at the sites to make it their responsibility, individually and collectively, to see to it that the work goes on without interruption.

"We call especially upon the business managers and business agents of these local unions to provide the leadership necessary to keep our people on the job."

When locals use dispute settlement machinery, Schoemann said, they can count on "all the support at our command" from the international, "provided you stay on the job. But if there is a work stoppage, you had better not look to us for support, and you had better not come running to us with excuses either."

Despite the union's "proud tradition of local autonomy," Schoemann said, the international union "cannot stand idly by and see our entire membership, or the entire labor movement, unjustly accused because of the actions of a handful of members or a few local unions."

Schoemann cited the bill introduced by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) to outlaw any strike at "a strategic defense facility." The bill, he said, would also open the door to placing the labor movement under the anti-trust laws.

Lesson of History

"Will we never learn the lesson of legislative history?" Schoemann asked. If work stoppages continue at missile sites, "we are apt to find ourselves in a last ditch struggle to protect the better part of our trade union lives."

Earlier Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. also had called on workers and unions involved in missile base construction "to do all in their power to see that this vital missile work proceeds uninterrupted."

Labor Hails Douglas On His 70th Birthday

The "affectionate thanks and good wishes" of labor were extended to Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) on the recent observance of his 70th birthday.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, chairman of the federation's Civil Rights Committee, wrote Douglas that "we honor you as a true friend of labor and a staunch fighter for civil rights."

"We salute you as a statesman who has given us leadership, vision and wisdom in our drive to give practical realization to the promise of full freedom and equal justice under the American law," Schnitzler said, and "we look to you for continuous vigorous leadership in the years ahead."

PUERTO RICO'S Gov. Luis Munoz Marin receives the AFL-CIO Murray-Green Award at a dinner in his honor at Chicago from Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, left, chairman of the federation's Community Services Committee. At right is Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities. Munoz was cited for his "contributions to the health and welfare of the Puerto Rican people."

Gov. Munoz Presented Murray-Green Award

Chicago—Gov. Luis Munoz Marin received the AFL-CIO Murray-Green Award at the federation's seventh National Conference on Community Services here for his "contributions to the health and welfare of the Puerto Rican people."

In presenting the award, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the federation's Community Services Committee, said Munoz had created "a new definition of progress" which stresses "the growth and development of people," as well as economic resources.

Beirne also read a message from federation Pres. George Meany, who said Munoz "personifies the very principles of the award" since "for 25 years he has led the struggle of the Puerto Rican people to cast off the ancient burdens of poverty, illiteracy and disease."

The award commemorates William Green, late president of the former AFL, and Philip Murray, late president of the former CIO.

Beirne said the four-day meetings on public welfare had shown that "this great and prosperous nation continues to permit one-fifth of its people to go ill-fed, ill-housed, ill-clothed, and with little hope."

Greetings were extended to the 600 dinner guests by Gov. Otto Kerner of Illinois and Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley. Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, presided. Kerner expressed the hope that the award to Munoz might help to "strengthen the bridge between Latin America and North America." Daley, referring to public indifference to social problems, said it is "to the great credit of labor that it recognizes there can be no general prosperity so long as others suffer."

In his acceptance address, Munoz said there is "only one group in Latin America" that can make Pres. Kennedy's "Alliance for Progress" work: "That group is what I call the democratic left."

'Democratic Left' Cited

He said it is "of the greatest importance" that this element receive "the maximum of encouragement from the U.S. government, from labor and other non-governmental bodies and public opinion generally."

Munoz described the democratic left as "all those people who seek and approve social and economic change and progress." He scored those who equate the left with communism, saying: "In Latin America, left usually means left of reaction, left of feudalism, left of exploitation."

He cited "the key role" free labor unions are playing in Latin America as "one of the most dynamic elements of democratic revolutions in many countries."

In other conference developments:

- Norman Zukowsky, president of the Leather Goods, Plastics and Novelty Workers, said the federal government should take "an active role" in giving financial aid and in evaluating "the whole program of public assistance."
- Mayor William D. Ryan of Newburgh, N. Y., said "the most pressing problem of Newburgh is to provide jobs by attracting industry, eliminating slums and proper city planning." He said some city officials are trying to use "medieval solutions to present-day problems."
- Dan MacDonald, executive director of United Community Services, Omaha, said "the day is past" when any community can "label a specific problem, or family with problems," as "the sole jurisdiction of public welfare." He said "any family requiring assistance outside of itself is a community problem and a community responsibility."

Massachusetts Strikebreaker Curbs Added

Boston—A bill to strengthen the Massachusetts anti - strikebreaker law has been sent to Gov. John A. Volpe (R) after winning unanimous approval in the Senate and 217 to 3 support in the House.

The measure prohibits employers from using third parties to a labor dispute to recruit strikebreakers—a blow at the professional agencies which have supplied newspaper publishers with "replacements" for striking printers, pressmen and other craftsmen.

Previously the use of strikebreaking agencies had not been banned, although both employers and the agencies were required under a registration and disclosure law to furnish information about the use of strikebreakers, including wages and expenses.

The new bill subjects both employers and agencies to a fine of from $100 to $500 for a first offense, and from $1,000 to $5,000 for subsequent convictions.

Cloture Move Fails:

Filibuster Stalls Voting Rights Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

cloture petition. It was expected to be brought to a vote on May 14.

Before the vote, the AFL-CIO had urged support for the cloture move, declaring it was "of the utmost importance" that the Senate have an opportunity to vote on the literacy test bill. Senate supporters of the bill had likewise argued that a vote against cloture was in effect a vote against the bill since a limit on debate would be the only practical means of bringing final action.

Appealing for defeat of cloture, Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), called on the Senate to vote against what he called the "gag petition" and preserve the Senate as a citadel against the "unthinking passions of a great mob."

Voting for a limit on debate were 30 Democrats and 13 Republicans. Opposed to cloture were 30 Democrats and 23 Republicans.

Voting against killing the bill by tabling it were 39 Democrats and 25 Republicans. For the tabling motion were 23 Democrats and 10 Republicans.

Meanwhile, in other legislative developments:

- Pres. Kennedy formally sent to Congress a request for stand-by presidential authority to cut individual income taxes temporarily as an anti-recession measure—subject to a congressional veto within 30 days. Although the President included the proposal in his State of the Union message last January, observers considered it unlikely that Congress would act on it this year.

In his letter of transmittal, Kennedy said the legislation is needed to carry out the government's responsibility under the Employment Act of 1946 to promote "maximum employment, production and purchasing power."

- The House Education & Labor Committee approved a labor-backed bill requiring firms in interstate commerce to pay equal wages to women who do the same work as men. Companies with 25 or fewer employes were exempted.
- The House voted to appoint conferees to work out with a Senate group a compromise version of a bill for federal aid to colleges. The House Rules Committee had blocked appointment of conferees for three months until it had obtained a pledge that they would not agree to a Senate-passed college scholarship provision without coming back to the House for instructions.
- A renewed effort to bring out the labor-backed "truth-in-lending bill" sponsored by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) was made as a Senate Banking subcommittee opened a new series of hearings. A 5-5 vote has deadlocked the subcommittee on the measure. Administration witnesses were first to testify and the Commerce Dept., which last year expressed "reservations" about the bill, gave the measure complete support following minor revisions.

The House Ways & Means Committee continued its closed-door, section-by-section consideration of Kennedy's trade expansion bill and reached a momentary stumbling block over efforts by some farm groups to bar the President from lowering tariffs on goods produced by the European Common Market if the Common Market places high tariffs on American farm products. Efforts were being made to work out a compromise acceptable to the Administration.

AFL-CIO SUPPORT of pay raise drive by government employe unions was pledged by federation Pres. George Meany at joint legislative conference of four affiliated unions in Washington, D. C. Unions are asking a 14 percent "catch up" pay raise.

Meany Urges Prompt Hike In U.S. Pay

(Continued from Page 1)

force and Pres. Kennedy last month urged Congress to enact it "promptly" as "a progressive step in the federal government's relations with employe organizations."

The dues checkoff proposal and the Administration's union recognition policy provide "another good opportunity for our AFL-CIO federal employe unions to move ahead," Meany told the delegates.

Civil service workers, he said, have the same problems as workers in private industry, including "shoes for your kids, a decent education and rent."

The non-union worker, he said, "pays more dues than the union member, but he pays it to the employer through low wages."

Delegates also heard top Administration leaders including Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day and Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr.

From Capitol Hill, support for their pay raise drive was pledged by the Senate's Democratic and Republican assistant leaders—Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.)—and by House Post Office & Civil Service Committee members, including Rep. James H. Morrison (D-La.) and Rep. Glenn Cunningham (R-Neb.).

More than half the time during the three-day conference was set aside for visits by delegates to congressmen and senators from their home areas.

Most Incumbents Win In Primary Contests

Incumbent officeholders won renomination without a break in primary elections May 8 in the states of Florida, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana and New Mexico. In the Texas Democratic primary May 5, the official tabulation was awaited to indicate the winner between Rep. John Dowdy and a liberal challenger, Benton Musslewhite.

Two widely known political names came back in the news as former Sen. Claude Pepper won Democratic nomination for the House in a new Florida congressional district and Robert A. Taft, Jr., son of the late Republican senator, won GOP nomination for congressman-at-large from Ohio. Taft will be opposed in November by Democrat Robert Kennedy of Cleveland.

Di Salle Renominated

Gov. Michael V. Di Salle (D) won renomination in a tight race with State Atty. Gen. Mark McElroy and will be opposed by Republican State Auditor James A. Rhodes. Sen. Frank Lausche (D), who often votes with southern conservatives, won renomination easily.

In the Texas primary, former Navy Sec. John B. Connally led six candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor, with liberal Don Yarborough taking second and facing Connally in a runoff June 2. The three-term incumbent Gov. Price Daniel was knocked out, and resigned. Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, central figure in the so-called "muzzling" controversy, ran dead last.

Liberal Speaker James Turman led in a multi-candidate race for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor and will face second-place State Sen. Preston Smith in the runoff. A conservative Democrat was named to oppose conservative Republican Rep. Bruce Alger and a conservative Republican to oppose conservative Democratic Rep. Bob Casey.

Two West Virginia Democratic Kennedy supporters, Representatives Ken Hechler and Elizabeth Kee, were the only incumbents challenged in the primaries, and both beat conservative opponents.

In Florida a heavily-financed statewide rightwing drive for power failed to halt Pepper's bid for a political comeback and lost also in efforts against Democratic middle-roader Sen. George Smathers and liberal Rep. Dante B. Fascell. Runoff primaries were scheduled, however, between rightist-backed candidates and Kennedy-supporting Democrats in two of the state's new districts. The state gained four seats in the House as a result of population growth disclosed in the 1960 census.

5-12-62

U.S. Mass Transit Aid Called Help to Growth

An Administration bill to provide federal funds to help communities and metropolitan areas finance improvements in mass transportation facilities has been strongly supported by labor at House hearings.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a Banking & Currency subcommittee that lack of adequate public transportation "chokes off city and suburban growth" and "jeopardizes" the ability of many working people to earn a living."

He urged approval of a bill introduced by Sen. Harrison J. Williams (D-N. J.) and Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D-N. Y.), chairman of the House subcommittee, which would authorize $500 million over a three-year period to help development and expansion of transit facilities.

Biemiller pointed out that public transportation costs have risen four times as much as the average of all consumer purchases in recent years.

For many workers, he said, "higher transit fares and longer commuting trips between their homes and their places of work neutralize or dissipate gains of higher wages and shorter working hours."

Also testifying on behalf of the bill was Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks, who appeared for the Railway Labor Executives' Association.

Harrison noted the sharp decline in rail passenger transportation and warned that "almost every city in the country is threatened today with the loss of all commuter railroad facilities."

Passage of the Administration bill, he said, would encourage other metropolitan areas to follow the example of Philadelphia, which successfully contracted with existing railroads for minimum standards of railroad commuter service.

Biemiller said the AFL-CIO strongly supports a provision of the bill providing federal relocation assistance to families displaced by mass transit projects. He also urged the committee to add to the bill a guarantee of the right of workers in transit systems supported by federal funds to bargain collectively with management, whether public or private.

Good of Majority Seen as U.S. Need

St. Paul—Development of an economy that will provide for the welfare of the greatest number of people is the major challenge facing the United States, Rev. Charles C. Webber, AFL-CIO representative for religious relations, told a meeting of the St. Paul Religion & Labor Forum.

He cited statements of the National Council of Churches, World Council of Churches, Synagogue Council of America and Pope John XXIII supporting labor's right to organize and opposing so-called "right-to-work" laws.

UFWA Strikers Ask Rockefeller for Action

Jamestown, N. Y.—About 80 Jamestown Sterling Corp. strikers and their sympathizers took advantage of a visit here by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) to stage a demonstration urging him to take steps to end the seven-month-old walkout at the furniture plant.

The demonstrators marched for 90 minutes outside both entrances of the Hotel Jamestown, where Rockefeller was conferring with area labor leaders. The conference was part of the governor's schedule on a swing through southwestern New York State.

The marchers wore bands across their shoulders which read, "Rockefeller, Settle Sterling Strike."

UFWA Intl. Rep. Sol Silverman said he asked the governor at the conference why he has not used all his powers to effect an end to the strike. The governor said later that Silverman was talking about his "powers of persuasion." Rockefeller did say, however, that he had asked State Industrial Commissioner Martin P. Catherwood to look into "this unfortunate situation."

No state action has been taken in the bitter strike since Feb. 16, when a special panel of members of the State Board of Mediation recommended a settlement including wage increases and a union shop with dues checkoff.

The panel met in nearby Buffalo with representatives of UFWA Local 45. Management boycotted the meeting.

About 160 members of the local went on strike last Oct. 4 to back up demands for an initial contract. About 60 workers went back to work in November, and picket line incidents followed.

U.S. Lifts Sanctions Against Comet Rice

The Comet Rice Mills has filed a compliance report with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity and again is eligible to receive government contracts, according to an announcement by Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry Holleman, executive vice chairman of the committee.

Federal agencies were instructed by the committee on Mar. 27 not to award contracts to Comet, which has plants in Houston and Beaumont, Tex.; Stuttgart, Ark., and New Orleans, until it had undergone non-discrimination compliance reviews.

Restoration of Comet's contract eligibility followed filing by the company of what Holleman described as "full and complete information" on personnel policy.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 19, 1962 | No. 20

Kennedy Carries Campaign For Health Care to Nation

RICKI GRAEF of Lawton, Okla., receives a volume of great American documents from AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler. She is one of five national winners in a high school essay contest on the role of the community in employment of the handicapped. 44 state winners received copies of the book from the AFL-CIO. (See Story Page 5.)

Clothing Workers Act:

35-Hour Week Set As Bargaining Goal

By Gervase N. Love

Atlantic City—Some 1,500 cheering and shouting delegates, many of them veterans of five decades of fighting for shorter hours, demanded a 35-hour week in the men's apparel industries with no cut in earnings in a resolution passed at the 23rd biennial convention of the Clothing Workers.

Accompanied by a demonstration that left Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky in no doubt about support for the proposal he had advanced in his opening address, the resolution was one of two in which the shorter workweek was a factor. In the second, the delegates urged the 35-hour week nationally in their program for wage-hour legislation.

Potofsky said the officers and executive board would regard the resolution as a mandate for coming bargaining sessions. The men's clothing industry has been operating generally at a rate of 35 to 37 hours a week. If the 35-hour week is negotiated, it would lower the level at which overtime pay would become effective. The present contract with the coat and suit industry expires June 1, 1963.

Passage of the resolutions provided a climax to differences between the union and the Kennedy Administration which never reached the intensity of a disagreement.

In calling for the 35-hour week in his keynote speech, Potofsky said the Administration was "genuinely concerned" with unemployment but that because it "has moved too slowly," the results of its programs have been "disappointing."

"The Administration has argued against the shorter workweek on the ground that our commitments abroad require a full 40 hours of production by our work force," he said. "We are for it if it can be done."

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, who received a warm welcome and was introduced as "a member of the Amalgamated family," took friendly issue, saying:

"Let me say categorically for the national Administration that the President and the Administration do not feel that reduction of hours will be a cure for our economic problems or for unemployment. It will not be the cure, and we need some cures."

He conceded that despite the improvements in unemployment, the number of idle is still too high. The government programs have to be applied to do

(Continued on Page 10)

Collective Bargaining 'Frustrated':

NLRB Examiner Blasts Sears' Policy

Seattle—Sears, Roebuck & Co. as a matter of national policy has deliberately "obfuscated" and "frustrated" the collective bargaining process, a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has found in a case brought by Retail Clerks Local 1207 here.

In his intermediate report, Trial Examiner Martin S. Bennett specifically named Eli Dorsey, the giant retail chain's Seattle counsel, as the instrument of Sears' policy.

"The record well warrants the conclusion," Bennett wrote, "that Dorsey, most probably because he (1) was hamstrung by Sears policy from Chicago and (2) was confronted with the problem of other Seattle department stores, obfuscated the issue and frustrated the collective bargaining process."

He did this by "insisting that even if agreement were reached on [these] two issues, viz., the 1 percent commission and the [union] membership problem, they could not be placed in a written collective bargaining contract," Bennett found.

In addition, Dorsey refused to participate in a bargaining session at which Sec.-Treas. Archie McLean of Local 1207 and Richard Donaldson, the local's attorney, were joined by Intl. Vice Pres. Murray Plopper, the report said.

Donaldson, the union counsel, testified Dorsey had told him he "had been instructed by Sears officials at Chicago headquarters, including one Tudor, not to participate 'in any meetings with any representative of the international,'" Bennett noted, and added:

"This policy allegedly stemmed from an attempt by general counsel of the international to contact Sears personnel in Chicago, an attempt which had been rebuffed."

"One Tudor" has been identified

(Continued on Page 4)

Free Labor Hits Franco On Strikes

Free world labor has united in expressing strong solidarity with some 70,000 striking Spanish workers and in sharply protesting the Francisco Franco regime's "repressive" actions.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany protested to Sec. of State Dean Rusk against the reported use of arbitrary arrest and armed forces "to intimidate the strikers." He asked that the U.S. ambassador be requested to inform the Spanish government of "the interest and concern of the American trade union movement."

The strikers, who are defying the ban on strikes imposed by Franco after he took power 25 years ago, have won the support of the Spanish Roman Catholic hierarchy. The church has publicly proclaimed the strike a "licit weapon" when negotiations fail.

The wave of strikes reportedly originated in early April when a group of miners in northern Spain halted work to protest unsafe conditions. Seven leaders were imprisoned, and the walkouts spread

(Continued on Page 5)

30 Rallies To Climax Big Drive

By John M. Barry

The battle over the Kennedy Administration's social security health insurance plan for the aged boiled toward a climax this week as the House Ways & Means Committee approached a showdown on the Anderson-King bill embodying the Administration's proposals.

Pres. Kennedy himself was to open the final stage of the campaign with a nationally televised address to a mass rally of Anderson-King supporters at New York's Madison Square Garden, May 20.

Some 30 other rallies were scheduled simultaneously in cities across the nation, all sponsored by the 700,000-member National Council of Senior Citizens.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff, and former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R. I.), founder and chairman of the NCSC, also were to speak at the New York rally. Administration officials from Vice Pres. Johnson down fanned out for appearances at the grass roots gatherings.

The President's speech was listed as a public service broadcast to be carried by ABC and CBS television at 4 p.m., by NBC television at 5:30 and by Mutual radio at 6:05, all Eastern Daylight Time.

The mass demonstrations were designed to rally and intensify public support for the Anderson-King bill and prod it out of the Ways & Means Committee where it has been hung up since public hearings last year.

Action on the measure is ex-

(Continued on Page 12)

Postal Workers Vote in June In Record U.S. Union Election

By David L. Perlman

Half a million postal workers will vote next month in the biggest union representation election ever held in the United States.

They will choose, in a secret mail ballot, which unions will bargain for them at the local, regional and national levels. Ballots will be mailed to the home of each eligible employe on June 16 and must be returned by July 1.

The trail-blazing election stems from Pres. Kennedy's executive order of six months ago directing government agencies to recognize unions of their employes. Under the order, a union representing a majority of workers in a unit is entitled to exclusive recognition and the right to negotiate a written contract.

Ten unions, including six affiliates of the AFL-CIO, are seeking to represent employes in one or more of the seven bargaining units which have been set up.

The units, and the approximate number of eligible employes in each, are as follows:

Postal clerks, 240,000; city letter carriers, 166,000; rural letter carriers, 42,000; mail handlers, 30,000; custodial and maintenance, 19,000; special delivery messengers, 5,000; motor vehicle employes, 4,000.

Separate elections will be held later for headquarters employes and workers in mail equipment shops.

Although each union on the ballot has specified the bargaining unit or units it seeks to represent, employes in any group may vote for any of the 10 unions listed, write in an organization not on the ballot, or vote against union representation.

AFL-CIO affiliates are the Letter Carriers and the Postal Clerks, the two biggest unions in the Post Office Dept., and the

(Continued on Page 4)

SOURCE: Council of Economic Advisers; U.S. Department of Commerce

LACK OF DIRECT relationship between changes in the wages of American workers and the nation's balance of payments deficit is evident in the above charts. Top chart shows that average wage increases of factory workers have generally slowed down in recent years, while the international payments picture over the same period, as shown in the lower chart, has varied from a U.S. surplus in 1957 to deficits of $3.9 billion in 1959 and 1960.

Goldberg Suggests Aids To Maritime Stability

Two steps have been offered as possible aids in stabilizing labor-management relations in the maritime industry by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg in testimony before the House Merchant Marine Committee.

The committee, spurred by expiration in July of an 80-day Taft-Hartley Act injunction against a West Coast maritime strike, is considering both policies and problems of the industry.

Goldberg proposed "some approach similar to the Human Relations Committee of the steel industry," which he said might be found "worthy of consideration for application to the shipping industry."

"Such devices, which are established to function between collective bargaining negotiations, which involve relationships which extend past terminations of agreements and which deal with problems and study issues away from the stresses and strains attendant to the collective bargaining process," he said, "offer fruitful avenues of exploration for industry and labor."

The Secretary in addition acknowledged that "the injunction will not settle the dispute" on the Pacific Coast and suggested that maritime unions seek to devise "some mechanism . . . which will enable them to work out peaceful solutions" to inter-union difficulties.

He agreed with Committee Chairman Herbert C. Bonner (D-N. C.) that the latter's bill to apply the Railway Labor Act to the maritime industry is not a "complete answer."

The Commerce Dept., which administers federal shipping subsidies, and the Labor Dept. are now studying problems of the industry and will make recommendations when the study is completed, Goldberg said.

Production Unit Strikes To Back Office Local

Buffalo—Approximately 330 production and maintenance employes of the American Machine and Foundry Co. have gone on strike here in support of the contract demands of a sister local representing 180 office workers.

The production workers are members of Local 1291 of the Machinists, the office workers belong to IAM Local 992.

The production workers had reached substantial agreement with AMF in their own contract talks, but members voted to begin picketing with the office workers after the white collar talks broke down. IAM policy calls for sister locals to reach simultaneous agreements.

The white collar workers and the management deadlocked primarily over a company proposal that supervisors be allowed to do work now done by members of the bargaining unit, including cost estimating for government contracts.

John C. Mullen, business representative of IAM District 76, said that permitting supervisors to take over functions now performed by unionized employes would "decimate our ranks."

Talks are continuing between AMF and the office workers in the presence of a federal mediator. Meanwhile, production workers have held off ratification of their new agreement, which calls for a 23-cents-an-hour wage-and-fringe benefit package spread over a three-year period.

AMF employment currently is reduced as the company wraps up work on Atlas and Titan missile subcontracts. Work on other government contracts, notably a $3-million Navy torpedo contract, has yet to reach the production stage.

AFL-CIO Research Dept. Analysis:

U. S. Payments Deficit Held No Cause for Retrenchment

Restrictive economic policies are not justified by the balance-of-payments deficit while millions of the nation's workers remain jobless, the AFL-CIO has declared.

"While America cannot afford a serious balance-of-payments problem, it can afford still less another 'balance-of-payments recession,'" the federation asserts in the current issue of its monthly magazine, the American Federationist.

The article states that the balance of payments involves "a highly complex, double-entry bookkeeping system" which tries to relate total American spending abroad to total foreign spending here.

This includes all kinds of financial transactions, and is not, the article emphasizes, the same thing as the balance of trade, the value of the U.S. exports measured against the value of goods imported from other countries.

Other Factors Cited

Titled "The Balance of Payments—A 'Crisis' in Perspective," the analysis was prepared by the AFL-CIO Research Dept. as an Economic Trends & Outlook feature of the Federationist.

The analysis finds that the great bulk of the U.S. balance-of-payments deficit over the past two years came from sources "far removed from collective bargaining or social welfare legislation."

In fact, much of the deficit, the magazine notes, is wrapped up in categories listed as "private short-term capital outflows"—the trading of securities that mature in less than a year; buying and selling of bills, notes and other forms of credit in the search for quick returns from high foreign interest rates; normal extensions of short-term credits to finance foreign trade.

These plus "unrecorded" items account for $1.9 billion of the $3.9 billion U.S. payments deficit in 1960 and for $1.8 billion of the $2.4 billion deficit in 1961, the Research Dept. points out.

Thus, the deficit in the "basic" or "hardcore" part of the payments ledger—merchandise trade, services, long-term investments and government accounts—fell from about $1.9 billion in 1960 to $600 million last year.

Exports Show Gain

A big reason for this, Economic Trends observes, was the jump in the surplus of U.S. exports over imports—from $4.6 billion in 1960 to $5.3 billion in 1961.

"America's competitive position, therefore, did not cause the deficit problem last year," the article comments. "It created, as it should, the major surplus item."

The Economic Trends analysis also calls attention to statistical confusion and discrepancies in the makeup of the balance-of-payments ledger, citing examples of transactions in which no money ever left the country but which nevertheless were listed on the minus side as capital outflows.

As a result of these discrepancies, the Research Dept. notes, all the free world countries at this time are recording overall payments deficits, instead of the even balance which should occur as a deficit in one country amounts to a surplus in another.

"These casual attitudes toward short-term statistical discrepancies would not bother anyone," the article continues, "if the statistical overall figure were not used to put what the London Economist calls 'an artificial damper' on the 'pace of economic expansion in the non-communist world.'"

The analysis takes issue with the recent statement of Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon that "the stability of the dollar is a key to economic progress at home and abroad" and argues that just the reverse is true:

"Economic progress is the key to monetary stability. And no amount of artificial juggling of highly theoretical figures will make the free world bankers solve the problem of their own economic bias—a double standard of license for investors and 'restraint' for all other people. The time has come when a single standard of responsibility for those who invest and those who earn money seems more appropriate in a democracy."

The article finds that the Kennedy Administration "has taken many wise steps" to reduce payments pressures through cooperation with foreign governments and has "correctly" called for responsibility and greater export effort by most Americans.

This appeal should be extended to all Americans, Economic Trends asserts, concluding, however, that:

"Too much attention on statistical balances . . . should not frighten the nation into curbing the most important source of free world economic strength—rapid economic growth in the United States."

CORRECTION

An article in the May 5 issue of the AFL-CIO News describing the community program set up in Battle Creek, Mich., to help workers improve their job skills erroneously identified the chairman of the program, W. Scott Ensign, as president of the AFL-CIO central labor body. The central body president is Max Raymond. Ensign is vice president. He was president of the former Battle Creek Federation of Labor at the time the training program was set up. The AFL-CIO News regrets the error.

Lag in Social Reforms Seen Hurting Alliance

Latin American governments have been "sluggish" in carrying out their pledges under the Alliance for Progress charter to apply needed social reforms and help strengthen the trade union movement, an AFL-CIO economist told a subcommittee of the Joint House-Senate Economic Committee.

Testifying at a round-table discussion of economic developments in South America, Seymour Brandwein of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research recalled a statement by the federation's executive council in February stressing the importance of "early and visible material benefits" under the Alliance program for Latin American economic development. The benefits should be distributed "to the needier parts of the population and not to those already in the upper-income levels," the statement said.

Need for Reform Cited

The Alliance charter drawn up at the Punta del Este conference last year spells out "forthrightly" the need for land, tax and other social reforms essential to widespread economic advances, Brandwein added.

"The Latin American countries pledged action on these needs," the economist noted. "Unfortunately, identification and increased awareness of the problems do not suffice. I have the strong impression that there has been excessive sluggishness by most South American countries in applying the principles of social reform they have promised."

He cited specifically the need for active participation in Alliance programs by strong free trade unions "to provide a broad-based democratic force for assuring that development proceeds equitably."

Labor's Role Emphasized

The Alliance charter, he noted, calls for "consultation and cooperation" with trade unions and expressly recognizes the need to strengthen labor organizations.

But while existing Latin American unions have been eager to take part in Alliance activities, not a single government has enlisted their aid in development planning, Brandwein reported. And although a number of unions have sought financial assistance for specific social development projects, no funds have yet been made available to any union under the Alliance program, he pointed out.

Impractical conditions imposed by banks, delay in governmental approval of authorized loans, and complex procedures in applying for loans have in several cases doused "expectations and hopes kindled by publicity," the AFL-CIO economist observed.

One hopeful development, he said, has been the establishment —with AFL-CIO sponsorship— of a new private organization, the American Institute for Free Labor Development "to supplement government activities and to overcome some of the obstacles in formal government procedures."

Guided by a policy board made up of Latin American business, intellectual and union leaders as well as U.S. labor representatives, the institute has two broad objectives, Brandwein said:

- To train democratic labor leaders and set up area labor centers in Latin America, with the financial support of private foundations.
- To assist Latin American unions in setting up low-cost housing, credit unions, cooperatives, worker clinics and other social projects, relying on the U.S. Agency for Intl. Development for the major part of needed funds.

Munoz Marin Donates His $5,000 Prize Money

New York—Gov. Luis Munoz Marin of Puerto Rico has presented the $5,000 he received as winner of the Murray-Green Award for 1962 from the AFL-CIO to Rev. Benjamin Nunez, director of the Inter-American Institute for Political Education.

Munoz Marin received the award for his contribution to the health and welfare of the Puerto Rican people. He said he wanted the money to be used "to further the development of liberty and democracy" in Latin America. The institute was established in 1959 near San Jose, Costa Rica.

High Unemployment Persists:

Factory Jobs Rise But Impact Is Small

By Robert B. Cooney

Factory jobs and hours of work continued to rise in April but there was no corresponding dent in the basic unemployment picture, the Labor Dept. said in releasing detailed figures on the job situation.

The report showed a gain of 80,000 in the manufacturing sector of the economy instead of the usual small decline for this season and revealed a six-minute improvement in the workweek to an average of 40.4 hours. The workweek included 2.7 hours of overtime.

"We are now four-fifths of the way back to pre-recession levels" in factory employment, manpower expert Seymour L. Wolfbein told a press conference.

The report said the gains of the past few months returned factory employment to 16.6 million—within 200,000 of the level in May 1960, the pre-recession peak of business activity—while employment in trade is now significantly above that level.

The test of real recovery will come with the May job figures—due early in June—because employers traditionally put their workers on overtime before recalling laid-off employes or expanding their work force, Wolfbein said.

The summary job report for April, released a week earlier, showed the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment at 5.5 percent, virtually unchanged since February's 5.6 percent. This means 55 of every 1,000 workers in the labor force were actively looking for work and could not find it.

Of the 3.9 million jobless in April, a total of 1.5 million were unemployed 15 weeks or longer—the "longterm" unemployed.

If the April figures showing the counter-seasonal job gain and continued overtime hours are sound clues, Wolfbein added, then the May report promises "a real dent" in the long-term jobless total.

'Sustained Advance' Seen

The Administration's top economist, meanwhile, predicted "a sustained advance in the months ahead" in the nation's economic output.

Dr. Walter W. Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, nevertheless said in a New York speech that unemployment "remains higher than at corresponding points of previous postwar expansions and even on the brightest expectations will remain too high throughout 1962."

The Labor Dept. report showed non-farm payroll employment at 54.7 million, up by 675,000 from March to April or some 250,000 more than seasonally.

Construction Up

Construction jobs rose by 240,000 to a total of 2.6 million, still 56,000 below a year ago. The report said the sharp rise represented a normal spring pick-up that had been delayed by bad weather in March.

Trade employment showed a better-than-seasonal gain for the fourth straight month, this time with retail trade up by 187,000 to a total of 8.4 million. This is 173,000 above a year ago.

Agricultural employment rose by 250,000 between March and April, reaching the year-earlier total of 5 million.

Tide of Joblessness Hits Teenagers

Young inexperienced workers—especially school dropouts and teenagers—are becoming more prominent in the unemployment picture.

The Labor Dept. job report for April disclosed those with "no prior work experience" accounted for 12 percent of total unemployment compared to 7 percent at the depth of the 1958 recession. Of the 3.9 million jobless in April, some 450,000 were seeking their first jobs—80 percent of them teenagers.

Social Security Checks Now Go to 17 Million

Recipients of social security benefit checks passed the 17 million mark in April, Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff has announced.

"For the aged among these 17 million," he observed, "these benefit checks provide an assured income for the rest of their days. Together with whatever they have been able to save, most of them are able to keep themselves housed, clothed and fed unless—or until—serious illness overtakes them."

Nearly 12 million of the beneficiaries were 65 or older, he said. Of the others, 2.5 million are widowed mothers and children; 1 million are disabled workers, and the rest are pensioners between 62 and 65. Benefits this year are expected to total more than $14 billion, he noted, and are spent immediately at local stores so long as the recipients stay in good health.

"In all too many instances, however, social security checks are endorsed and handed over as payment of past due hospital and medical bills," Ribicoff added. "What is even worse, many older people do without the medical care they need because they refuse to run up bills they cannot pay."

He cited the case of Anthony A. Oeding, Florissant, Mo., who was honored last year by Pres. Kennedy as the 15th million person to go on the social security benefit rolls. His group health insurance lapsed on retirement and he could not obtain individual medical insurance because of a heart condition which in the past three months has cost him $1,800 for treatment.

"Case after case like this," Ribicoff said, "shows that action is needed immediately on the President's proposal for financing health insurance for the aged through the social security program."

A VETERAN UNION MAN, Prime Minister Einar Gerhardsen of Norway, visited AFL-CIO headquarters while in Washington and was warmly welcomed by Pres. George Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and several members of the Executive Council. Shown above with Meany (left) are Norway's under-secretary for foreign affairs, Hans Engen, who acted as interpreter, and the Prime Minister.

Union's Stand On Walkouts Wins Praise

An editorial by Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters in the April issue of the United Association Journal, urging members employed at missile bases "to stay on their jobs, whatever the cost and however meritorious their cause may be in terms of traditional union objectives," has brought a letter of commendation from Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg.

"I commend you for the effective leadership and forthright position reflected in this article which places the national interest in the vital missile programs above all other considerations," Goldberg wrote Schoemann.

Action 'Timely'

"In view of the critical importance of the missile programs in the months ahead, your action is particularly timely and appropriate. I wish to assure you that your effort to insure compliance with the no-strike pledge has the full support of the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission and the Dept. of Labor. I am confident that the members of your union will respond to your leadership and cooperate fully to insure that the work at the vital missile installations goes forward with all possible speed and without interruption."

Fred Hewitt Dies; Edited IAM Journal

Northampton, Mass.—Fred Hewitt, a pioneer airplane mechanic who for 30 years edited the Machinists' Journal and was in the U.S. worker delegation at the founding convention of the Intl. Labor Organization, died in a hospital here. He was 87.

He aided in developing the 1907 flying machine built under the direction of Samuel P. Langley, director of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, which has been described as "the first heavier-than-air craft capable of sustained free flight under its own power, carrying a man."

Soon after he became bookkeeper for the IAM. In 1909 he was named assistant general secretary-treasurer of the union and six years later became editor of the Journal. He served on the National War Labor Boards during both World Wars and accompanied Pres. Woodrow Wilson to the Versailles conference. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. William Berry, with whom he lived here.

Norway Prime Minister Pays Visit to AFL-CIO

Prime Minister Einer Gerhardsen of Norway, leader of his country's Labor Party and a union member from his youth, received a warm welcome when he visited AFL-CIO headquarters recently.

He was greeted by Pres. George Meany, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and a delegation from the Executive Council.

Meany hailed the visitor as a veteran union leader and statesman who had timed his call to coincide with what the AFL-CIO president described as "his social security birthday—his 65th." Gerhardsen was born in Oslo in 1897.

The prime minister expressed his happiness at the opportunity to visit AFL-CIO headquarters, recalling that he had spent "my whole life" as a member of organized labor and voicing his pleasure at the opportunity for meeting the leaders of the American trade union movement.

Meany said Gerhardsen had extended an invitation to the Executive Council to visit Oslo this summer and predicted several would accept the bid before or after the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' congress in Berlin in July. The prime minister said he would be "most pleased," both as prime minister and on behalf of the labor movement, to welcome the council members.

Gerhardsen was taken on a tour of the building and was particularly interested in the Samuel Gompers section of the library, with its books which had belonged to the founding president of the former AFL.

Meany explained the "tremendous interest" of U.S. unions in international affairs and recalled that 45 days after Hitler came to power in Germany, he and other labor leaders formed the first anti-Nazi committee in the U.S.

A member of the National Union of Municipal Workers in Norway, Gerhardsen was elected its secretary when only 25 years old. He was mayor of Oslo when the Germans invaded in 1940 and fled with the government when Nazi forces approached the city. He returned to lead his people, however, and the following year was sent to a concentration camp as a "very dangerous person." He became prime minister following the first post-war election, resigned in 1951 for personal reasons, and has served since resuming the top post in 1955.

Accompanying him on his visit to the AFL-CIO were Under Sec. for Foreign Affairs Hans Engen, who acted as interpreter; Paul Koht, Norway's ambassador to the U.S.; Andreas Anderson, special assistant to the prime minister, and Clifton R. Norton, U.S. ambassador to Norway.

Million Leaflets Spur Judy Bond Boycott

More than a million leaflets have been distributed by the Ladies' Garment Workers in cities throughout the nation urging shoppers not to buy Judy Bond brand blouses.

The leaflets, a major tool in a consumer boycott campaign, are aimed at a company which locked out its long-service workers in New York City, quit the employers' trade association in the midst of contract negotiations—and moved its operations to Alabama.

Warned the ILGWU in its leaflets:

- "Judy Bond is a runaway from a union with whom it has had a contract for more than a generation.
- "Judy Bond has left many skilled workers, who faithfully produced it garments for many years, jobless.
- "Judy Bond has reversed a pattern of harmony resting on an American standard of living in the garment industry.
- "The bad example set by Judy Bond threatens the jobs and earnings of thousands of working people in this industry and their communities across the country."

The ILGWU struck the runaway firm on Jan. 9 after it had served notice on the union that it would no longer be bound by the industry association's contract with the union.

In addition to the leaflet campaign, the ILGWU is picketing the struck firm's showrooms and offices in Los Angeles, Atlanta and New York City.

PUBLIC INTEREST AWARDS of the National Safety Council for 1961 were presented by Rodger Coyne (right), chairman of the council's Labor Conference, at a recent meeting in Little Rock, Ark. Recipients, left to right, are Paul Connelly of the Carpenters for the Carpenter; Gordon H. Cole, editor of the Machinist; Sec.-Treas. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers, editor of the Operating Engineer, and Sec.-Treas. Arthur P. Gildea of the Brewery Workers for the Brewery Worker.

NLRB Report Blasts Sears' Labor Policies

(Continued from Page 1)

by the Retail Clerks as Wallace Tudor, Sears' vice president in charge of personnel.

The same Wallace Tudor on Oct. 25, 1957, testified before the McClellan special Senate committee on the firm's relations with Nathan Shefferman, whose Labor Relations Associates the firm had used as labor-management relations "consultant."

'Never Happen Again'

Tudor's testimony, as reported at that time in the committee transcripts, included these statements:

"In our relations with the unions, we have made some errors. Certain actions were taken on our behalf which were mistakes, which never should have happened, and which will never be permitted to happen again. We will explain that which is explainable, defend that which is defensible, and freely admit that which is neither. . . ."

"I want to state, with the utmost candor and conviction, that many of the activities engaged in by Labor Relations Associates and certain company personnel acting with them were inexcusable, unnecessary and disgraceful. A repetition of these mistakes will not be tolerated by this company. . . ."

"Certainly he [Shefferman] was working on management's side, or at least I would hope to believe that he was. Then it was to prevent unionization, if that is the answer to the question. . . ."

"I will not attempt to defend, I cannot defend, the amount of money that has been paid Shefferman and Labor Relations Associates over a period of years. It sounds like substantial sums, and it is."

Tudor also testified that at the time, about 14,000 of the chain's 205,000 employes belonged to unions—about 8 percent, compared with what he said was a national average of 7.8 percent in retailing. In the four years from 1953 through 1956, the firm paid Shefferman a total of $239,651.42, according to testimony of Carl M. Schultz, an investigator loaned to the committee by the U.S. General Accounting Office.

Bennett recommended that Sears be ordered to cease and desist from refusal to bargain with the union "or any duly designated representative," and from interfering with its employes in the exercise of their legal rights.

In addition, he recommended that the company be directed upon request to "meet with any designated representative" of Local 1207 for bargaining and if an understanding is reached, to "embody such understanding in a signed agreement."

In commenting on Bennett's recommendations, the RCIA said:

"It was this anti-union national labor policy of Sears which resulted in the discharge of 262 members of the Retail Clerks in San Francisco two years ago. Sears' national anti-union policy has also resulted in the nationwide boycott against Sears by the Retail Clerks and the AFL-CIO."

High Court Affirms Hutcheson Conviction

The Supreme Court in a split decision has affirmed the contempt-of-Congress conviction of Pres. Maurice A. Hutcheson of the Carpenters in a case arising from McClellan committee hearings. The vote was 4-to-2.

Hutcheson had refused to answer certain questions asked by the committee on the ground that they might aid the State of Indiana in a case then pending involving an alleged highway scandal and thus deny him due process. He received a six-month sentence on the contempt charge.

Hutcheson, an AFL-CIO vice president and Executive Council member, has 25 days in which to seek a rehearing of his case by a full court. Three members did not participate in the decision.

H. P. Wharton Heads Labor Safety Group

Little Rock, Ark.—Hunter P. Wharton, secretary-treasurer of the Operating Engineers, has been elected chairman of the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council at the spring meeting of the conference here.

Victor Whitehouse of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers was elected vice chairman, and Rodger Coyne, director of occupational health and safety for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and Albert P. Malis of Steelworkers Local 1014, Gary, Ind., were selected to the NSC Board of directors for three-year terms.

Lloyd D. Utter, director of industrial health and safety for the Auto Workers, was named vice president for labor on the executive committee of the NSC board for the 1962-63 term. The names of Utter, Coyne and Malis will be submitted to the board's nominating committee.

The Labor Conference meeting discussed convention programs, labor union awards, publications and training. Fourteen labor newspapers won NSC public interest awards for their efforts in promoting safety in 1961.

Preceding the conference meeting was a session held in cooperation with the Arkansas State Building & Construction Trades Council on both job and off-the-job safety.

In AFL-CIO Testimony:

Free Vaccinations Asked for Children

Congress should eliminate "class differences in the protection of children against infectious diseases" by enacting Pres. Kennedy's vaccination program, the AFL-CIO has told the House.

Andrew J. Biemiller, AFL-CIO director of legislation, testified before the House Commerce Committee that the present reliance on "uncoordinated and loosely organized local campaigns, and on often chaotic distribution of vaccine supplies" left "vast numbers" of poor children unprotected.

The President's program would provide free vaccine against polio, diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus for all children under five, and would help meet the cost of vaccination drives. Sponsor of the specific House bill is Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), the committee chairman.

"The children who are adequately immunized today are the fortunate ones," Biemiller said. "A breakdown of vaccination statistics shows that the protected ones are fortunate not only in that respect, but that they tend to be the children blessed with other advantages as well.

"Take protection against polio, for example. Among children under five in Harrisburg, Pa., 65 percent of the upper socio-economic group had received three or more Salk shots, compared to 35 percent in the lower socio-economic group. In Atlanta, Ga., 78 percent of the children under five in the upper group were protected. For the lower group the figure was 30 percent.

"Maps that plot the geographic location of cases of paralytic polio in recent years graphically tell the story of our failures. Before the advent of vaccine, cases of polio were spread out quite evenly throughout a city. Today, cases of paralytic polio are concentrated . . . where the poor, the less privileged, the minority groups are to be found, and this is where the unvaccinated remain."

Biemiller described the Harris bill embodying the Administration's recommendations as "the first proposal of sufficient scope and vision" to meet the problem, and urged its prompt passage.

Postal Union Election Set Among 500,000

(Continued from Page 1)

Mail Handlers, Special Delivery Messengers, Motor Vehicle Employes and the Government Employes.

Also on the ballot are the unaffiliated Rural Letter Carriers, Maintenance Employes, National Postal Union and the National Alliance of Postal Employes.

60 Percent Must Vote

If at least 60 percent of the eligible employes vote in the representation election, any union winning a majority of votes cast in a bargaining unit will be accorded exclusive recognition. If no union wins a majority, unions with at least 10 percent representation will be accorded a lesser degree of recognition, which binds management to "consult" with them but not to negotiate.

Recognition will be accorded at three levels—the local post office, the department's 15 geographical regions, and national. It is possible, under the election procedure, for one union to be accorded recognition at a local level, another at the regional level and still a third at the national level.

If a union wins national recognition, any agreement it negotiates will be binding on all employes, regardless of their bargaining agent at the local level. Lower-level agreements may supplement, but may not contradict, national agreements.

A number of basic conditions of employment—including pay and retirement benefits—are set by Congress and not subject to collective bargaining, but unions will be able to negotiate working conditions and work rules on such matters as:

- Promotion policies.
- Job and shift assignments.
- Seniority rights.
- Grievance procedures.
- Production standards.
- Overtime work.
- Safety and health.
- Scheduling of vacations.

In addition, unions which win exclusive bargaining rights have the right to choose voluntary arbitration of grievances as a substitute for appeals to either the postmaster general or the Civil Service Commission.

First Government-Wide Policy

While collective bargaining is not unknown in the government service—it exists in the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Government Printing Office and several specialized establishments—it was not until Kennedy's executive order, based on the recommendations of a presidential task force, that it was established as a government-wide policy.

The postal service, traditionally a stronghold of union organization in the federal service, is the first department where unions have felt strong enough to seek exclusive bargaining rights on a national basis. Elsewhere in the government, the largest single group to obtain exclusive recognition under the executive order has been meat inspectors of the Dept. of Agriculture, who are members of the Government Employes.

AFL-CIO Urges Senate to Pass Improved Public Assistance Bill

A House-passed bill to improve child welfare service programs under the Social Security Act has been given AFL-CIO support, but spokesmen expressed "grave concern" over a provision giving local welfare departments wide latitude in deciding how to use allowances in the "best interest" of a child.

Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, and Leonard Lesser, director of social security activities of the Industrial Union Dept., gave labor's position in a joint statement to the Senate Finance Committee.

They supported most provisions of the House bill, particularly increased federal grants for preventive services for potential relief applicants. They also praised the bill's safeguards against the exploitation of relief workers and the use of relief work projects as substitutes for normal state or community activities.

They set forth three major objections to the House measure, declaring:

- Residence requirements for relief recipients should be eliminated, or cut to one year, inasmuch as federal funds pay most of the costs. Federal aid "should not be denied to a citizen in need because he has too recently become a resident of a particular state."
- The federal share of aid for dependent children should be increased because "the states are less and less able to carry the tax burden," and state taxes fall most heavily upon low-income groups.
- The bill's departure from "the long-established principle" that welfare funds be paid in cash directly to the beneficiaries is dangerously broad.

Labor accepts the idea of "protective payments," permitting expenditure of relief money for the benefit of children whose parents or guardians are demonstrably incompetent or irresponsible, Cruikshank and Lesser stated. But the House bill authorizes the states to take "any other action under state law deemed necessary to protect the best interest of the child."

This, they warned, is a "pretty far-reaching letting down of the bar.

"The problem would certainly arise as to who was to decide what was in the best interest of the child. What one person might consider to be in the best interest, another might consider wasteful or even immoral."

Moreover, the union statement went on, such a position by the federal government would encourage the "persistent and unrelenting" pressure in the states to substitute other forms of relief for money. Welfare departments might become "collection agencies for the landlords, the public utility or the grocer" and the "old humiliating 'voucher' system" would be revived.

To Challenge Petition:

'R-T-W' Foes Win Delay in Oklahoma

Oklahoma City—Opponents of a so-called "right-to-work" state constitutional amendment won additional time to challenge an initiative petition after reporting that a preliminary survey showed that nearly one out of four signatures were "obviously invalid."

Oklahoma Sec. of State William N. Christian granted opponents—including union, farm, business and professional leaders—a 90-day extension to complete their investigations at a hearing here on May 14. He said a progress report should be submitted after 45 days.

The extension was granted—over protest of "right-to-work" sponsors—after opponents said they found 3,895 "obvious discrepancies" in the first group of 15,992 signatures they examined.

They asked additional time to complete the examination of the 213,716 signatures filed by the "right-to-work" group, including checking names against voter registration lists. Opponents must successfully challenge more than 78,000 of the names to keep the issue off the ballot.

At the preliminary hearing, William C. Kessler and James Rinehart, attorneys for the citizens' group opposing "right-to-work," said the first examination showed "an amazingly high percentage of irregularities that are subject to challenge."

The "obvious discrepancies," Kessler said, include signatures which "were either not properly notarized, incomplete for a variety of reasons, or fraudulent because many signatures on the same petition were in identical handwriting."

In asking for the extension, the citizens' group expressed confidence that additional invalid signatures would be uncovered in a check against voting lists.

The "right-to-work" supporters were turned down on their request that any extension of time be limited to 30 days.

Rebuffed in Legislature

The initiative petition was circulated after right-wing groups were rebuffed last year when the Oklahoma legislature buried "right-to-work" proposals in committee and rejected repeated efforts by proponents to force them to the floor.

The petition drive was spurred by a new U.S. Chamber of Commerce Committee for Voluntary Unionism, which chose Oklahoma City for its first meeting and the state for its first major target.

Regardless of the final ruling on the petition by the secretary of state, the losing party may appeal to the state supreme court.

Union Victory Margin Down, Says NLRB

Workers voted for unions in 55 percent of the representation elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board in fiscal 1961—the lowest percentage in board history.

The board presented that statistic in its report for the year ended last June 30. For preceding years the figures were: 60 percent in 1958; 62 percent in 1959; 58 percent in 1960.

Since then, board records show, the percentage had moved to 57.9 between June 30, 1961 and the end of February 1962.

The 55 percent figure was based on 6,595 representation elections conducted by NLRB agents. In those elections, employes selected 3,643 bargaining agents. Of the 469,294 ballots cast, 59 percent were for a bargaining agent, the report said.

For AFL-CIO unions, the record showed 2,229 wins out of 4,449 elections for a percentage of 50, compared with 53 in 1960 and 57 in 1959. Unaffiliated unions won 51 percent of elections in which they particpated last year as against 52 percent in 1960, and 54 percent in 1959.

Other highlights of the report:

The year was outstanding for the largest number of new cases filed in NLRB history, 22,691; largest number of representation cases filed, 10,559; a record number of case situations in unfair labor practice charges filed, 12,132; decisions in 3,254 contested cases, a new record; 22,405 cases closed, largest number in board history.

ILPA Directory Lists 350 Papers

A new and revised directory of the member publications of the Intl. Labor Press Association listing over 350 labor papers and magazines with a circulation of nearly 20 million is available now from ILPA.

The third edition of the directory has a new format with each listing containing pertinent information on the publication, its location, editor, size, circulation and whether or not it carries advertising.

The "ILPA Directory of Member Publications" is available from the organization at 815 16th Street N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Copies are available to trade union editors and officials without cost; for non-trade union organizations the price is $2 a copy.

FIVE NATIONAL WINNERS in high school essay contest on the role of the community in employment of the handicapped are presented with their awards by Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges. The winners are left to right Ricki Graef, Lawton, Okla.; James Lewis Florey, Beloit, Wis.; Mary Margaret Sharp, Parkersburg, W. Va.; Charli Ann Harland, Ontario, Ore.; Lynne Elz, Tallahasee, Fla.

Essay Winners Told of Labor's Role on Jobs for Handicapped

The whole orientation of the labor movement is "toward the individual," high-school essay contest winners were told by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at a federation-sponsored luncheon.

The high school students—winners in their respective states of a national contest for the best essays on employment of handicapped workers—were brought to Washington for presentation of awards. Their trips and their expenses in the capital were paid by 44 state AFL-CIO central organizations.

Receiving their essay contest awards from Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges, the students were also presented by the AFL-CIO with leather-bound copies of a volume containing basic documents of American history.

They were given a tour of Washington by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, including trips to the White House, Mount Vernon, and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, who is also secretary of the IBEW, told the contest winners at the federation luncheon that labor's concern for employment of the handicapped goes back many years to the period of World War I.

Labor Helped

"As the injured soldiers began returning from the battlefields," he said, "they turned to us for help in developing a program that would fit them for worthwhile occupations."

Labor helped them, Keenan said, and "we will continue doing so to the utmost of our ability." He served as luncheon toastmaster.

Schnitzler told the students that labor acknowledges that they represented "thousands of new Americans coming on to take part in the continuing struggle to better the lot of mankind."

'Look at Capabilities'

"We must look at people's capabilities and make available opportunities for them to perform," he said, "rather than label the handicapped 'disabled' and close the door of employment to them."

Essays by the state contest winners were judged for national awards by a subcommittee of the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped. Stanton Smith, national coordinator of state and local bodies for the AFL-CIO, was a member of the judges group.

Free World Labor Voices Support For Spanish Strikers, Assails Franco

(Continued from Page 1)

as a protest to repressive measures. By month's end, some 70,000 miners and metal workers in the industrial north had struck and sympathy walkouts flashed through the country.

The strikes and demonstrations exposed what experts describe as wide and deep discontent. These were the worldwide repercussions:

- The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions jointly filed an official complaint with the Intl. Labor Organization, a United Nations' agency, asking that a factfinding mission be sent to Spain. The ICFTU protested to the Spanish ambassador in Brussels, where it is headquartered, against a "state of emergency" declared in three Spanish provinces by Franco's government.
- Irving Brown, ICFTU representative to the UN, urged all delegations to call on the Spanish government "to end these blatant violations of human and trade union rights." Brown said the actions of military authorities "have been constantly more brutal and oppressive."
- The General Workers Union of Spain in Exile, based in Toulouse, France, appealed to the AFL-CIO to attempt to persuade the U.S. government to alter its policy toward Franco and help the Spanish people.
- The West German trade union federation (DGB) protested to the Spanish ambassador in Bonn, urging trade union rights for Spanish workers; the Tunisian federation (UGTT) protested similarly to the Spanish ambassador in Tunis. Expressions of solidarity have flooded in from free labor groups to the Spanish exile labor headquarters in Toulouse.
- In Antwerp, Belgian dockworkers boycotted for 24 hours the handling of the Spanish ship Marichu.
- A group of Spanish intellectuals active in the shortlived republic overthrown by Franco issued an open letter calling for the legalization of strikes and publication of worker grievances. Among the signers were Ramon Menendez Pidal, president of the Spanish Academy, and Jose Maria Gil Robles, a conservative who once headed Spain's Catholic Action Party.

Wage increases have been demanded by the Spanish strikers before they will return to work. The Asturias miners now earn between $1.40 and $1.60 a day. They are seeking a minimum wage of $2.33. Workers throughout Spain are reported as feeling the pinch of increasing living costs.

So-called trade unions under Franco are "vertical" state-run syndicates. Twenty-four syndicates group about 10 million workers and 1 million employers under state control.

The New York Times' report of May 12 on the strike situation said the Catholic Church in recent years has been moving to dissociate itself from the more repressive aspects of the dictatorship, such as police brutality and Franco's refusal to permit workers to elect their own officials in the syndicates.

The Times' story reported the apparent breach between the church and Franco on the right to strike.

It said an editorial in Ecclesia, the weekly publication of Catholic Action and the only publication in Spain not under state censorship, proclaimed the strike as a "licit weapon" when peaceful means of settlement have failed.

The editorial was viewed as carefully calculated since the Primate of Spain, Enrique Cardinal Pla Deniel, archbishop of Toledo, closely supervises Ecclesia's editorial policies. He has clashed before with Jose' Solis Ruiz, head of the Falange party and of the Sindical movement.

Though the Franco regime has clamped tight censorship on information, ICFTU sources estimate over 100,000 workers are on strike. The state of emergency declared for three northern provinces for a three-month period means restriction of movement, a ban on meetings, the opening of mail, the takeover of factories by army units and an ultimatum to miners to go back to work or be dismissed, the ICFTU said.

Parley Scheduled on Legal Rights of Unions

Los Angeles—Affiliates of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO have been urged to send delegates to an area information conference sponsored by the regional office of the National Labor Relations Board.

The conference, at the University of California's Westwood campus on May 26, will discuss rights and obligations of unions and employers under the labor law.

'Free Riders on Taxes'

TRADE unionists who have long contended with the parasitic "free rider"—the worker who accepts all the benefits won by a union but refuses to join the union which made the benefits possible—will quickly recognize this unsavory character as he is involved in the current struggle to impose a withholding tax on dividends and interest.

The man or woman who works for wages or a salary has had a certain percentage of his paycheck withheld weekly since 1942 to insure full payment of income taxes at the end of the year.

For a number of years the AFL-CIO has urged the extension of this withholding system to other forms of income—specifically dividends and interest. Evidence collected by the Internal Revenue Service reveals that the government is losing $800 million a year in revenue from persons who either wilfully refuse or fail to report income from dividends or interest or simply forget that taxes legally must be paid on such income.

The net effect is that these persons get a free ride, or a reduced-rate ride, while persons subjected to withholding on wages and salaries pay the full rate and more to make up the loss to the government of the $800 million. This is the "free rider" in the tax area, allowing others to pay for the cost of the government from which he benefits.

The "free-rider" has no more place in the tax system than he has in an organized plant. This is the issue in much of the so-called "right-to-work" legislation which would legally sanction the parasitic role.

The same forces that are supporting the "right-to-work" drive are found in the campaign to prevent enactment of a withholding system on dividends and interest. Along with the attempt to weaken and destroy unions they would maintain the glaring loophole in the tax system that allows millions of taxpayers to pay less than their fair share of taxes.

It is as inequitable and morally unsound to allow the "free rider" to escape his fair share of taxes as it is to allow him to collect higher wages and improved conditions negotiated by a union which he refuses to support by membership or dues.

A Filibuster Wins

THE SENATE has "disposed" of meaningful civil rights legislation for the current session of Congress by burying with full parliamentary honors a bill to prevent the states from using discriminatory literacy tests as a bar to voting.

In four weeks of debate and maneuver a pattern emerged which reveals the loose coalition nature of the nation's major political parties. Both the Senate majority and minority leaders sponsored the legislation and moved jointly to close debate after extended speeches by Southern opponents of the measure.

Despite this joint leadership action the move to win a two-thirds vote to shut off debate was lost twice, disclosing the difficulties presented by the cloture rule in the absence of an overriding determination to have done with a filibuster.

The Senate's failure to vote directly on the merits of the bill enables a number of Southern states to continue to block Negroes from registering and voting by erecting arbitrary and discriminatory tests designed to frustrate the most informed citizen. A number of these cases have been processed in the courts, but on a case-by-case basis the result is negligible in terms of assuring Negroes the basic right to vote.

The Southern bloc and its conservative allies have frustrated once again the extension of democratic rights.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned.

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, May 19, 1962 No. 20

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'They Want Me to Pay My Full Tax'

3.1 Million Depend on Exports:

Trade Program's Job Potential Plays Central Role in Debate

THE DEEP INTEREST SHOWN in Pres. Kennedy's trade expansion program by all segments of organized labor illustrates how much the world has shrunk in recent years.

Never before has the steelworker in Pennsylvania, the machinist in California, the auto worker in Detroit, the carpenter in Oregon or the textile worker in the Carolinas followed developments in this field so closely.

The explanation is simple. The arguments sparked by the Kennedy proposals have made these workers acutely conscious of the fact that the trade program could directly affect their jobs.

A figure which is of extreme importance to American workers is that reported by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics that 3.1 million jobs are now being supported by exports. These include 1.4 million in manufacturing and mining, 90,000 in agriculture and 900,000 in transportation and trade.

BLS has not completed its study of the number of U.S. jobs which have been lost as a result of imports, but makes the broad estimate that four American jobs are gained as a result of exports for every one lost by imports from abroad.

A favorite argument of business interests opposing the new trade proposals is that they cannot meet foreign competition because of the high wages paid to American workers.

This argument—"labor is pricing itself out of the market"—has been forcefully answered but the answers seldom get a great play in the press.

This question of "cheap" foreign labor is frequently centered on Japan and it sounds impressive until one actually examines the facts. On the surface is a report by the International Labor Organization that in 1960 the average wage in Japan, for example, was 25.9 cents an hour—about one-ninth of the U.S. figure.

THIS ISN'T the whole story, The Japanese worker gets fringe benefits that are unheard of in American industry. U.S. News & World Report detailed this point some time ago:

"Regular employes in most Japanese firms get a semi-annual bonus boosting their income as much as 25 percent.

"Many companies offer workers free transportation to and from work or a transportation allowance. They also offer meals for as little as 5 or 10 cents, and daily recreation.

"Fringe benefits, augmenting labor costs, extend to the worker's family.

"Often, companies provide free dormitories for single workers. A family may live in a subsidized apartment for as little as $6 a month, or less than a fifth of the normal charge. Long-time employes can buy land and perhaps a house from the company at cut-rate prices.

"National health insurance gives a worker and his family medical care but many firms also provide clinics and hospitals. In-patients are charged 10 to 30 cents a day.

"Beyond that, large companies frequently operate stores where employes and their wives can buy food, clothing and household goods at anywhere from 20 to 30 percent below usual prices.

"Recreation budgets of such companies run high . . . Many have rest homes at beaches or mountain resorts where a worker can take his family free or for perhaps 50 cents a day."

WHAT THIS ADDS UP TO was explained by Labor Sec. Goldberg last March in testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee. To illustrate the importance of non-cash wage factors, he used these examples:

- A Japanese steel firm pays $37 in monthly wages but with fringes added the total reaches $128.
- A U.S. coal miner, paid eight times as much as a Japanese coal miner, produces 14 times as much. Hence the real cost per ton is lower in the U.S. and the U.S. sells millions of tons of coal to Japan.
- A Japanese-made refrigerator sells for more than twice the retail price of a similar-size American model.
- A Japanese worker earning 22 cents per hour was estimated by a study to produce 30 cents worth of goods per hour. An American worker paid $1.95 per hour produces $3.19 worth per hour.

Another important factor is that American labor is doing more and more to help the workers of other countries raise their living standards and that means increased wages.

Year by year the spread is growing thinner and, certainly, in the competitive situation, America's position improves with it. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Wiretap Bill Seen as Wedge To Erosion of Right of Privacy

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

AS THE LAW now stands in the Communications Act of 1934 it is a federal crime for anybody, police included, to put a wiretap on somebody's telephone and disclose what was heard. But this law is being broken daily all over the country both for nefarious purposes and in the name of law enforcement. Indeed the Supreme Court has ruled that it is not unconstitutional for a state court to use wiretap evidence if state law permits it and six states—Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Nevada, New York and Oregon — do permit it, though technically under the 1934 Act this is still a federal crime. Wiretap evidence cannot be used in federal courts.

Morgan

Describing this situation as "chaos," Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy is pushing a bill to legalize wiretapping within certain limits, allow wiretap evidence to be used in state and federal courts, place some new restrictions on wiretapping by state officials and make all other tapping illegal.

The attorney general makes a strong and in some respects an appealing argument. He points out that a lot of people are having their private affairs pried into unfairly if not illegally but prosecution is difficult because use of the eavesdropped material must be proved.

"By adopting a clearcut and realistic definition of what wiretapping is and (when it is) and is not permissible," Robert Kennedy testified before the Senate judiciary committee some weeks ago, "the proposed bill . . . would make individual rights of privacy far more secure than they are now . . ."

Here is the crux of the matter. The implication there is that an individual's privacy would be more strongly protected because illegal invasions could now be properly dealt with and because police authorities would not abuse their expanded authorization to tap telephones. Liberal groups and individuals opposed to the legislation vigorously argue that privacy would be invaded much more widely because law enforcement officers, handed the weapon legally, would be constantly posing new pretexts to justify cutting the strings limiting its use.

In a report on wiretapping, the American Civil Liberties Union opposed its use "symbolically, because our society will thereby have approved unlimited and unlimitable intrusions by the police into the citizen's personal life, contrary to basic constitutional principles," and opposed it "in practice because innumerable innocent people will have their privacy invaded by officials, who, as Justice Brandeis said, at their best are 'men of zeal, well-meaning but without understanding,' and, at their worst, susceptible to graft, corruption, extortion and other improprieties."

THE JUSTICE DEPT. wants the power to use wiretap information in cases involving national security, without having to request a court order so as to be able to act at top speed. Where bribery, extortion, kidnaping and murder are suspected, the legislation would authorize a U.S. assistant attorney general to apply for court permission to tap and use the evidence. The same procedure would be allowed to trace transmission of gambling information and the interstate movements of racketeers. State officials could use wiretaps only where crimes of bribery, extortion, kidnaping, murder and narcotics trafficking were involved —and all would require a court order, too.

But recently a parade of state and local authorities, led by New York District Attorney Frank S. Hogan, told the Senate Judiciary Committee that the Administration bill did not go far enough. Where do you draw the line? And once drawn, how long is it held?

In his valuable book, The Price of Liberty, Alan Barth writes that "the core of the case against wiretapping is that it entails a gross and uncontrollable invasion of privacy. There is simply no way to confine it to those guilty of crime, or even to those suspected of crime."

Admittedly a policeman's lot is not a happy one but it is society as a whole that must be served and except for cases involving national security, wiretapping, which is already on the federal books as illegal, should, I think, be treated as such. The whole thrust of modern life is an assault on an individual's privacy except, of course, in a police state, where, according to the state, there are no individuals.

Washington Reports:

New Foreign Aid Chief Praised, Program Hailed as Helping U.S.

THE U.S. FOREIGN AID program has taken a new and better turn under the able leadership of Fowler Hamilton, administrator of the newly-created Agency for International Development, Rep. Clement J. Zablocki (D-Wis.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, asserted in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"Hamilton has conscientiously carried out the dictates of Congress in channeling aid to the people themselves and in emphasizing the self-help provisions of the program," he added.

Rep. Robert R. Barry (R-N. Y.), also a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, which is now considering the 1962 foreign aid bill, said that foreign aid is helpful to the United States rather than foreign countries alone.

"For one thing," he asserted, "700,000 American jobs are the result of demand for our products created by foreign assistance."

Barry said that nations which the United States assisted in the past, such as Japan, Germany and France, are now contributing more per capita in foreign aid to underdeveloped countries than the U.S. Zablocki pointed out that many of the "countries which we have aided have in the past five years doubled the volume of their loans and grants to the developing nations."

"In 1960 they provided economic assistance to underdeveloped nations in the amount of $2.3 billion," Zablocki said. "Our military aid during the 1950s amounted to $24 billion. The countries which we aided spent $143 billion on defense in the same period."

THE TOTAL FOR FOREIGN AID this year will be $4.8 billion, including $3.5 billion in economic aid and $1.4 billion in military aid, if the Kennedy program goes through. This is a decrease of $200 million in the latter, but a substantial increase in economic aid—largely because of the new Alliance for Progress program in Latin America. Zablocki said the Alliance item is the most controversial in the Kennedy proposals, with requested funds to be used over a four-year period, but he was confident of its approval.

"We cannot be less interested in the countries of the Western Hemisphere than in nations in other parts of the world," he declared.

He thought, however, that the amount for Latin America might be cut back. The total cost he considered low, because of the alternative: "We cannot survive alone in a world dominated by Communists."

Barry expressed concern that private enterprise abroad might be reduced if tax incentives now granted were reduced or eliminated. In Latin America, he asserted, the proposed foreign aid program will meet only 2 percent of the financial needs of the countries there. He believes private enterprise must be encouraged there also for the program to succeed.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ON THE ISSUE of insuring 65-year-old Americans against heavy hospital expenses the discussion involves the method of paying the cost. Opposition to using the social security system is basically antagonistic to the principle of social insurance, and the issue should be debated in those terms.

The proposal of the Anderson-King bill, which the powerful American Medical Association is committed to beating, is that people pay in taxes a small percentage of their earnings during working years to amortize their hospital and nursing-home costs after they are older and their earnings have dropped.

It is a system that is actuarially sound, precisely as the premium payments devised by private insurance firms for life insurance are actuarially sound.

One 60-year-old wage-earner or self-employed citizen might draw benefits from the Anderson-King proposal after paying social security taxes only a few years, while younger workers would pay for 40 years. This is a common risk of life. Some young husbands who buy life insurance policies suffer the misfortune of premature death, regrettably, but the private insurance company does not complain about having to pay off.

When a private insurance policy is purchased or a social insurance program is set up, the fundamental idea is that it shall spread the risk. In order to start something a thing must be begun.

* * *

THE SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM approved by Congress in 1935 was based on a recognition that some hazards of life must be insured by taxes, by the self-imposed levies of a democratic government.

No private insurance firm or coalition of firms has the financial resources to protect scores of millions of people against job shutdowns, against the longterm mass unemployment of genuine depression, against death or poverty in old age, against breakdown and disability in relatively young years, against the needs of widows and dependent children left without support.

These risks involve the entire population. All people grow old or die. People are exposed to layoffs or to the loss of jobs in middle age, when new careers are unlikely. All are subject to the danger of accident or sickness.

We spread the risk through the social security system, and the principle of equalizing the risk through social insurance is in harmony with practices in other western democracies and in harmony with our own accepted practices.

* * *

AS OF NOW, SOCIAL SECURITY already provides old age pensions, benefits for widows, benefits for children, protection against temporary unemployment. The system has been in operation for more than a quarter of a century.

The proposal now is to expand this program so as to include protection against the expenses of hospitalization after retirement from active working years. It is a proposal to recognize that illness and hospital expenses are likely to be heavy among people of 65 years and more. The fact of such eventual expenses is not debatable; older people obviously are more prone to illness, and hospitalization costs are a major proportion of their requirements. The burden when it comes in a time of reduced income is a heavy one.

If an argument is made against providing benefits for such health costs through social security, it is an argument against social insurance in doctrine. It is very late in the day for us to return to the already-settled debates of the Thirties, which the people have confirmed by repeated improvements in social security, in frequently approved expansions of coverage and protection.

There is no difference in principle between paying taxes during working years to provide for the pension needs of old age and paying small additional taxes to provide for hospitalization needs. We have a social insurance system of recognized value and validity. It is carefully financed. Now the effort is to fill a gap previously left in coverage. It is appropriate for us to move forward.

FOREIGN AID EXPENDITURES mean 700,000 jobs in the U.S. and the means of helping freedom develop overseas, Rep. Clement J. Zablocki (D-Wis.), left, and Rep. Robert R. Barry (R-N. Y.) said on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Rise in Home Mortgage Defaults Should Flash Warning Signal

By Sidney Margolius

THE RISE IN MORTGAGE DEFAULTS in recent years is still small compared to the number of houses built in the past 15 years. But the increase in foreclosures has been persistent enough to concern lenders and government authorities, and should be a signal to moderate-income homeowners to understand how to protect themselves from such losses.

In the past ten years the number of foreclosures has risen every year until by 1961 it had increased 300 percent and was well over 70,000. Highest foreclosure rate has been on FHA mortgages, followed by Veterans Administration-guaranteed loans, with conventional mortgages lowest. But early in 1962 the VA began to notice a rise large enough to be considered significant.

Why this persistent increase even in so-called good times?

For one reason, even when over-all national economic conditions seem relatively good, there are areas of persistent unemployment.

For another, sometimes families who have paid little down tend to regard their monthly payments as a form of rent and may abandon a house when hard times strike, without trying to rescue their equity.

Sometimes moderate-income families may not know the steps they can take to protect their ownership in a period of unemployment.

Too, the sharply-rising property taxes and operating costs noticeable nowadays may make a house more expensive to carry than a family anticipated when it bought the property. This problem is especially noticeable in large tracts that builders put up without regard to schools and other community needs.

It is not a satisfactory solution to abandon your home if you can't keep up the payments. When a house is sold at auction the lender generally bids only up to the amount of the mortgage balance, plus foreclosure expenses. Only if there is an outside bid do you have a chance of getting any of your equity back (your equity is the difference between the current market value of the property and your remaining mortgage balance).

Foreclosure laws favor lenders. In some states the mortgagee can proceed to foreclose if the mortgage is in arrears only 60 days. However, in actual practice, lenders do tend to wait at least three or four months if your previous payment record has been good. They are likely to move faster if you previously have shown signs of habitual tardiness. (For this reason, when times are good with you, it's advisable to make it a habit to make your monthly payments promptly, not at the last minute.)

IF YOU BECOME DELINQUENT for a very valid reason beyond your control, like illness, a job cutback or a strike, many banks and other mortgage-lenders will wait as long as 12 months if you continue to pay the taxes and interest meanwhile.

In fact, if you have an FHA mortgage, the lender is authorized by FHA to give you up to 12 months if you seem to have a reasonable chance of catching up on payments.

A homeowner who shows he is trying to get employment, and keeps the property in good condition, is likely to get most favorable treatment. If you let the property run down, the lender usually will pounce on it more quickly.

The VA requires that the lender give you two notices before he forecloses, and itself tries to contact delinquents to see what the trouble is.

If after these grace periods you find that you still cannot manage the house, do try to sell it yourself rather than merely let the lender foreclose. Even on houses bought with small down-payments, practically all homeowners have at least some equity resulting from the general increase in property values, improvements and previous reduction of the mortgage principal.

Whatever you do, don't ignore the letter your lender will send you when your mortgage payment is past due. Write back, explaining the circumstances, and what you propose to do to restore the mortgage to good standing. In fact, it is better to contact the lender before he contacts you.

How much housing expense can you afford? One often-used formula is that the price of the house should not be more than 2.5 times your annual income. Or to put costs in terms of monthly expense, it is advisable to keep your total housing cost, including operating expenses, within 20-22 percent of your after-tax income. Some families, with many mouths to fed, or unusual medical expenses, may not be able to afford even this percentage for housing.

In comparing your monthly after-tax income to the potential cost of a house, keep in mind that you need to add to the mortgage payment a yearly amount approximately 4-5 percent of the cost of the house, for taxes, insurance and upkeep. Lenders usually estimate these expenses at 2-3 percent for taxes; one-half of 1 percent or less for insurance and 1-2 percent for upkeep (not including utilities). Thus, on a house worth $16,000, property taxes will run $320 to $480 a year, and in some areas of mushroom growth, even more.

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

First the Bold Brave Words, Then the Moment of Truth

By Jane Goodsell

THE BOLD BRAVE WORDS: "Believe you me, we're going to raise our kids to know the meaning of discipline! All this modern child psychology is a lot of nonsense. The important thing is to let a child know right from the beginning that you mean business. Tell him what to do, and see that he does it. That's all there is to it."

THE MOMENT OF TRUTH: "Aw, come on now, Junior, eat your carrots like a good boy. Daddy loves carrots. Watch Daddy eat carrots. Yum yum! Now Junior, take a bite of carrot, and Daddy'll take a bite of carrot. Bunnies love carrots, too. Be a good bunny and take a bite of carrot for Daddy. . . ."

* * *

THE BOLD BRAVE WORDS: "And I promise you that, if I'm elected, my office door will be open to each and every one of you. All you have to do is walk in. My only desire is to serve you, the voters. Think of me as your friend, your champion, the servant of the people. . . "

THE MOMENT OF TRUTH: "Sorry, can't talk to you now. I have a very important telephone call from Washington. Write me a letter about it."

* * *

THE BOLD BRAVE WORDS: "I wouldn't be caught dead at a dogfight in square-toed shoes. I don't care how stylish they are. I think they look clumsy and awkward and just plain ugly. Anyway, I don't believe in being a slave to fashion."

THE MOMENT OF TRUTH: "I'd like to see some blue kid shoes with square toes, please."

* * *

THE BOLD BRAVE WORDS: "I'm never going to speak to that Bill Stevens again as long as I live! He's the most conceited boy in the whole school, and if he thinks he can give me a big rush and then just drop me like that, he's got another think coming! If he says anything to me, I'm going to walk right past him without answering. I'll show him he can't treat me like that!"

THE MOMENT OF TRUTH: "Hi Bill! Where you been keeping yourself?"

Kentucky Labor Foes Having Their Troubles

Louisville, Ky.—Life is looking up in Kentucky, according to the Kentucky Labor News as demonstrated by two articles on Page 1 of the State AFL-CIO's official organ.

One deals with an appeal for funds by the so-called Committee for Equal Anti-Trust Law Protection headed by Clarence Manion, signed by corporation presidents two of whom are John Birch Society members. Among eight endorsers from Kentucky is listed Thurston Cooke.

"Mr. Thurston Cooke," the story says, "formerly in the automobile business in Louisville, won't be of too much help to the organization for a while since he is now an inmate of LaGrange Penitentiary. He's serving a four-year term for conviction on three charges of uttering forged instruments of writing and two charges of obtaining money under false pretenses."

On the other side of Page 1 is the saga of William F. Gutwein, a Louisville management consultant who has been hired as an expert throughout the Middle West to defeat union organizing campaigns.

Sam Ezelle, executive secretary of the State AFL-CIO, in a letter addressed to international unions, state and city central bodies, writes:

"You may now proceed for six whole months with your organizing campaigns unmolested by this management consultant.

"Gutwein has just been sentenced to six months in the federal penitentiary for income tax evasion."

Large Medical Debt Seen Common in U.S.

NEARLY ONE-THIRD of American families may be expected to incur "large" medical, hospital or funeral expenses in a given year, a study by The University of Michigan Survey Research Center indicates.

Twenty-nine percent of all spending units reported large expenses for medical, hospital or funeral care in 1960. Over 5.5 million spending units (one out of every ten) owed debt for such purposes in January-February 1961. The average amount owed was $220.

The incidence of large medical expenses is related to age. Except for the relatively high frequency of such expenses in the 25- to 34-year-old group (childbearing years), the incidence of large medical expenses generally tends to increase with age up to the 45- to 54-year-old group, and then declines.

These are among the economic facts reported in the center's new book, "1961 Survey of Consumer Finances" based upon several thousand interviews with families in their homes.

Incidence of large hospital expenses, the 1961 survey reveals, is low for spending units in which the head is under 45 years of age, except for those units with children under 6.

"The ratio of hospital expense to medical expense is greatest for those who are most likely to bear children, a finding which probably reflects the almost universal hospitalization for childbirth in this country," the authors explain.

While expenditures in most consumer categories are strongly determined by income, medical expenses are not similarly related to income, the survey reveals. The proportion of American spending units with large medical and hospital expenses increases with income only up through the group receiving $5,000-$5,999 per year. Above that income level the proportion declines.

While insurance covered some medical expenses reported by respondents in the survey, 10 percent of all spending units early in 1961 owed debt from large medical or hospital expenditures in 1960—the sum total of such debt totaling $1.25 billion nationally.

A LIFETIME OF DEVOTION to labor and liberal causes was rewarded when Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) presented John W. Edelman (right), Washington representative of the Textile Workers Union of America, with the Arthur D. Riordan Memorial Award of the Washington Newspaper Guild.

'Tragedy of Automation':

UPWA Local Pledges Unity As Plant Closing Claims Jobs

Milwaukee—Several hundred members of Packinghouse Workers Local 50 vowed to keep their unity and militancy almost on the eve of their plant closing and loss of their jobs.

Union, government and local civic officials paid tribute to the spirit of Local 50 members gathered for a final meeting as the century-old Plankington Packing Co., a subsidiary of Swift & Co., prepared to close its door for the last time.

Six hundred production jobs and another 200 jobs in the office force had been cut to a handful, left to service hotels, restaurants and institutions.

The Swift firm offered transfers to qualified employes in plants at some distance from Milwaukee which are represented by UPWA but would not transfer workers to its new, automated plant 100 miles away in Rochelle, Ill.

There were dark prospects for many at the final local meeting, especially among those with the highest seniority, victims of what Donald Schwartz, assistant to Milwaukee's mayor, termed "the modern tragedy of automation and consolidation."

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein assailed the "double standard" of community approaches to plant closing. "When plants close and contend that unions have set too high a wage pattern, people blame the unions. But when profitable plants are closed because companies want to make even higher profits, communities shrug and remark 'it's too bad.' "

"I guess Swift had a legal right to do this," Helstein commented, "but did they have a moral right? More and more people are asking this. These are private decisions with a public impact. At some point Congress will decide that this sort of decision that is being made all over the country really affects the public interest," Helstein said.

Wisconsin's Gov. Gaylord Nelson (D) in a message to the meeting declared: "It is a sad commentary on our times that in the midst of national prosperity, several hundred workers who have devoted years of their lives to their jobs in the meat packing industry now find themselves facing unemployment and great difficulty in finding jobs . . ."

AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Charles Heymanns told the meeting "your local brought honor and dignity to the labor movement."

Fred A. Erchul, secretary of the Milwaukee County AFL-CIO Council and a veteran member of Local 50, pointed to past accomplishments of the group. "I want to throw bouquets to Local 50 for service to our council," he said. "It has always been in the forefront as a stalwart and militant local."

Erchul then called at random on fellow members for comment:

- Jerry Took (33 years seniority): "I think I'm too old to get a job."
- Richard DeLugi: "I worked there 27 years and I don't have any plans."
- Fred Blahar: "I was in the plant 31 years . . . I don't know what to do."
- Mrs. Marge Allman: "I worked there 17 years. Age is a barrier . . ."
- Jimmy Bardy: "I'm 60 years old, 35 years at Swift. Who's going to give me a job?"

Erchul turned to Rep. Clement Zablocki (D), saying "Congressman, it just isn't fair . . . 25, 27, 30, 35 years of service. Please take this to your fellow members in Congress and tell them what this situation is all about."

ILO Urged to Study Problems of Elderly

Geneva—The coming international labor conference has been called on by David A. Morse, director general of the Intl. Labor Organization, to "redress the balance of social attention" and pay a little more heed to the needs of older men and women.

"The benefits of change are apt to pass them by and as a result they are cast out of the mainstream of economic and social life," he said in a report. "This we cannot afford or tolerate."

He asked the conference "to lay down lines" along which the ILO "can assume its full responsibilities in dealing with the problems that are its special concern."

"Other organizations of the United Nations family are playing their part," Morse continued. "But while these organizations, each in its field, are striving to promote better social adjustment, health, nutrition and other improvements for older people, the ILO must take the initiative to ensure that their later years are lived in reasonable conditions of security, comfort and human dignity."

The report, entitled "Older People: Work and Retirement," was one of two Morse and his staff prepared for the conference. The older-workers report is the first item on the agenda.

Stressing the need for action, the report pointed out that there are 200 million people past the age of 60, an increase of 45 million in the last decade or an annual growth rate of 2.5 percent, comparable to 1.6 percent for the population at large.

With automation and changing technologies, older workers often find that the skills which stood them in good stead over many years no longer are marketable, the report noted. It added that the labor movement, industry and the community can do much "to eliminate those [problems] which are the product of imagination and prejudice and to work out constructive approaches to those which remain."

"Ideally all people who wish to go on working and who are capable of work should be able to find and retain suitable employment," the report asserted, noting that the capacity for work "persists far longer than is commonly recognized" and often reaches a peak past 60.

At the same time, it continued, the right to retire must be established more widely and more firmly—and on a sound financial basis.

"The right and the capacity to go on working is one thing," it declared. "The right and the capacity to retire is another.

"Many old people have to work throughout their lives whether they wish to or not. They have no practical alternative. The leisure they have earned through hard work never comes to them. Much remains to be done to provide solid old-age security in developed and developing countries alike."

Equal Rights Policy Urged By Shishkin

Denver—A call for all sections of American society to "work together in a concerted drive to make our community and our whole country not only a good but a better place to live for everyone" was sounded by Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights at the Colorado-Wyoming Conference on Fair Employment here.

"And to this end," he added, "let us make fair practices in every field of life an instrument of our national and our community policy."

Shishkin outlined the program of action in the field of civil rights and listed the guiding principles—affirmed by the last AFL-CIO convention—on which it is based.

He explained how the program goes "beyond the problems of discrimination in employment to those of discrimination in other fields" that call for action by federal, state and local governments.

Assistant Labor Aide J. R. Holleman Resigns

Jerry R. Holleman has resigned as assistant secretary of labor, effective May 11.

Holleman, a former president of the Texas State AFL-CIO, said he resigned to avoid embarrassment to Pres. Kennedy and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg through a personal relationship with Billie Sol Estes, Texas promoter involved in spreading investigations.

Exiled Haitian Leader Named to ICFTU Post

New York—Kesler Clermont, exiled Haitian labor leader, has been named assistant representative at the United Nations by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Clermont fled here from Haiti, where he had been in the federal labor department, in 1958, and since then has been an electrical worker and a member of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 3. In Haiti he had worked as an organizer with the Maritime & Stevedores Union and the National Union of Haitian Workers.

OPENING SESSION of the Utility Workers' 12th convention at Miami Beach hears keynote address of Pres. William J. Pachler. Seated at Pachler's left is Regional Dir. Reginald Brown.

Utility Union Backs Stronger Health Plan

Miami Beach—Nearly 500 delegates to the Utility Workers' 12th convention reaffirmed the union's support of health care for the aged financed through the social security system.

A resolution calling for enactment of the Anderson-King bill urged removal, however, of the plan's "deductible" provisions, under which retired beneficiaries would be required to pay the first $20 to $90 of their hospital bills.

"Our members are willing to pay [social security] contributions necessary to assure even more adequate protection for their aged parents and for their own years of retirement," the resolution declared.

Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) earlier had reviewed congressional prospects for the Anderson-King bill and had outlined his proposed legislation aimed at bringing down high drug prices and safeguarding consumer interests in other areas.

The convention endorsed the consumer protection bills and, in the UWUA's own field, called for legislation to set a minimum pressure of gas delivered to consumers and to require installation of heat metering devices "so as to provide a fair billing for value received."

UWUA Pres. William Pachler, in his keynote, reviewed the union's collective bargaining and organizing progress over the past two years. He cited the individual responsibility of members in the struggle for world peace and freedom, which, he said, is "inseparably tied together to the struggle for economic and social justice."

The convention elected Robert Reynolds, president of Local 223, Detroit, to succeed the late Martin O'Dell as executive board member-at-large.

Among other actions, the delegates:

- Endorsed the AFL-CIO Internal Disputes Plan as adopted at the federation's convention last December.
- Called for repeal of state laws that outlaw strikes against utilities.
- Urged "a national remedy" to end malapportionment of congressional and state legislative districts.
- Supported "a comprehensive program of federal aid to the schools for school construction and for teachers' salaries."
- Urged locals to take an active part in the 1962 COPE registration and dollar drives.
- Called on all affiliates to negotiate safeguards "against hardships both on the job and from joblessness caused by automation's impact."
- Urged "an expansionary federal budget policy" as essential "to provide the basis for complete recovery from the recession and a rapid rate of economic growth."

AFL-CIO Helps Find Summer Jobs For College Students from Africa

For the second consecutive year, the AFL-CIO will help find summer jobs for students from Africa attending American colleges and universities, Mrs. Maida Springer of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs said on the Labor News Conference radio program.

All affiliated national and international unions have been asked to aid in arranging work places for the African students either on their own staffs or in their industries, she said, adding that Pres. George Meany has announced that where necessary the AFL-CIO will pay up to half the salary for students employed by unions.

Labor News Conference is heard over the Mutual Broadcasting System radio network. Mrs. Springer was interviewed by Edward Peaks, labor reporter for the Afro-American, and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc.

Mrs. Springer said that as coordinator of the jobs program for the AFL-CIO she has received applications for summer jobs from nearly 500 African students, many of whom may find employment through other groups conducting similar programs. But others are still in need of assistance.

"I already have a number of confirmed job placements in certain special categories," she added. "One union office wrote to say that as a result of Pres. Meany's request for participation in this program, they would like to have an economics graduate to work directly with their department of economics and research.

"Another union wrote to say it would like three African students to work directly in the field with their department of organization.

"We have an area of concentration which is in 23 states, but the bulk of the students will be in New York, Chicago, California, Michigan and Washington."

Last year about 250 African students were placed in summer jobs through the AFL-CIO's program.

Mrs. Springer was asked if there had been criticism of the program because of the continued high unemployment in this country.

"Surprisingly little," she said. "One of the very important points made by Pres. Meany was that in those areas where the trade union movement had a serious hardship problem of its own, we assuredly would not ask them to place workers. The program is for those areas where this is not a problem and the union has a special need for summer workers."

Nigeria, Kenya, Ghana and Ethiopia provide the bulk of African students studying in this country, Mrs. Springer said.

TWO-DAY CELEBRATION in Colorado Springs, Colo., marked the 110th anniversary of the Typographical Union, the 70th anniversary of the Union Printers Home there, and the formal dedication of the union's new Training Center. Shown above at an opening breakfast are, from left, ITU Vice Pres. Joe Bailey, Pres. Elmer Brown, Sen. John Carroll (D-Colo.), Sec.-Treas. William R. Cloud and Vice Pres. John J. Pilch.

Training Center Dedicated:

ITU Observes 110th Year—With Vitality

Colorado Springs, Colo.—The Typographical Union marked its 110th anniversary with a two-day celebration here and tied into it the 70th anniversary of the Union Printers Home and the dedication of the $2.5 million New Processes Training Center.

The observance opened with a breakfast to which Pres. Kennedy sent "best wishes and congratulations." A chuck wagon dinner in the Garden of the Gods and a tour of the Air Force Academy were other highlights. About 1,200 persons attended the two-day fete.

The union moved here from Indianapolis, Ind., last December upon completion of the training center and the start of construction on a new headquarters. The financial and accounting offices remain in Indianapolis until the administration building is completed, probably next fall.

ITU Pres. Elmer Brown, looking over more than a century of the union's experience, told the opening breakfast that the ITU not only has kept step with progress, but usually has been "a decade or so ahead in social planning, in improvement of the working conditions and wages of its members, and in providing even higher skills and services for those who employ its members."

More Papers Foreseen

"No other organization, union or otherwise, can match our unparalleled fraternal program—our Union Printers Home . . . our pension and mortuary system and our democratic principles and mode of operation," he said.

The home he described as "a haven for the ill, the incapacitated and the elderly members of the ITU who find the pleasant and satisfying association with their fellow residents in the serene and beautiful environment of the home and its spacious grounds among the greatest experiences of their fruitful lives."

Sen. John Carroll (D-Colo.) congratulated the union and welcomed it to the state, declaring "the ITU's vision and courage will add much to Colorado."

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg was represented by Edward E. Goshen, director of the department's Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, a native of Colorado Springs and a veteran ITU member.

Goshen commended ITU officers for foresight in creating the training center to meet innovations in the industry and the ITU members for supporting the chance afforded them "to perfect and improve their skills with new methods, new machinery and new procedures."

A focus of attention during the celebration was the training center, where the union has assembled one of the largest and most complete assortments of modern photographic, electronic, electrical and chemical printing equipment in the world.

Clothing Workers Give Priority To 35-Hour Week in Bargaining

(Continued from Page 1)

two "very simple things," he added—see to it that "our great industrial plants operate at full capacity," and that "every American who wants to work and is capable of working has a job."

He expressed confidence that when bargaining is finished, the union and its employers, being responsible, "will arrive at sensible solutions." Goldberg is an honorary member of New York Local 25, formerly was counsel for the ACWA in Chicago, and has been a director of the Amalgamated Bank in Chicago and of the union health insurance program.

In commenting, Potofsky told Goldberg the union prefers the 40-hour week "if we can have full employment." He continued:

"Not Going Fast Enough"

"We are not debating any issues here because, basically, I think we are not in disagreement. If we can get full employment, that is the big issue.

"What we say is, perhaps you are not going fast enough. I think this is our prerogative and we are going to continue to agitate for what we believe is in the best interests of the country, too."

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, who also received a hearty welcome, made no reference to the 35-hour week in his speech, which was frequently interrupted by applause.

Johnson was roundly applauded when he asserted that "things besides economic hardship can keep millions of Americans outside the one nation."

"One of the oldest and costliest is racial and religious prejudice," he said.

"This Administration is pledged—and is carrying out its pledge—to battle discrimination on every front. And one of our most cherished goals is that men and women will be employed according to their merits—and not according to irrelevant considerations of race, creed, color or national origin."

The convention accepted Johnson's invitation to join the Administration's fight for enactment of the Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the aged under social security.

Committee Action Urged

The delegates unanimously called on the House Ways and Means Committee to "recognize" the bill and clear it for House consideration, and until this is done, asked all citizens to continue urging their senators and representatives to support the measure.

The resolution on shorter hours in the industry recalled that the fight for shorter hours "has been intimately associated with the advancement of the welfare of the American people."

"The ACWA has been in the forefront of the fight for shorter hours. Many of its early struggles centered on this critical issue, for the men's clothing industry was once notorious for its excessively long hours. We pioneered in the drive for a 48-hour week, a 44-hour week, and the 40-hour week. The time has come for the Amalgamated once again to join in the fight—to obtain through collective bargaining, a shorter workweek without a reduction in earnings."

In the wage-hour resolution, the delegates also called for a $1.50-an-hour federal minimum, extension of coverage "to the more than 16 million workers not yet under its protection, although within its scope"; closing of the gap between standards for newly covered and previously covered workers, and automatic application of cents per hour increases to Puerto Rico.

Higher Standard Seen

"To help meet the problem," it continued, "a reduction in the standard workweek to 35 hours, with no decrease in earnings, is necessary. It would cushion the effects of automation and rising worker productivity. It would provide increased employment opportunities for displaced workers and for workers entering the labor force. A 35-hour workweek would stimulate the economy by providing increased purchasing power through more widespread employment. It would represent a higher standard of living for the nation as a whole."

High Court Upholds Beck Conviction

The Supreme Court in a narrowly-divided vote has affirmed the embezzlement conviction of former Teamsters Pres. Dave Beck. The vote was 4-3, with Justices Felix Frankfurter and Byron R. White not participating.

Beck's appeal for reversal of his conviction on state charges of embezzling $1,900 from sale of a union-owned automobile was based on a contention that "massive" unfavorable publicity, heavily emphasizing Beck's appearances before the McClellan Senate committee, made a fair trial impossible in 1957 in Seattle.

The majority, in an opinion by Justice Tom C. Clark, held there was no evidence of bias against Beck in the trial jury. For the state court to have warned the grand jury against bias might "have added fuel to the flames" of inequity "which some see here," he declared.

Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Hugo L. Black and William O. Douglas dissented, holding that the trial court had failed to give Beck adequate protection from the possibility of biased jurors. Douglas also said the grand jury indicting him had not been adequately screened for bias.

Beck was sentenced to 15 years in prison on the embezzlement conviction. He has 25 days to file a motion for a rehearing by the Supreme Court.

UAW Asks Study to Peg Economy's Wage Needs

By Willard Shelton

Atlantic City—The executive board of the Auto Workers has called for a "competent and impartial" study to determine the rate of progress for "real wages" needed to develop a full-employment economy.

A resolution of the UAW's 18th constitutional convention here, referred for action to the board, reaffirmed the union's "historical policy" of seeking wage and fringe-benefit improvements that do not require industry price increases.

The UAW seeks improvements "out of the fruits of advancing technology," the resolution stated, recognizing a "balance" between the "equity of workers, stockholders and consumers."

In other actions the executive board approved these resolutions referred by the convention:

- A call for amendment of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act to require payment of double time, rather than time and a half, for overtime work beyond 40 hours a week. The objective, the resolution stated, is to give management an incentive to call back laid-off workers rather than schedule "excessive overtime" for those on the payroll.
- A proposal for a "flexible-workweek" adjustment fund—a national fund, comparable to tax-financed trust funds under the unemployment compensation system, by which employers cutting work hours during a recession would be reimbursed against losses from paying employes "for 40 hours a week at their normal wage rates."
- A call for an "international fair labor standards" policy to help remove from trade-and-tariff negotiations the issue of low-wage competition abroad.
- A declaration that Soviet resumption of nuclear bomb tests, after a period of mutual though unofficial forbearance, left Pres. Kennedy with "no alternative" but to order resumption of tests by the United States.

The delegates, referring to the executive board resolutions scheduled for late consideration, gave the board authority to act for the convention.

'Guidelines Misinterpreted'

The wage-policy resolution covered a major issue—the question of pay increases justified by the national industry average of productivity rises.

"Guidelines" set forth by the President's Council of Economic Advisers, the resolution stated, have been misinterpreted.

The Auto Workers' statement points out that the CEA has recognized the need for "faster economic growth," including an "expansion of demand" by consumers, as needed to "take up existing slack" in the economy.

Present wage-price-profit relations do not serve the purpose of promoting full employment, the resolution said. Because of postwar recessions and joblessness there has been a "lag of real wages" behind increases in productivity that has "worsened the imbalance." Wages should go up "faster" than normal for the short-run future to correct the imbalance.

The UAW in its resolution reiterated support of a program of "making progress with the community." Immediate wage policies must promote employment by stimulating the full "potential rate of productivity increase" that workers and employers can achieve, it declared.

'Political Leave' Offered By Canadian Employer

Vancouver, B. C.—James Sinclair, president of Lafarge Cement, Ltd., and its subsidiary, Deeks-McBride, Inc., an old politico himself, has sent his 325 employes notices urging them to take an active part in the June 18 all-Canada elections.

Sinclair, formerly minister of fisheries in the Liberal cabinet, has offered leaves of absence to any employe who wants to take an active part in the campaign, and has promised to maintain seniority and full pension, welfare and health insurance payments for any elected to Parliament.

"When I was active in politics," Sinclair observed, I found many businessmen would decry the caliber of political candidates, but at the same time they would not permit their own employes to seek nomination or take an active part in political campaigns.

"I disliked this attitude, and now that I am in business I feel I should be consistent."

RWDSU Convention:

Organizing Goal Set In Service Trades

By Eugene A. Kelly

Miami Beach—Organizing new members in the service trades—America's big and ever-growing reservoir of new jobs—was at the top of the priority list of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Workers here at the union's ninth constitutional convention.

Second only to organizing, the union defined its goals as bringing presently exempted workers under the protection of federal wage and hour laws, raising the statutory federal minimum wage to $1.50 an hour, requiring overtime pay for all work in excess of 8 hours per day and 40 per week, and pushing constantly for an ever-increasing standard of living for all workers, particularly the lowest paid.

Convention speakers all stressed the organizing theme in one form or another. These included Pres. Max Greenberg, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization John M. Livingston and Deputy Dir. Al Barkan of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

25th Anniversary

Observing the 25th anniversary of the union's founding, 600 delegates from more than 300 locals in the United States and Canada agreed that "one major objective stands forth clearly today as it did a quarter century ago: the need to organize the unorganized workers in our jurisdiction."

Also affirmed by the delegates was a recommendation to take care of other unfinished items of business:

- "To close the loopholes and correct the omissions" in the present U.S. wage and hour law by ending or sharply limiting exemptions granted to seasonal industries, including food processing.
- Bringing laundry, hotel and restaurant, agricultural workers, service employes and those in non-profit institutions under the wage-hour law.
- Taking similar action on the state legislative front for workers in industries not covered by federal law because "the wide variations in state minimum wage legislation lead to abuse of workers in marginal industries" and in non-profit institutions such as hospitals.

Other speakers on the convention schedule included AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Ralph Wright of the Intl. Labor Organization, Vice Pres. William Dodge of the Canadian Labor Congress and Arthur Chapin, minorities consultant for the U.S. Labor Dept. Final item on the agenda was the election of officers for the next four years, with no contest scheduled.

Greenberg reported progress in major areas since the last convention in 1958 and such unfinished tasks as meeting the needs of retired members, the problems of unemployed members, improvement of welfare and pension plans, techniques to cope with employers who "run away" from employes into lower-wage areas, more effective legislative and political action programs and improvement of communication with RWDSU's far-flung locals.

Since the last convention union finances have increased by $115,000 and membership has grown by about 8,200, it was reported by Greenberg and the other officers—Sec.-Treas. Alvin A. Heaps and Exec. Sec. Jack Paley.

Goldberg told the delegates their industry is "moving to the center of job importance" because more than 50 percent of all U.S. workers now are engaged in the service trades. By 1972, he predicted, 57 percent of the labor force will be doing service jobs and only 43 percent production work.

Last March, he said, there were 101,000 more jobs in retail and wholesale occupations than a year earlier, 356,000 more government jobs, mostly state and local; 46,000 more in finance, insurance, real estate.

"There is still much to be done," Goldberg said. "Too many Americans are still unemployed or underemployed. We can and must realize our unrealized goal of full employment; our goal of adequate medical care for the aged based on sound and tested principles of social security; deactivation of the 'social dynamite' of young people out of school and out of work, and elimination of the 'pockets of poverty in this rich and affluent land.' "

Citing 7 million persons drawing some kind of relief and 6.8 million families with incomes under $2,000 a year, Goldberg said every member of every American union can "read in my remarks today the great new opportunities that labor has in this time of history."

Work Stoppage Up In First Quarter

Work stoppages in the first quarter of 1962 were higher than in the corresponding quarter of 1961 but still totaled only .11 percent of estimated working time, the Labor Dept. has reported. Approximately 906,000 workers lost 3.03 million man-days in the 1962 quarter. Percentages of loss for preceding years were .07 for 1961 and .14 for 1960.

Strike activity in March 1962 was above February 1962 and March 1961 levels, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said. Time lost averaged .12 percent, .09 percent and .05 percent respec-

UP WITH ORGANIZATION was theme of discussion at TWUA convention led by Sec.-Treas. John Chupka, who is also organizing director of textile union. Chart shows typical relationship between degree of organization and average hourly earnings of industry.

TWUA Speakers Ask '2-Way' Wage Policy

Miami Beach—The application of the Kennedy Administration's "wage restraint" policy to low-wage industries was debated by indirection during the Textile Workers Union of America's 12th biennial convention here.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock suggested, in introducing Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, that if the Administration was determined to restrain strong unions from pressing for "too much," it should also act against managements that offer "too little."

Goldberg discarded his prepared address to defend the Administration policy. Labor's aim in the light of that policy should be "to elevate substandards rather than place undue emphasis on the higher standards that some industries and labor enjoy," he said.

Acknowledging at the outset that it was no longer his job to help organize the unorganized, Goldberg noted that the textile industry "welcomes the support of the union when it comes to problems of trade, but denies to the union the same welcome and warmth when other problems are involved."

"I believe there should be cooperation on all the problems," he said.

Goldberg praised Pollock for his "candor" in raising the wage question, calling it an example of the value of free discussion.

Beirne Charges Inaction

More candor was supplied the following day by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, who charged the Administration with inaction on unemployment and automation.

On unemployment, Beirne said: "Either we have not made ourselves clear . . . or the President has not been listening to us." He urged Kennedy to call together the 200 or 300 major business leaders for help in curing the "twin sores of poverty and unemployment" or face the possibility of a "massive overhaul of our economic system."

On automation, the CWA president decried as "timid" and "feeble" the steps thus far taken, and asked the Administration to draft the "best brains" in the country to consider the problem.

COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt and Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.) were other major guest speakers.

An unscheduled appearance was made by former Sen. Claude Pepper the morning after his victory in the Democratic primary for a House seat from a newly created district in the Miami area.

On unanimous recommendation of the officers, the union constitution was amended to provide for five administrative vice presidents to consult with the general officers on policy and with them comprise an executive committee.

Pollock and Sec.-Treas. John Chupka were re-elected without opposition. Four newcomers were chosen for the 20-member executive council to replace members who did not seek re-election. They are Samuel J. Azzinaro, Providence, R. I.; Rene Berthiaume, Rock Hill, S. C.; Kenneth DeLong, Toledo, O., and Irving Epstine, New York City.

Schnitzler Asks Drive To Spur Political Action

Montreal—Some 250 delegates to the 11th biennial convention of the Distillery Workers enthusiastically underscored a call "for more effective political education and political action" as a means of meeting the challenges of unemployment, automation and anti-union legislation "confronting the labor movement today."

The call was issued by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in a wide-ranging address covering international and domestic problems.

Schnitzler's remarks followed a comprehensive report on developments during the past two years presented by Pres. Mort Brandenburg and Sec.-Treas. George J. Oneto. Brandenburg noted that the union had been successful in obtaining "finest ever" contract gains, including higher wages, improved welfare benefits and a guaranteed work force as an antidote to automation. Despite the loss of nearly 5,000 workers, owing to automation in the distilling industry, the membership of the union reached a high-level mark of nearly 40,000.

In extending the fraternal greetings of the Canadian Labor Congress, Pres. Claude Jodoin expressed his satisfaction with the progress made by the union since it last met in Montreal in 1946, as well as with its participation in the activities of the CLC.

Others who addressed the convention were: Seafarers' Pres. Paul Hall; Harry Poole, President of the AFL-CIO Food and Beverage Trades Dept.; Jule Poulsen, general Secretary of the International Food and Allied Workers; Peter M. McGavin, executive secretary, AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.; Norman Zukowsky, president, Leather Goods Union; George Baldanzi, president, United Textile Workers; and Roger Provost, president, Quebec Federation of Labor.

Bargaining Policy on Agenda

The delegates were scheduled to act later upon 50 resolutions, including formulation of collective bargaining aims in upcoming industry-wide negotiations as well as proposals on prohibition, excise taxes and tariffs as issues having immediate impact upon the distillery workers.

Also slated for consideration were a number of constitutional changes and a revamping of the union financial structure to provide for an increased per capita, upward adjustment in minimum dues for each local union and establishment by special levy of a $500,000 strike fund in preparation for 1963 bargaining talks.

Equal Pay Vote Hailed By AFL-CIO

House Labor Committee approval of a bill to outlaw discrimination against women in the payment of wages has brought warm congratulations from the AFL-CIO.

In a letter to Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N.Y.), chairman of the subcommittee that considered the bill, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler pledged the federation's full support of the measure and called for its enactment at this session of Congress.

Zelenko and Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) introduced the bill.

"We look for this constructive step to pave the way for favorable and prompt action by the full House of Representatives," said Schnitzler, who is a member of the President's Commission on the Status of Women.

"While the bill as finally reported by the full committee does not contain all the AFL-CIO has sought," Schnitzler's letter continued, "its minor limitations do not alter the central fact: a long-standing injustice to working women—sex discrimination in the payment of wages—will be substantially eliminated if this bill becomes law.

"The AFL-CIO will, as part of its continuing efforts to gain fair treatment for working women, give its full support toward achieving passage of equal pay legislation in the present session of Congress."

Laundry Union Elects New President

Ignacio, Calif. — Russell R. Crowell of Oakland, Calif., was elected president of the AFL-CIO Laundry & Dry Cleaning Union at its third constitutional convention here.

He succeeds Winfield S. Chasmar of Jersey City, president since the founding convention in 1958, who withdrew his candidacy.

Crowell has been third vice president of the international union, business agent since 1952 of Oakland Local 3009 and president of the Alameda County Central Labor Council. He formerly was a teacher.

Sam H. Begler of Pittsburgh was unanimously reelected secretary-treasurer.

Crowell, Begler and Chasmar were the prime movers in the successful campaign to set up the union following the expulsion of the Laundry, Dry Cleaning & Dye House Workers Intl. Union from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of corrupt domination.

"We must all work together diligently to improve the wages and working conditions of all laundry and dry cleaning workers," Crowell said in his acceptance speech.

"We must work in our state legislatures and in our nation's capital to establish higher minimum wages and improved working conditions. We must organize the unorganized workers. This is our task for the next three years."

New Leaflet Outlines Role of WAD Groups

A new leaflet, Meet the WAD, a recruiting tool for use in building Women's Activities' Dept. groups of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education is now available free of charge.

The pamphlet describes "who we are—what we believe and the work we do," and is printed in color. Copies are available in quantity from COPE at 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

New Cloture Move Fails:

Literacy Test Curbs Shelved by Senate

The administration's civil rights literacy test bill was abandoned for this session of Congress after the Senate refused for a second time to cut off a southern filibuster.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) moved the Senate on to other business after the second vote on cloture in less than a week showed no gain in the civil rights ranks and still fell 21 short of the two-thirds required to limit debate.

The bill, which would have barred states from using discriminatory literacy tests to keep Negroes and Spanish-speaking citizens from voting, was shelved by a 49-34 vote.

Opponents of dropping the fight included strong civil rights supporters who argued that the debate should continue, as Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) put it, "for as many days and weeks and months as necessary." They also included five Republicans and two Democrats who had refused to vote to cut off the debate.

As the second effort to invoke cloture went down to defeat by a 52-42 vote—31 Democrats and 11 Republicans favoring cloture, 22 Republicans and 30 Democrats opposed—notice was served that a new attempt will be made next January to change the Senate's rules.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) said civil rights supporters will proceed at the beginning of the next Congress on the assumption that a majority of the Senate has a constitutional right to change its rules and not be bound by procedures adopted by a preceding Congress. He expressed hope that Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, as presiding officer of the Senate, would uphold such a procedure and added: "If the ruling is against us, we shall try to reverse the ruling."

Hits 'Unholy Alliance'

Earlier Douglas denounced what he termed "an unholy alliance" between conservative midwestern Republicans and southern Democrats. He charged the majority of Republicans, in effect, with giving lip service only to civil rights, but blocking effective action by voting against cloture.

Meanwhile, in other legislative developments:

- The House Public Works Committee reported favorably an expanded $900 million version of the immediate public works program recommended by Pres. Kennedy to relieve unemployment.

The President's proposal was for a $600 million program for the coming year, to be financed through regular appropriations, coupled with authorization for a $2 billion stand-by program to be triggered when economic indicators point to an oncoming recession. The House committee sidetracked the stand-by program, which had run into heavy opposition from conservatives who opposed its financing provisions.

- The House Ways & Means Committee was reported in the final stages of work on the Administration's trade expansion bill. Meanwhile business, farm and labor groups joined in rallying support for the measure at a conference in Washington addressed by Pres. Kennedy and a group of cabinet members. AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison was scheduled to be one of the principal speakers.
- A sharp battle over the labor-backed Administration proposal for a withholding tax on dividend and interest income faced the Senate Finance Committee—and eventually the Senate. Joining the opposition was Senate Banking Committee Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D-Va.), considered influential on tax matters, who said he has received more mail opposing the withholding tax "than I have gotten on any one bill in recent years."

A week earlier, Kennedy had charged that banks and other groups opposing dividend and interest withholding had "badly misinformed" the American people on the issue.

Incumbents Win Races In Three Primaries

Incumbent or organization-supported candidates for governor and U.S. senator won primary victories in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Nebraska in the May 15 elections, setting the stage for key contests in November.

Present congressmen in the three states seeking renomination also were successful, with one exception in Pennsylvania. In Maryland, in a Democratic contest for the congressman-at-large nomination, a labor backed candidate won out over one supported by the incumbent state administration.

This is how the November races shape up in the three states:

Pennsylvania: Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D) will face Rep. James E. Van Zandt (R). Both were unopposed in the primary. Richardson Dilworth, former mayor of Philadelphia, won an easy victory in the gubernatorial contest and will face Rep. William W. Scranton (R) in the fall.

Rep. Carroll D. Kearns (R), after eight terms in Congress, was defeated by Dr. Joseph E. Weaver in his bid for renomination.

Maryland: Gov. J. Millard Tawes led his organization to almost a clean sweep winning renomination for himself and all top state officers. Rep. Daniel Brewster (D) won the senatorial nomination for the seat being vacated by Sen. John Marshall Butler. Maryland unions endorsed Brewster, running on the Tawes slate, but opposed the governor.

Tawes will face Republican Frank Small, Jr., in the fall, and Brewster will oppose former Rep. Edward Miller (R), who defeated James Gleason for the GOP nomination.

Carlton Sickles, strongly supported by labor, was the only victor over the Tawes organization, defeating Perry Wilkinson in the statewide contest for congressman-at-large. Incumbents won in all six of the congressional races in which they ran. In the district vacated by Brewster, Clarence Long, a Tawes-slate candidate, won the Democratic nomination.

Nebraska: Former Interior Sec. Fred Seaton in the Eisenhower Administration won the gubernatorial primary and will face Gov. Frank Morris (D) in November. The governor won renomination easily.

The Connecticut situation took on new importance meanwhile, with announcement by Sen. Prescott Bush (R) that he would not seek re-election. HEW Sec. Abraham Ribicoff is a candidate for the Democratic senatorial nomination but faces opposition in the primary.

SHOPPING CENTER CAMPAIGN for petitions urging Congress to enact the Anderson-King bill, providing health care for the aged under the social security system, is a project of Philadelphia volunteers from the Women's Activities Dept. of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. Scene above is being duplicated by WAD volunteers all over the city.

Kennedy Fights for Health Bill As Showdown Nears in Congress

(Continued from Page 1)

pected as soon as the Ways & Means Committee completes final work on the Trade Expansion Bill. Supporters were hopeful that Anderson-King would be reported out for a floor test, but the prospects were uncertain. One committee member whose vote could prove important, Rep. Clark W. Thompson (D-Tex.), said he wanted to take a longer look at how the Kerr-Mills Medical Care Act is working out in Texas before voting for any new health care legislation. However, he said he was "keeping open-minded" about Anderson-King.

Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey said after congressional leaders conferred with Kennedy that the House would be given a chance to vote on the issue one way or another.

"The President has the bit in his mouth," Humphrey said. "In a real sense he was kindly and soft-hearted in the steel dispute as compared with his feelings on medicare."

In Washington, the Group Health Association of America voted at its 12th annual meeting to reaffirm support of the social security approach to health care financing, a position the American Medical Association vigorously opposes.

The delegates, many of them members of the AMA, called for "immediate congressional action to provide health benefits for the aged financed through the Old-Age, Survivors & Disability Insurance system and administered directly by the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare."

GHA's system of direct service group practice medical care plans—many of them established or sponsored by labor unions—beat back the opposition of organized medicine in the 1930s and 1940s when it won a series of anti-trust actions against the AMA and some of its affiialtes.

Addressing the GHA meeting, Dr. James Howard Means, professor emeritus of clinical medicine at Harvard, likened the AMA to a "medieval guild" and said its energies have been directed "more and more toward the preservation of the status quo in medicine."

Meanwhile, these other developments added to the rising tempo of the drive:

- Five hundred members of the Columbia University faculty, including 140 physicians on the staffs of medical schools associated with the university, formed a committee to support the Anderson-King bill to meet the "urgent need to ensure that the world's wealthiest society does not neglect the medical care needs of the people who built it."
- The Physicians Committee for Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security, formed last March by a group of prominent doctors, charged that the AMA had refused to accept advertising giving their side of the issue for publication in the AMA Journal or the AMA News. The Physicians Committee reported it had enlisted about 1,000 doctors since formation of the group.
- The NCSC accused the AMA of opposing federal programs to aid patients, such as the Anderson-King bill, "while doctors collect millions of tax dollars" from other government programs, such as the medicare program for civilian dependents of servicemen, direct payments from the Public Health Service for treatment of merchant seamen and American Indians, and federal loans to expand their offices or to buy new medical equipment.
- The American Psychiatric Association refused to approve or deny the stand of its president, Dr. Walter E. Barton, in opposition to social security health care for retired persons.
- Ribicoff hailed the American Nurses Association for its repeated support of the social security approach despite intense pressure for reversal from the AMA and a number of doctors.
- The New Jersey Medical Society backed away from supporting a group of its members threatening to refuse to treat patients under the Anderson-King bill should it become law. The society passed a resolution proclaiming "the right of its members to hold and express views and opinions relating to the conditions under which they will practice medicine for the greatest benefit of their patients."

The society elected as its new president Dr. Louis S. Wegryn, who is listed in a recent brochure of the John Birch Society as a member of its committee of endorsers.

- Dr. Otto N. Glesne, retiring president of the Iowa Medical Society predicted that less than half the members of the society would take part in any program financed through the social security system.

5-19-62

Davis Lecture Fund Backed By AFL-CIO

The pioneering work of Dr. Michael M. Davis in the field of medical care, public health and hospital administration will be honored and perpetuated by a lectureship fund at the University of Chicago.

The lectureship project, initiated by a group of Davis' friends and colleagues on the occasion of his 80th birthday, has won the endorsement of the AFL-CIO Executive Council and the support of a large group of widely known business, labor, social welfare and medical leaders.

Dr. Davis has played a unique role in the medical care field as an advisor to the former AFL and the former CIO and, since merger, to the federation's Dept. of Social Security and, as a member of the Advisory Council, to the Community Services Committee.

The lectureship project at the University of Chicago has been accepted by the university which will receive and administer funds for lecturers and publication. A sum of $100,000 is the goal for the project.

The topic and the lecturer for each year will be selected by the university with the aid of an advisory committee.

Kennedy Asks Backing for Health Care

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 26, 1962 | No. 21

Meany Challenges NAM on 'Profits-Create-Jobs' Claim

Support of Public Urged by President

New York—Addressing an overflow rally of more than 20,000 at Madison Square Garden, Pres. Kennedy appealed to the American people to get behind the drive for a health insurance plan for the aged under the social security system.

Public support, the President declared, "is essential if this, or any other piece of progressive legislation, is going to be passed."

And, he predicted, the Anderson-King bill, which contains the health care plan, will be passed "as inevitably as the tide comes in."

The audience time and again interrupted Kennedy and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany with applause and roars of approval.

Meany referred to an earlier Garden rally to enlist support for the social security approach to health insurance, held in 1960, as "the preliminaries."

"Today we are here for round one of the main bout," he declared.

The rally's "three generations" theme, stressing the family's stake in health care for the aged, was underscored by the huge crowd of people in their 60's and 70's, younger workers and children.

See pictures of rally on Page 5.

More than 17,500 seats were quickly filled after the doors opened at 10:45 a.m. In the 90 degree heat outside, some 2,500 other persons packed a block of 49th St., seated on folding chairs, doorsteps and fire escapes to hear the speeches over a public address system.

An entertainment program, contributed by top union performers, began at 1 p.m. as a prelude to the speeches. Music was provided by a top-flight orchestra of 111 musicians, all 65 or older.

The New York rally was spon-

(Continued on Page 4)

35-Hour Workweek Drive Seen

By Gervase N. Love

Atlantic City—The AFL-CIO will start a nationwide campaign for the 35-hour week with no loss in take-home pay unless the country's rate of economic growth picks up "right soon," Pres. George Meany predicted before 1,500 cheering delegates to the Clothing Workers 23d biennial convention here.

Meany's forecast touched off a noisy demonstration. Only 24 hours earlier the convention had passed two resolutions calling for the 35-hour week—one in the industry and the other as an amendment to the Wage-Hour Act—despite Kennedy Administration opposition reiterated at the convention by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg.

"When we look at this unemployment situation we also take a look at the question of hours," Meany said. "We don't say that 40 hours is bad for the health of a worker. We have more sense than that. But when we reach the point where there is no other answer to this problem

(Continued on Page 10)

"SHOW US" is the challenge of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Charles R. Sligh, Jr., executive vice president of the National Association of Manufacturers, who had just argued at the White House Conference on National Economic Issues that more profits were needed to create jobs. Meany is shown as he took the floor and called on Sligh to spell out just how much profit industry feels it needs and how this could be translated into greater employment.

Adjustment Clause Hailed:

Labor Joins in Rally To Back Trade Bill

By David L. Perlman

America's national interest requires both expanded world trade and new forms of help for workers and companies hurt by the lowering of tariff barriers, the AFL-CIO has declared.

Labor's position is that these two key elements of Pres. Kennedy's trade bill are "inseparable," said AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison in a major speech to a national conference called to demonstrate broad public support for trade expansion.

The conference, attended by 1,200 representatives of 100 organizations, also heard:

- Pres. Kennedy declare that expanded trade with Europe's Common Market is necessary both for economic growth in the United States and to strengthen the Atlantic alliance.
- Four Cabinet members spell out the benefits of expanded trade to labor, business, agriculture and the nation's foreign policy.
- Bipartisan support expressed by Henry Cabot Lodge, former ambassador to the United Nations and GOP vice presidential candidate in 1960.
- Business and farm leaders join with labor in support of the Administration program.

In addition to Harrison, who addressed the general conference session, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and

(Continued on Page 4)

Tells Sligh To Back Up Statement

By John M. Barry

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, speaking from the floor at the White House Conference on National Economic Issues, challenged an industry spokesman to back up his argument that more profits would create more jobs.

"I don't care what profit you get, if you can put America back to work," Meany told Charles R. Sligh, Jr., executive vice president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

He called on the NAM to spell out just how much profit industry thinks it needs to create jobs, not to translate into "fatter salaries" or the "legalized larceny" of stock-option plans for executives.

The confrontation occurred after Sligh had completed prepared remarks in which he declared that the nation's nagging unemployment problem was the result not of automation, but of the "encroachment of labor costs and taxes upon business profits."

To Send Proposals

Sligh said he would send Meany copies of the NAM's job-making proposals, but that "the consumer should be the judge" of the proper level of profits.

The incident came on the second day of the conference, which brought together some 250 labor, management, public and government representatives to exchange views and seek greater understand-

(Continued on Page 12)

GOP Beaten on Cuts In Trade Bill Job Aid

Republican efforts to kill the "adjustment" sections of the pending trade expansion bill have been tentatively rejected by the House Ways & Means Committee in a series of votes.

GOP members sought to limit benefits to workers who lose their jobs because of imports to the amount of the regular state unemployment compensation. The bill itself provides 65 percent of average wages. In dollars, this would have cut benefits from an average of $48 a week under the Administration bill to $37 under the Republican proposal.

Operating Unions, Rails Resume Talks With Mediation Board Aid

The five railroad operating unions and rail management have agreed to resume negotiations on their dispute over work rules changes with the help of the National Mediation Board.

The decision was announced by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg after a meeting he had called in his Washington office following the operators' walkout from earlier bargaining sessions.

Goldberg said representatives of both parties to the dispute agreed to give full cooperation to Leverett Edwards, mediation board chairman.

"I am confident that both parties in good faith will make every effort with the board's help to resolve their differences," Goldberg said. 'It is important they do so because the national interest is very vitally involved in these negotiations."

Edwards, after consultation with the unions and the carriers, said meetings were scheduled to resume May 25 in Chicago.

At issue are broad changes in rules recommended by a special presidential commission which reported in February after lengthy hearings. Its proposals included ultimate elimination of all firemen's or helpers' jobs on diesel locomotives in freight and yard service, longer hours of work for a day's

(Continued on Page 12)

Morse Wins Primary Race For 4th Term

Sen. Wayne Morse won Democratic nomination for a fourth six-year term in the Senate in Oregon's primary elections. He will be opposed in the November general election by Republican Sig Unander, a former state treasurer, who defeated Rep. Edwin R. Durno, a first-term member of the House, in the GOP primary.

Morse, now among the top 16 of the 100-member Senate in seniority, was elected as a Republican in 1944 and 1950, renounced his GOP membership after 1954 to declare himself an independent, and won his third term in 1956 as a Democrat.

Democratic Representatives Edith Green and Al Ullman won renomination and Republican Rep. Walter Norblad had no opposition in his GOP primary. Former Rep. Charles O. Porter, who was beaten by Republican Durno two years ago, lost to Robert Duncan in the Democratic primary for the fourth Oregon House seat.

In the Nebraska primaries, two incumbent Republican House members were matched with each other as a result of the state's loss of one seat, and Rep. Ralph Beerman defeated Rep. Phil Weaver. Weaver charged in the campaign that Beerman had voted "95 percent" of the time with "acknowledged" members of the John Birch Society. Republican Rep. David Martin, who also was challenged as a right-winger, won renomination against a widely-known soil-and-water conservationist challenger.

A former Eisenhower Cabinet member, Fred Seaton, won the Republican nomination for governor against incumbent Democratic Gov. Frank Morrison.

In Oklahoma, former Gov. Raymond Gary trailed W. P. Bill Atkinson, a suburban-housing developer, by a close and indecisive margin in unofficial tabulations in the Democratic contest for governor.

Plumbers Get Increases in Canadian Pact

The Plumbers & Pipe Fitters have signed an agreement with the Industrial Contractors Association of Canada providing for a 10-cent-an-hour hike in the national rate for each of three years.

The pact, covering 40 Canadian firms, is a companion agreement to the one recently signed by the union and American contractors on a national basis. Retroactive to Apr. 1, 1962, the Canadian contract sets rates of $2.60 in 1962; $2.70 in 1963; and $2.80 in 1964.

The rates apply to all but the eastern Maritime Provinces, where they will be $2.35, $2.42 and $2.50.

Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the union and George Wilkenson of the Marwell Construction Co., spokesman for the contractors, predicted the new agreement would have a stabilizing effect on the construction industry in Canada.

Five Union Members Die on Fishing Trip

Los Angeles—The bodies of five members of Railway Clerks Lodge 1315 were recovered off Newport Beach following the sinking of a 25-foot fishing cruiser. Two other bodies were recovered, and two men still are missing.

The union members, employed as dock hands by the Universal Carloading & Distributing Co., were Robert Gibson, Jr., Harvey L. Johnston, Robert Herman Schmidt, William F. Huffman and John Treadway.

LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYMENT,[1] 1953 to 1961

[1] Unemployment of 15 weeks or more
* Percent of Long-Term Unemployment to Total Unemployment.
Source: U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics

Unilateral Pay Rise Held Unfair Practice

A unanimous Supreme Court has ruled it is not necessary to prove that an employer acted in bad faith for the National Labor Relations Board to hold that unilateral changes in wages and working conditions during negotiations constituted illegal failure to bargain.

The ruling reversed a decision of the 2nd U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which had refused to enforce an NLRB order against the Williamsburg Steel Products Co. The labor board held that the company committed an unfair labor practice in 1957 when it put into effect wage increases greater than it had offered the Technical Engineers in negotiations, and instituted a merit raise system and changes in sick leave policy which had not been agreed to by the union.

Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., speaking for the court, said unilateral changes in sick leave policy "plainly frustrated the statutory objective of establishing working conditions through bargaining."

The merit raises, he said, would have been permissible if the company had an established policy in this area, but he noted this was not the case.

On the general wage increase, Brennan declared:

"An employer is not required to lead with his best offer; he is free to bargain. But even after an impasse is reached he has no license to grant wage increases greater than any he has ever offered the union at the bargaining table, for such action is necessarily inconsistent with a sincere desire to conclude an agreement with the union."

There is "no resemblance," Brennan said, between this situation and one "wherein an employer, after notice and consultation, unilaterally institutes a wage increase identical with one which the union has rejected as too low."

The decision emphasized that unilateral action by an employer "without prior discussion with the union . . . must of necessity obstruct bargaining, contrary to the congressional policy."

On this basis, he said, the NLRB may hold such action to be an unfair labor practice "without also finding the employer guilty of subjective bad faith."

23-Cent Pact Ends Machinists' Strike

Buffalo—About 500 members of two lodges of the Machinists at the American Machine & Foundry Co. ended a 10-day strike here by ratifying new contracts calling for 23-cent-an-hour wage and fringe benefit packages spread over a three-year period.

The strike began when the 180-member office workers Lodge 992 objected to a management demand for the unqualified right to have supervisors assigned work previously done by members of the bargaining unit. Production and maintenance workers of Lodge 1297 joined the walkout although they had reached substantial agreement with the firm.

John Mullen, representative of Machinists Dist. 76, said the office workers' new contract calls for bargaining unit members to do the disputed purchasing and contract-estimating work, with management "supervision and investigation."

Car Carrier, Hoffa Indicted In T-H Case

A federal grand jury in Nashville, Tenn., has indicted James R. Hoffa on charges of accepting illegal payments from a Michigan trucking firm between 1949 and 1958. The trucking firm, Commercial Carriers, also was indicted on a charge of conspiring with Hoffa to violate a Taft-Hartley Act provision that forbids payments from employers to union officials.

The indictment states that Hoffa, president of the unaffiliated Teamsters Union, benefited with another Teamsters' officer, the late Owen Bert Brennan, through operations in a company called Test Fleet Corp., by a net income of $242,000 before taxes.

It alleges that Commercial Carriers "set up" Test Fleet in Tennessee and then transferred the stock to the wives of Hoffa and Brennan in their maiden names.

The purpose, the indictment charges, was to allow Test Fleet to "take title" to certain trucks, lease them back to Commercial for hauling Cadillac automobiles, and distribute the rental profits to stockholders, who were Mrs. Hoffa and Mrs. Brennan.

More than $1 million gross was made in payments to Test Fleet, the grand jury charge says.

A separate federal mail fraud indictment of Hoffa is pending in federal court in Orlando, Fla. This involves operations of a Sun Valley, Fla., real estate land promotion.

Hoffa was arrested recently in Washington, D. C., on an assault charge sworn by Sam Baron of the Teamsters' Warehouse Div.

Federationist Analysis:

More Jobs Asked for Retrained Workers

Retraining of jobless workers to teach them new skills will not by itself make significant inroads in persistent, long-term unemployment, the AFL-CIO has warned.

A federation analysis of the new manpower training program, which goes into operation in July, emphasizes the problems as well as the promises of retraining during a period of slow economic growth. The analysis, by the Dept. of Research, appears in the May issue of the American Federationist, AFL-CIO official magazine.

Labor supports the training program and vigorously worked for its passage, the article points out, because automation and technological changes have made many existing skills obsolete and have sharply reduced job opportunities for semi-skilled and unskilled workers.

"It is only through further training that the unemployed will be able to acquire the skills needed for job vacancies that exist now and for the type of job opportunities most likely to exist in the future," the Federationist article declares.

Unfortunately, there are only a limited number of genuine job openings which can presently be filled through retraining programs.

Not Enough Jobs

"Without such opportunities," the analysis notes, "training will be of little help and this is precisely our difficulty today—not enough job opportunities."

Pointing out that private spending "will not provide enough push" to bring about full employment, the analysis declares:

"What is needed, and needed urgently, are government programs and policies which will help to stimulate the economy."

Semi-skilled workers have been hardest hit by the combination of business recession and technological changes, the article points out. Despite the fact that 1962 is called a "recovery" year, long-term unemployment has not diminished.

Local Groups Needed

While unemployment among skilled workers has not been as high, "many skilled workers are presently unemployed." In such an atmosphere, "improving the skills of the unskilled and semi-skilled workers will not lead to employment" unless job opportunities are expanded.

Census Finds More TVs Than Phones

About 41 million households bought television sets between 1950 and 1960, the Census Bureau found among the 53 million households it enumerated two years ago.

The rise was from 5 million TV sets to 46 million. However, radio receivers still held the lead and were found in 48.5 million households, an increase of 8 million sets in the decade. Telephones, which were not counted in 1950, were found in nearly 42 million housing units in 1960.

The analysis emphasizes the importance of labor-management-public advisory committees being set up at the state and local levels to help supervise the program.

Although the legislation requires that there be "reasonable expectation" of a job at the conclusion of an individual's training program, the article warns that "there surely will be pressure at work to ignore this requirement simply to get people into the program. This will mean, of course, a waste of time and money and disappointment for the trainee."

Furthermore, the AFL-CIO notes, training workers for jobs which do not exist would "present a threat . . . to the standards of wages and working conditions."

Properly administered — and, above all, with other governmental measures to stimulate the economy—the program will help long-jobless workers regain their foothold in the nation's work force. If "improperly administered," the AFL-CIO warns, the legislation could end up doing "more harm than good."

The task of labor, management and government agencies, the federation analysis concludes, is to make certain that the program operates "in the most constructive manner."

Stonecutters Beaten In Attempted Raid

Knoxville, Tenn.—The Marble Polishers, backed by the AFL-CIO, have defeated a raid by the Stonecutters at the Tennessee Marble Co. here. Employes voted 72-22 to retain the Marble Polishers as their bargaining representative in a National Labor Relations Board election.

AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Paul R. Christopher helped the Marble Polishers during the campaign, as did a third union—the United Stone Workers.

The federation's active help was given after the Stonecutters had been found in non-compliance with the decisions of an impartial umpire under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes procedure.

A ruling by a subcommittee of the Executive Council put into effect constitutional sanctions against the offending union, including "assistance and aid" to unions resisting a raid.

The United Stone Workers assigned Marvin Blaylock, a member of the union's executive board, to assist the Marble Polishers and a delegation of rank-and-file Stone Workers from nearby areas came to Knoxville to help in the campaign.

Vice Pres. Wylie Lawhead of the Marble Polishers directed his union's successful effort to retain bargaining rights.

CLC Plays Host To Labor Editors

Ottawa—Over 30 U.S. labor editors were briefed on the key problems of trade union organization, the political structure and the Canadian economy during a three-day conference here sponsored by the Canadian Labor Congress.

The top officers and the staff of the CLC conducted background sessions for the editors in the key problem areas, touching off numerous questions and pertinent discussion.

The conference included a visit to Montreal for a first-hand look at the problem of bilingualism for the trade union press in the French-speaking areas of Canada.

Urges NLRB to Act:

TWUA Asks Court Order In South Carolina Firings

The National Labor Relations Board has been asked to seek a federal court order immediately reinstating three southern textile workers found by an NLRB trial examiner to have been fired illegally because of their union activities.

NLRB action was urged by the Textile Workers Union of America, which argued that a limited injunction issued last December against the West Point Mfg. Co. should be expanded in view of the trial examiner's findings.

The TWUA said its organizing drive at the firm's Wellington Mills division in Anderson, S. C., has been blocked "because of the fear engendered" by the firings last September—and the fact that the three workers have not yet been reinstated.

Last fall the NLRB sought an injunction against the company under the little-used Sec. 10(j) of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits the labor board to petition federal courts for immediate relief against unfair labor practices by unions or employers.

U.S. District Judge Robert J. Martin, Jr., promptly enjoined the company from using unlawful methods to prevent its workers from organizing but refused at that time to order the immediate reinstatement of the three union committeemen. He said court-ordered reinstatement of the employes before the NLRB had judged the case would "go beyond maintaining the status quo."

Reconsideration Urged

The TWUA urged the NLRB to petition Martin to reconsider his earlier ruling in light of the trial examiner's report and to extend his injunction to require temporary reinstatement of the three workers. Unless this is done, the union said, it would take "at least another 12 months" under normal procedures before the workers get their jobs back.

"The problem of urgency is reemphasized by the continuing inability of our union to conduct a fair election for the 500 Wellington workers while its key supporters still suffer from unlawful discrimination," TWUA Assistant Gen. Counsel Edward Wynne wrote.

In recommending the reinstatement with back pay of the three union supporters, NLRB Trial Examiner Sydney S. Asher, Jr., found that they had been discriminatorily fired as part of the company's "sustained campaign" to "stamp out" the union.

His recommended order calls on the company to "cease and desist" from illegal actions including interrogating employes, using "threats of reprisals or promises of benefits" to get them to stop wearing union buttons, and "suggesting" that employes "organize to combat any labor organization."

In addition to recommending that the company be ordered to stop specific unfair practices, the trial examiner said that on the basis of "past conduct" the employer should be barred from "in any manner infringing upon the rights of its employes."

The fired committeemen were Milford Allen, who had worked at the mill since 1938 except for wartime military service; H. C. McKinney, Jr., employed since 1945, and Luther Jackson Evans, first employed in 1956 and rehired in August 1961 after his return from military service.

Two Unions Begin Talks In Aluminum

Preliminary talks before contract negotiations have been opened by the Steelworkers and Aluminum Workers on behalf of more than 50,000 workers employed by five major aluminum firms.

Contracts with the Aluminum Co. of America and Reynolds Metals Co., held by both unions, expire July 31. Additional USWA agreements with the aluminum division of the Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. and with the Ormet Corp. expire on the same date, while pacts of both unions with Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corp. run out in October.

The USWA has begun exploratory talks on non-economic issues with all of its employers at sessions being held separately in New York. Talks with Olin Mathieson have been recessed briefly to permit union negotiators to fill previous commitments.

The Aluminum Workers have presented major contract proposals to Reynolds and Alcoa. They have not been made public, but a union spokesman said they were intended to increase job and income security. The union estimates that although 10 to 15 percent of its members have been laid off in the last two years, aluminum production is near record levels with the smaller work force.

The USWA represents about half the workers in the industry. The AWIU bargains for 18,000 at Reynolds Metals and about 3,000 at Kaiser. Other unions, including the Auto Workers, account for the remainder.

Clergy Urged to Lead Fight on Prejudice

A call for more leadership from the clergy in the fight on discrimination was voiced by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy at a day-long Community Leaders' Conference on Equal Employment Opportunity called by Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson.

A combination of the clergy, the government and private groups could make real progress in the field, Kennedy declared. He stressed the importance of "putting our own house in order" if the U.S. is to retain leadership in the free world.

Other speakers included Johnson, chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity; Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, vice chairman; Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff; Chairman John W. Macy of the Civil Service Commission; Mrs. Marjorie McKenzie Lawson, general chairman of the conference; Stephen N. Shulman, acting executive vice chairman of the President's Committee; John G. Feild, its executive director, and Hobart Taylor, Jr., special counsel.

William J. McSorley, assistant to the president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., presided in place of AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at a workshop on apprenticeship and training.

LABOR'S FIGHT ON BIAS was reviewed at a conference for staff representatives of the AFL-CIO and its affiliates at which speakers included Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler (seated, right), who gave the keynote address; Assistant Dir. Walter Davis (seated, left) of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights; and standing, left to right, Assistant Dir. Donald Slaiman and Dir. Boris Shishkin.

Labor Staffs Briefed On Civil Rights Goals

The full strength organized labor is bringing to bear in the fight for civil rights was mobilized at a two-day conference in Washington at which top staff representatives of the AFL-CIO and its affiliates reviewed plans aimed at attaining top effectiveness.

The urgency of labor's participation in the battle on bias was emphasized by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in his keynote address.

"A forceful and forthright civil rights mandate has been given us by the 1961 AFL-CIO convention," he said.

"Our task in the Civil Rights Committee is to see that the purposes of this mandate be put into practice throughout the ranks.

"We have enlisted active participation of the labor movement at four levels—national and international unions, trade and industrial departments, state central labor bodies and local and central labor bodies.

"This four-pronged drive is reinforced by the staff of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights and assisted by the other departments of the federation."

Unions Report

The participants reported on the status of the fight for civil rights in each affiliate and discussed how to make the unions' role more effective.

Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights discussed labor-initiated, communitywide cooperative programs, including surveys to serve as a basis for local action. Assistant Dir. Walter Davis outlined the new reinforced procedure for effecting compliance with AFL-CIO civil rights policy.

Assistant Dir. Donald Slaiman discussed labor's drive against bias in apprenticeship training programs, citing specific examples of union initiative in enlisting other groups in this phase of the fight.

Non-discrimination clauses in apprenticeship agreements with employers have been negotiated by more than 600 building trades locals, according to William J. McSorley, who represented Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

In other areas:

- John Feild, executive director, discussed the work of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. He was accompanied by John Bourg, in charge of trade union liaison.
- Executive Dir. Berl Bernhardt of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission reported on the progress of the commission's current studies.
- Roy Reuther, in charge of the AFL-CIO register-and-vote campaign, told of progress in that drive and discussed how to overcome the effect of denial of voting rights.
- Arthur Chapin, special assistant to Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, told of moves made to complete desegregation of state employment offices by the U.S. Employment Service, and described the liaison he maintains between the department's agencies and the President's Committee.

ICFTU Rips East German Secret Trial

Brussels — The East Germany secret trial of Heinz Brandt, German labor journalist, ending with his sentence to 13 years in prison by a Soviet zone court, has been bitterly denounced by Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"The free trade union movement is profoundly shocked and incensed at this trial which made a mockery of justice," he said in condemning the "purely political persecution" of a trade union journalist on duty.

Brandt, the victim of Nazi persecution during the Hitler regime, was editor of the West German metal workers' union paper, Metall. He was kidnaped and spirited into East Germany while in West Berlin in June 1961 to cover a meeting of the commercial, banking and insurance workers union. His arrest was announced some weeks later by East Berlin police.

The ICFTU protested his abduction in a formal complaint to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and to the UN Economic & Social Council, and in addition filed a complaint with the Intl. Labor Organization charging the Soviet Union, as occupying power, with a brutal violation of trade union rights.

The recent sixth world congress of the Intl. Federation of Journalists, held in Vienna, voiced its indignation at Brandt's imprisonment as a violation of human rights

NEWSPAPER INDUSTRY is not paying its employees salaries commensurate with their worth, delegates to a Newspaper Guild wage conference in Washington determined after studying rates in comparable industries. Delegates, some of whom are shown above, concluded that 1957 goals of $200 weekly for key classifications and $100 for all adult jobs can be attained soon if all members demonstrate their determination and coordinate their efforts. The goals are more than justified, the conference concluded, by rising living costs, pay for comparable work in other industries, and the healthy profits of newspapers generally.

A group of doctors presenting their statement on health care for the aged to President Kennedy

A Committee of Physicians Urges You To Support Health Care for the Aged . . . Through Social Security

On March 27, some 40 physicians from every part of the nation signed a statement which emphasized:

"We believe the social security system is a most practical and sound method of financing health benefits for the great majority of the aged."

The statement expressed our belief that "with such a method of financing health benefits for the aged, the physicians of America will be better able to maintain their commitment to provide high quality care and excellence of standards while preserving independence of professional judgment, and the aged will be better able to enjoy with dignity the best of modern medical care."

Large numbers of doctors, we believe, agree with that statement. (Many have written to our Committee expressing agreement.) We appeal to you for your support.

We believe that this program of health care for the aged will be good for the patient and good for the doctor. It will strengthen the voluntary hospitals and voluntary insurance plans, and it will lighten the present burden of public assistance programs. We also believe it will have the long-range effect of making possible the purchase of medical care from reputable physicians by many people who cannot now afford it.

As doctors study the principles of health care for the aged through social security, they are coming to understand that it is in no way an introduction to "socialized medicine" or an interference with "freedom of choice."

On the basis of our studies and experience as practical physicians we are completely satisfied that only through social security can adequate health care be made available for America's older citizens.

To help carry on the campaign for health care for the aged through social security, we appeal to you . . . our fellow physicians . . . to support this program with your name and, if you wish, with a donation.

The adjoining coupon is for your convenience.

Physicians Committee for Health Care
For the Aged Through Social Security
Room 226, 704 Seventeenth St., N.W. Washington 6, D.C.

1. ☐ I am pleased to add my name to those supporting Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security.
2. ☐ Enclosed is my contribution of $_____ to help the Committee support a program of Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security.
3. ☐ Please send me _____ copies of your brochure.

Name_____

Street & No._____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

A.N.

PHYSICIANS COMMITTEE FOR HEALTH CARE FOR THE AGED THROUGH SOCIAL SECURITY
Room 226, 704 Seventeenth Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Phone: Area Code 202 737-3171

MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE: Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn, Claverack, N.Y., Chairman; Dr. Robert H. Alway, Palo Alto, Calif.; Dr. David Barr, New York City; Dr. Leona Baumgartner, New York City; Dr. E. Michael Bluestone, New York City; Dr. DeWitt Burton, Detroit, Mich.; Dr. Martin Cherkasky, New York City; Dr. Robert E. Cooke, Baltimore, Md.; Dr. Edward P. Crump, Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. James P. Dixon, Yellow Springs, O.; Dr. Benedict Duffy, Jersey City, N.J.; Dr. Robert H. Ebert, Cleveland, O.; Dr. Alfred Gellhorn, New York City; Dr. Morton Goodman, Portland, Ore.; Dr. James H. Graves, Detroit, Mich.; Dr. Sven Gunderson, Hanover, N.H.; Dr. R. Francis Jones, Washington, D.C.; Dr. Lawrence S. Kubie, Towson, Md.; Dr. Philip R. Lee, Palo Alto, Calif.; Dr. Irving M. London, New York City; Dr. J. Howard Means, Dorchester, Mass.; Dr. Daniel R. Mishell, Beverly Hills, Calif.; Dr. Frederick D. Mott, Detroit, Mich.; Dr. Dickinson W. Richards, New York City; Dr. David Rutstein, Boston, Mass.; Dr. Ernest Saward, Portland, Ore.; Dr. William A. Sawyer, Rochester, N.Y.; Dr. Benjamin Spock, Cleveland, O.; Dr. Alonzo Yerby, New York City.

REJECTION OF THIS ADVERTISEMENT by the American Medical Association for paid publication in its AMA Journal or AMA News was "inconsistent" with the AMA slogan of "free choice," charged Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn, head of the Physicians Committee for Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security. The AMA refused the ad on the ground that it "does not conform" to its "standards," Esselstyn said. This was "consistent" with the organization's policy of "protecting the AMA membership from exposure to an unemotional presentation of facts" on the issue, he added.

Adjustment Features Essential To Trade Bill, AFL-CIO Holds

(Continued from Page 1)

Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg presented the AFL-CIO position at panel sessions.

Harrison emphasized that labor "wholeheartedly" supports the Administration trade bill, but warned against efforts by opponents to strip it of its adjustment features, including special unemployment benefits and retraining for workers who lose their jobs because of increased imports.

Bill Called 'Realistic'

"The AFL-CIO believes trade adjustment so essential that we cannot support a trade program without it." Harrison declared.

He termed the Administration bill "realistic" in that it discards the "head-in-the-sand-approach" of "pretending that trade cannot hurt anybody."

The Kennedy program, Harrison said, "includes both a direct admission that some groups might be hurt by more competition and offers some mechanisms to cure that injury . . . Adjustment assistance provisions in the bill would help those relatively few businessmen and workers who might get hurt."

Harrison emphasized that the drive for expanded trade should not be used as an excuse to keep wages down.

"The ever-rising ability to produce must be met by an ever-rising ability to consume," he declared.

Kennedy told the conference that the adjustment provision is "an insurance policy . . . tailored to help firms and workers get back into the competitive stream." He termed it "an investment in better production" instead of "the dole of tariff protection."

Former Pres. Eisenhower, in a message to the conference, strongly endorsed the trade program of his successor and specifically backed the adjustment features.

Government assistance "must be provided," he said, "for those who suffer dislocation" caused by trade programs which are "beneficial to the country as a whole."

Eisenhower's position was a turnabout from 1958, when major tariff legislation was last before Congress. At that time, labor-backed proposals to help workers and companies adversely affected by imports were rejected by the Administration.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said the adjustment provision "is designed not as a windfall for the few, but as part of a great effort to enhance the welfare of the many."

He noted that the bill calls for "higher worker benefits than those ordinarily provided in our unemployment and training programs" and termed this "both necessary and appropriate." He added:

Higher Benefits Appropriate

"They are necessary in order to provide adequately for the needs of the affected workers, most of whom will be in low-wage industries, and many of whom will have to learn new skills or will have difficulty finding other work because of their age.

"Higher benefits are appropriate because these workers will be suffering hardships as a result of a positive trade policy undertaken in the national interest."

Goldberg said the trade bill will create "several hundreds of thousands of jobs" through increased exports, while rising imports would affect "only about 90,000 workers."

Through retraining, he said, many workers would be able to learn new skills which would bring them more income than they now receive in low-wage industries. Lower consumer prices would repay taxpayers "many times the cost of the program," he added.

Kennedy Speaks to Nation:

Rallies Spur Public On Health Care Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

sored jointly by the Golden Ring Council of Senior Citizens here and the National Council of Senior Citizens, with headquarters in Washington. Across the nation, 32 other rallies involving more than 150,000 persons were being held simultaneously under sponsorship of the NCSC and its affiliates.

Drawing the issue in dramatic terms, Kennedy cited the case of a typical retired worker and his wife, on social security and a small pension, who are confronted with a major illness.

The first thing to go, the President said, is the couple's life savings of $2,500 to $3,000. Next comes a mortgage on their home, he continued, and then an appeal for help to their children, who are already burdened with payments on their own homes, for their own sicknesses and for the education of their children.

The husband, Kennedy observed, "finally goes in and signs a petition saying he's broke and needs assistance."

If the Anderson-King bill were enacted, the President said, the same retired worker would have the great bulk of his hospital bills covered by health insurance, prepaid during his working years through social security payroll deductions, without the requirement that he take a pauper's oath.

"This bill serves the public interest," he declared. "It involves the government because it involves the public welfare. The Constitution did not make the President or the Congress powerless. It gave them definite responsibilities to advance the general welfare and that is what we are attempting to do."

He charged the American Medical Association and other opponents of the social security approach with directing a mail campaign laden with misinformation against the Anderson-King bill.

He urged doctors not merely to read the statements and editorials in AMA publications—"because I do not recognize the bill when I hear those descriptions"—but to write to him, to other Administration officials or to the bill's co-sponsors, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. M.) and Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.), for copies of the measure and literature about it.

'Progress of Some Sort'

Meany saw "progress of some sort" in the "recognition" implied by a number of recent "alternative" plans that hospitalization expenses are a serious problem to the aged.

He charged Republican opponents of Anderson-King with putting a "price tag"—inclusion of commercial insurance companies—on their votes, and added:

"We are not satisfied with just the principle of social security financing. Half a principle is no principle at all. We want not only social security financing but social security administration as well. That is the way for the people to get their money's worth—the only way."

On some policies of commercial insurance firms, which GOP Sen. Jacob K. Javits wants to "cut in," Meany declared, only 39 cents in benefits are paid for every $1 collected. In contrast, he observed, under the social security plan, almost 97 cents of every dollar would go for benefits.

"Then, of course, under social security your protection could not be cancelled at all, and private commercial insurance companies have a habit of cancelling health insurance policies—even after a single claim," the AFL-CIO president continued.

Meany Sees Symbol In Garden Crowds

The Madison Square Garden background for the television broadcasts of Pres. Kennedy and the American Medical Association threw into "dramatic contrast" the health care for the aged programs of the Administration and the AMA, commented AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

"Madison Square Garden was jam-packed with people for Pres. Kennedy's program," Meany recalled, "and that was both right and symbolic, for Pres. Kennedy's program is for the people.

"Madison Square Garden was empty and barren for the American Medical Association's program—and that too was right and symbolic, for the AMA's program is just as empty and barren."

Meany cautioned the audience against overconfidence, urging his listeners to "lobby for the public good" by writing their congressmen and making sure their neighbors "know the truth about health insurance for the aged through social security."

Political Action Urged

"And we must register," he declared, "so that we can make our voices heard at the ballot box in support of candidates who themselves support the public welfare and in opposition to candidates who themselves place profit before the needs of people."

At Charleston, W. Va., Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security told a Senior Citizens Rally that "watered-down substitutes" for the Anderson-King bill hark back to the Kerr-Mills Act of 1960, which the AMA says is the only legislation needed on health care.

But 20 months after enactment, Cruikshank pointed out, only 23 states and three territories have programs in operation under Kerr-Mills, which provides direct federal grants to match state funds spent on medical aid.

Kennedy, in anticipation of the AMA's televised rebuttal Monday night, referred to charges that social security health care would "sap the individual self-reliance of Americans" and declared:

"I can't imagine anything worse to sap someone's self-reliance than to be sick, alone, broke or to have saved for a lifetime and put it out in a week, two weeks, a month, two months. . . .

Same Old Argument

"This argument that the government should stay out, that it saps our pioneer stock—I used to hear that argument when we were talking about raising the minimum wage to $1.25, and against the original Social Security Act of 1935 sponsored by Franklin D. Roosevelt."

He pointed out that the Anderson-King bill would interfere in no way with a patient's choice of doctor or hospital and predicted that no doctor would refuse to treat patients under it, despite the boycott threatened by a group of New Jersey physicians.

Kennedy agreed that Anderson-King would not solve all health care problems confronting the aged, "but it's a start."

The same was true, he said, of "all the great revolutionary movements of the . . . Roosevelt Administration in the Thirties we now take for granted."

Three generations of Americans rallied across the country May 20 in support of Pres. Kennedy's program for health insurance for the aged under the social security system. The President himself addressed a huge crowd filling Madison Square Garden (left) and overflowing onto 49th St., where Kennedy, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and other speakers were heard over a loudspeaker system.

The President's speech was televised nationally as a public service broadcast by the major networks and was piped into 32 other rallies held simultaneously at major cities. All were sponsored by the National Council of Senior Citizens and affiliated organizations.

Other photographs on the page depict scenes from rallies in Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Louis as well as New York. In all, the NCSC estimated, some 150,000 persons took part in the demonstrations.

Health Care Mass Rallies Span Nation

President speaks at Madison Square Garden.

Detroit rally hears and sees the President via a big-screen television linking the 33 demonstrations across the nation.

Big gathering in St. Louis applauds Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson

Faces in the crowd at Madison Square Garden.

Rep. Sidney Yates, Democratic Senate candidate, attends Chicago rally for Anderson-King bill.

Retired couples, workers and their children listen to speakers at Milwaukee program.

The General Welfare

IN NEW YORK CITY last week the President of the United States dedicated a new large cooperative housing development sponsored and built by a union.

In the same city he spoke at an overflow rally—one of two-score across the nation—to spur Congress into action on voting health care for the aged through the social security system, legislation strongly supported by American trade unions.

In Washington, AFL-CIO spokesmen called on Congress to adopt legislation to:

- Give consumers an accurate accounting of interest charges when they borrow money or purchase items on the installment plan—the "truth-in-lending" bill.
- Provide for free vaccination of all the nation's children to protect them against infectious diseases.
- Improve child welfare service programs under the Social Security Act and increase federal grants for welfare recipients.
- Assure equal pay for women workers doing the same work by barring discrimination.
- Guarantee equity in the income tax program by instituting a tax-withholding system on dividends and interest similar to the system long in effect for persons on wages or salaries.

Why labor's interest in housing, health care, interest rates, vaccinations, child welfare, equal pay for women and taxes? These are areas far removed from the wages, hours, working conditions for their members with which unions are supposed to concern themselves. Or are they?

Since the formation of the AFL in 1881, organized labor in America has been the people's lobby operating in the national interest, dedicated to the needs and welfare of the nation and all its citizens—whether union members or not.

As the basic rights of workers and their unions have slowly become recognized and accepted and unions have become part of the fabric of American society, they have played a vital role in advancing the national interest of all Americans.

★ ★ ★

THERE IS NO cohesive organization in America today that can properly represent and fight for the people's needs and desires in areas such as health care for the aged, public welfare, consumer protection, equitable taxes and a host of other matters. This is a job that the labor movement has performed historically and continues to perform today.

If public welfare is increased, health care for the aged enacted, or interest rates honestly stated on price tags, there will be no additional dues revenue for unions, no swelling of membership ranks. But union members and all other Americans will have a better chance of coping with the complex problems of a modern society, assured of aid and assistance in some areas and protection and equity in others.

This is payment enough. For the mission of the trade union movement as conceived by its founders and enlarged and carried on through the decades is to secure for all Americans a decent standard of living for themselves and their children, the dignity and respect due any individual, and security against the ravages of illness, unemployment and old age.

This is for the many, not the few; for all Americans, not just the dues-paying union member.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned.

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, May 26, 1962 No. 21

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'See, There's a Catch to It'

'The Case for the NDP':

Canada's New Party Sees People As Partners in Government

The following is excerpted from an article by T. C. Douglas, leader of the New Democratic Party in Canada, in the Canadian magazine Saturday Night, entitled "The Case for the NDP."

THE CENTRAL FACT of the New Democracy is a profound optimism about man and his society.

This optimism underlies the philosophy of the New Democratic Party. It integrates a consistent framework of specific social and economic goals. It commands a democratic political organization and inspires a vigorous political initiative.

On what is our optimism based? In the first place, on the essential moral nature of the human person. We in the New Democratic Party reject the limited view of liberal or reactionary capitalism that man is mainly a collection of acquisitive instincts, driven only by narrow self-interest and the pursuit of wealth and power.

We believe rather in man's ultimate power to "freely choose to live by what is right or wrong." We contend that his inherent quality is high. It can be made higher. We say that man can turn as naturally to cooperative service as to competitive self-seeking; that he will work, as J. S. Woodsworth said, to achieve for others what he desires for himself.

Such a belief leads clearly to a second fundamental. This is the radical and still revolutionary concept of human equality. It is still the most far-reaching political idea ever invented, and the "winds of change" are today sweeping it across every corner of the globe.

WE IN CANADA inherited this idea mainly from three direct sources—parliamentary democracy in Britain and the French and American revolutions. Perhaps so much lip-service has been rendered to it in our society that the idea has become dull and meaningless. Too many politicians have abused it. Too many school children learned it by rote. Far too little of it exists in Canada today.

Equality does not mean sameness. Other peoples around the world want their own culture, their own language, their own freedoms—just as we in Canada want differences between people to remain. All men were created equal. But clearly, they were not created the same.

The New Democratic Party says equality means the opportunity to develop the individual personality, without the handicaps of poverty, lack of education, ill-health or legal restriction. It means the chance to be free, to govern one's self, to have an education, a job, to enjoy economic security, to express a vital personality. And these things must apply to the ordinary man, not just to a privileged minority.

The third fundamental underlying the New Democracy is a continuing faith in the power of human reason and common sense. We insist that we can apply human intelligence and learning to the problems of our society. More and more, as technology expands and our inter-dependence grows, the solutions demand social action. Hence the necessary, dynamic role of government.

This is not government, or the state, for its own sake, as is so often absurdly proclaimed by our cities. It is government giving positive leadership in the creative evolution of human society. It is government inviting the participation of people at all levels to become partners in the democratic process. It is what we have so sadly lacked in Canada.

NO DOUBT such values can be achieved even without economic abundance. But how much easier should the task be in a country as generously endowed with actual and potential wealth as Canada!

Our overall program, therefore; will be the implementation of a democratically planned economy, geared to develop Canada's human and material resources, and to make the benefits of those resources available to every citizen.

Our country faces perilous times, times that call for difficult decisions. We do not suggest that our problems can be solved easily. But of this we are certain: they will not go away just because we ignore them.

Nor will they be solved unless we have a government which knows where it is going and can rally Canadians to the great tasks.

I believe the New Democratic Party can give the kind of new leadership this country so badly needs because the New Democratic Party itself has a sense of direction and a sense of purpose. We have a positive philosophy based upon an optimistic view of the potential of mankind. We have a consistent approach and a program which we believe will meet Canada's needs.

Morgan Says:

The Garden Set's Walter Mitty Learns Why Bins Are Bursting

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

I CAN'T GIVE Agriculture Sec. Orville Freeman much guidance on the Billie Sol Estes case but I may be able to ease his mind a trifle on another matter: the government won't have to lease extra facilities to store the surplus from the Morgan vegetable garden. The fact is, there isn't any garden in the normal sense of the word. What I've got is a small piece of the Sahara Desert, spotted with little oases of weeds.

Morgan

Last March, dutifully and hopefully, I planted some modest rows of radishes, carrots, onions and lettuce in a clearing which my wife had abandoned as a flower garden. "Planted," may not be precisely the appropriate verb. I peppered the furrowed ground with seeds in the manner of a sheepherder seasoning his breakfast. This may well have been my original mistake. Perhaps I was unconsciously acting on an unarticulated suspicion that my wife had abandoned the plot in the unshared knowledge that nothing would grow there, and therefore stubbornly reasoned that a saturation bombing of seeds might miraculously produce something.

At first it did. Nature worked her magic and in due course tiny green tendrils in the radish rows were pushing up through the brown earth to the sunlight and all that jazz. Even then I began to assume postures of smugness as I passed the vegetable troughs in the supermarkets. I was projecting my potential tax deductions as a truck farmer, writing off the cost of a hand cultivator, a section of hose with brass nozzle and, if Secretary Freeman will pardon the expression, fertilizer. I became the Walter Mitty of the kitchen garden set. I saw myself in a trim aquamarine pickup truck rolling, pocketa, pocketa, pocketa down Pennsylvania Avenue to get the first crop of choice Bolting Bibb lettuce and Evergreen Bunching onions to the White House.

But I had forgotten the chore of thinning. My saturation seeding had induced incipiently choking lines of green among the Sparkler White Top and the Early Scarlet Globe radishes and there were interesting signs of a population explosion by the Bolting Bibb though no vestige of life on carrot row, and only a few green toothpicks of promise from the onions. So, shivering slightly under the early morning Potomac mists, I fell to thinning the radishes.

Now I know why government storage bins are bursting. Farmers simply can't bear not to let things grow. I felt like a baby killer as I wrenched up the helpless surplus radish roots.

A miasma of crisis hung over the garden and I rose desperately to meet it with copious irrigation and gouges between the rows with my cultivator. Mostly I stood disenchanted at the bottom of my garden and glared at my potential dust bowl. With nature failing me, I thought, perhaps I could simply order the vegetables up from their beds, like new recruits at Fort Dix. Needless to say this silent reveille didn't work though I did succeed in cultivating, in the process of fuming, a handsome cluster of ulcers.

Impatience is one of my many weaknesses and at one point I realized I might be trying to hurry my harvest prematurely. So I retrieved the envelopes from the stakes I had thoughtfully put at the top of the rows and read the propaganda the snickering seed merchants had printed there. "One of the most easily grown home garden vegetables," I read of the radishes, "reaching full maturity in from 20 to 30 days."

IT WAS NOW more than 60 days since my March planting and it suddenly dawned on me that the crop might have subversively fooled me below the sickly foliage and was bursting to merchandisable succulence underground. But when I eagerly plucked a sample radish I found dangling between my fingers, instead of a plump vegetable, what seemed to be the wizened appendix of a pygmy, whose only remote resemblance to a radish was in its unhealthy, high-blood-pressure blush of red. If this was maturity, it had suffered an unhappy childhood and was already overdue for old age medical care.

There is still no trace of the carrots and the onion sprouts are withering with fatigue, one by one. I don't rightly know what went wrong. Maybe they sold me last year's seeds. Even the batches the Dept. of Agriculture used to mail you on request did better than that.

I am investigating my eligibility for participation in the soil bank and I am having a battery of attorneys examine the possibility that if I promise not to fail next year by not planting a garden, I may be in line for some compensation from the government.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

FOUR WEEKS AFTER RETURNING from Easter recess, Congress faced another week of agreed-upon inactivity because Memorial Day intervenes. Beginning June 1, obviously, the pressure will begin to increase and then we may expect some decisions.

Even so, the long delays in handling major proposals of the Administration seem likely to prolong the session until beyond Labor Day. This is upsetting to the members who must run for re-election. It is upsetting to their wives, who often are exasperated by the problem of what to do about entering the children in school and how to arrange a family vacation.

Some of the congressional wives campaigned a year or two ago for establishment of an annual recess for July and August. Hearings were held on the proposal.

To the wives—and to many of the younger members of the House and Senate—it seemed reasonable to have a summer recess, so that family vacations could be scheduled, with Congress returning in September to complete the session.

The senior members still do not seem sympathetic. They point to the piled-up logjam of appropriation bills, for example, and suggest that the country's business is more important than the convenience of members. A member who argues is likely to be reminded that there are ambitious young lawyers back in his home district who would be very happy to exchange places with him.

* * *

THE PACE OF CONGRESS has been even slower than usual, however, and not wholly because Pres. Kennedy's recommendations have encompassed a whole sweep of new departure-points.

Some of his proposals would have required lengthy hearings during any year—such programs as trade expansion and tax-law revision. Witnesses have a right to be heard on such matters in both House and Senate committees, and members have a right to carefully drafted committee reports that will explain the purpose and effect of legislation.

There is the further fact that some votes have been delayed pending primary elections, particularly in the southern states. The race issue is still sufficiently inflamed to warn House and Senate members who are at least moderately liberal on economic issues to try to avoid unreasonable rollcall showdowns between Administration supporters and the conservative coalition. They would rather wait until after the primaries.

A few years ago the late Rep. Thurmond Chatham lost out in a Democratic primary in his North Carolina district. Chatham was a thoroughly conservative member with a textile manufacturing background. Why did he lose in his conservative district? He was among the small group who refused to sign the so-called Southern Manifesto that denounced Supreme Court decisions on school desegregation.

Another delaying factor has smouldered; a prestige clash involving two antique members, the chairmen of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees. The 83-year-old House chairman, Clarence Cannon, suggested that conference committees should meet half the time on the House side of the Capitol; the 84-year-old Senate chairman, Carl Hayden, saw no reason to change the custom of having all such meetings on the Senate side.

* * *

IF THERE IS ANY PATTERN in the primary elections thus far, it is that the incumbents are winning on both Republican and Democratic sides. In more than half a dozen states, there has been only one notable casualty—Rep. Carroll Kearns of Pennsylvania, who was beaten in his Republican primary. Kearns is ranking GOP member of the House Labor Committee and would have been in line for chairman when and if the Republicans ever regain control of the House.

This does not mean that there will not be changes in November. Seats will change hands between the two parties. But there is as yet no indication that this is a year of sweeping upsets such as came in 1958, when Republican Rep. Wint Smith of Kansas said it was "not an election but a social revolution."

Woman Judge Makes Plea for One Million Youths Out of School

New York—America's displaced citizens are the million "out-of-school, out-of-work young people who have no place" in our national life, a member of Pres. Kennedy's Committee on Employment of Youth has said.

Judge Mary Conway Kohler told the 57th annual conference of the League for Industrial Democracy here:

"The devastating effects of long-term unemployment of youth will continue to grow unless we, as a nation, take drastic steps to overhaul our educational, training guidance and employment machinery."

Mrs. Kohler, who was a Juvenile Court judge in San Francisco for 15 years, recently completed an 18-month nationwide survey on youth and job opportunities which found that advanced technology is eliminating "entry" jobs for young people. Such a development, arising out of the growth of automation, means that schools must keep children longer to "teach them the more complex skills which society demands."

One immediate reform would be to offer youngsters at least two years of college free, said Judge Kohler. The heart of the problem is that the majority of the million unemployed youth are youngsters who left high school before graduation and are untrained for anything but the diminishing supply of unskilled jobs.

Dr. Charles Abrams, visiting professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, dealt with the problem of the modern American city and the need for setting up criteria for urban renewal and housing projects.

What modern cities lack, he said, is the feeling of community. To bring this community spirit about, Abrams offered these tests in seeking to create "a good environment" for city dwellers.

- "We must be careful what we destroy." The demolition of a functioning neighborhood should be treated carefully to see what can be preserved in a new housing development of the old community identity.
- "Slum" is a word which needs redefinition because "slum transference" is not slum clearance. Chinatown is a physical slum by congressional definition, but it has other compensatory values that make it a sounder section than some planned subdivisions in well-to-do Westchester County, he said.
- "We must be more scrupulous about what we build. Many old houses . . . are better in standards than new multiple dwellings that are being built."
- "We must create more escape hatches in the city"—recreation centers and good schools "may often be as important as housing projects." More small parks and squares, more neighborhood centers, are needed, he said.

Raps Northern 'Blockade'

Roger Star, executive director of the City Housing and Planning Council, told the LTD that three obstacles stand in the way of getting proper housing—money, segregation, and understanding of the purpose of housing. He added:

"In this enlightened northern city, where we spend as much time sneering at the South as necessary to keep our consciences from tormenting us, I would call the racial blockade the biggest single obstacle to the housing that people want."

A highlight of the luncheon was presentation to James Farmer, national director of the Committee On Racial Equality (CORE) and leader of the Freedom Riders, of the John Dewey Award for 1962.

OVERSIZED FREE TICKET to the AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show now under way in Portland, Ore., was presented to Mayor Terry D. Schrunk (second from right) by Joseph Lewis (left), show director and secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Union Labor & Service Trades Dept., during proclamation signing ceremonies. Next to Lewis is Austin J. Haughey, union label director for the Oregon AFL-CIO, with Sec.-Treas. Edward J. Whelan, of the Multnomah County AFL-CIO, at far right.

How to Buy:

Food Fads, 'Miracle' Pills Can Be Costly, Even Harmful

By Sidney Margolius

LABOR AND CO-OP medical specialists, such as Dr. William A. Sawyer, Dr. George Shucker and Dr. Manus Orenstein, have been campaigning for years to guard wage-earning families from food fads and notions. These can be expensive and sometimes even harmful.

But the fads persist, fostered by sensational books, nutritional lecturers and articles. Sometimes these notions are part - truths blown up by promoters, and sometimes there is little or no truth at all. People fall for these notions because there is always a tendency to look for easy solutions to medical or emotional problems, especially something you can take by mouth.

There are two types of costly food fads that plague the public. One is centered on a particular "miracle" food or vitamin product, like the current safflower oil fad, and the recent honey-and-vinegar sensation.

The other expensive nutritional notion, found especially among moderate income families, is that the higher-grade foods have more nutrition than cheaper grades. As one housewife recently told this department: "If you try to save on food you spend money on doctors instead. I don't want my family to get stomach trouble from cheap food".

This is only a part-truth, of course, since the expensive and cheap grades of the same foods have the same nutrition. In at least several examples, notably meat, the lower-priced grades have more or higher-quality nutrition.

A favorite device of diet-food and vitamin-supplement manufacturers is to promote their products with claims made in popular books and articles. The U.S. Food & Drug Administration already has made four seizures of safflower oil capsules that had been promoted with copies of the best-selling book, "Calories Don't Count", by Dr. Herman Taller.

The Food & Drug Administration charged that Dr. Taller's book and other labeling material represent the safflower oil capsules as effective in controlling weight without regard to caloric intake. Other claims made for the capsules are that they are effective in lowering the cholesterol level of the blood, treating arteriosclerosis and heartburn, improving the complexion, increasing resistance to colds and sinus troubles, increasing sexual drive and other purposes.

ACTUALLY, SAYS THE FDA, the products supply such small amounts of safflower oil daily that they are insignificant for any purpose. Moreover, the FDA points out, while Dr. Taller's book claims that overweight people can eat thousands of calories a day and still lose weight by including unsaturated fats, the typical diet in the book actually is restricted in calories. The truth is, calories do count.

Nor is it just the so-called fringe dealers who have been involved in the controversial promotion of safflower oil and the "Calories Don't Count" book. The government seizure actions were taken against such leading chains as the United Whelan Drug Stores, and such big department stores in various parts of the country as Korvette and Thalheimer's.

Recently the FDA seized tablets claimed to contain enzymes or other ingredients claimed to be effective in treating many conditions, together with reprints of a Reader's Digest article titled "Enzymes, Medicine's Bright Hope." FDA said claims for the products were based on the article, which speculated on the possible future of enzymes in medicine. Reliance on such claims may be harmful in delaying adequate medical attention for diseases.

Carlton Fredericks is a radio broadcaster whom the FDA describes as a "self-styled nutritionist". He often has recommended many vitamin and other products over the air for various serious conditions, and in his commercials plugged products containing these substances sold by Foods Plus, Inc., a mail-order firm. Recently the FDA seized a large part of the firm's inventory together with copies of its catalog.

Another popular health food lecturer and book writer is Lelord Kordel. He also is president of a health-food company, Detroit Vital Foods, Inc. FDA charged that this company sold honey as a cure for waning virility, arthritis, and even "premature death". Honey is only a food with no such preventive or curative properties, the FDA said.

Honey was also the miracle item in the promotion of the recent best-seller "Folk Medicine". This book prescribes unpasteurized honey and apple-cider vinegar for preventing or treating 60 different conditions from heart attacks to falling hair.

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

To Play One-Downsmanship, Take a Firm Negative Stand

By Jane Goodsell

PEOPLE USED TO BRAG about things they did. Now they brag about things they don't do. To hold your own in conversation these days, you have to take a firm negative stand against practically everything.

Once you get the hang of it, it's easy. All you have to do is stake your claim to not doing something more thoroughly than other people don't do it. You might call it One-Downsmanship. Here's how you do it:

First person: "I never watch the Ed Sullivan program."

Second person: "I've never seen the Jack Paar show."

Third person: "Our set's been broken for months."

Fourth person: "We've never had a TV in the house."

* * *

First person: "We went to Hawaii last year, and didn't take hula lessons."

Second person: "We went to Mexico, and didn't see a bullfight."

Third person: "I go to New York every year, and I've never been to the top of the Empire State Building."

Fourth person: "I've lived in Oregon all my life, and I've never seen Crater Lake.

First person: "I don't know how to play bridge."

Second person: "I can't remember what beats what in poker."

Third person: "The only game I know how to play is Old Maid."

Fourth person: "I don't know one suit from another."

* * *

First person: "I don't know anything about sports."

Second person: "I don't take any interest in politics."

Third person: "I don't know anything about art, but I know what I like."

Fourth person: "I don't even know what I like."

* * *

First person: "I've given up smoking."

Second person: "I haven't had a drink for six months."

Third person: "I never touch candy."

Fourth person: "I never eat anything made with saturated fats."

* * *

First person: "I never go to American movies."

Second person: "I don't go to foreign films either."

Third person: "I haven't been to a movie since I saw Elizabeth Taylor in 'National Velvet'."

Fourth person: "Who's Elizabeth Taylor?"

Seen by Writer:

'Awakening of Heart' Good Omen for South

The following is excerpted from a speech prepared by Lillian Smith, writer and novelist, on her acceptance of a Sidney Hillman prize award for her article, "The Ordeal of Southern Women."

AS A WRITER, my special point of view, my personal way of looking at life, has been determined by my experiences with segregation—which is far more than a social or economic or political problem. Segregation is a symptom of a dehumanized way of life that springs from our loss of vision of the human being and his future.

Segregation is a symbol of all we lack, a symbol of hollow men, of emptiness; a symbol of brokenness. We cannot limit this word to race relations. Our entire lives are fragmented; we are split off from the source of wholesomeness; we are not deeply related even to ourselves.

And yet, although we need wholeness, it is the nature of man to be broken. In a philosophical sense, segregation is of the essence of the human condition. For we are all segregated from ultimate knowledge; and birth and death are two archetyped forms of segregation which every one of us will experience. These are the great separations we cannot alter. And it is out of them, out of the search for meaning, the longing to understand birth and death, the hunger to know the ultimate that all the great human questions have come: Who am I? Why was I born? Why am I your child? What is eternity? Who is God? Why is death?

★ ★ ★

ANCIENT AND UNANSWERABLE questions, and yet to stay human we must never stop asking them. What is dangerous, what becomes a kind of blasphemy is when we dare to give small answers to these great questions. The man who asks "Who am I?" and answers "I am a white man," has lost himself as a human being. This is his fall.

But man has a strange and wonderful way of transcending his weakness. He knows he cannot answer the great questions with surety, so he learns to ask smaller ones, as in science, that he can find answers for. He cannot rid himself of his profound loneliness but out of it come his art and poetry and music; out of this inability to answer what must always be asked, and out of the loneliness has come a new quality of human relations. The chasms between man and himself and his world cannot be filled up but they can be bridged; we cannot merge ourselves with others but we can relate.

It is with these matters that I am concerned; the specific, the little, the concrete and the deeper and more symbolic forms.

While I do not want to be too cheerful, I think there is an awakening of the heart in the South; people are searching themselves, separating themselves from that part of the past which cannot be carried into the future. I feel this happening. It is a small thing, now, but it is a sign, a good omen.

A. B. Herrington, editor of the CWA News, monthly publication of the Communications Workers, has resigned to join the public information division of the Area Redevelopment Administration.

IRS Urged To Tax Gifts For 'R-T-W'

A Pennsylvania congressman has asked the Internal Revenue Service to rule that contributions to so-called "right-to-work" committees are not tax deductible.

Rep. John H. Dent (D-Pa.) denounced the drive for state laws banning union shop agreements as "a movement which creates friction in our industrial life."

He said, in a letter to Internal Revenue Commissioner Mortimer M. Caplin, that "solicitations for funds to support these political activities are filling the mail of businessmen in Pennsylvania as well as in other states."

Noting that a recent attempt by the Coca Cola Co. of Indianapolis to deduct contributions to a "right-to-work" committee as a business expense had been disallowed by the Indiana district of the IRS, Dent suggested that the ruling be adopted nationally.

He quoted from a Better Business Bureau report which said the National Right-to-Work Committee advises members that contributions are tax deductible "but we can give no assurance that this will not be challenged."

'Not the Case'

Dent inserted in the Congressional Record the letter he has written to the IRS and added:

"There are many of us who believe that there is a lack of sincerity in the promotion efforts of this group and that many innocent persons are led to believe that their contributions are tax exempt, and after the money has been spent they find that such is not the case."

Machinists Award Five Scholarships

Four high school students from the United States and Canada, and a 33-year-old father of two children are winners of four-year college scholarships awarded by the Machinists.

Each scholarship pays $1,000 a year under a program financed by the international union, locals, state councils and ladies auxiliaries. A five-man committee of educators chose the winners from among 1,023 applicants, including children of union members and IAM members under the age of 35.

The winners were Anthony J. Duben, Milwaukee, Wis.; Sheila J. Dyer, Vancouver, B. C.; Edith A. Genung, Miami, Fla., and David Morgan, Sandusky, O., all high school students, along with Robert F. Howell, a member of IAM Lodge 727D at Burbank, Calif.

Howell, employed as a steel heat treater at Lockheed Aircraft, plans to enter San Fernando State College to study engineering and metallurgy.

158 Stations Show 'Americans at Work'

The AFL-CIO's television film series "Americans at Work" is being shown on 158 TV stations, including 27 educational stations, from coast to coast and in Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

The series is made available free of charge to stations whose viewers may see the story of typical American workers on the job. Readers are asked to consult their newspaper where exact day or time is not listed.

CITY-STATE	STATION	DAY	TIME
Birmingham, Ala.	WBRC-TV (6)	Sunday	6:15 a.m.
Dothan, Ala.	WTVY-TV (9)	Wednesday	3:00 p.m.
Florence, Ala.	WOWL-TV (15)	Saturday	5:00 p.m.
Mobile, Ala.	WALA-TV (10)	Check Local Listing
Montgomery, Ala.	WSFA-TV (12)	Sunday	5:45 p.m.
Anchorage, Alaska	KENI-TV (2)	Friday	7:15 p.m.
Fairbanks, Alaska	KFAR-TV (2)	Saturday	5:30 p.m.
Phoenix, Ariz.	KTVK-TV (3)	Saturday	2:00 p.m.
Tucson, Ariz.	KVOA-TV (4)	Saturday	11:45 a.m.
Yuma, Ariz.	KIVA-TV (11)	Sunday	4:45 p.m.
El Dorado, Ark.	KTVE-TV (10)	Check Local Listing
Ft. Smith, Ark.	KFSA-TV (5)	Saturday	1:00 p.m.
Bakersfield, Calif.	KBAK-TV (29)	Saturday	5:45 p.m.
Chico, Calif.	KHSL-TV (12)	Check Local Listing
Eureka, Calif.	KIEM-TV (3)	Saturday	8:30 a.m.
Redding, Calif.	KVIP-TV (7)	Saturday	4:00 p.m.
San Francisco, Calif.	*KQED-TV (9)	Tuesday	11:00 p.m.
San Jose, Calif.	KNTV-TV (11)	Sat. & Thurs.	10:15 p.m.
Grand Junction, Colo.	KREX-TV (5)	Check Local Listing
Pueblo, Colo.	KCSJ-TV (11)	Check Local Listing
Bridgeport, Conn.	WICC-TV (43)	Monday	7:00 p.m.
Hartford, Conn.	WHNB-TV (30)	Sunday	12:45 p.m.
New Haven, Conn.	WNHC-TV (8)	Sunday	9:45 a.m.
Waterbury, Conn.	WATR-TV (53)	Saturday	6:30 p.m.
Washington, D. C.	WRC-TV (4)	Sunday	9:00 a.m.
Ft. Myers, Fla.	WINK-TV (11)	Friday	11:00 a.m.
Gainesville, Fla.	*WUFT-TV (5)	Tuesday	6:15 p.m.
Jacksonville, Fla.	*WJCT-TV (7)	Check Local Listing
Miami, Fla.	*WTHS-TV (2)	Check Local Listing
Panama City, Fla.	WJHG-TV (7)	Tuesday	4:45 p.m.
Pensacola, Fla.	WEAR-TV (3)	Saturday	3:15 p.m.
Tallahassee, Fla.	*WFSU-TV (11)	Mon., Wed., Friday	12:30 p.m.
Tampa, Fla.	*WEDU-TV (3)	Wednesday	10:30 p.m.
Albany, Ga.	WALB-TV (10)	Saturday	6:00 p.m.
Atlanta, Ga.	*WETV-TV (30)	Friday	7:15 p.m.
Savannah, Ga.	WTOC-TV (11)	Saturday	Check Time
Honolulu, Hawaii	KHVH-TV (4)	Sunday	6:30 a.m.
Boise, Ida.	KBOI-TV (2)	Sunday	11:30 a.m.
Idaho Falls, Ida.	KIFI-TV (3)	Check Local Listing
Lewiston, Ida.	KLEW-TV (3)	Monday	4:15 p.m.
Chicago, Ill.	*WTTW-TV (11)	Friday	7:00 p.m.
Danville, Ill.	WICD-TV (24)	Sunday	12:45 p.m.
Springfield, Ill.	WICS-TV (20)	Check Local Listing
Elkhart, Ind.	WSJV-TV (52)	Friday	10:00 a.m.
Fort Wayne, Ind.	WKJG-TV (33)	Sunday	9:30 a.m.
Indianapolis, Ind.	WFBM-TV (6)	Sunday	9:15 a.m.
Des Moines, Ia.	WHO-TV (13)	Sunday	11:00 a.m.
Fort Dodge, Ia.	KQTV-TV (21)	Sunday	6:15 p.m.
Ottumwa, Ia.	KTVO-TV (3)	Saturday	5:00 p.m.
Sioux City, Ia.	KVTV-TV (9)	Saturday	Check Time
Waterloo-Cedar Rapids Ia.	KWWL-TV (7)	Sun. (Alt.)	12:30 p.m.
Alexandria, La.	KALB-TV (5)	Check Local Listing
Monroe, La.	KNOE-TV (8)	Sunday	12:45 p.m.
New Orleans, La.	*WYES-TV (8)	Tuesday	6:15 p.m.
New Orleans, La.	WVUE-TV (13)	Sunday	3:30 p.m.
Bangor, Me.	WLBZ-TV (2)	Saturday	1:30 p.m.
Portland, Me.	WCSH-TV (6)	Saturday	8:15 a.m.
Baltimore, Md.	WBAL-TV (11)	Sun. (Alt.)	8:45 a.m.
Salisbury, Md.	WBOC-TV (16)	Saturday	12:30 p.m.
Boston, Mass.	*WGBH-TV (2)	Check Local Listing
Greenfield, Mass.	WRLP-TV (32)	Check Local Listing
Springfield, Mass.	WWLP-TV (22)	Check Local Listing
Worcester, Mass.	WWOR-TV (14)	Check Local Listing
Cadillac, Mich.	WWTV-TV (13)	Check Local Listing
Detroit, Mich.	*WTVS-TV (56)	Check Local Listing
Detroit, Mich.	WXYZ-TV (7)	Check Local Listing
East Lansing, Mich.	*WMSB-TV (10)	Saturday	9:30 a.m.
Marquette, Mich.	WLUC-TV (8)	Saturday	9:30 a.m.
Alexandria, Minn.	KCMT-TV (7)	Saturday	12:45 p.m.
Austin, Minn.	KMMT-TV (6)	Sunday	2:45 p.m.
Duluth-Superior, Minn.	WDSM-TV (6)	Sunday	Check Time
St. Paul, Minn.	*KTCA-TV (2)	Friday	10:00 p.m.
Greenwood, Miss.	WABG-TV (6)	Mon. & Wed.	12:45 p.m.
Meridian, Miss.	WTOK-TV (11)	Sunday	12:45 p.m.
Kansas City, Mo.	WDAF-TV (4)	Check Local Listing
St. Louis, Mo.	*KETC-TV (9)	Monday	6:30 p.m.
St. Louis, Mo.	KSD-TV (5)	Sunday	11:15 a.m.
Springfield, Mo.	KYTV-TV (3)	Sunday	9:30 a.m.
Billings, Mont.	KOOK-TV (2)	Saturday	3:30 p.m.
Great Falls, Mont.	KFBB-TV (5)	Tuesday	5:15 p.m.
Missoula, Mont.	KMSO-TV (13)	Saturday	11:00 a.m.
Omaha, Neb.	WOW-TV (6)	Wednesday	7:30 a.m.
Reno, Nev.	KOLO-TV (8)	Friday	5:30 p.m.
Claremont, N. H.	Channel 79	Sunday	10:45 a.m.
Lebanon, N. H.	Channel 81	Sunday	10:45 a.m.
Albuquerque, N. M.	*KNME-TV (5)	Wednesday	1:00 p.m.
		Friday	4:15 p.m.
Carlsbad, N. M.	KAVE-TV (6)	Wednesday	5:30 p.m.
Binghamton, N. Y.	WNBF-TV (12)	Sunday	11:45 a.m.
Buffalo, N. Y.	WBEN-TV (4)	Saturday	Check Time
Buffalo, N. Y.	*WNED-TV (17)	Monday	7:45 p.m.
Schenectady, N. Y.	WRGB-TV (6)	Saturday	12:45 p.m.
Watertown, N. Y.	WCNY-TV (7)	Check Local Listing
Chapel Hill, N. C.	*WUNC-TV (4)	Friday	12:00 noon
Greensboro, N. C.	WFMY-TV (2)	Friday	7:00 a.m.
Raleigh, N. C.	WRAL-TV (5)	Saturday	Check Time
Fargo, N. D.	WDAY-TV (6)	Saturday	12:15 p.m.
Grand Forks, N. D.	KNOX-TV (10)	Saturday	12:15 p.m.
Akron, O.	WAKR-TV (49)	Sunday	6:45 p.m.
Columbus, O.	*WOSU-TV (34)	Check Local Listing
Dayton, O.	WLW-D-TV (2)	Saturday	Check Time
Toledo, O.	*WGTE-TV (30)	Monday	2:30 p.m.
Toledo, O.	WTOL-TV (11)	Sunday	12:15 p.m.
Youngstown, O.	WKBN-TV (27)	Sunday	9:00 a.m.
Zanesville, O.	WHIZ-TV (18)	Sunday	9:00 a.m.
Oklahoma City, Okla.	*KETA-TV (13)	Tuesday	6:15 p.m.
Tulsa, Okla.	*KOED-TV (11)	Tuesday	6:15 p.m.
Coos Bay, Ore.	KCBY-TV (11)	Tues. & Thur.	4:15 p.m.
Corvallis, Ore.	*KOAC-TV (7)	Wednesday	6:00 p.m.
Eugene, Ore.	KVAL-TV (13)	Tues. & Thur.	4:15 p.m.
Medford, Ore.	KBES-TV (5)	Wednesday	4:45 p.m.
Portland, Ore.	KPTV-TV (12)	Sun. (Alt.)	9:00 a.m.
Roseburg, Ore.	KPIC-TV (4)	Tues. & Thur.	4:15 p.m.
Erie, Pa.	WSEE-TV (35)	Check Local Listing
Harrisburg, Pa.	WHP-TV (55)	Saturday	1:30 p.m.
Johnstown, Pa.	WJAC-TV (6)	Sunday	10:45 a.m.
Lebanon, Pa.	WLYH-TV (15)	Saturday	2:05 p.m.
Ponce, Puerto Rico	WSUR-TV (9)	Tuesday	5:00 p.m.
San Juan, Puerto Rico	WKBM-TV (11)	Wed. & Sat.	5:15 p.m.
Providence, R. I.	WJAR-TV (10)	Sunday	10:30 a.m.
Charleston, S. C.	WUSN-TV (2)	Saturday	2:15 p.m.
Columbia, S. C.	WIS-TV (10)	Saturday	7:00 a.m.
Florence, S. C.	WBTW-TV (8)	Tuesday	7:45 a.m.
Spartanburg, S. C.	WSPA-TV (7)	Check Local Listing
Aberdeen, S. D.	KXAB-TV (9)	Friday	9:30 p.m.
Rapid City, S. D.	KRSD-TV (7)	Check Local Listing
Sioux Falls, S. D.	KELO-TV (11)	Saturday	2:45 p.m.
Knoxville, Tenn.	WBIR-TV (10)	Sunday	9:45 a.m.
Memphis, Tenn.	*WKNO-TV (10)	Tues. & Thur.	3:45 p.m.
Nashville, Tenn.	WSM-TV (4)	Sunday	10:40 a.m.
Abilene, Tex.	KPAR-TV (12)	Saturday	Check Time
Dallas, Tex.	*KERA-TV (13)	Monday	2:15 p.m.
		Thursday	9:45 a.m.
El Paso, Tex.	KELP-TV (13)	Sunday	2:30 p.m.
Houston, Tex.	*KUHT-TV (8)	Mon. & Wed.	6:45 p.m.
Laredo, Tex.	KGNS-TV (8)	Saturday	6:00 p.m.
Midland, Tex.	KMID-TV (2)	Sunday	1:00 p.m.
Port Arthur, Tex.	KPAC-TV (4)	Check Local Listing
San Angelo, Tex.	KCTV-TV (8)	Saturday	12:30 p.m.
Sherman, Tex.	KXII-TV (11)	Saturday	5:45 p.m.
Tyler, Tex.	KLTV-TV (7)	Sunday	1:15 p.m.
Waco, Tex.	KWTX-TV (10)	Saturday	12:30 p.m.
Weslaco, Tex.	KRGV-TV (5)	Saturday	1:00 p.m.
Wichita Falls, Tex.	KSYD-TV (6)	Saturday	12:00 noon
Harrisonburg, Va.	WSVA-TV (3)	Sunday	1:30 p.m.
Lynchburg, Va.	WLVA-TV (13)	Thursday	7:45 p.m.
Norfolk, Va.	WVEC-TV (15)	Sunday	1:45 p.m.
Richmond, Va.	WXEX-TV (8)	Saturday	8:30 a.m.
Roanoke, Va.	WSLS-TV (10)	Sunday	9:45 a.m.
Ephrata, Wash.	KBAS-TV (43)	Monday	4:15 p.m.
Pasco, Wash.	KEPR-TV (19)	Monday	4:15 p.m.
Seattle, Wash.	KOMO-TV (4)	Sunday	9:15 a.m.
Yakima, Wash.	KIMA-TV (29)	Monday	4:15 p.m.
Clarksburg, W. Va.	WBOY-TV (12)	Sunday	12:45 p.m.
Eau Claire, Wis.	WEAU-TV (13)	Saturday	6:00 p.m.
Green Bay, Wis.	WFRV-TV (5)	Sunday	9:00 a.m.
La Crosse, Wis.	WKBT-TV (8)	Check Local Listing
Madison, Wis.	*WHA-TV (21)	Tuesday	Check Time
Madison, Wis.	WKOW-TV (27)	Check Local Listing
Milwaukee, Wis.	*WMVS-TV (10)	Friday	6:45 p.m.

*Denotes educational television station.

DEMONSTRATION in favor of the 35-hour week for the men's clothing industry was staged by delegates to the Clothing Workers convention in Atlantic City as soon as the resolution was introduced. A companion resolution called for the 35-hour week in an amended Wage-Hour Act.

Jewelry Union Reports Gains, Elects Spodick

Miami Beach—Support for the program which has brought the Jewelry Workers from near-insolvency to a treasury surplus in three years was voted by delegates to the union's 16th convention here.

Pres. Harry Spodick was re-elected to another term as union head and secretary-treasurer, double duties first imposed at the 1959 convention in Washington, D. C., when the union had just emerged from a trusteeship imposed by the AFL-CIO.

Also re-elected in convention balloting were Vice Presidents David Levine, William Serota, Leon Sverdlove, Charles Rogan, Joseph Mulvey, Morris Kaplan, Adolph Gonzalez and Martin Serventi. Three new vice presidents also were chosen—Joseph Costa and Mack Young, New York City, and Fred Petersen, San Francisco.

Organizing Goals Set

Delegates approved an expanded program of organizing for the New England states; Puerto Rico, the New York metropolitan area and New York state; authorized a committee to work on proposed changes in the IJWU constitution for a report to the next convention; and urged vigorous local support of the AFL-CIO political action program.

Spodick reported a membership increase of about 3,000 in three years, and a small financial surplus.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told the convention that the work force is increasing at the rate of 1.3 million persons a year and that a reduction in hours must be considered to provide needed work.

Schnitzler emphasized "the vital part that political action must play" in retaining workers' gains won at the bargaining table.

Burlington Steel Signs Pattern Pact

Hamilton, Ont.—The Burlington Steel Co. has accepted the pattern settlement negotiated by the Steelworkers and Canada's larger basic steel firms.

USWA Local 4752 and the company signed an agreement providing for a 21-cent-an-hour package spread over three years, with wage increases of 4.5 cents retroactive to Jan. 1, 1962, and 5 cents effective Jan. 1, 1964. In addition, stepups between each job category were increased by a half-cent to 6.5 cents an hour effective next Jan. 1, and 7.5 cents will be applied to insurance and pension improvements next year.

35-Hour Week Drive Possible 'Soon'—Meany

(Continued from Page 1)

of the nation's economic health, then we have to say something must be done about the hours question.

"I don't quarrel with some good friends of our who have the idea that a shorter workweek won't solve our problem. They are entitled to their opinion. I am entitled to disagree. I am entitled to make a prediction, that is, that unless we very quickly see the end of this unemployment problem—unless we see the economic growth step up beyond the 2.5 percent which is slowly but surely going to relegate us to the status of a second-class nation—unless this happens right soon, I predict that the AFL-CIO will start a nationwide campaign for a 35-hour week with no loss in take-home pay."

In other speeches:

- Robert C. Weaver, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, predicted that Pres. Kennedy will issue an executive order banning discrimination in housing assisted under federal programs—"and it will be issued during the first of the two Kennedy Administrations."
- Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, a one-time legislative representative for the ACWA, called on the union to help "the forgotten folk of our affluent society" share in the benefits that union members enjoy, citing specifically laundry and domestic workers, hotel and restaurant employes, farm and migrant workers and other low-paid service workers who are not covered by federal or state labor laws.
- Lord Morrison of Lambeth, who as Herbert Morrison was leader of the British Labor Party, hailed the union's decision to fight for the 35-hour week and health care for the aged under social security. He vigorously denied claims made in this county that doctors are leaving Great Britain rather than continue practice under National Health Insurance.

'War for Survival'

Meany told the convention that American economic health and prosperity for the people are "items in the war for survival." The U.S. cannot maintain its free world leadership or "stand off the Soviet challenge" unless it is able to keep the economy healthy, he declared.

"There is something wrong with the system that provides payment for those who manage, provides interest on risk capital to the stockholders and cannot provide jobs on a year-round basis for its workers," he said.

"We of labor don't claim to have all the answers. We have made some suggestions. I have made the point that it is not our responsibility to find all the answers. Jobless workers are not the concern of trade unions alone. And in this world situation, jobless workers should be the concern of the entire nation because they affect the standing of the entire nation."

The convention renominated without opposition Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and Gen. Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum to new two-year terms after raising their salaries from $20,000 to $25,000 annually. All incumbent vice presidents were renominated, including Hyman Blumberg, whose subsequent re-election as executive vice president is in the hands of the executive board. A score of nominations were made for vacancies created by the death last year of Ulisse De Dominicis of Baltimore and the recent resignation of Mrs. Ruth V. Payne of Knoxville, Tenn.

Referendum election ballots go to members 30 days after the close of the convention and are tallied in September.

Toronto Plans Drive For New Labor Temple

Toronto, Ont.—Organized labor in Toronto will campaign this summer for $1 million to build a new labor temple.

The Toronto Labor Temple Co. has acquired property adjoining the present 78-year-old structure.

In Low-Wage Industries:

UPWA Sets Goal Of 'Full Paychecks'

By Saul Miller

Minneapolis—Fair wages and full paychecks for the "short-changed" workers in the food and allied industries will be a top priority for the Packinghouse Workers Union as it enters its second 25 years of existence.

Delegates to the union's 13th constitutional convention here called specifically for action on the economic problems of members in "the allied section of the organization where wages and benefits are lagging" and prepared to back up their actions by voting on an increase in per capita payments.

Coupled with the attack on conditions in low-wage rural communities and in sparsely organized industries, the union gave top priority to a political action program that will make the government a "partner" in the "crusade" for the "forgotten men of today."

The 150,000-member union, which has lost nearly 17,000 members in the United States in the past four years due to the increasing impact of automation and the increased number of plant closings and relocations, looked for more of the same this year, with closings announced or effected in 1962 already involving well over 2,000 members.

The officers reported that in the two years since the last convention the union won 101 of 151 elections—"a percentage which is comparable if not superior to the national average." But the delegates, in adopting a report by the Officers' Report Committee, termed this "less than satisfactory," and called for organizing projects "which give promise of producing long-term growth to our organization."

Helstein Sets Goals

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein keynoted the convention in a speech reviewing the history of the union's first 25 years and projecting the path for the future. He called for:

- Re-examination by unions of their role, their structure and their make-up so that they can "aggressively assert their social responsibility" and conform "in a more meaningful way to the realities of current industrial life."
- Completion of the organizing job "with special emphasis on those two-fifths of the American people who live in poverty and deprivation, who have nowhere else to look but to us for succor and survival."
- An understanding that "the answers to many of our more perplexing problems . . . will be found only through political action . . . We must bring the same devotion, intelligence and ingenuity to political education as we bring to our collective bargaining."

In the past 25 years, Helstein said, packinghouse workers' wages have moved from 60 cents to $2.36 per hour plus a wide range of benefits and protections. The same record is found in sugar refinery workers and among stockyard workers, he noted.

He warned that the trade union movement faces problems arising from an urge to protect the status quo, a move toward becoming an institution rather than a movement and a sense of cynicism that's part of the "fast buck" society.

3-Way Battle Seen

The America of the next 25 years, he said, will be shaped by the current battle between three forces—the Birchites, the Goldwaters and the America of Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln and the Roosevelts. The trade union movement must take up the battle for this latter force dedicated to progress, peace and freedom, he stressed.

The officers' report to the convention declared that the problem of the low-wage industry "will not be headed in the direction of solution until a concentrated and coordinated attack on this serious imbalance in the distribution of national income can be mounted by the labor movement in all its branches."

The report termed the "general direction of the Kennedy Administration" a "welcome relief from the negativism of the past" but was critical of "what appears to us to be a failure to approach with sufficient vigor the related problems of structural unemployment and a lagging growth rate."

It termed retraining programs "a meaningless exercise in futility unless there is a job somewhere at the end of the line," adding:

"These elusive jobs will only be produced by a shortening of the standard workweek, as labor has insisted, together with a great program to upbuild the public sector of the economy."

Pres. Kennedy wired the convention his congratulations on its 25th anniversary, declaring that the union has demonstrated its "devotion" to the needs of its members and the "general public interest." He said the present time demands solutions in the area of collective bargaining "in harmony with the public interest."

Furniture Workers' Convention Approves Fund for Strike Relief

Louisville—Establishment of a strike relief fund climaxed a five-day convention of the Furniture Workers here as 175 delegates approved a 10-cent monthly assessment.

Union Pres. Morris Pizer emphasized the "urgent need" of a strike fund, noting that newly-organized shops without local financial reserves especially suffer in strike situations.

"After spending the time, money and energy necessary to organize a plant," Pizer said, "it is an absolute necessity to have the means of a financial follow-through if the employer refuses to bargain in good faith to conclude a contract." Strike expenses since the last convention, he said, have amounted to $100,000.

"The cost of strikes," added Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford, "has had a most severe impact on our ability to make ends meet."

A collection was made for the union's Jamestown, N. Y., local, where 150 members have been on strike against the Jamestown Sterling Corp. for seven months.

Pizer also called for an intensive drive to organize unorganized chain branch plants in the furniture industry as an answer to the problem of "runaways." Thirty percent of furniture workers are employed in such operations, a resolution noted, with the number "increasing through merger and independent plant acquisition."

Joint Councils Urged

A recommendation also was approved on crossing international union boundary lines with joint councils.

"Concerted chain bargaining" of this type was given credit for a recent major contract settlement at the Memphis plant of the Ivers and Pond Piano Co., served by the National Winter Piano Council. The council, composed of two UFWA locals, a local of the Machinists, and an unaffiliated local, sent representatives to a mass meeting in Memphis to strengthen the bargaining position of the Memphis workers.

Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers said in a major convention address that organizing efforts by labor unions have been slowed by restrictive legislation. Union membership in Canada, where there is no legislation comparable to the Taft-Hartley Act, has "vastly outstripped American union growth," he said.

In ILGWU Convention Keynote:

Dubinsky Urges 35 Hours As U.S. Workweek Ceiling

Atlantic City—Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers called for a 35-hour workweek as the "standard for the entire nation" as he opened the union's 31st convention here.

"So long as we are threatened with the prospect of unemployment for a long time to come, the reduction in the length of the workweek is a must," Dubinsky declared in his keynote address to nearly 1,000 delegates.

Noting that the ILGWU already had won the 35-hour week for its own members, he suggested that it was "not a wild dream" to spread that standard to other industries.

"It is an eminently practical device to provide additional employment and, at the same time, to enhance the purchasing power of the nation's wage earners and of their families," Dubinsky said.

Citing the current high rate of unemployment and the progressively higher level of joblessness left after each post-war recession, the ILGWU president warned that "if things are left to themselves" the situation is likely to worsen as technological change displaces more workers and the growth of the labor force accelerates.

"This is why, in my considered judgment, we have reached a point in our national history when the length of the workweek must be cut," Dubinsky declared. "The 35-hour week, which we have won in our industries, must become the current standard for the entire nation."

The Kennedy Administration has repeatedly spoken against a workweek reduction as a means of combatting unemployment, holding out instead a goal of full employment at 40 hours.

But reductions in the workweek can be achieved "within the framework" of the general wage policy advanced by the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Dubinsky declared. He said experience shows that wage gains can be "applied in part to offset the effect of shorter hours and in part to increase the buying power of weekly incomes."

Reviewing the accomplishments of the ILGWU in addition to the 35-hour week, Dubinsky cited the establishment of paid holidays and employer-financed funds that disburse health and welfare, retirement, severance and supplementary unemployment benefits to the union's members.

In contrast to hourly wages as low as 5 to 15 cents when the industry was largely unorganized, the average wage in New York's dress industry now is $2.57 an hour, he pointed out.

The average for the country as a whole—$1.93—has been dragged down by the unorganized sectors of the industry, such as the South, where wages may be only slightly higher than the legal minimum, he said.

$1.50 Minimum Urged

Dubinsky called for amendments to the wage-hour law at the "earliest possible moment" to set the minimum wage at $1.50 and the maximum straight-time workweek at 35 hours.

In other areas, the ILGWU president:

- Predicted enactment of the Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the aged through social security and that "within our lifetime the [American] Medical Association will support it."
- Upheld Pres. Kennedy for "sound judgment and real leadership" in resuming nuclear testing in the face of the Soviet Union's refusal to agree to a test ban with adequate inspection.
- Hailed the Administration's Alliance for Progress with Latin American nations as "a great step forward" in helping "impoverished peoples to develop their own economies and to promote their social and economic welfare."
- Found that the unity of the AFL-CIO had been "strengthened" by the creation at its last convention of machinery for settling internal disputes.

ORPHAN BOYS AND GIRLS in 9 Italian Boystowns, 1 Girlstown and 31 day care centers are grateful for the continued support of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Msgr. John P. Carroll-Abbing, left, told the RWDSU convention in presenting a plaque to union Pres. Max Greenberg. Support of the orphanages has been a union project for several years.

Strike Fund Approved By Distillery Workers

Montreal—Two hundred and fifty delegates to the 11th convention of the Distillery Workers here wound up deliberations by adopting a series of proposals by Pres. Mort Brandenburg designed to streamline the union in pursuit of its bargaining and organizing goals.

Per capita to the union was increased from $1 to $1.50 per month and monthly minimum local dues were set at $4. In addition, a strike fund of $400,000—to be financed by a special assessment of 50 cents a month per member—was established. It will provide strike benefits of $25 per week.

First beneficiaries of the strike fund will be members of Local 36, whose walkout against Stitzel-Weller Distilleries, Inc., is entering its tenth month. Full support to the strikers was unanimously approved by the convention, which heard AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler pledge AFL-CIO backing in a nationwide boycott of the firms's products.

In other resolutions unanimously adopted, the delegates:

- Gave top priority to a shorter workweek, an industrywide pension program and family coverage in demands to be made on the major distillers in 1963 collective bargaining.
- Called for an all-out drive to organize such hard-core anti-union holdouts in the distillery industry as Heaven Hill in Kentucky and Jack Daniels in Tennessee.
- Hailed the formation of the AFL-CIO Food & Beverage Trades Dept.
- Voted to participate in the Conference of Beverage Unions to be held Aug. 20-22 in London under the auspices of the Intl. Union of Food & Allied Workers' Associations.
- Pledged full cooperation to COPE in fund-raising and get-out-the-vote drives in connection with the 1962 election campaign.
- Unanimously adopted the reports submitted by Brandenburg and Sec.-Treas. George J. Oneto.

San Francisco was selected as the site of the 12th biennial convention, to be held in May 1964.

'Old Fitzgerald' Boycott Backed

Shively, Ky.—The nine-month strike of Local 36 of the Distillery Workers against the Stitzel-Weller Distilling Corp. is continuing here with its request for a boycott of the company's products supported by the AFL-CIO.

The federation's Executive Council has asked all affiliates to support the Distillery Workers local in its fight for survival against an all-out company assault. The Stitzel-Weller firm's products include Old Fitzgerald, Cabin Still, Old Elk and W. L. Weller bourbon whiskies.

DISTILLERY WORKERS at Montreal convention heard AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler urge united action in support of labor goals. Listening, left, is union Pres. Mort Brandenburg.

Jack McCoy Gets COPE Area Post

Jack McCoy, a member of Packinghouse Workers Local 1, Ottumwa, Ia., recently was named director of COPE Area 9 by COPE National Dir. James L. McDevitt.

The area covers North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Wyoming and Montana. McCoy succeeds Walter F. Gray, who recently was appointed director of the COPE area made up of New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas and Missouri.

'Willful' Voting Failure Called 'Unfair Practice'

Miami Beach—The union member who willfully fails to register and vote is guilty of an unfair practice—and labor is committed to the abolition of unfair practices, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union at its 25th anniversary convention here.

Schnitzler congratulated the union for "yoeman service" in behalf of civil rights, for its cooperation with the AFL-CIO on minimum wage law improvement and for helping set up a training school for Latin America union leaders.

The convention re-elected Pres. Max Greenberg and four other top officers for four-year terms; set up permanent committees on civil rights and political education; and called for intensified work in organizing, collective bargaining and wage-hour law improvements.

Some 600 delegates from more than 300 local unions in the United States and Canada, constituting the best-attended convention in RWDSU history, approved two constitutional changes eliminating payment by the international union of a $100 death benefit, and raising top officers' salaries.

Abolition of the death benefit will reduce annual operating costs by about $60,000 and will permit the union to operate without increasing the per capita tax now paid by locals to the international union—85 cents a month, Greenberg said. For the five or so locals which have no contract-provided death benefit, he offered union help in negotiating such benefits.

Training Program for 85

Schnitzler related how a South American trip by Greenberg and officials of other AFL-CIO affiliates helped lead to the establishment of the American Institute for Free Labor Development. This year, he said, the institute is bringing 85 Latin unionists here for three months of intensive training, and will keep them employed for nine months after their return to "spread the trade union gospel." By 1964, he said, up to 300 trainees are expected to be enrolled.

As chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Civil Rights, the federation officer thanked RWDSU for its efforts on behalf of Tennessee tenant farmers threatened with eviction by their landlords, and said the fight for civil rights is "only one aspect of labor's constant fight for human dignity and freedom."

The convention also:

- Returned Greenberg to office along with Sec.-Treas. Alvin A. Heaps; Exec. Sec. Jack Paley and Executive Vice Presidents Arthur Osman and Alex Bail.
- Re-elected 17 vice presidents and chose five new ones to fill vacancies—Joseph Binenbaum, Theodor Bowman and Leon J. Davis of the New York area, George McLean of Detroit and Lock Parker of Suffolk, Va.
- Made plans to offer a week-long educational program for union leaders at a centrally located college.

Len Wallace, delegate from Regina, Sask., reported that the first government-sponsored medical care plan on the North American continent will become effective July 1. It will provide complete medical and surgical care for all of Saskatchewan's 900,000 residents at a cost of $12 to $40 a year, he said.

Glass Unions Set Goals for Joint Action

Pittsburgh—A statement of principles and objectives to guide the Stone, Glass & Clay Coordinating Committee was approved unanimously at a meeting here which also set July 1 as the target date for official establishment of the group.

The committee is made up of AFL-CIO unions with about 225,000 members in the United States and Canada. It was established to make possible joint activity in the fields of legislation, international affairs, research and education, and in other matters of mutual concern and benefit.

Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers, an AFL-CIO vice president, is acting chairman, with Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken of the Glass & Ceramic workers serving as temporary secretary-treasurer.

Other unions represented at the meeting were the Window Glass Cutters, Flint Glass Workers, Operative Potters and Stone & Allied Products Workers.

The SGCCC has been functioning informally since 1956. Minton and McCracken said the principles adopted here call for close cooperation with the AFL-CIO and its departments.

The committee's executive board, which consists of the principal officers of each affiliate, will meet in Chicago at the time of the AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting opening Aug. 13.

Meany Challenges NAM Profits-Job Tie

Demands 'Proof' at White House Parley

(Continued from Page 1)

ing on economic policy and problems.

Pres. Kennedy, in opening the sessions, urged the delegates to try to separate "myth from reality" in exploring the "sophisticated technical questions" raised in the areas of economic growth, collective bargaining, automation and the international balance of payments.

Kennedy said he was pleased that the conference would not seek to achieve artifical agreement or pass resolutions because "they would probably be so generally worded that they would give us very little guidance—and what we really need are specifics."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy which had set up the conference, said it was the first of a planned series of such meetings.

He told the delegates that while the Administration is opposed to compulsory arbitration and wage or price controls, it had "an inescapable responsibility" to define the national interest "in all vital segments of American life, including bargaining."

Sligh's remarks came during a discussion of the benefits and problems of automation. The NAM official argued for a "more wholehearted endorsement of automation" without the "burden" of "all sorts of extra costs, penalties, restrictions and responsibilities."

"Opportunities for profit are the necessary base for business expansion and the creation of new jobs," he declared.

Urging him to make the NAM's position "crystal clear," Meany replied:

"It is not enough to tell us that industry makes jobs and things will take care of themselves."

Meany Cites NAM Obligation

The AFL-CIO president said the NAM had an obligation to explain how industry proposed to create 1.35 million jobs a year over the next decade to take care of increases in the labor force and another 200,000 a year to take care of workers permanently displace by automation.

Most Americans, Meany declared, correctly or incorrectly believe that industry's profits already are too big, and "the figures put out by some of these large corporations are staggering."

"So I challenge the NAM," he continued, "to tell us how much profit they need—business needs—and how this profit is going to be translated into jobs, not how it is going to be translated into fatter salaries for some of the high executives, not how it is going to be transferred through stock-option plans into this business of legalized larceny that is practiced by some of these companies, but how it is going to be translated into jobs, because the problem of this nation today is jobs for people . . .

"And if they can show me, I am for more profits."

In his formal address, Meany charged that despite professions of faith in the collective bargaining process by some management representatives, thousands of businessmen still were fighting union organizing efforts. Management organizations, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, were "taking up the cudgels for a transparently anti-union device like the so-called 'right-to-work' laws," he said.

He urged the businessmen present to start "a missionary campaign among the dissenters in their own ranks," and declared:

"If management does not want to destroy unions—and their presence here today is evidence to that effect—then we urge them to stop this rank nonsense by the hired lobbyists of business organizations and let us get on with the job of building mature collective bargaining relationships."

Shorter Workweek Backed

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Keenan followed Sligh's assertion that a shorter workweek would be "just about the worst" approach to the unemployment problem by declaring:

"It would be ideal if all Americans could find jobs and work a full week. But the hard fact is that this is not the case in 1962 . . . A shorter workweek is not necessarily 'the answer' to automation. But it is part of the answer. And we cannot afford to wait until all the answers are found and the most desirable solutions achieved."

Prof. John T. Dunlop of Harvard, a spokesman for the public, suggested that the historic pattern of reductions in working time was likely to continue, adding that "it will be necessary to cut working hours" in industries with serious unemployment.

Earlier, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter Reuther told the assemblage that the chief problem facing the economy was "inadequate demand" from consumers.

"We've got to shift the emphasis to more purchasing power because there is no point in building more factories to stand idle," he declared.

Reuther also urged the delegates to examine new economic concepts coming out of Europe, not necessarily to copy them, but "to explore together whether as free men we cannot find a more rational way to work together to harness the great abundance that is now possible.

Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon outlined steps the Administration has taken to ease the U.S. balance of payments deficit and reiterated its position that wage and profit increases should stem generally from productivity gains.

Lower Prices Urged

Charles P. Taft, general counsel of the Committee for a National Trade Policy and a public representative, argued that rising productivity ought to be translated into lower prices as well as higher wages and profits.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George Harrison declared that U.S. products already were competitive in world markets and that while the nation should strive to increase its export surplus of $5 billion last year, this should not be the only approach to curing the payments deficit. He urged business to become more aggressive in promoting sales abroad.

"We are in no humor to countenance any suggestion that wage scales be depressed" as a means of improving the trade surplus, he declared, noting that 96 percent of the nation's production is consumed at home and only 4 percent is sent overseas.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David J. McDonald presided at the session on foreign trade.

Walter W. Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said that the high rate of joblessness and the slow rate of economic growth are "decidedly more serious problems for us today than the threat of any new inflation."

DEDICATION CEREMONIES for Ladies' Garment Workers' new Penn Station South cooperative housing project were addressed by Pres. Kennedy, shown with ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, both of whom also spoke.

Kennedy Hails Union Co-op Housing As Contribution to National Welfare

New York—America's unfinished business is the concern of organized labor, and what the nation achieves will depend in great measure on how unions help build for future generations, Pres. Kennedy declared at the dedication of Penn Station South, a $40 million cooperative housing development built by the Ladies' Garment Workers in mid-town Manhattan.

In New York City on a two-day visit for a round of appearances planned as a salute to his 45th birthday on May 29, the President hailed the housing development as a contribution to the welfare of the nation.

It is the task of each generation to build for the next, the President said, urging America's unions to join government and business in strengthening the nation.

"The unfinished business of our society lies stretching before us, and this housing project demonstrates what labor, with effective and progressive leadership, can do in cooperation with cities and states and private groups and the federal government," he declared.

"I hope others will follow your example," he told a crowd of some 15,000 persons who braved 99-degree heat to attend the dedication. The President drew laughter and applause when he noted that in spite of all the progress achieved by the ILGWU he was registering a grievance "against the sweatshop conditions under which we're working today."

Sharing the speakers platform with the President were AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, New York City's Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky.

Hailing Dubinsky for "dynamic" leadership of the ILGWU, Meany said that although the union was primarily concerned with the welfare of its membership, it had "the leadership and intelligence to realize that a better community with better government and better homes means a better life for its members."

"Here is a graphic demonstration of what a powerful union like the ILGWU does with its power," Meany declared. "Here is a demonstration of the American philosophy that what's good for the community as a whole is good for American workers."

Dubinsky explained that ILGWU is not in the real estate business, but is concerned with improving the lives of workers, of lifting their material and spiritual standards.

"The dreams and hopes that brought thousands of immigrants to these shores early in the century never died," the garment union leader said. "They were the ammunition of pioneers who marched on picket lines, hungry but determined.

"They held on to the daring thought that the time would come when there would be a civilized length to the work day, a humane standard of pay, decent conditions of work, and when they could live in homes surrounded by space and sunshine and green things."

Penn Station South includes ten 22-story, centrally air-conditioned buildings covering a six-block, 20-acre area, and containing 2,820 units which replace slum buildings previously occupied by 2,646 families. Only 16 percent of the site is occupied by the buildings, and 13 acres are set aside for gardens and play areas. Cooperators' equity or down payment is $650 a room, and average monthly carrying charges range from $19.60 to $27.45 per room.

The development was built as a Title I urban renewal project under the National Housing Act of 1949. It is estimated that about a third of the apartments will be occupied by ILGWU families.

As Kennedy spoke to the crowd, he faced signs bearing the message, "Happy Birthday to You, Jack," erected on construction sheds by the various building trades unions working on the project.

Operating Unions, Rails Agree to Resume Talks

(Continued from Page 1)

pay, and, by 1967, compulsory retirement of operating employes at age 65.

The carriers accepted the recommendations and said they would put them into effect, which they can do on a 30-day notice. The unions rejected them, but agreed to negotiations on the basis of the report. It was these negotiations that the rails bolted, alleging the unions refused to bargain. Goldberg then called the meeting in his office.

The unions asked the mediation board for further help in breaking the deadlock, though there had been some doubt that the agency could take additional formal steps. The 1960 agreement, under which the dispute went to the presidential commission, said in one place that the commission role was a substitute for that of the mediation board. In another it said that if no solution were reached, board procedures would be resumed and expedited.

It also carries a clause stating that should either party appeal to the board within 10 days of the breaking off of negotiations, wages, hours and working conditions should remain unchanged. The unions' appeal to the mediation board thus served to block any move by the carriers to put the presidential commission's recommendations into effect.

Involved are three AFL-CIO affiliates—Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, and Switchmen—and two unaffiliated groups—Locomotive Engineers and Conductors & Brakemen.

Meantime, negotiations have been resumed in Chicago in a second railroad labor dispute, this one involving the carriers and non-operating unions which have been seeking wage increases and improved working conditions for 500,000 employes.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 2, 1962 | No. 22

Jobless Rate Static in May At 5.4 Percent of Workers

Works Bill Approved By Senate

By David L. Perlman

The Senate has approved a $750 million emergency public works program to provide jobs in areas of heavy unemployment, and has authorized an equal amount on a stand-by basis for use if unemployment rises.

A stepped-up public works program has been one of the major legislative goals of the AFL-CIO.

Final passage came on a 44-32 vote, after defeat of a number of Republican amendments to cut back the program.

The Senate voted to authorize for immediate public works $150 million more than the $600 million Pres. Kennedy had requested. It turned down, however, his request for long-run authority to divert up to $2 billion from other government programs, without further appropriations, to choke off a new recession.

The $750 million stand-by substitute, which could be used after June 30, 1963, whenever unemployment rises 1 percent within nine months and is above 5 percent, requires the money to be specifically appropriated by Congress before it can be spent.

Administration leaders dropped their fight for the full long-range authority requested by Kennedy when it became apparent that the measure faced defeat on the floor.

The bill now goes to the House, where the Public Works Committee has given tentative approval to an immediate $900 million public works program, with no stand-by authorization for future spending.

In significant test votes before final passage, the Senate:

- Voted 43-32 for an amendment by Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.), backed by the Democratic leadership, to raise the emergency program from $600 million to $750 million.
- Voted 37-36 for the stand-by authorization of $750 million, with Republicans lined up solidly against it.
- Rejected 56-21 an amendment by Sen. Jack Miller (R-Ia.) which

(Continued on Page 8)

IT'S THE HEIGHT OF FASHION to help labor's voter registration drive, as this fashion show held at Philadelphia's Bellevue Stratford Hotel demonstrates. The show opened the register-and-vote campaign of COPE's Women's Activities Division.

Non-Farm Jobs Hit New Peak

The unemployment situation showed no real change in May as anticipated seasonal activity dropped the number of jobless to 3.7 million and the rate of unemployment dipped one-tenth of a point to 5.4 percent of the labor force.

The Labor Dept. termed the 230,000 drop in joblessness "an average decline for this time of year" and said the change in the overall unemployment rate was "about seasonal between April and May."

The civilian labor force also reflected an improvement, but compared to May 1961 and the anticipated increase in the labor force due to population growth it was still 600,000 short of the target.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg declared in a statement that "the fact that employment is at record levels and that unemployment is continuing to go down is encouraging and shows a continued improvement in the economy."

Only Slight Decline

The drop in the unemployment rate to 5.4 percent—indicating that 54 of every 1,000 Americans seeking work cannot find jobs—compares with the 5.6 percent in February and the 5.5 percent figures for March and April.

The number of long-term unemployed—out of work 15 weeks or longer—declined seasonally to 1.3 million and the number unemployed 27 weeks or longer dipped to about 670,000.

Total employment in May rose 1.4 million to 68.2 million and nonagricultural employment moved up to 62.8 million, a new record.

Deputy Assistant Sec. Seymour Wolfbein, the Labor Dept's manpower authority, said that a half

(Continued on Page 8)

U. S. Labor Aid Pledged To Algerians

The AFL-CIO will do everything in its power to help Algerian workers in the final phases of their battle for economic and political independence, Pres. George Meany pledged at a luncheon in Washington in honor of Gen. Sec. Abdennour Ali-Yahia of the General Union of Algerian Workers.

At the same time Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO announced that the city central body will seek funds for Algerian labor through the sale of "Algerian Solidarity Stamps" for use by affiliated locals, with the proceeds going "directly and totally to the Algerian trade unions."

The luncheon followed a press conference in AFL-CIO headquarters at which Ali-Yahia charged that the secret army (OAS) of the French settlers in Algeria is trying to destroy the country's economy.

90 Percent Unemployed

He accused the OAS of "compounding collective and blind criminal acts, despicable crimes," and declared the French government "has not taken all of the measures" it should have taken to "prevent the situation."

"In Algiers and in Oran (the two

(Continued on Page 7)

Union-Backed Free Labor Institute Set

The AFL-CIO and a group of U.S. employers have announced formal opening of the American Institute for Free Labor Development "to strengthen the cause of democracy in the Latin American and Caribbean countries."

The Institute, located in Washington, D. C., will open June 18 with two groups of about 20 young trade union leaders each. One class will be Spanish-speaking, the other English-speaking.

The school plans to train 100 to 120 students each year from Latin American and Caribbean countries. The course is made up of a three-month educational phase at the institute and a nine-month internship on social projects in the student's home country.

The institute also will establish regional or national training centers in Latin nations to give short-term, part-time courses for local students; advanced courses for institute graduates, and for use by unions as central headquarters or labor temples.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and J. Peter Grace, president of W. R. Grace & Co., described the birth and planned growth of the institute at a press conference.

Meany Vice Chairman

Grace serves as president and chairman of the board of trustees. Meany is vice-chairman. Communications Workers' Pres. Joseph A. Beirne is secretary-treasurer and AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi is executive director. Also on the 24-man board

(Continued on Page 7)

Operating License At Stake:

CAB Tells Airline To Rehire Strikers

The Civil Aeronautics Board has warned Southern Airways that its government certificate to operate an airline may be lost unless the company offers to rehire its striking pilots with full seniority, drops an "illegal" demand for unilateral disciplinary rights, and resumes bargaining in good faith with the Air Line Pilots.

In a 3-2 decision, hailed by a spokesman for the pilots as "a major turning point" in the dispute, the CAB invoked for the first time its authority to require airlines to "exert every reasonable effort" under the Railway Labor Act to settle disputes.

The board majority, overturning a report made by a CAB examiner last September, found that Southern Airways had prolonged the dispute by attaching "illegal" conditions to the return of the strikers after agreement had been reached on "all important economic issues" in July 1960, some five weeks after the walkout started.

The board, in a tentative decision scheduled to be implemented by a formal order, said the company was within its legal rights to refuse to dismiss "replacements" hired between June 5, 1960, when the strike began, and July 12, 1960, when the economic agreement was reached.

Strikebreakers hired after that date must be dismissed if necessary to make room for the reinstatement of strikers, the CAB said. The board declared further that "the seniority of strikers reinstated is to be unimpaired" and any disciplinary action against strikers is "subject to statutory grievance procedures" under the Railway Labor Act.

Capt. V. A. Knudegard, ALPA chairman on Southern Airways, termed the decision "very gratifying" and added that "it sets us back on a negotiating basis." He predicted that conditions for return to work could be negotiated "quickly" if the company follows the CAB's directive to "bargain in good faith."

Southern Airways Pres. Frank

(Continued on Page 3)

Council Will Consider 35-Hour Week Issue

By John M. Barry

Atlantic City—The AFL-CIO will "very seriously consider" a nationwide campaign to reduce the standard workweek from 40 hours to 35, Pres. George Meany told the 31st convention of the Ladies' Garment Workers here.

Such a reduction, with no cut in take-home pay, "would have a tremendous impact" on the high level of joblessness that has prevented full recovery from the 1960-61 recession, Meany declared to nearly 1,000 cheering delegates.

He later told reporters he would present the shorter workweek proposal to the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its next meeting, to be held in August in Chicago.

Meany has repeatedly warned that a cut in the workweek would inevitably present itself if the nation's economy failed to grow fast enough to absorb the nearly 4 million currently unemployed and to provide jobs for millions of newcomers to the labor force in the decade ahead.

His forecast of an AFL-CIO

(Continued on Page 8)

2 of 5 Executives Got '61 Pay Raises, Survey Shows

Industry leaders who charged so-called "inflation" every time a union asked a wage hike for workers last year proved indifferent to inflation's perils when it came to raising their own take, a Business Week magazine survey has revealed.

"Two out every five companies tabulated in Business Week's annual survey of executive compensation handed out raises to top men in 1961, two held to 1960 levels and one cut back," the magazine said.

It presented a tabulation taken from proxy statements filed with the Securities & Exchange Commission which it said confirmed a "favorable trend" spotted earlier in the year.

"It also signals fatter paychecks in 1962 if business continues to improve," the magazine predicted, "for there is a traditional time lag between the start of an economic upturn and its full reflection in compensation figures for the highest-paid executives."

James R. Kerr, president of the Avco Corp., an electrical equipment firm, got a nice 35 percent increase, from $115,000 in 1960 to $155,417 last year. Other Avco executives didn't do badly—raises of $24,583 for Board Chairman Kendrick R. Wilson, Jr., to $164,583, and for Executive Committee Chairman Earl H. Blaik to $134,583.

Many executives got 10 percent increases, others benefited by 5 to 8 percent.

At the other extreme was George W. Romney, who since 1961 has resigned as president and board chairman of American Motors to seek the Republican nomination for governor of Michigan. Due to a drop in sales, he took a cut from $250,000 to $149,211. Two executive vice presidents whose 1960 salaries were $166,691 dropped to $106,158, and a third from the same level to $102,541.

Labor Supports Bill To Limit Drug Patents

Sick people are forced to pay "exorbitant" prices for many prescription drugs because price competition is blocked by patent monopolies, the AFL-CIO has charged.

The federation urged passage of legislation sponsored by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) which would limit the monopoly control of patented drugs to three years. After that, patent owners would be required to license competitors to produce the drug—at a royalty rate of not more than 8 percent.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a House Anti-Trust subcommittee that the patent legislation is needed because "the individual consumer of prescription drugs is in a uniquely helpless position." Biemiller added:

"He cannot choose his illness, he cannot himself determine what medicine he must take and his choice of product is specifically narrowed to what the doctor prescribes. He cannot shop for the best buy, but must pay the asking price whatever it may be."

Biemiller told the subcommittee, headed by Celler, that labor supports the entire bill, including:

- Broader factory inspection powers for the Food & Drug Administration.
- A requirement that drugs be proved effective as well as safe before being marketed.
- Simplification of the system of naming drugs.

Biemiller emphasized that these provisions, "excellent as they are in themselves, will do little to bring down the price of drugs unless reforms also are made in patents on drugs."

In addition to limiting competition and enabling a drug firm to obtain "enormous profits . . . from its captive public," patent monopolies have led to the diversion of research to patentable modifications of a competitor's product, Biemiller stated.

Meanwhile the bill was facing rough sledding in the Senate Judiciary Committee. After having been reported favorably by the Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee, the portions dealing with patent reform had been referred for further consideration to a subcommittee headed by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.).

The full committee, following the McClellan group's recommendation, voted to delete most of the patent reform provisions, including compulsory licensing after three years.

'Americans at Work' For 'Emmy' Award

"Americans at Work," the television series produced by the AFL-CIO, was nominated for one of the coveted Emmy awards by the Washington chapter of the Academy of TV Arts & Sciences. The nomination was in the category of original musical scores. Music for the series was composed by Ray Haney.

"Americans at Work" has attracted wide attention in the television industry because of its success as a public service feature. It has been shown on some 250 stations and many now carrying it are repeating the 104 films.

Toronto U. School Backs Health Plan

Toronto, Ont.—The University of Toronto School of Hygiene gave strong support to a proposed comprehensive national health plan in a brief and testimony before the Royal Commission on Health Care.

Prof. O. J. Firestone, commission chairman, asked Dr. A. J. Rhodes, director of the school, if he thought a government-operated health plan would mean government control of doctors or of the quality of medical care.

"I think those fears are quite groundless," Rhodes replied.

Rhodes and his fellow-spokesman for the school, Dr. John Hastings, emphasized the desirablity of including preventive medicine in a national health plan, and stressed the planning and promotion of mental and physical fitness. A plan covering curative medicine alone, such as some countries have adopted, is merely sickness insurance, they asserted.

Ruttenberg Tells Parley:

Trade Expansion Bill Aids U. S. in Adjusting to Change

Louisville, Ky.—After 30 years of practical experience with trade expansion, the U.S. must put its know-how into the practical legislation of the Kennedy Administration's trade bill, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg declared here.

Ruttenberg keynoted the Governor's Conference on Kentucky's Stake in World Trade, explaining the background of the nation's trade policy and the provisions of the bill about to be reported out by the House Ways & Means Committee.

The trade expansion bill, he said, "makes it possible for the United States to help its industries and its people adjust to a changing world as rapidly as modern change requires."

Since the first trade agreement act became law in 1934, when America first turned toward reciprocal trade, the nation has learned three basic concepts, said Ruttenberg:

- Expanding trade has paid off and some vital sectors of American life depend on it.
- The U.S. is competing economically and politically for world leadership.
- When protection of the national interest causes some damage—"and trade could cause some damage"—the nation has a responsibility to repair that damage.

The need for both imports and exports, the AFL-CIO economist declared, has been amply demonstrated. Imports help make jobs, keep industry going and provide income for businessmen. Exports last year accounted for 3.1 million jobs in the U.S. and involved about $5 billion worth of farm products.

"American business, farms and labor depend on rising exports for sales of U.S. products," he emphasized, and the nation cannot do with a lesser flow of trade.

The U.S., he stressed, is facing new competition abroad and an ever-changing political challenge. Ruttenberg traced the development of the European Common Market, declaring that by 1970 its countries will have an even larger population than the U.S. and "potentially a bigger unsatisfied market for our goods." This means a new kind of competition for the U.S. and the need for a new kind of flexibility in trade negotiations.

The basic trade act has been revised 11 times, said Ruttenberg, with some safeguards adopted over the years. But only now is the fact emerging that "sometimes the national interest will mean someone's suffering from expanded trade, that the nation has a responsibility to alleviate that harm."

Reviewing the provisions of the bill, Ruttenberg stressed the adjustment assistance section of the measure which recognizes that the nation "cannot afford to sacrifice any of its businesses or its workers to trade expansion, but must help all of them share in the benefits in some way. The provisions are businesslike efforts to work toward the new realities of ever-changing trade competition in a faster-paced world."

Re-Interpretion Sought On Missile Base Rates

Construction union and industry spokesmen have called for review of a recent Labor Dept. interpretation that minimum wage provisions of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, rather than the Davis-Bacon Act, should be applied to certain work on Minuteman missile site facilities.

At an informal conference with Labor Dept. Solicitor Charles Donahue, who issued the "interpretive guidelines," some 30 representatives of building trades unions and contractors' associations argued that the Davis-Bacon Act's prevailing wage provisions clearly cover all work required to construct a missile site.

To exempt certain work at the sites from the act, they charged, was contrary to law, could disrupt the construction industry and would mean loss of jobs to building tradesmen.

Davis-Bacon requires payment of prevailing wages in the construction industry for construction work on federal facilities. Walsh-Healey sets prevailing wages for materials, including manufactured items, supplied the government under contract.

Donahue's ruling was directed specifically at a dispute involving installation of launching equipment and controls at Malmstrom Air Force Base in Montana. The ruling had been sought by the Air Force and the Boeing Airplane Co., manufacturer of the missiles, which proposed to do the work with factory-trained employes.

The Joint Industry Program Committee, made up of representatives of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters and management groups, said that Donahue's description of the work as "minimal" or "simple in character" involved subjective conclusions not contemplated in Davis-Bacon.

"Except for the $2,000 minimum, the act makes no exceptions as to its applicability," the statement said.

C. J. Haggerty, president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., was the chief labor spokesman at the conference with Donahue.

DELICATESSEN & COUNTERMEN'S Local 60 in New York presented Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) with the food of their trade—a 40-pound salami—as a token of appreciation for the 90-minute legislative briefing he gave two busloads of union members and friends who came to Washington to boost the legislative program of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes. Left to right are Local Sec. Al Specht, Douglas, and Local Pres. Joe Decker.

Program Sellers Vote For IATSE

New York—A representation election among employes of Dunetz & Lovett, distributors of theatrical souvenir programs and novelties, has been won by Home Office Local H-63 of the Theatrical Stage Employes by a margin of 5 to 2.

The balloting was conducted by the New York State Labor Relations Board after several months of hearings during which it ruled off the ballot the Association of Bookmen & Chargemen, Inc., on the ground that it was a "pseudo" union and not a true labor organization. The association is the successor to a group expelled a year ago by the Retail Clerks for constitutional violations.

The board's decision also upheld Local H-63's argument that souvenir vendors with road shows and in establishments outside New York City are employes of the company, not independent contractors as management had contended.

The vote followed similar victories by the IATSE in elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board among employes of David Merrick Enterprises, Superior Souvenir Book Co., and other distributors.

Group Health Plans Hail Loan Proposal

Pres. Kennedy's health program "fully recognizes the realities of our national health problem" in proposing federal loans to help build and equip group practice medical and dental facilities, the Group Health Association of America said recently.

GHAA, which is composed of pre-paid group practice plans throughout the country, said it was particularly gratified that the President had urged priority for direct service plans in small communities and those sponsored by non-profit groups.

Further Rise Seen for May:

Living Costs Reach New High in April

The nation's cost of living rose to a new high in April with another rise forecast for May, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The Consumer Price Index increased by two-tenths of 1 percent to 105.2 in April. This means the market basket which cost $10 in the base period of 1957-59 now costs $10.52.

The April CPI will bring a 1-cent-an-hour pay hike to some 850,000 workers, mainly in the auto and farm equipment industries, and 2 cents an hour to an additional 100,000 workers in aerospace and farm equipment firms.

A companion report showed that the take-home pay and purchasing power of factory production workers increased in April.

The consumer price increases since January of this year now equal the total rise of seven-tenths of 1 percent in the CPI for all of last year.

Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner of labor statistics, did not see inflationary threats in the increases of recent months or the rise he foresees for May.

"I think it's just an irregular jump in a period of long-time price stability," Myers said.

Myers said his earlier prediction that the CPI would not rise more than 1.5 percent to 2 percent for all 1962 "still looks good."

"There is no pressing on capacity or supplies; there is no likelihood of shortages," he said.

Medical Care Higher

The April rise was tied mainly to price hikes for fresh fruits and vegetables, used cars, gasoline, movies and medical care services. Prices were lower for poultry, eggs, fresh milk, fuel oil and housefurnishings.

The April CPI of 105.2 means a wage increase of 1-cent an hour for employes of General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and Intl. Harvester Co. Their union contracts include a cost of living clause tied to the CPI.

The companion report on factory worker earnings said a small increase in hours worked and higher hourly earnings brought a rise which more than offset the increased cost of living.

Earnings Up

Take-home pay—that is, spendable earnings after deduction of social security and federal income taxes—totaled $85.53 in April for a factory worker with three dependents and $77.86 for a factory worker without dependents.

This was a rise of 50 cents in each case over the month and $4.50 above April a year ago.

Spendable earnings in April were about 6 percent higher than in April 1961 and purchasing power was up about 4.5 percent over the year, the report added.

AS CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS open in the aerospace industry, 500 delegates from the Machinists and Auto Workers meet in Los Angeles to reinforce the pledge of the two unions to stand together in seeking major "catch-up" improvements in their contracts with missile and aircraft companies. IAM Vice Pres. Ernie White (left) and UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock clasp hands in the foreground, with some of the delegates in the background.

Sheet Metal Workers Win Hotpoint Election

Chicago—The Sheet Metal Workers, with a strong assist from the AFL-CIO and the Communications Workers, have broken through one of the Chicago area's long-time anti-union strongholds and won bargaining rights at General Electric's Hotpoint Division.

The vote, in a runoff election at six Hotpoint production plants in Chicago and nearby Cicero, was 1,417 for the Sheet Metal Workers to 1,024 for no union.

Hotpoint in this area has been a non-union operation throughout its 56-year history, according to Edward J. Carlough, organizing director of the Sheet Metal Workers.

In an initial NLRB election this year, in which two AFL-CIO unions and three unaffiliated unions competed, there were 900 "no union" votes, 794 for the Sheet Metal Workers, 746 for the Communications Workers, and 51 divided among three unaffiliated groups, including a so-called employes' council.

In the runoff, the CWA and the AFL-CIO regional office in Chicago gave active support to the Sheet Metal Workers and both federation Pres. George Meany and CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne called on Hotpoint employes to support the AFL-CIO union on the runoff ballot.

Carlough, hailing the vote as an "important victory for the whole labor movement," praised Beirne for the "unselfish trade union spirit" he showed in urging CWA supporters at the plant to join with the Sheet Metal Workers in the runoff campaign.

He praised also the "untiring efforts" of AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Daniel J. Healy and his staff.

NLRB Hearing Set On Vote at Reynolds

Chester, Pa.—The National Labor Relations Board has set June 19 for a hearing on a petition for a collective bargaining election at the new plant here of the Reynolds Metals Co.

The Steelworkers and the Aluminum Workers are seeking to represent the 150 employes, who are the nucleus of what is expected will be a much larger work force in the future. The USWA represents about 8,000 employes in other Reynolds plants, the AWIU about 6,000.

Bill Bars Use Of Dues, Fees For Lobbying

Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D- N. Y.) has introduced a bill to bar professional organizations, such as the American Medical Association, from using "compulsory dues and fees" to lobby for or against legislation.

Zelenko said the measure is aimed particularly at the AMA and is designed "to cut through the surgical steel curtain" through which, he charged, the organization "is effectively coercing doctors to be silent and preventing thousands of physicians from expressing their approval of the Anderson-King bill, Pres. Kennedy's plan for health care for the aged under the social security system.

"Thousands of physicians in this country are being placed in an untenable position because of the power and control of the AMA as it carries the ball for the insurance lobby," the congressman declared.

Asserting that in many areas AMA membership is "tantamount to retaining a license to practice," Zelenko reported that a number of doctors in his district had expressed fear of registering support of the Anderson-King "for obvious reasons."

CWA Wins 9.5-Cent Hike At Ohio Bell

Cleveland—A wage agreement bringing increases of nearly 9.5 cents an hour for 15,000 telephone workers throughout the state was reached May 29 by negotiators of the Ohio Bell Telephone Co. and the Communications Workers.

The agreement, the second annual reopener under a three-year contract, will lift the top pay of craftsmen by $5 to $133 a week. The top-rate category for operators jumps $3 to $81 a week.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said the increases average about 3.5 percent. He called the pact a "good settlement, non-inflationary, which falls within the guidelines set up by Pres. Kennedy."

The Ohio agreement, which followed weeks of negotiations, was expected to be a pace-setter for CWA parleys with other Bell System affiliates. Hours after the Ohio settlement, CWA initiated a similar agreement with Illinois Bell for traffic people in the state area. Other pacts were expected soon in Wisconsin Telephone, Northwestern Bell and Chesapeake & Potomac in the nation's capital.

CWA's agreement with Ohio Bell takes effect retroactively as of May 28 provided it is formally signed, as expected, by June 4.

CAB Warns Airline to Rehire Striking Pilots

(Continued from Page 1)

Hulse said the company is "prepared to go to court" to oppose the CAB order.

Knudegard said most of the Southern Airways strikebreakers were hired after the July 12, 1960, cutoff date, and many of those hired earlier had since left.

Of the 138 original strikers, he said, 125 are still on the picket line. The remainder are either on military duty or employed by other airlines.

Benefits Raised

During the two-year walkout, the ALPA twice raised its benefits so as to pay the strikers from $500 to $710 a month.

The Southern Airways case is still involved in another federal inquiry into the strike and the government's policy on subsidies to a struck airline. This inquiry is being conducted by Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger on appointment by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

The CAB announcement said that if Southern Airways fails to comply with the order within 30 days after it is issued, the board will "take appropriate steps" under Sec. 401 (g) of the Federal Aviation Act.

This section gives the CAB authority to "modify, suspend or revoke" the operating certificate of an airline.

The CAB majority included Chairman Alan S. Boyd, Vice Chairman Robert T. Murphy and G. Joseph Minetti. Dissenting were Chan Gurney and Whitney Gillilland, both Republicans.

Boykin Loses In Alabama Runoff Vote

Party primaries in Alabama, Florida and Kentucky produced a mixed bag of candidates for the November general election.

In Alabama, traditionally a one-party state, George C. Wallace, a militant segregationist, won the nomination for governor over State Sen. Ryan de Graffenreid.

In the runoff primary pitting nine candidates for eight seats in the House, Democratic voters retired Rep. Frank Boykin of Mobile.

Representatives Carl Elliott and Albert Rains, who have frequently voted with the Kennedy Administration except on civil rights, encountered no trouble in the statewide runoff, made necessary by the failure of the Alabama legislature to agree on redistricting after the 1960 census cut the state's House delegation from nine to eight.

In Florida's 10th District, Democrats picked State Sen. Sam Gibbons, who ran on his 10-year legislative record, over a strong segregationist, Sumter L. Lowry. In the 11th District, 36-year-old John A. Sutton was chosen to face the Republican nominee, Edward J. Gurney. A 28-year-old dairy farmer, Don Fuqua, won the 9th District Democratic nomination. GOP voters chose Wilfred Varn, a former U.S. district attorney.

In a fight over Democratic party leadership, State Chairman James Milligan, who had criticized Gov. Farris Bryant for failing to support the Kennedy-Johnson ticket in 1960, won re-election as state committeeman from Orange County.

In the key Kentucky contest, Lt. Gov. Wilson W. Wyatt, a former campaign manager for Adlai Stevenson, overwhelmed two opponents to win the Democratic nomination for U.S. senator. He will oppose Sen. Thruston B. Morton, a former GOP national chairman, in the November election.

Profit Plan Excluding Union Members Unfair

New York—Toffenetti's Restaurant Co., Inc., committed an unfair labor practice, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled, when it changed a profit-sharing plan to disqualify union members from getting benefits and refused a customary bonus to dining room employes represented by the union.

Three of the five board members, sitting as a panel, directed Toffenetti to stop discriminating against members of Local 1, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, to pay union members the bonus they should have received, to restore them to membership in the profit-sharing plan and to bargain with Local 1 on the money due each member's account.

Trial Examiner Samuel Ross ruled last November, after hearings, that after Local 1 was certified by the board as bargaining agent for waiters, waitresses and bus boys in 1960, the management:

- Without notice or consultation with the union amended its profit-sharing plan to drop union members.
- Refused to furnish the union with a copy of the plan.
- Paid a Christmas bonus to all employes except those in the dining room unit represented by the union.

The examiner and the board agreed this was unlawful. In his report, Ross said D. L. Toffenetti, company chairman, conducted a "vigorous campaign" to defeat the union and urged employes to join his "crusade and loyalty parade" by voting "For Toffenetti and For No Union." Bartenders and kitchen workers complied and were given preferred treatment from then on, the examiner reported.

The 35-Hour Week

A CAMPAIGN for a shorter workweek has emerged as the dominant theme of the numerous conventions of AFL-CIO unions in the past month. Major unions affiliated with the federation have called for a reduction in the standard hours of work with no loss in pay. They have proposed a two-pronged campaign keyed to collective bargaining and national legislation to amend the Wage-Hour Act.

The demand for shorter hours has been accelerated by the continuing high and chronic rate of unemployment, the major domestic problem confronting the nation. Present unemployment is a compound of insufficient consumer purchasing power, job displacement and loss from automation and technological change, and a growing population bringing a flood of new workers into a non-expanding labor market.

Administration efforts to cope with this problem have been in the right direction but have not moved far enough or fast enough. The major problem of unemployment remains. The most optimistic projections do not anticipate a drop in the unemployment rate below 5 percent of the labor force by the end of 1962.

Reducing the workweek with no loss in take-home pay, therefore, is the logical, sensible method of meeting the problem of mass joblessness. That's what the shorter-workweek campaign is all about—jobs for people and strengthened consumer purchasing power to buy the products that our economy is capable of turning out.

The AFL-CIO convention in December 1961 laid down the basic policy in this area, terming reduction in hours of work "a vital part of our total program to solve the problem of unemployment." The convention called on AFL-CIO affiliates "to give the highest priority to search for and negotiation of ways to reduce hours of work and to assure adequate job opportunities now and in the future."

That's what they're doing.

No Blackmail

THE DEBATE OVER health care for the aged, stimulated by Pres. Kennedy's nationwide television campaign and the scores of rallies across the country, has boiled down to a simple issue: what kind of remedy is needed.

There is no longer a dispute in Congress about the need of the nation's elderly or the economic problems ill health in later years presents to children of parents whose shrunken incomes cannot pay the cost of present-day medical care. Nearly all parties to the debate—including the American Medical Association—admit a problem exists.

A number of congressional Republicans—also admitting the problem and the need—have proposed a remedy to allow commercial insurance companies to participate in the health insurance plan. To this AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany replied in his Madison Square Garden speech:

"We do not pay blackmail. We do not buy the notion that any part of this program belongs to commercial insurance companies . . . We are not satisfied with just the principle of social security financing . . . We want not only social security financing but social security administration as well. That is the way for the people to get their money's worth—the only way."

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, June 2, 1962 No. 22

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Too Much' vs. 'Not Enough':

Elastic Yardstick Often Used To Measure Union Democracy

AMERICANS PROBABLY will continue to maintain the inconsistency of fear over "too much democracy" and righteous indignation over "not enough democracy," as though democracy were an object with quantitative attributes instead of a method and substantive philosophy, a Columbia University professor writes.

"When unions are democratic—i.e. responsive to their constituents—," writes Ivar Berg, assistant professor of social science and business, "we will wonder about the sense of public responsibility with which the blue-collared citizens will address themselves to the task of union government. When unions are not democratic, we will worry about the morality and political ambitions of their white-collared leaders.

"We will seek, through editorial exhortation and legislative pontification, to bring democracy to the shop, the union hall, the assembly line, and even to the new nations. But when the plea for democracy is answered by a strike vote, we will witness editorial hand-wringing.

"The price of lost production due to strikes may be significant, but how infinitely greater must be the price to be paid, in totalitarian societies, for the orderly and strike-free economies they boast."

In his article, "The Nice Kind of Union Democracy," in the current issue of the Columbia University Forum, Berg recalls that in the summer of 1961 members of Auto Workers Local 72, employed at the Kenosha, Wis., plant of American Motors, rejected a profit-sharing agreement with the company (they ratified it some weeks later); striking New York cement truck drivers three times voted down settlements commended to them by James Hoffa, head of the Teamsters; Cincinnati milk drivers voted themselves out of the Teamsters; players in the New York Philharmonic struck to dramatize their demand to take part in negotiations between their local union and managers of the Philharmonic; companywide negotiations between UAW leaders and General Motors were complicated by walkouts; and similar negotiations between the Ford Motor Co. and the UAW were upset when local after local struck.

"Now," writes Berg, "when human discontent in a union serves to slow down our four-wheeled economy, when it inhibits the nourishing flow of cement or when it offends patrons of the fine arts with picket signs, indignation is supposed to be justified.

"Increasingly we are given to see by a number of editorialists that the private interests of intractable union members are trivial compared with the interests of the defenseless public; equally clear is the obligation of unions to confine disputes affecting the public to disputes with employers and to keep these, in turn, to a minimum.

"UNIONS ARE TO HAVE a sense of 'public responsibility' and to come to negotiations with demands to which employers may confidently address themselves; when the agreement is reached between the negotiating teams, there is to be no costly interference with the public's convenience brought on by recalcitrant members. Above all, it has now become a part of the conventional wisdom that 'strikes are extremely costly, and the fewer we have the better.'

"All of these are the lessons which pundits, editorialists and reporters are teaching us in the 1960's. . . .

"But then there is the principle of union democracy to be considered. Thus, when the milk deliverers in Cincinnati voted themselves out of the Teamsters this past summer, there was no little joy in the press. . . . Yet when some striking auto workers voted down a settlement at Kenosha, a number of newspapers inveighed against prolongation of a strike that seriously and needlessly hampered the manufacture and sales of The Automobile. . . .

"When the milk truck drivers voted to leave the Teamsters, it was a manifestation of democracy victorious; when the auto workers voted to strike, it was a revolt. The behavior of union members can be adjudged to be democratic or revolutionary, it would appear, by the standards of public convenience and an orderly economy. . . .

"Proponents of democracy—including, we may suppose, auto workers, cement truck drivers, and their unlikely brothers, the Philharmonic players—may be forgiven possible confusion. . . . The press, after all, had campaigned almost unanimously for passage of both the Taft-Hartley Act and more recently the Landrum-Griffin Act, both of which sought, among other things, to curb the autocratic powers of union leaders through the cultivation of democracy in unions."

Morgan Says:

Commencement Cliches a Flop With 1962's Crop of Graduates

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

THIS IS THE SEASON when commencement orators fire their blunderbusses of banalities at the graduating classes. This year the speakers best beware lest their cliches explode in their faces like a trick cigar. In the past they could promise that "the world is yours" in the smug confidence that the oldsters still controlled it and weren't about to give it up. But now youth is actively assailing their positions and has even given meaning to that absurd profundity, "the future lies ahead," by replying that "we are already there ahead of you."

Morgan

As Fred J. Harrington, vice president of academic affairs at the University of Wisconsin, put it to the New York Times: Students "no longer feel helpless, a cog in the adult machine. They can get hold of something. Be involved in a sit-in. Enlist in the Peace Corps. Go on a Freedom Ride."

In a series of four articles Times Correspondent Nan Robertson explored social action and political movements on campuses across the country and discovered students were doing a lot of things besides eating goldfish, sardining themselves into telephone booths or even worrying about virginity at Vassar. Not that every manifestation had global impact.

But most extracurricular activities have been involved with weightier matters—civil rights, nuclear testing and disarmament and a relatively new development that has whetted the interest of the psychologists and social scientists, the rise of political conservatism among students.

Times Reporter Robertson underscored three significant findings:

"First, today's political and social activity involves only a small fraction of the student body on the right and on the left—but a fragment that is vocal, militant, organized, growing and full of determination. . . .

"Second, on a number of campuses the Young Democrats believe the adult world is too conservative and the Young Republicans believe it is not conservative enough. The activists appear to be drifting left of Pres. Kennedy and right toward Sen. Goldwater.

"Third, the vast majority of American students remains quiet, inactive and uncommitted. But they are by no means unaware or unconcerned with national and international issues."

Indeed there are even some signs of restiveness among the majority. An example cited in the Times involved Kennedy's visit to the Berkeley campus of the University of California last March. Informed that disarmament groups and others planned to picket him, other students quickly got nearly 8,000 signatures on a petition welcoming the President. And students were prominent among the audience of 80,000 that packed the stadium to applaud him. Said the vice chancellor of student affairs: "It's the first time we've heard a peep out of the middle."

THE TIMES SURVEY indicated that a stridently right-wing activist group, Young Americans for Freedom, was discrediting itself among young conservatives by its own excesses, including the virtually fraudulent methods of fear it used to get the liberal National Student Association voted off the campus of the University of Oklahoma.

Some liberal students interviewed dismissed the campus conservative movement as a myth. The Times report called this an exaggeration but at the same time it did not seem to find the "wave of conservatism" that some Republicans have been boasting was sweeping undergraduate thinking. One of the editors of Comment, a new political journal at Harvard, Peter Scharfman, thinks Kennedy has galvanized both liberal and conservative student groups into action, giving the young liberals an identity with a feeling that "at last what we say matters," and scaring the conservatives to go out and do something to try to stop being rolled "down the road to godless socialism."

The student impact on national politics is yet to be measured but their militant social action has already begun to register change.

It was a handful of Negro college students in Greensboro, N. C., who started the sit-ins at segregated lunch counters, protests which have now broken racial barriers in many southern cities. It was the courage of students, Negro and white, which motivated the successful Freedom Rides on buses through the South last spring. Hundreds of students have found a place for their eager talents in the Peace Corps without having to be lured there by promises of a pension or fringe benefits.

I don't know what the younger generation is coming to but it is possible that it is more courageously determined to find out than a lot of us old fussbudgets who think we speak with the voice of experience.

Washington Reports:

New Trade Bill Held Needed To End Hampering Restrictions

THE PRESIDENT NEEDS passage of the expanded trade bill to enable him to deal with European Common Market countries and others and to remove current restrictions "that are hampering trade," Rep. Al Ullman (D-Ore.), member of the House Ways & Means Committee, asserted in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"The trade bill is a vehicle by which the President can go forward and expand our leadership in these trying days," he declared.

Rep. Howard Baker (R-Tenn.), also a member of the Ways & Means Committee, pointed out that the U.S. might become an associate member of the European Economic Community.

He said that the committee has "greatly improved the escape clause to protect industries and individuals who might be seriously injured by the new trade program." Baker said that loans may be obtained under the proposed legislation for an industry that can show it has suffered serious injury. Displaced workers, he said, may be retrained.

Baker supported the provision that workers made jobless by the trade program should receive equal unemployment compensation benefits regardless of the state they live in.

The new trade expansion program, Ullman said, will benefit workers, industrialists, businessmen, farmers and consumers.

The U.S., he pointed out, now exports more than any other nation, and has a balance of exports over imports of $5.5 billion—necessary because of the maintenance of U.S. troops abroad and other international commitments.

BOTH CONGRESSMEN said that many misunderstandings about foreign trade need to be corrected. For instance, Ullman said, it is assumed that Japan is flooding the U.S. with goods produced at low wage costs.

"The fact is that U.S. sales to Japan from World War II through 1960 amounted to $10 billion, while our purchases from Japan totaled $6 billion," he said.

"In 1960 alone, Japan bought about one-third of all her imports from the U.S., about $1.3 billion. The picture is favorable to us all around, and we must also bear in mind that Japan is our chief ally in Asia, and must trade to live."

The U.S. is able to compete abroad, despite higher U.S. wages, because of U.S. productive capacity, worker efficiency, material availability, trade know-how, initiative and imagination, Baker said.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE STATE LEGISLATURES, despite a mandate from federal and state courts to revise their legislative districts, are showing extreme reluctance to move.

Gov. J. Millard Tawes of Maryland called the legislature into special session after a state court had ruled that assembly districts for the lower house were illegal. These districts give 51 percent of the seats to rural counties having only 23 percent of the state's population. Circuit Judge O. Bowie Duckett ordered their revision, terming the discrimination against urban and suburban citizens "invidious."

Tawes and the leader of a Fair Representation Committee, Royce Hanson, worked out an arrangement for temporary reforms. Acceptable as a "minimum," Hanson said, the changes would have given 59 percent of lower house seats to the 77 percent of the people living in cities and suburban counties.

This proposal the legislative leaders from rural districts refused to accept. They changed the bill to reduce the increase in delegates from suburban areas and preserve a majority for sparsely-settled rural areas.

A proposed constitutional amendment, establishing permanent reforms after 1966, also was watered down as rural leaders ran the show. A sliding-scale feature would allow rural districts to gain a new member for every 25,000 in growth of population; suburban counties would be allowed an additional delegate only for 100,000 in population growth.

* * *

IN GEORGIA a three-judge federal court ruled that in the state legislature the districts must be revised to give equal representation to urban and suburban citizens in at least one house of the General Assembly.

This decision followed closely another federal court ruling that the ancient "county-unit" system for party primary elections—another device for maintaining rural supremacy—was illegal even though it had been somewhat revised.

In the most recent decision, the federal court noted that counties with 22.5 percent of the state's population now select a majority of the lower house. It observed that the state senate majority was chosen by counties with 21.4 per cent of the population.

Still, Gov. S. Ernest Vandiver has not called a special session for revision of the legislative districts in line with the federal court decisions. He is expected to delay until after the Sept. 12 Democratic Party primary. This may at least allow the popular vote to select the party's nominees for statewide office for the first time in many years.

* * *

AN ANALYSIS OF THE DECISIONS show that the courts were moderate in applying the doctrine of the U.S. Supreme Court in the Tennessee case clearing the way for judicial tests of legislative districts.

The three-judge federal court in Georgia ruled that "at least one" of the houses—not necessarily the senate as well as the lower house—must reflect population accurately.

In Maryland Judge Duckett specifically ruled that the senate could be legally constituted to give a majority to representatives of areas rather than of population concentration.

This interpretation is subject to challenge. The U.S. Senate has two senators from each state—but the theory of the federal system is that the states created the national government, that the states were initially "sovereign" and could agree on union under certain compact provisions. But the counties in the various states are not "sovereign" in the same sense; the principle may not be applied in a parallel manner.

The courts, in any case, have tentatively ruled cautiously rather than drastically. There is precious little evidence of good faith in the response of rurally-dominated legislatures and the entrenched state political machines.

It looks as if some more appeals of cases to the U.S. Supreme Court will be required to get the exact ground rules spelled out.

AN EXPANDED TRADE PROGRAM means more jobs, declare Rep. Al Ullman (D-Ore.), left, and Rep. Howard Baker (R-Tenn.), both members of the House Ways & Means Committee. The congressmen were interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

UNION OBLIGATION being taken by these new members of Plasterers Local 311, Jackson, Miss., is being administered by Vice Pres. Levere V. Henagan. Seated at table are Louis Turner, Jr. (left), financial secretary and business agent, and Corresponding Sec. James Lezie.

More Than 100 Labor Institutes To Draw 10,000 Union Members

More than 100 week-long institutes will be held this summer to give 10,000 members of local unions a week of labor education, according to AFL-CIO Education Dir. Larry Rogin.

The schools will be conducted in 29 states, he said, with 80 percent on college or university campuses.

Based on an estimated cost of $200 per student for housing, meals, travel and in some instances payment for time lost from work, the locals will spend more than $2 million, he said.

The institutes are set up and instructors provided by international unions, their district divisions or by state AFL-CIO organizations, but individual local unions select the students and provide for their support, Rogin added.

Legislative issues to be discussed at the schools will be headed by foreign trade, he said. He pointed out that current legislation always is a feature of the institutes, although their basic purpose is to train rank-and-file leaders in such fundamentals as parliamentary procedure, grievance handling, public speaking and labor history.

As with most broad-scale projects, Rogin noted, there have been changes and adaptions over the years. Some unions now have advanced courses for students who have completed the basic work. The Steelworkers, for instance, have a four-year progression for students. States like Arizona and Kentucky regularly have an advanced as well as a basic course.

Automation will be heavily emphasized in this year's schools, he said, the stress varying according to locality and industry. Four institutes will be held in Oklahoma, he pointed out, at which the so-called "right-to-work" laws—now an issue there—will be featured.

One of the problems the organizers of labor schools face in the South, Rogin said, is finding wholly integrated accommodations. An unexpected aid in Florida, he continued, was provided by the Chicago White Sox' purchase of a Sarasota hotel to assure unsegregated training quarters for team members. The hotel is operated on an unsegregated basis the year around, he added.

State organizations sponsoring schools, and their sites include:

Arizona, Arizona State College, Flagstaff; Connecticut, University of Connecticut, Storrs; Florida, Sarasota Hotel, Sarasota; Illinois, University of Illinois, Urbana; Indiana, Indiana University, Bloomington; Iowa, University of Iowa, Iowa City; Kentucky (basic and advanced), University of Kentucky, Lexington.

Maryland-District of Columbia, Goucher College, Baltimore; Michigan, FDR Camp, Port Huron; Nebraska, University of Nebraska, Lincoln; North and South Carolina and Virginia, combined, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; Oklahoma, Central State College, Edmond; Oregon, University of Oregon, Eugene; Pennsylvania (community services), Pennsylvania State University, University Park; Texas, University of Texas, Austin; West Virginia, University of West Virginia, Morgantown; Wisconsin, University of Wisconsin, Madison.

International unions which will conduct their own schools, in some cases through district organizations, include the Allied Industrial Workers, Clothing Workers, Teachers, Auto Workers, Boilermakers, Brewery Workers, Chemical Workers, Communications Workers, Hotel & Restaurant Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Machinists, Molders, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, Rubber Workers and USWA.

Major Gains Reported By Marine Engineers

New York—Members of the Marine Engineers have enjoyed full employment, good working conditions and generous fringe benefits, delegates attending the union's 85th annual convention here were told in a progress report.

Despite a decline in the U.S. merchant marine fleet, wiping out jobs of many maritime workers, MEBA has succeeded in creating 1,000 new jobs through increased manning scales, improved vacation schedules and successful organizing of domestic fleets, the report noted.

At the same time the delegates, representing some 11,500 MEBA members, were urged by Pres. Edwin N. Altman to help press for adoption of a legislative program aimed at protecting engineers' jobs and strengthening the maritime industry. The program, in part, calls for:

- Elimination of tax exemptions for "runaway flag" shipping.
- Construction subsidies for all segments of the U.S. merchant marine and operating subsidies for those segments competing with foreign flag ships.
- Assistance to Latin-American and other foreign maritime unions in their struggle against Communist and other anti-democratic forces.
- Promotion of closer relationships between the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. and other free world maritime labor organizations.
- Construction of a cross-Florida barge canal.
- Reversal by the National Labor Relations Board of the ruling barring self-employed American fishermen from the benefits of union organization and collective bargaining.

MEBA Sec.-Treas. Jesse M. Calhoun told delegates that while the American flag merchant fleet shrank from 1,218 ships in 1939 to only 896 today, American foreign trade during the same period quadrupled, with "runaway" flags increasing in alarming numbers. U.S. flag ships now carry only a little more than 10 percent of this nation's foreign trade, while "runaway" and other foreign flag ships account for about 58 per cent, he said.

"When bulk cargoes alone are considered, the position of American shipping is even weaker, with foreign ships carrying 97 percent of American cargoes and American ships carrying only 3 percent," Altman declared. Bulk cargo makes up 87 percent of U.S. foreign trade, he said.

Coast Shipping Down

Attention of the delegates was focused on the importance of the federal government's role in initiating action to protect coastwise and inter-coastal shipping (MEBA officers reported that vessels engaged in these operations had fallen off in number from 123 to six over a period of 10 years); also on government subsidies and on measures to offset ships which are semi- or fully-automated.

MEBA members currently enjoy an average take-home pay of $1,000 per month. Under a pension plan instituted in 1951, and recently improved to provide for vesting of rights, they enjoy retirement benefits amounting to a maximum of $150 per month.

Wm. Orosz Named Organizer by URW

Akron, O.—William Orosz, a member of Rubber Workers Local 7 at the Firestone plant here since it was organized, has been named an international field representative by URW Pres. George Burdon. He has been a temporary representative in the URW Skilled Trades Dept. for the last 18 months.

Helstein Re-elected:

Packing Union Ties Dues to Basic Wage

By Saul Miller

Minneapolis—A unique plan tieing dues and per capita payments to basic wage rates has been adopted by the Packinghouse Workers to help finance a campaign to aid "short-changed" workers and expand organizing activity.

After intensive debate, the 550 delegates to the union's 13th constitutional convention here voted overwhelmingly for a per capita plan based on one hour's pay at the basic male labor rate, with a floor of $1.75 and a maximum of $2.25. The present per capita is $1.75.

Minimum monthly dues would be based on two hours pay at the basic rate, with the present minimum of $3 and a maximum of $4.50. A local is empowered to set dues at a higher rate if it so desires.

The union's financing highlighted the convention which enacted a series of resolutions stressing a shorter workweek, civil rights, organizing, political education, women's activities and farmer-labor cooperation. Pres. Ralph Helstein, Sec.-Treas. G. R. Hathaway and all officers were reelected without opposition. Gilbert Simonson was elected director of Dist. 4; he had been serving in an acting capacity.

The convention voted about a 10 percent increase in officers pay, bringing Helstein's to $15,500 a year. Similar increases were voted union staff representatives.

The delegates gave a rousing reception to the Rev. Martin Luther King, who told the convention that neither communism nor "black supremacy" had "any real appeal for the American Negro," but warned that America is in danger of becoming a second-class power if the problem of racial relationships is not solved.

Nuclear scientist Ralph Lapp, economist Leon Keyserling, AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization John W. Livingston and Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson also addressed the five-day meeting.

The convention adopted resolutions calling for:

- A vigorous civil rights program directed to achieving "complete unity and democracy within our union, the local community and the nation as a whole and that we continue to demand strict enforcement of our contracts on a non-discriminatory basis." A wide range of necessary legislation was listed as vital and the resolution specifically called for reading of its text at every local union meeting.
- Action by Pres. Kennedy to issue an executive order prohibiting discrimination and segregation in any housing facilities in which federal funds are involved.
- Abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee and support of the AFL-CIO's opposition to the Administration's wiretapping bill.
- Setting up committees in each local to work for closer farmer-labor cooperation and to aid passage of legislation to secure a decent livelihood for farm proprietors and farm laborers.
- Convening of a UPWA national women's activity, civil rights and political education conference in 1963.

In a resolution on allied industries in the UPWA jurisdiction, the convention called for an "immediate and high priority to the task of meeting the needs of the segments of our jurisdiction in which sub-standard conditions prevail," including special organizing activities.

The delegates urged amendment of the Wage-Hour Act to reduce the workweek to 30 hours, an increase in the minimum wage and extension of coverage to agricultural workers. They called also for expansion of federal meat inspection programs to cover all slaughtering and processing not subject to state inspection.

Postal Pay Plan Held Unsatisfactory by Union

The Letter Carriers have told Congress that the Administration's pay proposal for postal workers is "inadequate and unsatisfactory" and falls short of the amount necessary for a "modest family budget."

Vice Pres. Jerome J. Keating urged the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee to scrap the three-stage Administration pay bill and adopt the union-supported measure sponsored by Rep. James H. Morrison (D-La.). Morrison is ranking majority member of the committee and has been conducting pay hearings in the absence of Chairman Tom Murray (D-Tenn.).

Minimum Now $4,345

Present pay rates for letter carriers and most postal clerks begin at $4,345 a year and go to a maximum of $5,605, including longevity increases.

The Administration bill would raise the entrance level to $4,525 effective Jan. 1, 1963, and, in two additional steps, to $5,010 on Jan. 1, 1965. Employes presently at the top longevity rate would receive $5,875 in 1963 and $6,130 in 1965. Additional grades provided by the bill would enable them to advance to $6,610 by 1972.

Under the union-supported bill, the entrance salary would be raised to $5,400 and the maximum to $6,760.

Keating told the committee that the letter carriers are "grateful" to Pres. Kennedy for initiating a proposed pay increase, noting that it is "unusual" for a President to do so.

He said, however, that the suggested adjustments appear to have been designed primarily to achieve "symmetry" in percentage differences between various pay grades. He added:

"Under the proposed program, percentage heaven would be achieved. We do not think percentage perfection is that important. The difference in jobs provided for in certain levels could very well be greater or less than those in other levels.

"Statisticians love symmetrical charts. We are afraid that they first drew the charts, then inserted the figures. We believe that substance should come before form and the figures should be decided on first."

Pointing out that spreading the increase over a three-year period would outdate the raises before they became effective, Keating said pay adjustments "should be effective not later than July 1, 1962."

$22 Million in Displays:

Union Label Show Held in Portland

Portland—Displays of union-made products valued at more than $22 million drew tens of thousands of visitors to the 1962 Union-Industries Show in its six-day run in the Memorial Coliseum here.

The show took on a note of international significance as government and business leaders from the Republic of Congo (Leopoldville) visited this 17th national exhibition sponsored by the AFL-CIO's Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

In a message read by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, Pres. Kennedy called the production "a demonstration of what free men in a free society can do." The spirit which built the Northwest, he declared, is "also the spirit of the New Frontier," and he called on both labor and management to "push beyond the horizons of complacency" to meet the "full potential" of American society.

The basic objective of the annual Union-Industries Show, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said in opening the exhibition, is to "broaden understanding of the union label and what it means in terms of the general welfare."

There is in this country no "bureaucracy," as in the Soviet system, that decides the supply and type of goods available, Schnitzler pointed out.

"Here in America we are dedicated to freedom of choice at every level," he said.

"This show, and what it represents, are part and parcel of that freedom. We link together the companion elements of free labor and free enterprise" as integral parts of the "worldwide struggle for human liberty."

Souvenirs Given

The display of union-made products was accompanied by apprenticeship contests, demonstrations of craftsmanship and the free distribution of thousands of gifts, prizes and souvenirs valued at between $80,000 and $100,000.

The awards included a fiberglass boat, an all-electric kitchen, all-expense tours to the Seattle World's Fair, gas and electric stoves, a live steer, and tons of cake mixes and cakes, cereals, and popcorn.

The objective, as Union Label Dept. Pres. Richard F. Walsh pointed out, was to demonstrate the effectiveness of harmonious relations between unions and management and emphasize the value of the union label, shop card and service button as an indication of superior quality.

The show was directed by Union Label Dept. Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis.

Welcoming speakers the opening day included Oregon Gov. Mark O. Hatfield, Portland Mayor Terry D. Schrunk and Chamber of Commerce Executive Sec. Ward Cook.

The Congolese delegation included Joseph Muayi, assistant transportation director of the African republic, who is studying U.S. transport techniques under the auspices of the State Dept.'s Agency for Intl. Development. Mrs. Goldberg delighted the Congolese by conversing with them in their native French language.

Apprenticeship contests included the 14th national competition of the Bricklayers, the 4th Western States contest of the Carpenters, an Oregon-Washington contest of the Painters, and the runoff contest of the Oregon pipe trades. The Bricklayers contest was won by 24-year-old John Di Giandomenico of Cleveland, who came to this country from Italy in 1957.

The 1963 Union-Industries Show was announced for May 11-22 in St. Louis, Mo.

A SNIP OF THE SCISSORS in the hands of AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and the ribbon went down, opening the AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show in Portland, Ore. From left to right are AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh; Mayor Terry D. Schrunk of Portland; Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg; and Joseph Lewis, show director and secretary-treasurer of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Latin, Caribbean Union Leaders Offered Training in Democracy

(Continued from Page 1)

are union leaders, employers active in the Latin area and prominent Latin American leaders.

Meany said the "seed money" for the institute was $20,000 appropriated by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in August 1960, supplemented by additional sums.

Meany said all major U.S. foundations have been contacted, with favorable indications of support from several of the biggest. In the final analysis, he said, the institute founders would like to see it privately supported.

He estimated an average outlay of $5,000 per student for the training period here. The institute, he said, is negotiating with AID to serve as an agent on such social projects as housing, libraries and other public facilities in the Americas in the Alliance for Progress program. The graduates could then "intern" on such projects on a salaried basis, he said.

Training Not Limited

Of the institute's aims and program, the Meany-Grace statement said:

"This training will not be limited only to trade union skills in the narrow sense, such as collective bargaining and contract administration. Rather it will embrace the broader concepts of the trade union as an essential element in a democratic society—and will include schooling in the defense of unions from infiltration by Communists, Fascists or crooks."

The statement went on to say that "the essential and, we think, inspirational aspect of the institute is that labor, management and government have joined in an effort not to dictate but simply to assist free and independent people to strengthen in their own countries a free and independent trade union movement as a vital element in the achievement and preservation of democracy itself."

The first group of Spanish-speaking students will come from Honduras, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Panama, Venezuela and the Dominican Republic. The initial class of English-speaking students will be from Surinam, British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica, British Honduras, Barbados, St. Vincent, Santa Lucia and Antigua.

The two groups due in the fall will be Spanish-speaking and will come mainly from the West Coast of South America, along with a few from Mexico and Central American countries.

Meany Pledges Help of AFL-CIO To Embattled Algerian Unionists

(Continued from Page 1)

largest cities) 90 percent of the workers are out of work," said Ali-Yahia. "The fascists are concentrating (in shootings and bombings) on the workers and their families; even working girls and children are not spared. The dockers who have continued to work in spite of repeated warnings are targets.

"The plans of the OAS are calculated to destroy technical and administrative installations and the whole economic structure of the country. Administrative sabotage at all levels is the rule.

"The OAS is forcing many industrial enterprises to close down. It is a tactic of starvation aimed at the Algerian workers and their families: not only are they struck down haphazardly in the streets, but they are being fired, reduced to unemployment, starved."

Ali-Yahia said the UGTA, which operated out of Tunis after going underground during the seven-year fight for freedom, has resumed activities in Algerian territory. It is now concerned, he said, with "a revolution to make a political, economic and social order disappear, and to have another order, one of the people, by the people and for the people, set in its place."

Meany in his luncheon talk recalled the years of support the American labor movement has given the Algerian workers.

"Today we feel that, in spite of the errors of commission and omission, there is hope that a new world, a new society based on independence and democracy, can be built in Algeria," he said. "This must be done even though we are all shocked and saddened by the continuation of the policy of wanton killing by the OAS.

"The reconstruction of the Algerian economy will soon be the order of the day and the trade unions must play a decisive role. To the extent that Algerian trade union leaders, dedicated to democracy, can influence decisions and policies, to that extent will there be a guarantee of a truly democratic state in their country. And, in order to fulfill this role, the trade unions must be ready now with the men and material to reconstruct what has been devastated by a cruel war."

Help Needed Now

Algeria needs help now, he maintained, just as the countries of western Europe needed it after World War II.

"We of the AFL-CIO," Meany concluded, "are determined to do everything in our power—along with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and our free trade union brothers throughout the world—to assist morally and materially in this final battle for political and economic independence."

In a letter to affiliates announcing the stamp sale program, Van Arsdale noted that the national labor centers in many other countries have pledged assistance to the UGTA both directly and through the ICFTU.

"The AFL-CIO is deeply interested in raising funds to help the Algerian unions in the difficult days ahead," he said. "The Central Labor Council's decision to help this essential cause is in line with the AFL-CIO purpose. Because of our activity in the AFL-CIO Committee for the United Nations, New York labor has been honored by being asked to be the first to initiate a fund-raising campaign."

UAW Gives $10,000 To Spanish Strikers

A first grant from the Auto Workers Intl. Labor Defense Free World Fund, for $10,000, has been made to the Intl. Metalworkers Federation to help striking miners and metal workers in Spain.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the union's action was only one of many taken by free world labor to help the Spanish strikers, who began returning to work this week.

In London it was reported British union representatives have smuggled thousands of dollars into Spain to help the strikers. Voluntary collections have been taken at many coal pits.

Trade Union Schools Now Girdle Globe

American labor and free world labor now cover the globe with schools designed to train young trade union leaders and foster democratic trade unionism.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, explaining the new American Institute for Free Labor Development, also pointed out that U.S. labor helped found and develop the Afro-Asian Institute in Tel Aviv, Israel; the "College on the Equator" at Kampala, Uganda, for English-speaking Africa, and a new school planned for French-speaking Africa at Abidjan, Ivory Coast.

Welfare Plan Report Rules Published

Interim rules for filing reports under the amended Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act have been published by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

Goldberg said the amended act and the regulations become effective June 18, except for bonding provisions which take effect Sept. 16.

Among the rules are these:

- Labor Dept. Form D-1 for filing descriptions of welfare and pension plans and Form D-2 for annual reports on financial operations of plans are continued in force and become mandatory instead of optional.
- Plans with fiscal, policy or calendar years ending before June 18, 1962, should file annual reports under the old law.
- Plans with year-end dates falling on or after June 18 must comply with the amended act by using the existing forms plus additional information, which is listed.

Information may be obtained from regional and field offices of the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divisions, or from the Office of Welfare & Pension Plans, Dept. of Labor, Washington 25, D. C.

Goldberg also announced that field activities under the amended pension act will be performed by the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divisions and the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports.

Labor Paper Editor Named to City Council

Sacramento—Richard H. Marriott, editor-manager of the Sacramento Valley Union Labor Bulletin, has been appointed to the Sacramento City Council to fill a vacancy created by a death.

Senate Passes Emergency Works Bill

$750 Million Is Voted To Create New Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

would have required the unemployment rate to be at least 6 percent before the stand-by authority could be used. Another Miller amendment, to exclude from the "triggering" formula any unemployment caused by strikes, was defeated 66-12.

Both supporters and opponents of the public works program cited the stock market slump during the debate.

Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), arguing for passage of the bill, described public works programs as "the most effective way to bolster our economy."

Such programs, he said, will provide needed community facilities which "add to the wealth" of the nation and, at the same time, furnish "jobs for those who need work . . . and who, in turn, will spend the money for the needs of their families."

From Sen. George D. Aiken (R-Vt.) came the argument that by advocating a stand-by works program the Administration appears to take the view "that the inevitability of a depression has already been established." If the measure is passed, he asserted, "it will be all that will be needed to convince the people that a depression really will be lying ahead of them."

A stepped-up public works spending program has been asked by the AFL-CIO since early 1961. After initially asking only for a stand-by program, Kennedy in March gave his support to an immediate program in a letter acknowledging that the nation's economic performance "has fallen below expectations."

The President wrote the House and Senate Public Works Committees that programs to relieve "prolonged large-scale unemployment in hundreds of communities . . . should not be delayed until another recession threatens the whole economy."

Voting on the public works bills and the key amendments closely followed party lines.

Only one Republican voted with 42 Democrats to raise the immediate spending authorization to $750 million, while four Democrats and 28 Republicans opposed the amendment.

Administration leaders in the Senate narrowly salvaged the stand-by provision of the bill when it appeared, from a rollcall in progress, that this section would be defeated. Before the rollcall vote was officially tallied, two Democrats who had voted against the proposal were persuaded to withdraw their votes and permit themselves to be paired with absent Democrats who favored the provision. All 37 votes for the section came from Democrats, while 29 Republicans and seven Democrats opposed it.

On final passage, five Republicans joined 39 Democrats in support of the bill, while seven Democrats voted with 25 Republicans in opposition.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE on national economic issues was marked by vigorous exchange of views between labor and management delegates. A claim by a National Association of Manufacturers' spokesman that more profits are needed to create jobs was challenged from the floor by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who said industry spokesman had failed to show how bigger profits would result in higher employment rather than merely "fatter salaries" for executives.

Jobless Rate For May Sticks at 5.4 Percent

(Continued from Page 1)

million of the increase in total employment and in the non-farm areas was more than seasonal. The non-farm figure, he said, was a half million higher than the previous peak in August 1961.

Included among the non-farm employed in May were 2.3 million workers on part time for economic reasons, about the same level as in April.

Wolfbein said that the increase in total employment and non-agricultural figures was a "very encouraging and important sign" but that there was no "full corresponding impact" on the unemployment side in relation to the record-setting employment figures.

Queried on the prospects for June, Wolfbein said with students entering the labor force in large numbers seeking summer employment the expectation was for unemployment to climb to 4.5 million if the jobless rate remained unchanged, with a drop of 4.1 million in July.

Labor Force Data

The civilian labor force showed a jump of 1.1 million from April to May, but compared to May 1961 the increase was about 600,000 as opposed to a projected growth of 1.2 million. This indicated that a large number of workers were dropping out of the labor force—not actively looking for work—in face of limited employment opportunities.

Goldberg, in his statement, pointed to a decline in the rate of unemployment from 7 percent in May 1961 to 5.4 this year and said that "since the low point of the recession in February of last year, unemployment has been reduced by 2 million."

Wolfbein told reporters that preliminary detailed figures showed a drop in the unemployment rate for adult males which he termed an "encouraging sign." More detailed figures on unemployment are scheduled to be released by the Labor Dept. June 12.

Kane Elected President of Ohio AFL-CIO

Columbus—Delegates to the Ohio State AFL-CIO convention here elected David Kane of Dayton as president of the state federation and re-elected Elmer F. Cope secretary-treasurer.

Kane, president of the state conference of Bookbinders and secretary-treasurer of the Dayton Allied Printing Trades Council, defeated Phil Hannah, 2,341 to 2,284. Hannah had headed the central body since it was formed at the merger convention in 1958. A third candidate, Thomas E. Fender of a Warren Steelworkers local, received 50 votes.

In the contest for secretary-treasurer, Cope defeated Morris Riger, who had been serving as political education director of the state central body, 2,916 to 1,852.

Earlier delegates turned down a proposal for a 3-cent per capita increase for political action by a rollcall vote of 279,526 to 205,681.

A legislative program was adopted calling for improvement in the state's unemployment compensation program, a state minimum wage law of $1.25 an hour, an anti-strikebreaker law, a state ban on discrimination in housing and passage of a "Little Wagner Act" guaranteeing collective bargaining rights to workers not covered by federal labor law.

Meany to Put 35-Hour Week Issue Before Executive Council in August stand on the issue indicated impatience with the lack of significant progress toward solving the unemployment problem. It also followed a suggestion by ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky, in his convention keynote, that the 35-hour week—long established in the garment industry—be made the standard for all workers in the country.

(Continued from Page 1)

Opposition from Goldberg

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, another speaker, argued that lowering the standard workweek would create more unemployment rather than less by making American goods "higher priced, less competitive and available at home, and less competitive abroad."

The answer to the problem of joblessness, Goldberg said, lies in an economic growth rate that will lead to industrial operation at full capacity—"not a sharing of underemployment, but a full-employment economy."

Dubinsky responded immediately by observing that the "country did not go to the dogs" when the workweek was reduced to 40 hours in the late 1930's.

"I judge from experience," the ILGWU leader declared. "The 35-hour week in our industry saved us from creating an army of unemployed. The 40-hour week enacted 24 years ago did enormous good for the country."

A standard 35-hour week, he said, "is bound to create employment for millions of people."

"Earnings in the pockets of millions of people are bound to create purchasing power and give additional work to many others," he added.

The convention also heard:

- Vice Pres. Lyndon Johnson review the Kennedy Administration's record and call for economic growth "at a rate large enough to put the unemployed back to work and put unused capacity back in production."
- Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress, an ILGWU member himself, predict that the New Democratic Party, supported by Canadian unions, will play "a major role" in that nation's June 18 elections.
- Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther urge that overtime premium pay be increased to double-time as part of the "struggle for shorter hours," to discourage "excessive" overtime for some workers while others are unemployed.

Reuther listed as "national priorities" necessary to complete the nation's unfinished business: full employment, adequate education, health care for the aged through social security, bridging "the moral gap between democracy's noble promises and its practices in the field of civil rights," and the election of a liberal Congress "to help Pres. Kennedy enact his program."

In a major convention resolution, the delegates set forth a broad program to deal with problems posed by automation, including "continuing reduction of the workweek, so that labor-saving devices may bring greater leisure as well as full employment."

Meany, reviewing the economy, noted that there is general agreement among economists that "we must have at least 4.25 to 4.5 percent growth rate to keep pace with our expanding population, to maintain our dynamic economy, to provide the purchasing power that will keep it going."

'Not Moving Forward'

Against this need, he observed, the average growth rate has been only about 2.5 percent over the past 10 years.

"That means that we are slipping back; we are not moving forward," he said. "Surely the answer is not to sit tight and do nothing, and wait for this problem to somehow go away."

While labor "does not pretend to know all the answers," the AFL-CIO president said, it has made some suggestions, such as a public works program "to do more about housing, schools, hospitals and roads" as an "investment for peace," and an across-the-board tax cut when severe unemployment persists for six months or more.

6-2-62

As for the shorter workweek, Meany made it clear that labor's views on the issue implied no sharp break with the Kennedy Administration, most of whose economic programs the AFL-CIO has favored and applauded.

"I do not like to disagree with Arthur Goldberg any more than Dave Dubinsky does," Meany said. "I think he is a dedicated public servant. I think he has had tremendous experience, and has made a tremendous contribution to the building up of the free trade union movement.

"But I am of the opinion that a reduction of the workweek, with the same take-home pay, would have a tremendous impact."

The National Association of Manufacturers, on the other hand, proposes to fight the problem of a lagging economy by amending the tax laws to gain greater profits and by "curbing the power of unions," Meany observed.

Make Jobs Paramount

"I do not have the confidence in American management that would lead me to accept the idea that a revision of the tax law to increase their profits would solve the unemployment problem—because I remember 1929."

"The base of this economy is the purchasing power in the hands of the great mass of workers at the bottom of the economic ladder. In other words, what we need are jobs for all of those who are able and willing to work."

Young Workers Ask Respect for Unions

Casablanca—Respect for trade union freedom was demanded by representatives of 65 countries attending the World Conference of Young Workers held here under the auspices of several groups—the World Assembly of Youth, the youth section of the Moroccan Labor Union (UMT) and the Moroccan Young Workers' Association.

The role of young workers in a changing society was the main theme of the meeting, at which the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was represented by Raymond Gosse and John Ngwiri.

Supreme Court Turns Down Kohler Co.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 9, 1962 | No. 23

500,000 Rail Workers Get 10-Cent Raise in New Pact

UAW Gets Victory In Kohler Co. Case

The Supreme Court has refused to hear an appeal by the Kohler Co. from a decision finding the firm guilty of unfair practices in its bitter eight-year dispute with the Auto Workers.

The high court thus left standing a decision last January by the U.S. Court of Appeals sustaining the National Labor Relations Board's finding of unfair practices and order for reinstatement, with back pay, of most of the strikers.

The appellate court also instructed the NLRB to reconsider the cases of 77 union members discharged on allegations of illegal picketing whom the board said were not entitled to reinstatement.

"At long last the UAW position at Kohler has been vindicated in the highest court in the land," UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas Emil Mazey commented in a joint statement.

They said the union would proceed to negotiate "a fair and honorable" agreement with the Wisconsin plumbing fixtures firm.

"We want to build at Kohler the same forward-looking relationship we have with hundreds of large and small American manufacturers," Reuther and Mazey said. "We call upon the company to meet with us in this spirit so that the bitterness of the past can be released by a positive, constructive and responsible relationship as we face the future."

About 1,700 Still Striking

The UAW estimated that the number of strikers has been reduced by death, retirement and other causes to about 1,700. Originally, 2,779 Kohler workers walked out when the strike began Apr. 5, 1954.

Only about 600 of the strikers have been reinstated by Kohler since the NLRB decision in August 1960. The union estimates that the

(Continued on Page 3)

GOP Picks Nixon to Face Brown

The major political battle of 1962 was set up in California as former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon won the GOP nomination for governor and the right to oppose incumbent Democratic Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown in November.

Nixon beat a self-styled conservative challenger, Joseph C. Shell, by polling about 65 percent of the Republican vote despite Shell's vigorous and heavily-financed campaign, and the former Vice President promptly sought to reunite the party for the November contest.

Brown, who four years ago defeated then U. S. Sen. William F. Knowland by more than 1 million votes, won renomination without trouble over two token opponents. The combined Democratic vote ran ahead of the Republican tally despite the bitter Nixon-Shell fight, but Brown fell slightly short of getting more votes for himself than the two Republicans combined.

Thomas J. Pitts, executive secretary-treasurer of the California State AFL-CIO, last year denounced

(Continued on Page 11)

AGREEMENT ON CONTRACT providing wage increases of 10.28 cents an hour for almost 500,000 non-operating railroad workers is sealed with a handshake by George E. Leighty, left, chairman of the joint negotiating committee representing 11 rail union groups, and James E. Wolfe for railroad management.

Committee Takes Up Bill:

Kennedy Hits AMA Health Care Stand

By John M. Barry

Pres. Kennedy renewed his sharp attack on the American Medical Association's criticism of his social security health care proposals as the House Ways & Means Committee began executive sessions to consider the plan, set forth in the Anderson-King bill.

The President challenged AMA Pres. Leonard W. Larson to back up his denial that the AMA had opposed the social security system by positively asserting the organization's approval and endorsement of the retirement benefit system.

Larson had declared that the AMA "never took a position" on social security and that the President was "entirely incorrect" when he charged at a news conference that the organization had been one of its chief opponents.

If the AMA was never a social security opponent, Kennedy replied in a letter to Larson, "some questions may be asked in order to set the record straight." The President posed these specifically as:

- Why did Dr. Morris Fishbein, former editor of the Journal of the AMA, make the following statement in November 1939 and publish it in the December issue:

"Indeed, all forms of security, compulsory security, even against old age and unemployment, repre-

(Continued on Page 9)

11 'Non-Op' Unions Win Layoff Rule

By Eugene A. Kelly

Chicago—Close to 500,000 members of 11 non-operating rail unions will receive pay increases totaling 10.28 cents an hour under an agreement reached here by committees representing the unions and railroad management.

The negotiators agreed to acceptance in principle of the May 3 recommendations of an emergency board appointed by Pres. Kennedy to help settle a bargaining stalemate.

Under the recommendations, the railroads agreed to these improvements for employes of more than 150 U.S. railroads:

- A wage hike of 4 cents an hour retroactive to Feb. 1, 1962.
- An increase of 6.28 cents an hour retroactive to May 1, 1962.
- A rule requiring management to give "not less than five working days" advance notice to any worker in a regularly established position affected by job abolishment or a reduction in force.

The wage boosts will apply to all non-operating employes on the payroll last Feb. 1 or hired after that

(Continued on Page 4)

Friedrick Elected Head of UW Regents

Madison, Wis.—Pres. Jacob F. Friedrick of the Milwaukee County AFL-CIO, who had only an eighth grade education when he came to this country from Hungary in 1904, has been elected president of the board of regents of the University of Wisconsin.

He was named to the board by Gov. Gaylord A. Nelson (D) on Mar. 25, 1960, and his election as president reflects a shift in the balance of power to Nelson appointees. He succeeds Carl E. Steiger of Oshkosh.

A member of the Machinists, Friedrick is 70 and has been an influential figure in Wisconsin labor circles for years. He was first organizer, then general secretary, of the former Milwaukee County AFL and is the only president the merged body has had. The university awarded him an honorary degree of doctor of laws in 1955.

That 'Profit Squeeze' on Industry A Myth, AFL-CIO Study Shows

An economic study by the AFL-CIO charges that the much publicized "profit squeeze" on business enterprise is a myth—created primarily by new methods of calculating depreciation—and that corporations actually have more surplus cash on hand than they are able to spend on new plant and equipment.

The AFL-CIO study, prepared by the Dept. of Research as an Economic Trends & Outlook feature of the American Federationist, takes up the first eight pages of the current issue of the organization's monthly magazine.

Because of changes in accounting procedures and depreciation allowances, the profits reported by corporations are no longer an accurate measure of economic health, the union economists assert.

"A key indicator of a company's financial strength or weakness is its cash-flow—how much money remains with the corporation each year after paying all its costs and taxes," the study says.

Cash-flow, it explains, is made up of reported profits after taxes, plus depreciation allowances. Although depreciation allowances are figured as a cost of doing business during the allowed "normal life" of the equipment involved, they are write-offs of an investment made in previous years, and therefore are spendable cash.

(Continued on Page 2)

AFL-CIO Study Refutes 'Profit Squeeze' Claims

(Continued from Page 1)

In the early post-war years, the Federationist article notes, the tax laws generally required "straight-line" depreciation, averaging the write-off over the normal life of plant or equipment, which might range from 10 to 40 years.

In 1950 after the outbreak of the Korean War, however, the tax laws were amended to permit five-year depreciation of defense-related plant and equipment. And in 1954, another revision permitted businesses to write off about two-thirds or three-fifths of all new facilities over one-half their normal life.

Under these faster write-offs, the AFL-CIO economists point out, businesses boosted their reported costs and cut their reported profits, but they paid less taxes than under the "straight-line" system and their cash-flow was substantially increased.

Whereas reported profits after taxes dropped from 5 percent of total national production in 1953 to 4.5 percent in 1961, cash-flow rose from 8.2 percent to 9.2 percent over the same period, the study shows.

"Here, in the continuing and substantial rise of the cash-flow to corporations, is the explanation for the fact that dividend payments to stockholders have risen at a considerably faster pace than wages and salaries," the article observes.

The disparity between reported profits and actual funds on hand will grow greater this year under expected new Treasury regulations lowering the "normal" life of plant and equipment for depreciation purposes, the AFL-CIO study predicts.

$2.2 Billion Understatement

"In 1963, therefore, reported corporate costs of doing business may be about $4.5 billion greater (as a result of the new regulations)," the article continues. "Reported profits after taxes may be understated by about $2.2 billion . . . And the flow of spendable cash to corporations will be much greater . . ."

In recent years, rising cash-flow has exceeded the total capital expenditures of corporations (other than banks and insurance companies), the economists observe. For the past three years alone, such corporations had $4.1 billion more than they needed for new plant and equipment, the analysis shows.

"The accumulation of these vast corporate funds . . . underscores the falsity of the 'profit squeeze' myth," the article declares.

All this, it notes, came about during a period of slow economic growth and recession; if sales and production continue to rise, the cash-flow will "soar upward."

"The facts indicate no evidence at all of a general 'squeeze' on American corporations," the study concludes. "They reveal, instead, a generally prosperous condition—so prosperous as to make one wonder why business leaders try to perpetuate the myth of a 'squeeze.'"

N. Y. School Secretaries To Vote on Bargaining

New York—Some 2,300 school secretaries in the New York school system will decide soon if they want to be represented for bargaining purposes by the Teachers, by a non-union group, or by neither.

The Board of Education has authorized a mail ballot starting June 20, with referendum results to be announced June 27. Opposing the Teachers in the election is the unaffiliated School Secretaries Association, which withdrew from an affiliated union (State, County & Municipal Employes) several years ago.

Local 2, United Federation of Teachers, has offered membership to all secretaries and has supported their salary demands. All of the city's 40,000 teaching employes have been asked to sign a petition calling for a $500 salary increase for the secretaries.

Meanwhile, trustees of the Community College of Applied Arts & Sciences have been accused of stalling on the request of more than 80 faculty members for a collective bargaining election.

The "stall" charge came from David Selden of the UFT who said the trustees have "lost the confidence of a hard-working and dedicated faculty."

Dr. Israel Kugler of the faculty, UFT vice president for colleges, said teachers feel they have been denied an opportunity for redress of grievances, labor under an "excessive teaching load," are subjected to a "viciously unfair promotional system" and have inadequate office and counseling space.

Analysis by Ruttenberg:

Overpricing, Slow Economy Seen Keys to Market Break

A slowdown in the pace of economic recovery and the "myth" of inflation during a period of price stability are among the factors responsible for the sharp drop in stock market prices, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg has declared.

He said also in an analysis for the AFL-CIO News of the recent dramatic market gyrations that stock prices have been "well out of line with reality."

The market in the past, he said, has been a "fairly good indicator" of economic conditions and is one of the handful of indicators widely used to forecast economic activity.

But while warning of a possible economic downturn, Ruttenberg stressed that despite the stock market drop there are not enough "serious problems to cause a sharp break in the economy," that there are sufficient built-in stabilizers to prevent a "serious collapse."

There is a realization also by the Administration, he noted, that action is needed and will be taken to avoid a serious recession.

The precipitous drop in stock prices will end, he said, when persons trading in the market "realize these facts."

Started in March

Ruttenberg noted that the stock market decline started in mid-March 1962 at about the same time that economic reports showed the Kennedy Administration's projections were falling short of the targets on growth of the gross national product, plant and equipment investment, and the drop in the rate of unemployment.

The Dow-Jones average, a basic indicator of stock prices, moved from 715 to 620 between mid-March and May 28, before the tremendous market drop sent the index to 575.

The "underlying concern" about business conditions and the probability that the Administration's projections for the year would not be met was reflected in the March-to-May slide, Ruttenberg said.

The AFL-CIO research director commented that it is "highly unfortunate" that the factor of high unemployment, which has indicated trouble in the economy since the first of the year, "doesn't stir the reaction" that stock prices have achieved.

He stressed also that stock prices have been unrealistic. The constant pounding on the inflation theme by the Eisenhower Administration and the stress given the balance of payments problem by the Kennedy Administration led persons to invest in common stocks as a "hedge" against inflation and rising prices, he said.

The facts are, he noted, that since 1958 the wholesale price index has remained virtually unchanged and the consumer price index has advanced at the rate of about 1 percent a year.

Stock Prices 'Out of Line'

The drop in stock prices, Ruttenberg declared, should not "harm the confidence of the American people" because the price of shares was so out of line that a return to realistic price levels is necessary.

Noting that a number of theories are being advanced to explain the stock market's action, Ruttenberg said some business groups have seized on the proposed tax-withholding on dividends and interest contained in the Administration's tax bill as a cause as well as pointing to the President's successful effort in holding steel prices in line.

The latter, he said was an effort to maintain price stability and reinforced the thinking of those groups which believed the time had come to get out of the market because the inflation threat did not exist.

Since 1959, Ruttenberg pointed out, stocks have returned a low yield on investment, with most purchasers interested in higher prices for stocks rather than the percentage of return. He noted that in the past investors shifted to bonds when stock yields dropped, but this did not happen in the past few years.

The Securities & Exchange Commission certainly ought to take a close look at the market fluctuations in the past week to determine if there was any possibility of manipulation by professionals who stood to collect large profits, he commented.

Stock Ownership Limited

Ruttenberg noted that latest studies on stock holdings showed that only 14 percent of all families in the U.S. own common stocks and that 6 percent of the families, with incomes of $10,000 a year or more, own 64 percent of the outstanding common stock.

Studies by the University of Michigan Survey Research Center reveal also, he said, that only 8 percent of the skilled workers and craftsmen have stock holdings and only 2 percent of laborers or service workers fall in this category.

Pickup Trims Major Areas Of Joblessness

In the first break for the past six months, eight major job centers have been moved off the Labor Dept.'s list of areas with "substantial unemployment."

The May report on the nation's 150 major labor market areas showed 54 with unemployment of 6 percent or more, compared to 62 in April. The all-time high of 101 was hit last spring; economic recovery lowered this to 60 by last November, but the total hung there for six straight months.

There were 35 major areas with "substantial unemployment" in the pre-recession May of 1960.

The report said unemployment declined in more than nine-tenths of the 150 major areas during the past few months, "stronger than usual for this time of year." The advances occurred in most key durable goods industries and in such outdoor work as construction.

The Labor Dept. said employer reports of labor needs indicated a general advance to mid-summer. However, job declines were foreseen in the auto industry due to the annual model changeover shutdowns; in steel because those stockpiling before the contract settlement are trimming inventories; and in non-electrical machinery and the manned aircraft industries.

Of the eight major areas removed from the 6 percent or over jobless list, four are large manpower areas: Baltimore, Louisville, Portland, Ore., and Paterson-Clifton-Passaic, N. J. The others are Asheville, N. C., Baton Rouge, La., Knoxville, Tenn., and Mobile, Ala.

Atlantic City, N. J., Brockton, Mass., Erie, Pa., and Lowell, Mass., improved from the 9-to-11.9 percent group to the 6-to-8.9 percent group.

Office Employes Win 3 Puerto Rican Votes

Santurce, P. R.—The Office Employes have won bargaining rights for three more groups of workers in Puerto Rico—at the South Puerto Rican Sugar Co. by a 26-23 vote; at the Colgate-Palmolive Co. warehouse, 19-5; and at the same firm's central office, 42 to 14.

The three victories followed OEIU success in four other recent elections.

Ford Bankroll Just Grows And Grows and Grows . . .

"It's a New Kind of Ford Motor Co.," an article by Robert Sheehan in the February 1962 issue of Fortune, points out Ford poured $4 billion into capital facilities in the postwar period. In every recent year, Ford's cash flow far outran its investment needs. The article continues:

"The profits continue to roll in but the plant, substantially speaking, is all built. Of Ford's total plant today, 90 percent is new since World War II and 60 percent is six years old or less (which is one of the big reasons, of course, why profits are so good). Clearly, Ford has reached a point where it is not presently necessary or desirable to pour huge sums into plant. The company's last big spending sprees for this purpose were in 1956, when the program hit a peak of $487 million and in 1957, when $329 million was spent. In 1959, by contrast, capital expenditures for expansion, modernization and replacement were only $75 million; in 1960 they were $128 million and last year's estimated capital spending came to no more than $130 million.

"Meanwhile, Ford's cash flow (retained profits plus depreciation), despite some increases in the dividend rate, was building up powerfully. Back in 1956, the cash flow was only $252 million, considerably less than what the company laid out in capital expenditures. But by 1959 the inevitable results of Ford's big building program began to show up in the balance sheet. In the first place, there was a very substantial depreciation figure—almost $173 million. In the second place, profits, reflecting the efficiency of the new facilities, rose sharply. Consequently, Ford's cash flow in 1959 was a whopping $471 million (more than $75 million higher than in the peak car year of 1955). In 1960, Ford's cash flow was $427 million; in 1961, probably not less than $400 million."

5 Potash Unions Walk Out:

Management-Rights Claim Forces Strike

Carlsbad, N. M.—A management demand for contract language which five unions have charged "comes right out of a U.S. Chamber of Commerce handbook" advising restriction of grievance procedures has led to a strike of 2,700 potash workers here.

The unions struck five of the area's six potash firms after company negotiators insisted that contract renewals must include a sweeping so-called "management rights" clause and a strict limitation on arbitration of grievances.

A sixth company, Southwest Potash Corp., has made no request for changes in the existing "management rights" or arbitration provisions and has not been struck. It employs some 300 workers.

The Potash Joint Bargaining Committee, made up of the Stone Workers, Machinists, Operating Engineers and Boilermakers, along with the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which bargains separately, charged that "eastern lawyers" from parent companies of the struck firms had brought about the deadlock and disrupted "more than a decade of good labor-management relations."

The contract proposals, which the unions say were taken from a Chamber of Commerce booklet entitled "Model Arbitration Clauses to Protect Management Rights," would give management a free hand in changing work rules, disciplining employes and shifting jobs. Both the right to arbitration and the range of decisions allowed to an arbitrator would be sharply curtailed under the companies' proposals, the unions asserted.

The CofC booklet was issued after the U.S. Supreme Court in 1960 upheld the Steelworkers in three arbitration cases. The chamber charged that the decisions were a "radical departure" from "long-established rules," causing fears that the court "has completely reversed the traditional doctrine that management retains all of the rights not surrendered" in the contract.

The union bargaining committee said the company negotiators had "failed to present any evidence" to support their demand for "unrestricted" management power. In fact, the unions said, relations at the plants have been generally good and few problems have arisen over arbitration.

Progress in reaching agreement on union proposals, including a uniform insurance program covering employes of the six plants, has been help up by management's insistence on a new "rights" clause, the unions declared.

The five companies struck June 1, when contracts expired, are Intl. Minerals & Chemical, U.S. Borax & Chemical, National Potash, Duval Sulphur & Potash, and Potash Corp. of America.

Oregon Nun, Minimum Pay Pioneer, Dies

Portland, Ore.—Sister Miriam Theresa Gleason, a leader in the fight that gave Oregon in 1913 the nation's first enforceable minimum wage law, died recently at Marylhurst College, where she was head of the department of social sciences. She was 76.

Sen. Wayne P. Morse (D-Ore.) noted her death in the Senate, and prepared a tribute placed in the record by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) in which he declared that her work in Oregon "was the foundation of the development of minimum wage laws in other states and a notable forerunner of the federal Fair Labor Standards Act."

As Caroline Gleason, Sister Miriam Theresa came here in 1908 following her graduation from the University of Minnesota. She was prepared to teach, but developed an interest in social conditions that took her to the University of Chicago in 1910 for further studies.

In 1912 she directed for the Oregon Consumers' League a basic survey of the wages and working conditions of women in Oregon stores, canneries, factories and industrial plants. Much of her information, which appalled the people when it was made public, she gathered at first-hand.

She lobbied successfully for a 54-hour maximum week at $8.25, slightly less than 16 cents an hour. When the law's constitutionality was attacked, a young lawyer out of the East, Louis Brandeis, defended it on the basis of Miss Gleason's survey before the U.S. Supreme Court on which he later was to sit.

The Milwaukee, Ore., Review, published by Monroe Sweetland, former Democratic National Committeeman from Oregon, said editorially: "She leaves behind her a legacy of good works and a legion of those who knew and loved her."

ARMED PRIVATE GUARD of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. is shown posted by the picket line of Insurance Workers Local 5 outside the company's headquarters in New York City. After the union protested vigorously to Mayor Robert F. Wagner that the pistol-carrying guards in the street were a "serious threat" to public safety, the pistols disappeared.

Armed Guards Lose Guns in IWIU Strike

New York—A strike by 1,500 Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. agents here moved into its second week, with federal mediators continuing efforts toward a settlement. But picketing members of the Insurance Workers scored one victory—they managed to disarm gun-toting private guards assigned by the company to posts by the picket lines.

When Metropolitan's guards showed up wearing side arms, Union Pres. George L. Russ wired New York City's Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Police Commissioner Michael J. Murphy protesting that "the presence of these armed guards poses a serious threat to the safety of our members and the public."

The mayor's office promised a quick investigation and the next day the guards showed up without their guns.

At issue in the dispute—which involves only agents at Metropolitan's home office—is the minimum guarantee to agents for servicing the territory assigned them, plus a union demand for an increased expense allowance.

Local 5, which represents the strikers, voted to reject a proposed contract agreed to by IWIU members in three other states on the ground that it did not provide for the special problems of New York City agents.

Booklet Describes Chicago Cab Fight

Chicago—A new booklet, The Chicago Story, a historical account of the fight of Chicago taxicab drivers to secure an honest democratic union, has been published by the Seafarers.

The struggle to throw off control by underworld elements and the Teamsters goes back to 1958, when Dominic Abata, who had been pushed out as president of Cab Drivers Local 777 of the Teamsters, called a protest meeting.

The booklet tells the story of the fight that followed—how the drivers turned to the SIU for help because it had defeated the Teamsters in other struggles, the grind through NLRB legal procedures and the final strike that saw every cab of major companies off the city's streets and led to a settlement, with recognition of the union, in the City Hall office of Mayor Richard Daley.

"Despite overwhelming odds, a complete lack of finances, the combined weight of the Chicago crime syndicate and the Teamsters," the pamphlet says in summation, "the Chicago cab drivers have won their struggle."

Supreme Court Rules For UAW on Kohler

(Continued from Page 1)

amount of back pay owed the workers under the ruling exceeds $1 million.

Among other things, the board's decision:

- Found that Kohler had converted what began as an economic strike into an unfair practice strike about June 1, 1954, when it granted a wage increase to non-strikers without consulting the union.
- Ordered reinstatement with full seniority and back pay of all strikers who had not been permanently replaced before June 1, 1954, with the exception of 77 whose discharges for alleged cause must now be reconsidered.
- Ordered the company to dismiss strikebreakers hired as replacements if necessary to make room for returning union members.
- Ordered the company to bargain in good faith with the union.

While hailing the Supreme Court's refusal to review the case, Reuther and Mazey called on the NLRB to "fashion new procedures to make such intolerable delays impossible in the future."

The NLRB ruling was the climax of four years of hearings conducted by Trial Examiner George A. Downing.

The board went beyond the trial examiner's recommendations in adding 64 workers to the list of 13 he had ruled were legally fired by the company.

But the appeals court, in ordering reconsideration of the cases, suggested that the NLRB had disregarded the Thayer doctrine of 1954 under which the board is required to take an employer's unfair practices into account when considering discharges for acts of "misconduct."

"To hold that employe 'misconduct' automatically precludes compulsory reinstatement ignores two considerations which we think important," the court said.

"First, the employer's antecedent unfair labor practices may have been so blatant that they provoked employes to resort to unprotected action.

"Second, reinstatement is the only sanction which prevents an employer from benefitting from his unfair labor practices through discharge which may weaken or destroy a union."

The Kohler strike became involved in a political feud in 1958 as Republican members of the McClellan special Senate committee instigated a probe of the walkout and turned it into a partisan effort to brand the UAW "violent."

GOP Senators Barry Goldwater (Ariz.), Carl T. Curtis (Neb.) and Karl Mundt (S. D.) successfully blocked procedures drawn up by Chairman John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) and Robert F. Kennedy, then chief counsel of the committee, and took over the questioning of witnesses.

Testimony by the committee's staff investigators, however, revealed that in 1952 the Kohler Co. had bought and stocked away an arsenal of machine guns, tear gas bombs and other weapons shortly after the UAW was chosen by a vote of Kohler employes to displace a company union.

It was Kohler's persistent refusal to negotiate a second-year agreement with the UAW which provoked the strike two years later, the union charged. The company had a long history of fighting and breaking unions.

Record of Job Recovery Shows Persistent Lag

The recovery from the 1960-61 recession is lagging badly, compared with the recovery of the three previous postwar recessions, on both employment and unemployment, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research reports.

Fifteen months after the low point of the 1960-61 slump, unemployment has dropped 21.4 percent and employment has increased 2.1 percent. In the three earlier recessions, the percentage of jobless dropped at a much faster rate and employment showed a sharper pick-up. Here are the figures:

	Employment Increase	Non-Farm Employment Increase	Unemployment Rate Decrease
1960-61	2.1%	3.2%	—21.4%
1958-59	3.6	4.1	—29.6
1954-55	6.0	5.5	—26.4
1949-50	4.3	4.9	—51.5

The 15-month comparison shows a continuing slow rate of recovery in terms of jobs and continues the trend line shown at 6 months and 9 months.

Free Labor Institute Gets $250,000 Grant

Organized labor's first major project under the Alliance for Progress has been launched with $250,000 in grants to the newly-founded American Institute for Free Labor Development.

Under a contract between the institute and the Agency for Intl. Development, 42 young Latin trade union leaders will receive intensive training for a three-month period beginning in mid-June. They will follow the Washington seminar with nine-month internships in their home countries.

The institute also will set up labor centers in Venezuela and Ecuador in September "to help train Latin American labor leaders in collective bargaining, trade union organization, industrial relations and community projects designed to raise the standard of living for Latin American workers."

The agreement was signed for the institute by Communications Workers' Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, its secretary-treasurer, and for AID by Teodoro Moscoso, U.S. coordinator of the Alliance for Progress.

Creation of the institute was recently announced by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and J. Peter Grace, president of W. R. Grace & Co. Grace serves as president and chairman of the board of trustees of the institute. Meany is vice-chairman.

SAFETY EQUIPMENT CHECK program of Minnesota Maintenance, Administrative & Professional Employes Local 1011 was started with check of private cars of State Highway Dept. employes in St. Paul area and will be carried to 70 communities by summer's end. Shown around official car first through Lane No. 1, are (left to right) Leonard Arth, safety check committee chairman; Vice Pres. Don Lacho of the local; Kathleen Martin, committee member; Garnet Hall, safety director of State Highway Dept.; Business Rep. Harold Niemeyer of Local 1011; Sgt. Buckman of the Highway Patrol; Chief Leslie Smith of the Highway Patrol, and Janis Mechora, committee member.

Non-Op Unions Settle:

500,000 Get Raises In Rail Agreement

(Continued from Page 1)

date, regardless of whether they are still employed.

The advance notice of layoff was included in the agreement with the proviso that if any existing contract between a railroad and a union provides for notice longer than five days, the contract clause will apply.

Affected by the agreement are members of the Railway Clerks, Railroad Telegraphers, Maintenance of Way Employes, Railway Carmen, Signalmen, Firemen & Oilers, Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

'In Public Interest'

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said the agreement represents a solution "definitely in the public interest." In arriving at the settlement the parties followed the "procedures of the Railway Labor Act as envisaged by Congress," Goldberg said in a statement citing the emergency board for "averting the possibility of a major interruption" to vital rail service provided by the railroads and their employes.

The board had recommended that the unions and management "review the feasibility of job evaluation to realign job rates," that rates be increased by 4 cents an hour effective Feb. 1, 1962 and by 2.5 percent as of May 1, 1962, that wage questions not be reopened until May 1, 1963, and that regularly assigned employes be given a minimum of five days' notice before reductions in force.

The board also rejected management proposals for wage cuts and union proposals for a 25-cent hourly increase retroactive to Nov. 1, 1961, and six months' layoff notice.

In answer to a management claim that the agreement is "inflationary" and "not justified by the record," Chairman George E. Leighty of the union committee replied:

"The carriers feel it is too much; we feel it is too little. However, an agreement has been reached, and we feel we ought to observe it."

If a rate increase request comes from the rails, Goldberg said, there will be a "careful and expert review" of all facts relating to costs—wage costs, productivity savings, elimination of the 10 percent railroad transportation tax as recommended by Pres. Kennedy, and the "forthcoming revision of depreciation schedules" by the Treasury Dept.

Work Rule Talks Pressed

Meanwhile negotiations on work rules continued here between five operating rail brotherhoods and managements employing some 200,000 additional employes. Leverett Edwards of the National Mediation Board told reporters the talks are "proceeding in an excellent climate."

A special presidential commission last February recommended changes including progressive elimination of all firemen on diesel locomotives in freight and yard service and compulsory retirement of operating employes at 65. The five unions involved are the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and the Railway Conductors & Brakemen.

Operating Union Gets 8% in Canada

Montreal, Que. — A last-minute agreement between the Railroad Trainmen and the Canadian National Railways averted a strike and gave employes in the bargaining unit an 8 percent wage increase.

The pay hike will be spread over five stages, with the last effective Dec. 31, 1962. Agreement also was reached on a work rules dispute.

Steelworkers Defeat Mine-Mill in Canada

Toronto, Can.—The Steelworkers dealt a decisive defeat to the unaffiliated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in winning bargaining rights at the world's newest nickel complex.

The 1,889 nickel miners and smeltermen at the Thompson, Man., operations of Intl. Nickel Co. voted more than 3-1 to quit Mine-Mill for the Steelworkers.

Loss of Thompson left Mine Mill with only one major local east of the Canadian Rockies, the 17,500-member Local 598 in Sudbury and this was subject to results of an election between Mine-Mill and the Steelworkers. The defeat was the second straight for Mine-Mill in the Canadian nickel industry since it lost the Port Colborne refineries of Inco to the Steelworkers last December by a substantial margin.

The Mine-Mill union was expelled by both the former Canadian Labor Congress and—in the U.S.—the former Congress of Industrial Organizations on charges of Communist domination.

The Thompson vote was delayed for more than two months by Mine-Mill injunctions and appeals to the courts.

The three-day balloting saw 1,596 of the 1,889 eligible voters endorse the Steelworkers by a 1,226-352 margin. Originally credited with 1,168 votes, the Steelworkers picked up another 58 in a recount.

The Mine-Mill defeat came 18 months after the union signed a three-year agreement at the new nickel complex. Although Mine-Mill hailed the agreement as a milestone, the membership frequently denounced it as a sweetheart deal.

The Steelworkers triumphed despite the refusal of Inco to permit organizer M. J. Fenwick and his staff through the barbed wire fence surrounding bunkhouses and tents.

The Thompson defeat came as Mine-Mill was beaten in the last rounds of its fight to stop the Ontario Labor Relations Board from counting the votes of the February ballot that would decide bargaining rights in Sudbury. The board rejected the charge by Mine-Mill that there was fraud and other violations in the Steelworkers application at Sudbury.

Trade Board Held Best on Jurisdiction

Philadelphia—Martin J. Ward, assistant secretary-treasurer of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, urged members of the Mechanical Contractors Association of America to cooperate with the union in settling jurisdictional disputes before the National Joint Board rather than take them to the National Labor Relations Board.

In a speech before the association's 73d annual convention, Ward pointed out that the NLRB has been deciding jurisdictional disputes and determining where the work goes since the Supreme Court ruled last year in the Columbia Broadcasting Co. case that the board has such a responsibility.

He warned the contractors they could lose jobs where the work does not require the full talents of skilled workers if the NLRB continues to award work to semi-skilled and unskilled workmen.

"We will do better," he advised, "if both groups strive to keep disputes where they belong—before the private, voluntary National Joint Board—and out of the hands of the NLRB where they do not belong."

Ward also urged the contractors to watch carefully the operation of the New Manpower Development & Training Act so "it will not be used to carve up and fragmentize our established craft patterns."

Oil Workers Set Sights On 6.5 Percent Package

Denver—The Oil Workers' national bargaining policy committee has set a 6.5 percent increase in wages and fringe benefits as its goal in coming negotiations with the oil industry affecting about 100,000 workers.

The proposed bargaining program must be approved by three-fourths of the union's oil locals before it is binding. OCAW Pres. O. A. Knight said bargaining would begin as soon as the ratification is voted.

Knight emphasized that as drawn up by the 10-member policy committee, the 6.5 percent increase—with a floor of 17 cents an hour—could be achieved either in wages or in fringe benefits, or in a combination of the two.

He said the bargaining objective could not be considered inflationary and would not justify price increases by the oil companies.

"The increase we seek is well within the increased productivity of the economy in general and is far lower than could be justified by the increased productivity of the oil industry," Knight observed. "Even with wage increases, the labor costs in the oil industry have been declining in recent years due to increased productivity. Fewer men are turning out more products at lower and lower labor cost."

Furthermore, he added, oil workers have "some catching up to do."

It has been nearly two years since they have had an increase, he pointed out, and that one—about 5 percent—also was the first in two years.

"So it is obvious that in the long haul the rate of increase has been moderate," Knight concluded.

Career Employe Heads U. S. Bureau

Robert M. Ball, a government career employe, recently was sworn in as commissioner of social security in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

The fifth social security commissioner, the 48-year-old Ball succeeds William L. Mitchell, who has retired after 40 years in the federal service, of which 26 years were spent in social security administration.

Ball is a graduate of Wesleyan University and entered government service 23 years ago with the Social Security Administration's Bureau of Old Age & Survivors Insurance. He became deputy director of the bureau in 1954 and in recognition of his work has received awards from the department, the National Civil Service League and the Rockefeller Public Service Awards.

Telegraphers, WU Agree on Pay Hikes

Wage and fringe benefit improvements averaging 15 cents an hour over two years are part of a tentative settlement by the Commercial Telegraphers covering some 23,000 Western Union employes across the country.

The agreement, reached 15 hours after the CTU contract expired at midnight May 31, was subject to ratification in a mail referendum. Members had authorized the union's national bargaining committee to call a strike if necessary.

E. L. Hageman, chairman of the 11-member committee and head of the CTU's Western Union Division, said the group has recommended membership approval of the settlement.

The pay package provides an across-the-board increase of 4 cents an hour effective June 1 of this year and 7 cents an hour as of next June 1. Further increases of up to 25 cents an hour will go to technical employes in WU's plant department to compensate for higher skills.

The contract would also improve health insurance benefits by removing the $20 daily limit on semi-private hospitalization and increasing the maximum duration of insured hospitalization for retired employes to 61 days, up from 31.

Additional improvements were written in the promotion clause, mileage allowances and the expense per diem for relief employes in smaller offices.

Douty Promoted To BLMR Post

Kenneth Douty, director of the Technical Assistance Div. of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, has been named an assistant commissioner of the bureau.

Douty, who has a long labor background as an organizer and legislative representative for the Textile Workers Union of America and as a founder and first president of Teachers Local 340, Baltimore, succeeds Morris Weisz, now a deputy assistant secretary of the department under Assistant Sec. Esther Peterson.

Prior to joining the bureau staff in 1960, Douty was executive director of the Illinois division of the American Civil Liberties Union. In addition to his labor activities, he had served in the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Div. of the Labor Dept., War Manpower Commission and War Production Board, and was chief of the labor division of the U.S. foreign aid mission to France from 1949 to 1953.

Union Skills, Products Share Spotlight

UNION-INDUSTRIES SHOW, the 17th exposition of products made by fair employers and America's union members, drew capacity crowds to the Memorial Coliseum at Portland, Ore. There were 350 exhibits and visitors left with gifts and souvenirs valued at more than $80,000. Visitors included a delegation of government and business leaders from the Republic of Congo.

"KING OF BRICKLAYERS" is John Di Giandomenico of Cleveland, winner of his union's national apprenticeship contest. Congratulating him is E. Lyle Parsley, vice president of the Mason Contractors of America.

POST OFFICE is one of nation's largest employers of union workers. Members of both the Letter Carriers and the Postal Clerks demonstrated their skills in this joint exhibit.

SHAGGY SHEEP gets a haircut from Lane Potter of the Meat Cutters' Sheep Shearers Local 301, Butte, Mont. Lambs were born to three dozen ewes during the week-long show.

EXPERT CAKE DECORATING is admired by Labor Sec. and Mrs. Arthur J. Goldberg, and by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, himself an expert baker. Thomas Wake of American Bakery & Confectionery Workers Local 24 in San Francisco shows how it's done.

THE LADIES CROWDED around this exhibit and the lucky ones got free hairdos from members of the Barbers & Hairdressers. At other exhibits, visitors saw demonstrations of skills ranging from glass-bottle blowing and pottery processing to steamfitting.

ONE OF OLDEST pieces of fire fighting equipment in the Portland area is backdrop for "100 Percent Union Fire House" card held by Pres. William D. Buck of the Fire Fighters, left, and Union Label Dept. Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis.

The 20th Century Triumphs

IT HAS TAKEN eight bitter and frustrating years, but the Kohler Co. has finally been brought to bay in the nation's courts. It has been found guilty, as charged, of unfair labor practices and ordered to rehire the strikers it "replaced" eight years ago, pay them an estimated $1 million in back pay and bargain in good faith with the Auto Workers.

The Kohler case has become a classic example of an employer's exploitation of every possible strike-breaking and delaying tactic to prevent unionization of its workers. It included along the way an attempt to persecute the UAW through a congressional committee hearing.

In the eight years of NLRB hearings, court battles and endless delays, nearly 1,100 of the original 2,800 strikers have retired, died or for other reasons are no longer on the reinstatement rolls. But 1,700 remain, and only 600 have actually been rehired.

The fate of the other strikers depends on whether at this point Kohler is at last willing to accept a space-age and civilized approach to labor relations.

For at stake at Kohler—and it is not an isolated example—is whether business and industry are willing to engage sincerely in collective bargaining or whether they will pay lip service to the phrase while exerting all efforts to weaken and shatter trade unions.

Where There's Life . . .

LIFE MAGAZINE has handed down the word in its usual imperious manner that the way to put "zing" into the American economy is to sap the strength of the trade union movement.

Grasping firmly the widely accepted doctrine of "free collective bargaining," Life pontificates that such bargaining is impossible unless unions are "brought under the anti-trust laws."

To support its thesis, Life hauls out the aged shibboleth that labor comes to the bargaining table with "monopoly powers" to overwhelm the helpless industrial giants with whom it negotiates agreements.

The Luce magazine has thrown in its lot with right-wingers who are much more candid about their objective of emasculating unions and do not pretend anxiety about free collective bargaining.

The magazine's concern with the future of bargaining is touching in face of the unchallenged fact that without strong trade unions there can be no bargaining, free or otherwise, but a unilateral dictation of terms by the giant industrial and business complexes that dominate the American economy.

Tell Congress!

THE SECOND SESSION of the 87th Congress has moved into its sixth month with the bulk of major legislative decisions still to come.

The shape of those decisions will be the result of the continuing pressure from the White House for its wide-ranging legislative program and the insistent realities of the fall congressional elections.

The relatively slow pace of legislative decision-making and the possibility of the current session extending into September hold out the hope, however, that a meaningful record can be written on taxes, trade, health care for the aged, programs to cope with unemployment and a score of other matters, so that the voters in November will have the basis of an intelligent choice.

There are indications of indecision and uncertainty in Congress on some of the major issues and a searching for voter opinion in the home districts. This is the time, as the record-making reaches the crucial stages, for the letters, the phone calls, the personal visits. They can make the difference.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, June 9, 1962 No. 23

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Some Squeeze!

The Denver Post Says:

Debate on Health Care for Aged Too Often Ignores Real Issues

WHATEVER ITS MERITS, Pres. Kennedy's medicare program at least deserves to be judged for what it is and not for what some of its enemies are saying it is.

The national argument over the issue would be considerably more enlightening if it were centered on the provisions in the Anderson-King bill rather than on provisions that are not in the bill and were never even contemplated by its sponsors.

Before anyone makes up his mind about the bill, he ought to understand not only what the bill would do, but what it would not do.

First, it would not establish a system of socialized medicine like the one in Britain.

The government would not employ, control or pay doctors, and it would not own or control hospitals and other medical facilities. Americans would have to pay physicians and surgeons just as they always have, and the physicians and surgeons would set their own fees.

All the complaints that have been brought to this country by British medical men about the British system of socialized medicine have nothing whatever to do with the Anderson-King bill. No one is proposing that this country adopt the British system or anything like it.

Second, the Anderson-King bill would not interfere in any way with the patient's right to choose his own doctor.

Patients have that right here under the Anderson-King bill, as they do now. No one has advocated taking that right away.

Third, the Anderson-King bill would not pay—and does not pretend to pay—all the medical expenses of persons over 65.

In addition to paying for their own physicians and surgeons, patients over 65 would have to pay $10 a day for the first nine days of hospitalization and $20 for diagnostic out-patient visits. They would have to pay the full cost of hospitalization after 90 days for each individual illness.

They could provide for some of these costs by buying private health insurance to supplement what the Anderson-King bill provides. The bill provides a series of limited benefits, not all the benefits that might be needed.

THE CENTRAL QUESTION in the medicare debate is not socialized medicine, or the right to choose one's doctor or whether to accept a complete program of health care for the aged.

The central question is whether to expand the U.S. social security system to provide certain hospitalization, nursing home, out-patient and home service benefits for persons over 65 who have paid for them during their working lives in social security taxes.

These medicare benefits would supplement the retirement and disability benefits which have been available for years under social security.

They would not solve the entire medical problem of persons over 65 any more than the monthly social security check pays all the expenses of those who have retired.

In both cases, the benefits constitute a minimum level of protection, which the individual can supplement through other means available in our private enterprise system.

The medicare benefits, like the present retirement benefits, would come as a matter of right, not as a matter of charity, because the recipients would pay for the benefits themselves under the insurance principle.

This proposed enlargement of our existing insurance system is the thing to argue about, not the irrelevancies and distortions that have been introduced into the medicare debate so far.

This newspaper believes that the provisions in the Anderson-King bill are generally sound. We oppose as vigorously as anyone the provisions that are not in the bill, the ones its enemies are using to scare away support.

"Er—That's not quite the sort of thing they allow these days under 'miscellaneous expenses.'"

Morgan Says:

Some Odd Things Can Happen, And Do, in This Nutty World

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

WHAT A NUTTY WORLD this is. A lead story in the Wall Street Journal reported that the United States may fall behind other nations in keeping its industrial plant modern. In a dispatch from Paris the New York Times economic specialist, Edwin L. Dale, Jr., writes that the U.S. is trying to find out why Europe is having a boom. Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon promises a tax cut next year and the stock market is uninspired. At lunch with a friend a bureaucrat speculates with nervous humor that at least the Democrats can't say with impunity any more (as if they ever could with precision) that only Republican regimes have economic crises.

Morgan

The economy is a long way from crisis behavior but a lot of very odd things are happening, not the least of which is the spectacle of those know-how Americans looking to Europe for the economic answers. Under such circumstances who can argue with authority that old-fashioned approaches are what's called for to throw a purposeful prod into the country's economic growth.

The economic planners of the Kennedy Administration, from the President down, are determined not to let a recession slip up on us. They propose to do something about it in advance. The tax cuts Sec. Dillon talked about in New York are only part of the package. More deficit spending to attack the hard core of unemployment and stimulate the economy is another part.

But the business community is in a darkly churlish mood. It is still mad as hops at the President for the allegedly vindictive manner in which he rocked the steel industry back on its heels and curled back a price increase. Its bitterness is rankling deeply. A participant in a major Harvard alumni gathering in the West in mid-May was startled to hear businessmen grads attack Pres. Kennedy with a ferocity unmatched since the crimson-faced Liberty League assaults on Franklin D. Roosevelt in the mid-Thirties. In such a black frame of mind the captains of industry are about as disposed to cooperate with John F. Kennedy at the moment as they would be with Karl Marx.

On his side the President himself is not pulling a welcome wagon loaded with goodies to placate business. He is still buttonholing visitors with queries about whether they too weren't stunned by Big Steel's "arrogance" and by the intensity of the venom squirted by business in general at the White House since the showdown. A penetrating paradox here is the fact that the President's original orientation in business policy was conservative but now he is moving cautiously leftward not, Administration sources insist, just out of spite, but with the growing conviction that business can be its own worst enemy.

WHICH BRINGS US to a central point: With all their bigness, neither government nor business nor organized labor is big enough to dictate the solution of our economic ills. This has to be a massive collaborative effort. Perhaps the President will make a fresh, inviting bid for it in his commencement address at Yale. It will be a major speech on economic policy, a sequel to his "myth and reality" remarks at the recent White House economic conference.

What must the President do to restore business confidence in his Administration? Undoubtedly the psychological approach can't be overlooked. Leaders of finance and industry may be quietly invited to the White House to talk things over in private—as editors and publishers have.

But the enigma must be confronted, the enigma that Sec. Dillon sketched in his speech of a soft and still jumpy market and a hesitation of economic growth despite the fact that the "basic ingredients of continued progress are all at hand." Why is our relative prosperity lagging behind Europe's? Why are we behind, comparatively, in plant modernization and where will this put us, as the Wall Street Journal asks, in the light of Europe's swift economic integration and Japan's great industrial growth?

We may well have valuable lessons to learn from the increasing collaboration among government, industry and labor in western Europe, from the careful advance planning in the Common Market countries for business expansion that will purposefully stimulate economic growth.

Application of the lessons may strain and crack old concepts of management and trade union minds. The important thing to remember here, surely, is that many old values no longer apply. These are not the frantic boom-or-bust days of the Twenties, or the social revolutionary days of the Thirties when labor came into its own. We are in the Sixties facing entirely new sets of circumstances and it will take all the responsible leadership of business, labor and government together to meet them.

Washington Reports:

Youth Conservation Corps Outlook Good, Humphrey Says

THE OUTLOOK IS GOOD for establishment this year of a Youth Conservation Corps, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), Senate majority whip and sponsor of the bill, declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Young men between the ages of 16 and 21 would be employed either on a cooperative basis with state and local governments or non-profit organizations or on federal projects in national parks and forests.

Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.) said on the AFL-CIO program that he agreed with the bill's objectives, but wished the program to begin on a pilot basis. He criticized specifically the community projects section under which the federal government would pay half the cost "to public agencies for training and internships in state and local jobs."

"This might very well have a bad effect in delaying the time when these agencies, good as they are, are required to pay the kind of wages that provide a decent living and attract the best kind of help," he charged.

Humphrey asserted that a youth corps would provide useful employment for young men, one of the groups most seriously affected by continued high unemployment.

"SCHOOL DROP-OUT problems are worst at about age 16," he declared. "That's when many young men start getting into trouble. They haven't finished school, can't find a job and start wandering around our big cities without direction and guidance, without gainful employment.

"What we seek to do here is to provide a way of utilizing the tremendous energy and vitality of our young in constructive programs rather than waiting until that energy has got them into some kind of difficulty.

"It is estimated that a community pays a minimum of $25,000 for each delinquent. If we can prevent young people from going on the paths of delinquency and instead doing constructive work for the community, we will have made a tremendous saving and a great investment in the person and the community."

Case said that since the program would absorb 30,000 the first year, 50,000 the second, 100,000 the third year and 150,000 thereafter, this would have an important effect on unemployment.

"But compared to the number of unemployed it is not very large and there is a question as to whether this is the best means of reducing the number of jobless," he said.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IN THE CALIFORNIA ELECTION next November Gov. Edmund G. Brown will be running on his record—a distinguished one that would be a credit to the chief executive of any state. Former Vice Pres. Nixon will be running for political survival. The race will be fought with intensity, with heat, and the outcome will have a profound effect on the course of presidential politics as well as California's.

In any other state against any other Republican candidate, Brown might be considered a certainty for re-election. He won by more than a million votes four years ago, and his constructive accomplishments have been unparalleled. He has stimulated education, improved the state's mental health facilities, promoted fair employment practices and greatly expanded state services generally without running a budget deficit.

Nixon, however, is a formidable opponent because he is a master at political tactics, because his name alone gives him basic strength in the state and because his campaign undoubtedly will be lavishly financed.

The hundreds of thousands of voters his rival, Joseph Shell, won in the primary, are not going to shift to Brown in November. They have threatened to sit at home instead of voting, and Shell carefully withheld an endorsement of Nixon, but the latter's whole effort will be to entice them out while appealing to Democratic conservatives as well.

It may seem like good clean fun to make advance complaints that Nixon is "too liberal," that he has become a "trimmer" who no longer fights for the conservatives' kind of righteousness, but such sloganeering may lose its punch when the chips go down.

Nixon falls short of attracting personal affection. Still, the big contributors and the partisan Republicans will sometime realize that they would like to beat Brown—and, incidentally, damage Pres. Kennedy's prestige by taking a big state away from the Democrats—and that Nixon is their only available instrument.

* * *

CALIFORNIA'S VOTERS are more volatile, perhaps, than those of any other state. There is a three-to-two Democratic edge in registration, but registration has often meant nothing.

Brown has to hold his Democratic strength—and the party is perennially split by factions—or pull substantial numbers of Republicans who genuinely believe the GOP in California will never recover strength until Nixon's claim to leadership is ended.

The former Vice President's task is scarcely less formidable. He has to bring out all or nearly all of the Republicans and siphon away 10 percent to 20 percent of the Democrats. But he carried the state against Kennedy in 1960—narrowly, but he carried it—and in fact he has never lost either his congressional district or the state in six elections.

* * *

THE FORMER VICE PRESIDENT, who barely missed the White House two years ago, is making a bid to reassert national leadership in the GOP.

He knows as well as anyone that if he is beaten, it is the end of the trail. But if he wins he would be in command of a state growing so fast in population that next year it will pass New York, and in command of the huge state delegation to the 1964 Republican nominating convention. He would have much to say about the nominees for President and Vice President and much to say on the party platform.

He will not face in California the profusion of city groups that confused and left him uncertain in the presidential campaign as Kennedy needled him. He already has a phrase—to make California a "model of cost-conscious government with a conscience." And he will not have to involve himself in national issues except as a partisan running for state office.

Brown has the issues and his record, Nixon will have the money. The race will be torrid and the outpouring of voters seems certain to be exceedingly large.

PROPOSED YOUTH CONSERVATION CORPS would help reduce unemployment and prevent juvenile delinquency, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), author of the bill, left, declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.), on the same program, favored the measure but urged a pilot project as a start.

How to Buy:

'Nightmare Book' May Follow 'Dream Book' Credit Vacation

By Sidney Margolius

EVEN THE BIG MAIL-ORDER catalog houses are now plugging vacation travel trips on the installment plan. You can take the family to Disneyland, Washington, Miami Beach or a hundred different places and all you have to say "Charge it!" You can even enjoy a European tour for about $800 a person and take two years to pay for it.

One of the mail-order houses urges that you send for its "dream tour" booklet. The trouble is, the dream book is soon followed by the nightmare book, consisting of the monthly payments you owe, plus the finance charges.

We find that the finance charges usually are the equivalent of true per annum interest rates of anywhere from 12 to 24 percent; most usually 18 percent.

Some banks also advertise vacation loans. These are really personal loans under a more glamorous name and usually cost a true interest rate of 9-14 percent. Thus, bank and credit union loans (usually 8-12 percent) are more reasonable for anyone determined to travel now and pay later.

This department's experience is that a family vacation has become one of the keenest wishes of working people. Unions steadily have increased the amount of vacation time workers get, so that now the majority of contracts provide two weeks, in many cases after three years of employment, and three weeks after, for example, 15 years.

There are good vacation ideas available without going into debt and adding sizable finance charges on to an already big travel bill. Three flourishing trends are family camping, group tours and farm vacations.

FAMILY CAMPING: The National Parks Service, U.S. Forest Service and individual states have been opening up new campgrounds in the past two years to satisfy the demand. A family of four can camp out for two weeks in a state or national park for less than $100, including car, food and miscellaneous expenses.

You can get information on national park and forest facilities from the National Park Service, U.S. Interior Dept., and the Forest Service, U.S. Agriculture Dept., both Washington 25, D. C., and on state camps and parks from the state park commission at the capital of the state you want to visit. You also can get a list of booklets on national parks, forests and historical sites from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

GROUP TRAVEL: The fastest-growing travel method is group trips sponsored by unions, co-ops, credit unions and other organizations. This year airlines revised their rules so that now groups of as small as 25 qualify for reduced-rate fares to Europe. Group arrangements cut costs of trans-Atlantic flights about half. Now the round-trip fare from New York for groups ranges from as little as $189, available by chartering an entire plane off season, to about $300 for smaller groups traveling in season. A three-week tour of Europe including trans-Atlantic fare now is possible for about $695 per person, reports Albert W. Marble, president of the American Travel Association.

The ATA is a travel cooperative sponsored by labor unions and consumer co-ops. Marble reports that in addition to trips abroad, one of the most promising group travel possibilities is shorter and less expensive vacation trips within the U.S. For example, the ATA recently arranged for 82 retired members of one New York union to visit Washington, D. C. Entire cost, including transportation, sight-seeing, hotel, and some of the meals, was $36.50 per person for three days and two nights.

A group of Detroit workers and their families were able to visit New York for three days with costs ranging from $70 to $80 per person, including air transportation. A longer trip arranged for an eastern group of union members took them to Los Angeles and then on to Hawaii and return, including all transportation, for $395 per person.

Such domestic group travel can use rail and bus for the shorter trips, and plane for longer ones.

FARM VACATIONS: One of the most reasonable possibilities is a family vacation on a farm. The U.S. Agriculture Dept. is encouraging farmers to offer vacation facilities as mutually helpful to both rural and city people.

A directory of 240 farms, ranches and country homes that take vacationers is available for 50 cents from Farm Vacations & Holidays, 500 Fifth Ave., New York 36, N. Y. The listings include all parts of the U.S. and part of Canada.

Costs of farm vacations range from as little as $35 to as much as $60 a week per person but most typically are $40-$45 for adults and $20-$25 for children, including meals. Some farms offer cottages for about $60-$65 a week for a family, not including meals, and some also have camp sites at even less cost.

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

ADMINISTRATION BUILDING and New Processes Training Center (in background) of the Typographical Union at Colorado Springs, Colo., are shown in this architect's composite drawing. The training center is now in full operation. The administration building, under construction, is due for completion next fall.

Group Health Plan Trend Seen Growing

Evidence of "an accelerating trend toward prepaid group medical care practice" was cited by Dr. Frederick D. Mott, new president of the Group Health Association of America, at the organization's 12th annual institute in Washington.

An increasing number of doctors and consumers are turning to the group plan method as the best solution to the "growing cost and complexity of adequate medical treatment," said Mott, executive director of the Detroit Community Health Association, a group plan actively supported by the Auto Workers and other union groups.

GHAA, a non-profit organization, now numbers among its affiliates some 40 group practice plans in the United States and Canada, many of them organized or backed by labor organizations.

The institute elected the outgoing president, Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn of Hudson, N. Y., to the new post of board chairman.

In major resolutions, the 400 delegates:

- Called for "immediate congressional action to provide health benefits for the aged" financed through the social security system and administered directly by the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.
- Urged enactment of legislation proposed by Pres. Kennedy to make long-term, low-interest federal loans available to non-profit group practice plans to expand their facilities and equipment.
- Endorsed bills now before Congress to give federal aid to medical and dental schools "in expanding their facilities and enrollments and for scholarships to gifted students in the health professions."
- Endorsed the work of the Physicians' Committee for Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security, formed last March by a group of prominent doctors.
- Supported proposed legislation to set up a nationwide program of vaccination against a number of diseases.
- Voted to affiliate formally with the Cooperative League of the United States.

Among new board members named were John Tomayko of the Steelworkers and Louis Rolnick of the Ladies' Garment Workers. Labor representatives continuing as board members include Lisbeth Bamberger of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security; Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; James Brindle and Jerome Pollack of the Auto Workers; Walter Bierwagen of the Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes, Washington, D. C.

From Soup to Nonsense:

It's Easy to Tell Us Literates—We're in a Permanent Cringe

By Jane Goodsell

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE is enough to make anybody queasy.
The trouble is, it's so difficult to use correctly, while using it wrong is so easy.
For instance, if you say "It is I," you're just as grammatical as you can be,
But you've got to admit that it comes a lot more naturally to say "It's me."

To take another example: a preposition is a part of speech that you should never, never end a sentence with (like this one).

But if you say, "To whom are you giving it?" instead of "Who are you giving it to?" people act as though you've made a terrible pun.
To ungrammatically split an infinitive is a terrible sin.
But to always remember not to ever split an infinitive requires too much mental discipline.

Every school child knows that you should never let a participle dangle,
But trying not to, sentences get into an awful tangle.
I agree that people who say "ain't" instead of "aren't" deserve a disciplinary swat.
But on the other hand, don't you feel like sticking out your tongue at people, who instead of saying "Aren't I?" say "Am I not?"

Another part of speech which is tricky as the deuce
Is the possessive case which I want to talk about's abuse:
It's correct to say, "She's the aunt of the man who sold me my station wagon," but most of us can't Because it's much easier to say, "She's the man who sold me my station wagon's aunt."

Correct usage is: "He's the father of a girl with whom I used to go to school." But why bother?
It's simpler to say: "He a girl I used to go to school with's father."
Oh, English is a marvelous language, and I'd gladly sing its praises if I were a bard,
But don't expect me to use it correctly because it's too hard.

"Automation certainly does create new jobs . . . Mine, for instance!"

To Safeguard Welfare Funds:

Updating Supported In Bankruptcy Laws

Legislation to protect employe welfare funds when an employer goes bankrupt has been strongly endorsed by the AFL-CIO and the Clothing Workers in testimony before a House Judiciary subcommittee.

A bill sponsored by Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) would give welfare funds the same priority claim on the assets of a bankrupt firm as is presently given to wages owed to workers.

AFL-CIO Associate Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris said the legislation is needed because of a 1959 Supreme Court decision that welfare fund payments are not "wages" as defined by the Bankruptcy Act. Any broadening of the definition, the court said, "must be done by Congress."

Urging approval of the Celler bill, Harris said payments by employers to welfare funds "are a form of compensation" to workers "just as real as the monies received in the weekly pay envelopes."

Jacob Sheinkman, ACWA general counsel, earlier told the subcommittee that money owed to a welfare fund by a bankrupt employer is seldom recovered because priority debts usually use up the assets.

The result, he said, is that insurance benefits are "placed in jeopardy at the very time when they might be most needed."

Sheinkman pointed out that if an employer and a union negotiate a 5 cents an hour increase in pay, the additional nickel is considered "wages" entitled to priority claim under the Bankruptcy Act.

If the employes decide to forego a direct wage increase and use the money for improved welfare benefits, the wage cost to the employer "would be exactly the same," he emphasized. Employes should not be penalized for taking part of their wages in the form of insurance benefits, Sheinkman declared.

He pointed out that his union is often faced with a difficult decision when a small employer in financial distress becomes delinquent in payments to the union welfare fund.

In some cases, he said, the employer is allowed "a reasonable amount of leeway" when pressing for immediate payment might force him out of business. If he successfully passes the financial crisis, he pays his back debts to the fund, Sheinkman noted. But if he goes bankrupt, the past due payments are lost under the Supreme Court's ruling.

Sheinkman pointed out that most legislation dealing with bankruptcy was enacted when fringe benefits were virtually unknown. But by the end of 1960, he said, almost three-fourths of workers had life insurance coverage through their employment and more than two-thirds had some form of health insurance.

THIRTY SENIOR CLASS members from Hunter College High School, New York, spent a recent afternoon during a week-long trip to Washington learning how the AFL-CIO works. Shown from left to right are Assistant Dir. Walter Davis of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights; Boris Shishkin, director of that department; John D. Connors, assistant to the AFL-CIO president, who presided at the session; Ray Andrus, of the Committee on Political Education (COPE).

Air Line Pilots' Union Picks New Top Officers

Miami Beach—A veteran jet pilot, Charles H. Ruby, has been elected president of the Air Line Pilots. He succeeds Clarence N. Sayen, who resigned midway in his four-year term after having served since 1951.

Ruby, a pilot on National Airlines since 1934, defeated John C. Carroll, who has been first vice president under Sayen, 7,617 to 6,106. The presidency is the only full-time paid office in the union.

In other elections, Richard O'Neill, Northwest Airlines pilot, was elected first vice president; Steve Gondek, Mohawk, was elected secretary; S. J. Devine, United, was chosen treasurer.

In the Stewards & Stewardess Division, Deloros Kidder of Frontier Airlines was elected ALPA vice president to represent the division; Betty Pursell of United was elected secretary; and Judy Johnson of North Central was elected treasurer.

Both the president of the ALPA and the vice president of the Stewardess Division were elected at a joint meeting of the 296 delegates to the ALPA board of directors and the 52 delegates to the Stewards & Stewardess meeting. The other officers were elected at separate meetings. This was the first year in which the stewardesses elected their own officers. Previously they have been appointed.

In other action, the delegates adopted a safety resolution calling for a solution of the aircraft noise problem through "design and engineering mediums" rather than operational rules which pilots feel are risky.

They said they would refuse to "accept" noise abatement procedures requiring "marginally safe" techniques such as turns below 600 feet, climbs at less than maneuvering speeds and reduction of power earlier than is done on a normal takeoff.

Still ahead, as the convention went into its second week, were proposals for changes in organizational structure, including reduction in the size of local councils.

Vote Voided On Employer Film Showing

Election eve propaganda that is "intimidatory rather than persuasive" and "palpably misleading" in its presentation of facts "oversteps the bounds" the National Labor Relations Board permits in election campaigns, NLRB Trial Examiner Frederick U. Reel said in recently recommending the setting aside of a representation vote at the Murfreesboro, Tenn., plant of the Ideal Baking Co.

The propaganda was a film, "A Question of Law and Order," which Reel described as devoted to "the subject of violence in labor disputes." It was shown to workers and their wives on the eve of an election which the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers lost by a vote of 29 to 28.

Although Reel found its import was that "serious violence regularly attends labor disputes and is a normal concomitant of union activity," he ruled the showing was permissible and dismissed an unfair labor practice charge. He recommended setting aside the election, he said, because the union had no chance to counter the showing.

Kennedy Challenges AMA Stand On Social Security Health Care

(Continued from Page 1)

sent a beginning invasion by the state into the personal life of the individual, represent a taking away of individual responsibility, a weakening of national caliber, a definite step toward either communism or totalitarianism."

• Why did the AMA House of Delegates adopt a resolution in 1949 which said:

"So-called 'social security' is in fact a compulsory socialistic tax which has not provided satisfactory insurance protection for individuals where it has been tried but, instead, has served as the entering wedge for establishment of a socialistic form of governmental control over the lives and fortunes of the people. . . ."

• Why did the AMA House of Delegates in 1953 state that it had "in the past registered its disapproval of the principle involved" in social security?

"If your letter endorses the social security concept on behalf of the AMA," the President wrote Larson, "if it signifies a willingness on the part of the AMA to include doctors under its coverage—if it repudiates the statement made by Dr. [Edward R.] Annis on May 21 which implies that social security 'has to be bad to be begin with' and is a 'free ride [for] those who do not need these benefits' at the taxpayers' expense—then I am certain that your letter will be enthusiastically welcomed by the great majority of the American people."

Larson later called the President's charges a "smokescreen."

Kennedy closed his letter by stating:

"If your organization did not oppose social security before its enactment—only afterwards—I will be glad to point out this unique distinction at my next press conference."

Protests Mount

The exchange occurred as the AMA ran into mounting protests against statements Annis made in a televised rebuttal of the President's address to the nation May 20 urging public support for Anderson-King.

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.), who with Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif) is sponsoring the bill to underwrite hospitalization expenses for retired persons through the social security system, accused the AMA spokesman of "distortions and outright misstatements."

Contrary to the AMA charge that the bill would "destroy" private health insurance, Anderson declared, the Administration program would encourage expansion of private insurance to supplement basic protection under Anderson-King. He noted that life insurance and annuities registered "tremendous gains" following passage of the original Social Security Act in 1935.

Answering Annis point by point, the senator observed, among other things, that while the chairman of the AMA's speakers' bureau had charged the bill would "stand between" doctor and patient, he had failed to recite the measure's provisions guaranteeing to the patient a free choice of physician or hospital.

"Surely," Anderson commented, "a trained physician bases a diagnosis and prognosis on more careful study."

The editorial board of Christianity and Crisis, a weekly journal of Protestant opinion, in an open letter accused the AMA of "polemical talk of socialism" and said its criticism had become "imbedded in a massive ideological opposition to every public attempt to solve an urgent social problem."

Former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R.I.), who heads the National Council of Senior Citizens, charged that the AMA had opened a "campaign of massive deceit" which the NCSC would answer "hour by hour."

On the basis of an estimated $100,000 cost for the AMA program, Forand said, the physicians' association paid about $30 a word to voice "one false charge after another."

Cost Put at $1 Monthly

As an example, he said, it cost the AMA $510 for Annis to say that the Anderson-King bill "will create an enormous and unpredictable burden on every working taxpayer." The truth, Forand asserted, is that "the additional social security contributions by the average worker to finance the health insurance program would be about $1 a month—and this is spelled out in the law."

Meanwhile, it was touch- and-go as to whether supporters of Anderson-King could muster the necessary 13 votes in the Ways & Means Committee to move the bill onto the House floor, where Democratic leaders are confident it would be passed.

Should the committee fail to report the bill out, members of the Senate have said they would seek to force a vote by attaching the plan as an amendment to another piece of legislation.

URW to Collect Second Step Raises

Akron—Approximately 112,000 members of the Rubber Workers will receive wage increases estimated at $13 million this summer under second steps negotiated a year ago.

URW Pres. George Burdon said raises ranging from 4 cents to 8 cents an hour were scheduled to go into effect June 11 in major plants and as of June 25 or July 1 in other plants.

Flood of Letters Urged Backing Health Care Bill

If you haven't written, write now. If you've written before, write again—right away.

This was the gist of an urgent AFL-CIO appeal to affiliated unions and central bodies as the Administration plan for old-age health care under the social security system neared a showdown in the House Ways & Means Committee.

Committee debate on the measure, in executive session, began June 7. A vote was considered likely within a week or 10 days.

The AFL-CIO appeal, issued by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, noted that "a massive mailing campaign triggered by the American Medical Association and the commercial insurance companies" had caused current congressional mail to run against the Anderson-King bill.

"While the total amount of mail over the past several months . . . is in substantial support of the measure, the last-minute effect of the current intensive campaign cannot be discounted," he said.

"We are therefore urging you again to bring this problem before your members . . . Tell them of the immediate importance of writing to their congressmen . . . Even if they have written on previous occasions they should write or wire AGAIN NOW."

CONVENTION BADGE of the Ladies' Garment Workers is given AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky following Meany's speech at the Atlantic City gathering of nearly 1,000 delegates. Meany's talk, pledging that the AFL-CIO will "very seriously consider" a national campaign for the 35-hour workweek, was a highlight of the convention.

ILGWU Delegates Elect Dubinsky to 11th Term

Atlantic City—Ladies' Garment Workers Pres. David Dubinsky won unanimous re-election to an 11th term as head of the union as nearly 1,000 delegates closed out their 31st convention here.

Also re-elected were Sec.-Treas. Louis Stulberg, First Vice Pres. Luigi Antonini and all but two of the 20 other members of the executive board.

The new vice presidents are Shelley Appleton, manager of Local 23, succeeding Benjamin Kaplan who resigned for personal reasons, and Israel Breslow, head of Local 22, who succeeds Julius Hochman.

Before its windup, the convention adopted a series of policy resolutions including a strong endorsement of a nationwide 35-hour week without reduction in pay, which had been advocated in speeches by Dubinsky and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and had set the theme for the eight-day gathering.

In urging Congress to cut the standard workweek under the wage-hour law, the delegates cited the persistence of high-level unemployment and of "unfair competition based on inferior working conditions." ILGWU contracts already provide the 35-hour week for most members.

Among other things, resolutions also urged:

- A federal minimum wage of $1.50 an hour as soon as possible, with immediate applicability of the $1.25 rate scheduled to go into effect September 1963.
- Substantial amendment of the Landrum-Griffin Act, which "has badly hampered legitimate unions in the pursuit of legitimate union objectives."
- Creation of a Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission.
- Government action to protect the voting rights of all citizens and to abolish discrimination in jobs, housing, education, travel, recreation—"or any other part of American life."
- Speedy passage of the Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the aged through social security without any compromises that would "undermine its soundness and effectiveness."

Olson Pleads Guilty in B&C Theft Case

Peter H. Olson, former secretary-treasurer of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers, has pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiring to steal $35,000 of the union's funds.

Olson was secretary-treasurer of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers when the AFL-CIO expelled the union in 1957 for domination by corrupt elements and chartered a new organization, the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

U.S. District Judge Edward M. Curran accepted the plea of guilty to one of 23 counts in the indictment but delayed sentencing, permitting Olson to remain free in $5,000 bond. The conspiracy charge carries a maximum penalty of five years in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Justice Dept. Attorney Harry T. Alexander said the remaining counts, involving grand larceny and false record-keeping, would be dropped "at the appropriate time."

The $35,000 shortage was discovered by a Labor Dept. team investigating the union's financial affairs.

Refusal of the B&C to conform satisfactorily with the AFL-CIO Ethical Practice Codes led to the union's expulsion by the federation in 1957. Pres. James G. Cross has since resigned and a union convention earlier this year voted to seek a no-raid pact with the AFL-CIO-chartered ABC as a preliminary to reaffiliation.

Typos Re-elect Brown President

Indianapolis—Top officers of the Intl. Typographical Union, led by Pres. Elmer Brown, won new terms in the union's biennial election, according to the official tally.

Brown, who headed the Progressive Party slate, received 47,667 votes to 30,645 for Fred R. Hunt, Jr., of Chicago, his Independent Party opponent.

Sec.-Treas. William R. Cloud of Seattle topped John J. Conley of Dallas, 48,824 to 28,313.

Also re-elected were First Vice Pres. John J. Pilch of Chicago, Second Vice Pres. Sandy Bevis of Vancouver, B. C., and Third Vice Pres. Joe Bailey of San Francisco, who represents ITU Mailers.

Low Pay, Long Hours Assailed:

Building Service Conference Drafts Drive in Hospitals

A program designed to bring the benefits of union wages and working conditions to more than 2 million workers in hospitals and nursing homes was drafted by the Building Service Employes in Washington, D. C., at the union's first Conference on Hospitals and Nursing Homes.

BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan keynoted the conference with a report that the average hospital employe is inadequately paid, works 50 to 60 hours a week in many cases, and is "deliberately excluded" from many important aspects of social insurance and labor legislation such as minimum wage laws, workmen's compensation and jobless insurance.

Pointing out that hospitals and nursing homes constitute one of the largest units in the economy, with more than 2 million employes, Sullivan said "it is clear that we have yet to win an American standard of living" for most such workers.

Dir. Nelson Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security told the conference that the hospital administrator often is buffeted between opposing viewpoints—that of the board of trustees, representing the moneyed interests in a community, and that of the professional staff led by the doctors.

The average administrator, he said, is "a poor guy with a title on the door and a Bigelow on the floor" with "about as much power as a notary public whose license has expired." He urged union leaders to "have pity on him" because he has to "make peace with doctors brainwashed by the American Medical Association."

Cruikshank listed the advantages of the Anderson-King bill for health care to the aged under the social security system and predicted that its enactment into law will "lift the horizons and broaden the field of service in public welfare areas with which you are so well identified."

He said most hospital administrators are for the bill "but don't dare say so."

Progress Marked

In his report on union progress in the hospital field, Sullivan said wages and working conditions have improved "in part" in the past 15 years because of "more progressive personnel policies, because of public pressure and the courageous stand of the American Nurses' Association," but also because BSEIU has been "effectively and aggressively organizing hospital workers" and fighting to improve their conditions.

Listing the benefits denied most hospital workers, Sullivan added that "even social security protection is not given to him automatically—he is covered only after the institution and his fellow employes carry out a special procedure."

Automation is among the problems affecting these workers, Sullivan said, naming the automatic elevator, the scrubbing machine, electronic and semi-automatic laundry and kitchen devices, computers and other office machines, and in the laboratory, "machines and electronic devices are being used to perform chemical analyses formerly done by skilled technicians."

The two-day program featured talks by Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights on "Raising Living Standards for Minority Groups;" Dir. Andrew Biemiller of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation on bills affecting hospital workers; and Dir. John W. Livingston of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization on organizing opportunities.

Three Jailed In Picket Line Controversy

Brooklyn—A strike of 200 hospital workers here is continuing in the face of a State Supreme Court justice's order against picketing and the jailing of the union's president and two organizers on a contempt of court charge.

Local 1199, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, struck May 23 after the board of trustees of Beth-El Hospital refused it recognition as bargaining agent for employes of the kitchen, laundry, dietary and housekeeping departments and nurses' aides.

The hospital management applied for an injunction against picketing, which was granted by State Supreme Court Justice Louis L. Friedman. Union Pres. Leon J. Davis, charging the injunction was unconstitutional, returned to the picket line and was ordered to jail for 30 days, along with the organizers, Marshall Dubin and Elliott Godoff.

The court's Appellate Division delayed decision on a union request for a stay of execution pending appeal. The three unionists were lodged in the Civil Jail.

After the strike started, Theodore Shapiro, a hospital trustee, resigned in protest against management's non-recognition policy and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D), another trustee, called on the hospital to deal with the union.

Gross Re-elected Chairman of AVC

Atlantic City—Murray Gross, secretary-treasurer of Ladies' Garment Workers Local 66, New York, was re-elected national chairman of the American Veterans Committee at its 15th convention here.

Paul Cooke, acting dean and professor of English at the District of Columbia Teachers College, Washington, was re-elected vice chairman.

Atomic Electric Plants Urged for Power-Short

The United States could make a real contribution toward world peace and stimulate world trade by providing up to 1,000 atomic electric generating plants in power-short lands all over the world, Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers said on returning from a visit to Japan.

Nuclear-powered turbogenerators, built by the government or private investors or both, would help prove that atomic materials can be turned into "atoms for peace," Carey said.

He reported an enthusiastic reception for this suggestion by delegates to the 10th annual convention of Denki Roren — the All-Japan Federation of Electric Machine Workers Unions. Carey was a speaker at the convention in Kofu, Japan, and invited Pres. Yukichi Takehana to be a guest Sept. 17 when the IUE's 10th anniversary convention opens in Cleveland.

Carey said the U.S. could supply other nations with 1,000 pilot power projects similar to the plant at Ft. Belvoir, Va., built recently at a cost of $2 million. The cost probably could be reduced about 30 percent by assembly-line production methods, he said.

He told a press conference that the Denki Roren executive board approved his proposal for an exchange of research, publications and education personnel with IUE. The reciprocal arrangement also would include mutual assistance in strikes and an exchange of contract data, he said.

Carey and George Collins, IUE board member, urged the convention delegates to affiliate with the Intl. Metalworkers Federation, allied with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, instead of the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions. Leaders of the Japanese federation decided to encourage affiliated unions to join the IMF.

Carey was a guest also of another group of Japanese unions in the Soyo federation.

PRES. YUKICHI TAKEHANA, right, of the All-Japan Federation of Electric Machine Workers Union (Denki Roren), receives an IUE pin from Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in Kofu, Japan, in recognition of a new cooperative arrangement between the two union groups. Takehana presided at the 10th annual convention of Denki Roren and will be a guest speaker Sept. 17 at the IUE's 10th anniversary convention. Carey was a guest of the Japanese group recently.

Soviet Bloc Rebuffed:

Ireland's Delegate Wins ILO Election

Geneva, Switzerland—John Lynch, Ireland's minister of industry and commerce, was elected president of the Intl. Labor Organization's 46th conference here in an unprecedented three-way fight.

United States worker, government and employer delegates voted solidly for Lynch, who won on the second ballot by 152 votes to 136 for Jean-Francois Jarison, the Malagasy Republic's minister of labor.

The Soviet Union made an attempt to get the conference presidency for the Communist bloc but the drive failed when Leon Chajn, Poland's government delegate, was eliminated after running third and last on the first ballot.

Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver heads the U.S. delegation to the three-week conference. Rudy Faupl, Machinists' international representative and American worker delegate to the ILO, again leads a strong contingent of U.S. labor advisers which includes Pres. George Meany of the AFL-CIO, Pres. Al J. Hayes of the IAM, and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg is scheduled to address the delegates about midway through the conference, which was opened June 6 by Shambhu Merani of India, chairman of the ILO's governing body, or executive committee.

Soviets Make Bid

In nominating the Polish government delegate to the conference presidency, Soviet Labor Minister A. P. Volkov complained that a Communist state had never held the office.

"The time has come to abolish this injustice," Volkov admonished the nearly 1,000 delegates and their advisers.

The Communists met their defeat with obvious displeasure, but Jarison rose to pledge continued full cooperation in the ILO's work, saying:

"Every man worth his salt likes to fight sometimes, but only the mean in spirit bear a grudge when they are beaten."

'Keep Alive Idealism'

In his presidential address, Lynch told the conference: "For the benefit of the underprivileged workers of the world we must keep alive the idealism and crusading spirit of the early days of our organization and at the same time seek new ways and new ideas to help workers whose hunger and oppression is not of the body but of the spirit."

The conference received a two-part report from ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse, reviewing the activities of the organization over the past year and directing the attention of the 102-nation agency to the problems of older workers.

Morse urged the ILO to take the initiative to assure that older people may live out their lives "in reasonable conditions of security, comfort and human dignity."

While the discussion of this problem continues in plenary sessions, conference committees are preparing a series of international pacts on technical items.

One of these—placed on the agenda at the insistence of the workers' group on the Governing Body—would ban the sale, hire or use of machinery with inadequate safety guards.

Another is a recommendation calling on governments to recognize the 40-hour workweek as a standard to be attained throughout the world. Employer delegates blocked its adoption last year through a procedural device despite a favorable vote of 159 to 7, with 98 abstentions.

Worker delegates in the Governing Body succeeded with the support of enough government delegates to have the question again placed before the conference this year.

Big Business Rule Alleged in Canada

Selkirk, Man.—There is no such thing as free enterprise in Canada, Thomas C. Douglas of the New Democratic Party said in a speech here.

"Free enterprise," he maintained, suggests an economy with many small firms, none of which is large enough to dominate the market, each acting independently of the other and none engaging in price-fixing or market-sharing agreements.

All of these conditions, Douglas maintained, are violated in Canada, with nearly all major industries dominated by a few firms—usually no more than six.

"In the absence of social controls," he said, "this corporate structure constitutes a form of economic dictatorship. They reserve for themselves decisions which, in a democracy, should be the prerogative of the people."

Editorial Hails AFL-CIO For World Labor Role

The following editorial is reprinted from the June 2 issue of the New York Times:

"The official seal of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations depicts the hands of two workers clasped in friendship across the face of the globe. The Federation and its affiliates have been doing a good deal lately to give substance to this symbol.

"They are raising funds to aid the infant labor movement in Algeria. They are also cooperating with business groups and the Agency for Intl. Development in financing a project to train unionists and promote improved social standards in Latin American and Caribbean countries. This is in addition to the $1,250,000 a year the AFL-CIO contributes to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for union training schools and other assistance to labor in Africa and Asia.

"The formation of closer ties between American labor and labor in other lands is a contribution to abolition of poverty, improved international understanding and a more peaceful world. The unions in this country are militantly opposed to all forms of totalitarianism. Their expanded activity overseas can give new vitality to democratic forces, and also serve as a corrective to the false picture of American society propagated by world communism."

NEW YORK AFL-CIO LEADERS plan aid for Algerian trade unions at a luncheon with Gen. Sec. Abdennour Ali-Yahia of the General Union of Algerian Workers. The funds will be raised through the sale of Algerian Solidarity Stamps. At the meeting from left are Moe Rosen, Irving Brown, ICFTU representative at the United Nations; Ali-Yahia, Matthew Guinan, Harry Van Arsdale, New York AFL-CIO president; Morris Iushewitz, central body secretary; William Bowe, treasurer, and Chris Plunkett.

California GOP Chooses Nixon To Face Brown in November

(Continued from Page 1)

Nixon's drive for the governorship immediately after the former Vice President announced his candidacy.

His cumulative voting record in Congress, Pitts said, showed a "dedication to special interests" and "moral callousness" toward the aspirations of workers and the "great social needs of our free society." He said that Nixon's effort for state office was reminiscent of the attempt of another California Republican leader, former Sen. William F. Knowland, to use the post "as a stepping stone for lofty ambitions nationally."

Labor Backed Brown

The State AFL-CIO gave strong backing to Brown in the Democratic primary.

The California Republican primary left unresolved the question of the actual voting strength of the GOP's so-called conservative wing that includes right-wing fringe groups such as John Birch Society members.

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel won renomination without trouble over two conservative opponents and promptly announced he would conduct a "vigorous, intensive and independent" campaign in November against State Sen. Richard Richards, the Democratic nominee. Kuchel has been the target of numerous attacks by Birch Society spokesmen.

Two incumbent Republicans, Representatives John H. Rousselot and Edgar Hiestand, nevertheless won renomination despite their acknowledged Birch Society membership.

In a second significant primary, John B. Connally, Jr., former Navy secretary, defeated Don Yarborough in an exceedingly close race for Democratic nomination for governor of Texas.

Yarborough, strongly backed by Texas labor, ran as an all-out supporter of Pres. Kennedy's New Frontier, but Connally had substantial Democratic organization strength despite his criticism of some Kennedy programs.

Texas Republicans previously had nominated an acknowledged conservative, Jack Cox, for governor, and the Connally-Cox battle is expected to be bitter and close. The GOP has been steadily rising in strength in the state, which twice gave its electoral votes to former Pres. Eisenhower and was barely held by the Democrats in 1960 for Kennedy.

'States Righter' Wins

In Mississippi, an anti-Kennedy Democratic member of the House, Rep. Jamie Whitten, won heavily over a colleague, Rep. Frank Smith, in a straight test of strength between anti-Administration Democrats and party "loyalists."

The two congressmen were thrown into the same district when the state lost one of its six seats as a result of the 1960 census. Whitten in 1960 supported a "states' rights" group of "independent" electors that refused to vote for Kennedy, while Smith backed the Democratic Party national ticket. Whitten had the support this year of the "states' rights" organization headed by Gov. Ross R. Barnett.

In the Connecticut Republican State convention, Rep. Horace Seely-Brown, Jr., was a surprise winner over former Gov. John Lodge for the Senate nomination, and insurance executive John Alsop won nomination for governor.

Both Lodge and Alsop's beaten challenger, former GOP State Chairman Edwin H. May, Jr., can renew the fight by seeking a popular primary, but this would be unprecedented in GOP state politics. Seely-Brown will run for the Senate seat being vacated by retiring Republican Prescott Bush against a Democratic nominee to be selected later between former Gov. Abraham Ribicoff and Rep. Frank Kowalski. Ribicoff is quitting as secretary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare to make the race.

In other primaries:

- In South Dakota, Sen. Francis Case won Republican renomination for a third term and will face Democrat George McGovern, a former representative, who resigned as director of the Food for Peace program to re-enter politics.
- In Idaho, Democratic Sen. Frank Church was renominated and will face Republican John T. Hawley. GOP Gov. Robert K. Smylie was renominated for a third term; the Democrats nominated Vernon K. Smith.
- In Montana, Democrat Leo Graybill, Jr., was chosen to run against incumbent Republican Rep. James F. Battin, and Republican Wayne Montgomery won his party's nomination for the race against incumbent Democratic Rep. Arnold Olsen.

Concern Voiced At 'HR 3' Move

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has expressed "concern" at approval given by the House Judiciary Committee to a bill which would give state law precedent over federal law where a conflict existed, unless Congress specified otherwise.

The bill, often referred to by its perennial designation of HR 3, is similar to measures twice passed by the House but never acted on by the Senate.

IUD Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said its enactment would "turn the nation into a confederation of bickering states." He charged that "its target is civil rights and welfare legislation."

Missile Strike Ban Restated By Haggerty

There is "absolutely no justification or valid excuse for a work stoppage at any missile base at any time," Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. declares in the first issue of the Construction Craftsman, the department's new monthly magazine.

Haggerty writes that he has taken this position "in spite of the irritations and the provocations and the red tape that cause tempers to fly."

He notes that "things have deteriorated" in the first quarter of 1962 following the "wonderful job" in the last eight months of 1961, when "time lost due to shutdowns on missile bases was reduced to the vanishing point."

"In fact," he writes, "there is serious, official concern about the increasing number of work stoppages. Again we hear threats from those in Congress who are out to smear labor and enact further anti-union legislation.

"We cannot afford to ignore the danger signs. The trend of the last few months must be halted."

Haggerty calls on every building trades worker and local union official to "understand his responsibility and carry it out faithfully" in connection with the policy adopted by international union presidents of requiring locals to secure international aproval before engaging in any work stoppage.

'Main Line' of Defense

"In the days and months ahead, it is up to us to strengthen America's main line of defense—its missile system," he writes.

"We've got to take into consideration the whole picture, not merely what's happening right under our noses. Our grievances on the job are minor compared to our main grievance against the Communist leaders who are threatening us and all free men so boldly. Unfortunately, we can't get that problem settled by an impartial commission, as we can with our job problems.

"Remember, if the Kremlin prevails we won't have to worry any more about anti-labor legislation. The penalty for work stoppages will be death at dawn before a firing squad."

Committee Backs Foreign Trade Bill

Vote of 20-5 Reports Measure to House

By David L. Perlman

The House Ways & Means Committee has approved a bill to give Pres. Kennedy more power than any American chief executive has ever had to join other nations in reducing tariff barriers, negotiate lower duties with the booming European Common Market, and provide a new form of adjustment aid to workers and industries hurt by any rise in imports.

The goal of the bill is to expand America's foreign trade by increasing exports and to strengthen free world economic cooperation.

Committee approval by an unexpectedly large 20-5 margin gave the bill a flying start towards congressional approval this year. Final committee action came after Republicans failed in a renewed attempt to strip adjustment assistance from the bill.

Adjustment aid, including substantially increased unemployment and retraining benefits to workers, has been described by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as "inseparable" from trade expansion. Without this safeguard, he told the committee in testimony earlier this year, labor could not support the trade bill.

The GOP attack on the adjustment provisions is expected to be renewed when the bill reaches the House floor, probably during the week beginning June 18. Although tariff bills traditionally are brought to the floor under a rule barring amendments, a motion to recommit with instructions to make specific changes would be allowed.

The bill presently provides that when the President, "after receiving the advice of the Tariff Commission," determines that tariff reductions "cause or immediately threaten to cause . . . unemployment or underemployment," workers shall be entitled to:

- A readjustment allowance equal to 65 percent of the worker's average wage or 65 percent of the average weekly manufacturing wage, whichever is less. Based on 1961 statistics, the highest amount a worker could receive would be $60 a week.
- Readjustment payments for up to 52 weeks of unemployment, plus an additional 13 weeks for persons aged 60 or over, and up to a total of 78 weeks for persons enrolled in approved training programs. Workers who refuse suitable retraining opportunities would be disqualified from readjustment allowances.
- Supplementary payments for workers who are "underemployed"—on part time—as a result of import competition, with a ceiling of 75 percent of normal wages including part-time earnings plus adjustment benefits.
- Relocation allowances for heads of families, with no likelihood of finding suitable employment in their home communities, who receive an offer of employment elsewhere "affording a reasonable expectation of long-term duration." The relocation allowance includes expenses of moving workers, their families and household effects plus a lump sum payment equal to two and one-half times the average weekly manufacturing wage. Based on the 1961 figure, this cash payment would be $230.85.

Technical Aid Included

Business firms would be entitled to help in the form of technical assistance, tax relief, loan guarantees and direct loans for modernization of equipment or shifting into a new line of production.

Since 1934, U.S. trade policy has been governed by the Reciprocal Trade Act which permitted the President to negotiate limited two-way reductions of tariffs on specific commodities. Under the 1958 extension of the act—which expires this June 30—the President was authorized to cut import duties by a maximum of 20 percent on a reciprocal basis.

The new trade expansion bill is aimed to reshape U.S. tariff policy to meet conditions resulting from the emergence of the European Common Market as a major factor in world trade, the needs of underdeveloped areas and the broad Soviet trade offensive.

The six western European nations in the Common Market have been the biggest customers for American exports. Their timetable calls for the elimination of all tariffs between member countries by 1970, with a common tariff wall against non-member nations. The Common Market countries are prepared to lower tariffs against non-member countries but only on a reciprocal basis.

If Congress passes the committee-approved trade bill, the President would have authority over a five-year period to reduce or eliminate tariffs on groups or categories of products where the U.S. and the European Economic Community together have 80 percent of world trade.

He would also be able to negotiate reciprocal reductions of tariffs with other countries by up to 50 percent, spread over five years. Thus a 40 percent tariff reduction would amount to an 8 percent a year cut for five years.

'Favored Nation' Principle Kept

The new program continues what is known as the "most favored nation" principle. This means that any tariff cuts negotiated with the Common Market or any nation would also be extended to other friendly nations. Communist-controlled nations are specifically excluded from any tariff reduction.

While the legislative outlook in the House is considered favorable to passage of the committee-endorsed bill, there are three groups of opponents:

- Those who are against both tariff cuts and adjustment aid.
- Supporters of expanded trade who oppose adjustment aid for workers, at least at any level higher than regular state unemployment benefits.
- Opponents of tariff cuts who nevertheless favor aid to workers and companies hurt by imports and who would vote against dropping this provision from the bill even if they planned to vote against the trade bill as a whole on final passage.

Omaha IBEW Gets Pay Hike for 3,500

Omaha, Neb.—Wage increases ranging from 7 to 11 cents an hour and averaging 7.5 cents have been negotiated by Local 1974, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the Western Electric Co.

The pay hikes, which affect 3,500 workers, became effective May 13 and are the equivalent of a 3.6 percent boost. IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman congratulated the local negotiating committee and Intl. Rep. Bob Garrity for "an impressive job well done."

The IBEW represents about 70,000 Western Electric employes at 12 locations.

WHEN A TORNADO HIT Waterbury, Conn., killing one person, destroying 30 homes and damaging hundreds of others, organized workers—as usual—turned out for emergency duty. Here Joseph Fischetti (left, wearing Red Cross armband), a member of Barbers Local 732, serves as a mobile canteen volunteer helping to feed homeless families. At his left is Mrs. John Gute, Waterbury Red Cross chairman of staff aides.

Unions Rush Aid to Victims Of Tornado

Waterbury, Conn.—The community service role of the labor movement in Waterbury was quickly demonstrated when this city's northern suburbs were devastated by a tornado late in the afternoon of May 24.

One person was killed, scores were injured, and more than 4,000 men, women and children were affected in one way or another. Some 30 houses were smashed to pieces and hundreds of others suffered greater or less damage.

The wind had barely died down when Ken Knott, AFL-CIO community services representative and labor liaison with the United Community Funds, offered organized labor's services to the Red Cross. Knott was named chief coordinator of union activities in the disaster area during the emergency.

He and Pres. John J. Driscoll of the Connecticut AFL-CIO and Pres. Joseph Falcone of the Greater Waterbury AFL-CIO went into a meeting with local and national Red Cross officials and came out with an assignment to take charge of all motor service activities.

The early morning of May 26 found union members at the wheels of Red Cross mobile canteens moving into the stricken neighborhoods with reviving hot coffee and sandwiches for victims, national guardsmen, police and weary rescue workers. The operation went on through the day and most of the night, ending briefly at 3 a.m. on May 27 and being resumed at dawn.

Many of the more than 50 men—members of various unions—who saw emergency duty on the canteens continued to serve through Memorial Day.

Driscoll, Falcone and Knott praised the union members for their quick response with special mention for Printing Pressmen's Local 150 and Barbers Local 732.

Three Union Officers Reelected by HIP

New York—The Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York (HIP) recently re-elected three union officials to the board of directors.

Given new terms were Vice Pres. Charles S. Zimmerman of the Ladies' Garment Workers; Chairman Jay Rubin of the New York Labor-Management Council of Health & Welfare Plans, and Vice Pres. William Michaelson of Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Dist. 65.

Program Set to Attack Juvenile Delinquency

Federal, city and private funds will be used to launch an experimental three-year program aimed at stamping out juvenile delinquency and opening new opportunities for young people in New York's crowded lower East Side.

Pres. Kennedy termed the $12.6 million project "the most advanced program yet devised to combat delinquency on a broad scale."

It will range from play activities for 7-year-olds, through an "adventure corps" for boys of 9 to 13, to useful work projects for out-of-school youth and to neighborhood coffee shops, featuring local musical and art talent, for youngsters 16 to 21.

There will be an urban youth service corps, which will provide jobs and training in playground and social service projects, a youth jobs center and a guidance and counseling service. Remedial reading clinics will be established in local schools and bright high school students will be paid to tutor failing elementary school pupils.

A frankly experimental pilot project will be set up to work with 50 teen-age and young adult narcotics addicts, with a program to rehabilitate juvenile offenders.

Kennedy, who announced the program at a White House ceremony, said the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency, established last year by Congress, will make a $1.9 million grant for the demonstration program, with an additional $1.5 million coming from the Public Health Service's National Institute of Mental Health.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner has announced that New York City will contribute a total of $4.5 millions to the program during the three years. The remaining funds will come from foundations and private donors. Directing the project will be James E. McCarthy, 45-year-old social worker with a record of success in working with juvenile gangs in New York.

The project area, with a population of 107,000, has one of the city's worst juvenile delinquency records. Nearly two-thirds of the housing is either substandard or overcrowded and less than 15 percent of the adults completed high school.

Some of the programs included in the project, such as the youth service corps, parallel provisions of the Youth Opportunities bill which has won committee approval in both the House and Senate.

In announcing the start of the cooperative federal, local and private agency program, Kennedy said juvenile delinquency is a "matter which requires action by us all in this decade" and one that must be attacked "across the board."

29-6-62

Group Buys Debs Home As Memorial

The Eugene V. Debs Foundation has been set up in Terre Haute, Ind., and has purchased the house in which the internationally famous labor leader, social reformer and humanitarian lived for many years.

The dwelling, which Debs designed and built and which he shared with his wife, Kate, has lately housed a fraternity at Indiana State College, which the property adjoins. The foundation is raising funds to restore it to its original state as a memorial to the five-time Socialist candidate for president.

Tilford Dudley, director of the Speakers' Bureau in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations, is a member of the board of directors of the foundation. The national committee is made up of Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Dudley and a group of labor education specialists—Otto Pragan of the AFL-CIO; James Wolfe, Brewery Workers; Carroll Hutton, Auto Workers; William Abbott, Rubber Workers; Marc Karson, Clothing Workers, Frank Henson, Machinists; Mark Starr, retired education director of the ILGWU.

Contributions may be sent to the foundation at P. O. Box 843, Terre Haute, Ind.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 16, 1962 | No. 24

Kennedy Launches Drive To Spur Lag in Recovery

Asks '63 Tax Cut, Denounces 'Myths'

Pres. Kennedy has launched a drive to stimulate the lagging economic recovery, coupling a program for tax reduction with an attack on business-held "myths" and "stereotypes" about government fiscal and economic policies.

The President's tax program, however, including an "across the board reduction in personal and corporate income tax rates" in 1963, is designed basically to spur investment. It includes the 8 percent tax credit in the House-passed measure now before the Senate Finance Committee and a $1 billion benefit revision of tax regulations on depreciable assets, promised for some time in July.

He told a news conference also that the wide-ranging New Frontier program he has sent to Congress, if enacted, would provide a stimulus to the economy. This includes stand-by authority to reduce taxes in face of a threatened recession, repeal or lowering of transportation excise taxes, a public works program, temporary extension of unemployment compensation and a bill to aid employment of youth.

In a commencement address at Yale University, the President asked for business cooperation with his Administration, indicating that much of the opposition to his ideas stemmed from "traditional labels and worn-out slogans of an earlier era" dealing with federal deficits and fiscal policy, the size of the government and government responsibility in labor-management relations.

He made it clear that so far as the present Administration is concerned a larger government is not

(Continued on Page 5)

WORKER-FATHER of the year, as designated by the National Father's Day Committee, is Jack Markowitz of New York City, Typographical Union chapel chairman at the Peter F. Mallon Co. printshop. Sharing his pride in the award and the George Washington medal presented him by Mayor Robert F. Wagner are his wife, Frances, left, and daughter Lisa. Another daughter, Marilyn, was absent because of illness. Markowitz acts as historian for ITU Local 6 and has served actively on the local's hospitalization and blood donor committees. He is 48 and a veteran of World War II service in Italy.

T-H Strike Ban Sought At Republic

A Taft-Hartley Act injunction proceeding has been launched by Pres. Kennedy to halt for 80 days a work stoppage involving 8,000 Machinists at the Republic Aviation Corp., Farmingdale, N. Y.

IAM Lodge 1987 struck the aircraft firm Apr. 2 after the company in month-long negotiations had failed to come up with "adequate" severance pay and supplemental unemployment benefit "cushions" despite an announced threat of mass layoffs.

Acting on the recommendation of Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, who said continuation of the strike would "imperil the national health and safety," Kennedy named a board of inquiry headed by Lloyd K. Garrison, New York industrial relations expert.

This would clear the way for the Justice Dept. to seek a court order prohibiting the walkout for

(Continued on Page 3)

Democrats Rap Critics Of NLRB

A rousing counter-attack on congressional critics of the National Labor Relations Board was launched in the House by four Democrats who charged the critics of "playing into the hands" of employer groups desiring to "gut" the labor law.

The counter-attack was aimed specifically at the sponsors of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin bill passed by the House—Representatives Phil M. Landrum (D-Ga.) and Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.). The House bill was substantially modified in conference with Senate conferees led by then Sen. John F. Kennedy (D-Mass.).

Landrum and Griffin had taken the House floor Apr. 10 to charge that the NLRB, partially reconstituted by two Kennedy appointees—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Member Gerald A. Brown—had "eroded and all but repealed" the 1959 amendments actually passed.

The Democrats who assailed the board's critics were Representatives James G. O'Hara (Mich.), Frank Thompson (N. J.) and Roman Pucinski (Ill.), all members of the House Labor Committee, and Clem Miller (Calif.), a former NLRB field examiner.

O'Hara opened the debate by linking the Griffin-Landrum attack on the NLRB with the so-called "Operation Spring Thaw"—a Republican coordinated blast at the Kennedy Administration. The New York Times described the GOP operation as a cross between a filibuster and a national political rally that stated "the case against the political enemy in excessive terms calculated to stir the emotions of the faithful."

Both an advance press release and the Griffin and Landrum speeches, O'Hara recalled, had accused the labor board of ignoring congressional intent to ban all "secondary boycotts." He cited Griffin's speech saying that NLRB decisions had "frustrated and circumvented" the expressed purpose of Congress by "tortured interpretations," "ingenious innovations" and "nimble footwork."

Counter-Attack Detailed

In a case-by-case analysis and by statistical tables, Thompson, Pucinski and Miller joined O'Hara in replying:

- The Landrum-Griffin attack served that "small group of employers" who failed to knock out the basic Wagner Act by "frontal attack" in the Supreme Court and

(Continued on Page 12)

Kennedy Lauds Record:

Missile Site Strikes Hit All-Time Low

A report by the Missile Sites Labor Commission that work stoppages have been reduced to an all-time low during the past year has been hailed by Pres. Kennedy as a record of which the nation can be "justifiably proud."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, chairman of the tripartite commission, gave the President a report showing:

- Lost time because of labor disputes dropped to one man-day for each 1,100 man-days worked last year. This is one-sixth the record for the construction industry generally, and compares with one day lost out of each 96 worked at missile sites during the previous five years.
- The missile and space program is moving forward "with greater speed than ever because of the cooperation of labor, management and government working as a team."

Kennedy, after meeting in the White House with members of the commission, declared:

"I know that our missile and space sites are not located in choice working areas. I know that in many cases the workers are exposed to undue hardships and that the remoteness of these sites makes sacrifice necessary. I also know that when the nation demands it, our people will respond."

The commission's formal report termed activation of U.S. missile sites "the largest construction job ever undertaken in the United States."

With both industrial and construction firms and workers occupying the same sites, the commis-

(Continued on Page 10)

House Committee Meets On Health Care Bill

The House Ways & Means Committee resumed closed-door meetings on Pres. Kennedy's health-care-for-the-aged plan amid reports that the Administration was prepared to accept modifications so long as the final version preserves the principle of social security financing.

That principle, Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham Ribicoff is reported to have told the committee, is the "sine qua non"—without which nothing—of the Administration proposal.

Ribicoff said he expected to be "immersed" with the committee for at least two weeks. He said he was hopeful "we can work something out" on what he described as "a very complicated piece of legislation."

Administration sources so far have been able to count on only 10 votes within the committee, three short of the majority needed to clear the Anderson-King bill for House action.

On other health care fronts:

- Dir. Nelson Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept.. of Social Security scored a dramatic debating victory over a spokesman for the American Medical Association, forcing a tacit admission that the Supreme Court had never described social security as "a compulsory tax" as the AMA has repeatedly contended.

When Dr. C. Willard Camalier, a member of the AMA's House of Delegates, referred in debate to the alleged description, Cruikshank retorted: "I say categorically that is not true. That is only what the AMA says the

(Continued on Page 2)

Flight Engineers' Talks Break Up in Deadlock

Deadlocked negotiations between the Flight Engineers and three major airlines raised the possibility of a nationwide strike by the union as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

The Flight Engineers said it had postponed strike plans several times in an effort to reach agreement with Pan American World Airways, Trans World Airlines and Eastern Airlines.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg announced the impasse after a marathon mediation session. He said the union had rejected an appeal by Pres. Kennedy to submit the dispute to arbitration.

The main issue in dispute is a proposal by the airlines to reduce jet crews from four men to three and merge the duties of the engineer with the job of the third pilot.

Negotiators for the union and the companies met with Goldberg and his aides for nearly 24 hours, with brief interruptions for meals, before the secretary's announcement.

"The talks are over, the union is free to strike, a deadlock has ensued and we have no agreement," Goldberg told reporters.

The President had urged both sides to keep the planes flying while they submitted their differences to a three-man board for decision.

The FEIA is seeking an agreement which would protect the job security of its members in case of any such changeover. There are some 1,700 engineers on the three airlines.

The 20 months of bargaining also have failed to produce agreement on wages, hours, working conditions and other issues.

Pan Am and TWA are the major overseas air carriers; Eastern is a North-South passenger and freight carrier.

LADY FLIGHT DISPATCHER Irene Keith, one of two women in the country holding such a post, briefs Third Officer Al Longo, left, and Capt. Raymond Raum of Pan American three hours before their departure for Europe from New York's Idlewild Airport. A member of the Air Line Dispatchers, Miss Keith is a graduate of the State of Maine Aircraft School. She was a flight mechanic with the Air Transport Command after joining the WACs in 1944 and became a dispatcher for Pan Am eight years later.

'Decision and Vigor' Urged:

CWA Demands U.S., Canada Act to Get Full Employment

By Robert B. Cooney

Milwaukee—The Communications Workers' 24th annual convention has called on the United States and Canadian governments to "act with decision and vigor thus far unseen" to achieve full employment and rapid economic growth.

The economic policy statement declared that continuing high-level unemployment, the impact of automation and technological change on jobs and skills, the lag in economic growth and poverty in more than 10 million families required action on a wide range of social and welfare legislation—"the unfinished work of public policy."

The 1,450 delegates signed out with strong applause a resolution urging Congress to enact the Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the aged under social security.

The CWA, describing itself as a "growth" union, also stressed "that organizing be continued as the top priority union program." Membership was reported at 278,439—up 17,000 since last year's convention.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, in his keynote address, called on organized labor to plunge into four battles "we dare not lose":

- Labor must "get into the political fight of the 1962 elections" and elect liberal candidates to back the Kennedy program.
- Labor must redouble its efforts to persuade Congress to pass legislation the nation needs. "It is time that Congress heard the voice of the people demanding passage of the Anderson-King bill."
- Labor "must really work to organize" or it will lose its influence for good.
- Labor must be unrelenting in its "war against poverty and unemployment, against needless, wasteful, inexcusable poverty, against needless, wasteful, inexcusable unemployment."

Poverty 'Outrageous'

Beirne called "outrageous" the condition of 10 million American families trying to subsist on $77 a week. He said the steps taken by the Kennedy Administration "simply do not go far enough or appear dramatic enough" to lift these millions out of poverty.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told the delegates that the current 5.4 percent rate of unemployment is "intolerable" and "ought to be corrected."

Goldberg linked unemployment to idle plant capacity. He said there has been a substantial recovery in production, profits, employment and personal income but it can become stronger if all segments of society cooperate.

Turning to a theme recently developed by Pres. Kennedy, Goldberg said it is "a plain absurdity" and "plain, sheer poppycock" for anyone to say the Administration is pro or anti-business or labor.

While full unity exists in keeping America strong militarily and diplomatically, the same unity is lacking on the domestic scene, he asserted.

Not Political

"Unemployment should never be a politically divisive force in American political life," he said, adding that every American who wants a job should have a decent job.

"I don't see anything political about that," he added.

Goldberg reviewed Administration objectives of a liberalized trade program, passage of the Anderson-King health care bill and extension of temporary unemployment compensation benefits until permanent improvements can be made in the jobless pay system.

At a later press conference, he said the Administration's aim of reducing unemployment to 4 percent by mid-1963 is an interim goal.

"The Administration is committed to a full employment economy," Goldberg declared.

The convention's statement on economic policy said that while the Kennedy Administration has acted to reduce economic deprivation, increase demand and stimulate expansion. "much more must be done."

It listed as "unfinished work of public policy" the extension and liberalization of social security, including health care for the aged; federal aid for school construction and college scholarships; basic tax reform to eliminate inequities; increased public investment in transportation, housing, natural resources, health facilities and urban renewal; extension of minimum wage coverage to more low wage earners; and greater efforts to match unemployed workers with jobs, including training, retraining, counseling and relocation assistance.

Upholsterers' President Re-elected to 9th Term

Cleveland—Sal B. Hoffmann was elected by acclamation to his ninth consecutive term as president of the Upholsters at the union's 34th convention.

Hoffman has been president of the 60,000-member union for 25 years and was elected to the office for the first time at a convention here in 1937.

Also re-elected without opposition to 4-year terms were Treas. R. Alvin Albarino of New York; First Vice Pres. Alfred R. Rota of Chicago; Vice Presidents George Bucher of Philadelphia, William K. Heffernan of Philadelphia, Henry Conrad of Binghamton, N. Y., and Reed Stoney of San Francisco.

Victor Valin of Toronto was elected vice president to fill a vacancy on the executive board.

The 125 delegates authorized a proposal to provide pensions of 75 percent of salaries for Hoffmann and Rota when they retire. Rota also was first elected to his post in 1937.

Delegates called upon Congress to approve the Anderson-King bill for health care to the aged through social security. The resolution assailed the American Medical Association, National Association of Manufacturers and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce for opposing the bill.

Action on the measure came as a special order of business after Andrew J. Biemiller, AFL-CIO legislative director, told the delegates that the health care fight was a crucial battle in organized labor's efforts to improve social welfare benefits for Americans.

Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.) praised labor for being in the forefront in the fight against Communist and fascist tryanny.

IAM, UAW Map Goals In Canada

Montreal, Que.—Plans for coordinated action on negotiations and organizing were set up at a joint conference of the Auto Workers and Machinists which drew 50 delegates from major aircraft manufacturing, repair and overhaul plants throughout Canada.

The delegates instructed the executive board of the joint council to prepare a brief on the needs of the industry's workers for presentation to the federal government after the election. It also adopted a resolution supporting the New Democratic Party and urged all affiliates to give it full backing in the election campaign.

IAM Sec.-Treas. Elmer Walker praised Canadian labor for the role it played in establishing the NDP.

"Canada is showing the way to the trade union movement of the United States in political action," he said.

UAW Intl. Rep. Larry Sheffe predicted the council will play an "increasingly important role" in organizing and bargaining in the industry and "will give workers greater benefits in job security, wages and working conditions."

House Committee Meets On Health Care Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

Supreme Court said. I'll give you $100 cash right now if you can show where the Supreme Court said it."

Camalier pored through Cruikshank's bound volume of the pertinent decision, in which the court actually described social security as a form of "social insurance." The doctor remained silent.

- Three hundred Boston physicians, members of the faculties and staffs of medical schools and their affiliated hospitals, petitioned the Ways & Means Committee to approve the Anderson-King bill "or similar legislation embodying the social security principle."

The petitions, presented to the committee by Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.), co-sponsor of the bill, called the proposed legislation "a practical approach to the solution of this urgent problem."

King predicted that, with revisions, "we'll get a bill passed this year." He too insisted, however, that the final version must provide for financing under the social security system. He said, further, that he was sure the Administration would accept no compromise that would apply social security funds to the purchase of private insurance.

At a news conference May 23, the President declared he would not compromise on the social security principle because "that would be just giving up on the bill and we don't plan to do that." In response to criticism that the bill would provide no help for some 3 million elderly persons not covered by social security or railroad retirement benefits, Kennedy last week said this was no reason to deny aid to the 14 million persons who would be eligible for benefits, and he indicated "additional measures" might be taken to extend health care to all persons over 65.

AFM Pledges Increased Militancy In Fight for Live Music, Musicians

Pittsburgh—Members of the Musicians earned more than $250 million in wages at union scale in the past year despite continuing job losses to "canned" music, and the union will continue to "fight more militantly than ever" for live music and the person who creates it, AFM Pres. Herman Kenin reported at the music-makers' 65th annual convention here.

"It wasn't enough money, nor is it as much as it will be," Kenin said in his address to the record-breaking assembly — 1,235 delegates from 631 local U.S. and Canadian unions. Automation's scars, he said, are more painful to musicians because "we make the machines that unmake us."

Rep. Robert Giaimo (D-Conn.) told the convention that 80 percent of radio broadcast time is consumed by "canned" music for which the musician gets no compensation, and promised to continue his efforts for enactment of legislation setting up a Federal Advisory Council on the Arts to offer guidance.

The convention also:

- Renominated Kenin and three other officers to their posts for new terms, along with five other executive board members, all without opposition.
- Gave honorary life memberships to Giaimo and Union Counsel Henry Kaiser of Washington, D. C., and gold cards for 15 or more years of continuous service to Kaiser, AFM Treas. George V. Clancy, Newark, N. J.; AFM Sec.-emeritus Leo Cluesmann, Joe Morrone of Pittsburgh and George D. Moyer, Coshocton, Ohio.
- Was urged to step up membership support of TEMPO, the union's non-partisan political action fund.
- Paid tribute to deceased members at a memorial service.

Among changes made in the bylaws was one forbidding engagements in making sound tracks or film for theatrical or television use unless employers have previously entered into a written agreement with the union and its president.

Kenin told the delegates that the union never can hope to eliminate "canned" music totally but can continue to fight effectively for more income for musicians.

Emphasizing the need for concentrating AFM efforts at Washington, Kenin reported the establishment of a permanent legislative department under the direction of Hal Leyshon, longtime AFM publicist. He said the union will continue to urge repeal of the 10 percent federal excise tax on entertainment, and is so concerned about the Tax Revision Act of 1962 that it sought and obtained a House-passed amendment.

"We are as much against expense tab chiselers as the President and the AFL-CIO," he asserted, "but we cannot go along with a policy that would burn down the barn to get rid of the rats."

Without the amendment the tax revision might deny tax deductions for business "good will" spending and cost musicians "thousands of jobs," he said.

Giaimo called for changes in copyright laws to protect the rights of music makers.

Sharp Rise Shown In Injury Rates

Injury rates in manufacturing increased "substantially" in the first quarter of 1962, reversing a long-term trend.

Disabling injuries averaged 11.1 per 1 million hours worked, 5 percent above the rate for the last quarter of 1961 and 7 percent higher than in the first quarter of last year, according to the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Organizer of Course Gets First Certificate

New Brunswick, N. J. — Vice Pres. Nicholas Juliano of the Office Employes, after taking a course he helped organize, has won the first certificate in labor unionism ever given by Rutgers University.

Juliano decided that the educational course he helped develop as a member of the university's Labor Programs Trade Union Consulting Committee was just what he needed to complete his own education.

T-H Injunction Ends June 30:

Coast Ship Unions Renew Contract Bid

San Francisco—Twelve thousand West Coast seamen are "ready, willing and able" to agree on terms of a new contract with shipowners without going back on strike June 30 when the 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction period expires, the head of the union bargaining committee said here in reply to Pres. Kennedy's appeal for a peaceful settlement of the dispute.

"We're willing to negotiate, and always have been," said Sec.-Treas. Morris Weisberger of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, a Seafarers' affiliate. "There is no reason why the owners can't settle on the basis of our last offer."

Weisberger said the last union offer, made on May 9, represented substantial modification of the union position but that, since it was made, "we have heard nothing either from any employer spokesman nor from any representative of the federal government in response."

The President, asserting that "the public interest demands a resolution of this controversy" through collective bargaining, sent a personal representative here to bring labor and management back to the bargaining table. He is Prof. James J. Healy of Harvard University, head of a three-man emergency board which reported to the President that 1.7 percentage points in the cost of a settlement separate the parties.

The board's report said:

"Within the range of the now-existing difference a settlement should be attainable which, in the board's judgment, would be consistent with the needs of the parties and with the interests of the public in this important controversy. To this end, sustained and constructive bargaining during the remaining 20 days of the injunction is imperative."

Weisberger's union and two others—the Marine Firemen and the Marine Cooks & Stewards, all affiliated with the Seafarers' Pacific District—went on strike Mar. 16 after more than five months of negotiations on a contract to replace one that expired Sept. 30, 1961.

The President named a board of inquiry Apr. 7 after various efforts to settle the strike had failed and invoked Taft-Hartley injunction procedures on Apr. 11. Court restraining orders halting the walkout for 80 days were then issued.

The board's report held that another strike—the fourth in 12 to 13 months—could only serve to "expedite the continued decline of an already sick industry."

Unions Trim Proposals

It noted that the shipowners have set a cost limit of 11.8 percent over a three-year period as their top contract offer. The unions have, since Apr. 11, reduced their "asking price" to a 13.05 percent increase to bring them to the level of other maritime contracts.

This week the National Labor Relations Board began sending out ballots to crewmen of 120 ships owned by 12 PMA companies. The ballots contain the owners' last offer —arbitration of "all issues."

"The law does not compel anyone to vote," Weisberger told SIU members. "Arbitration is not bargaining—and if you vote, you will be voting on an offer that has been rejected by the membership and by your negotiating committee."

Other union spokesmen include William W. Jordan of the Marine Firemen and Ed Turner of the Marine Cooks & Stewards.

Beck Denied Review of Tax Charge

The Supreme Court has refused to review the conviction of Dave Beck, former president of the Teamsters, on charges of filing a false federal tax return for a Seattle building association. The effect is to leave standing a five-year prison sentence.

Beck has filed a motion for rehearing of his appeal from a Washington state conviction of grand larceny, urging that the Supreme Court failed to give adequate weight to his argument that publicity arising from his McClellan special Senate committee appearances made a fair trial impossible. The high court on May 14 upheld the state larceny conviction in a 4-3 decision.

Beck was originally convicted in federal district court on charges of personal tax evasion as well as filing a false return for the building association. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, with government consent, upset the conviction involving the personal taxes charge. It acted after a Supreme Court decision that "income," even when obtained by theft or other improper means, was taxable but that the ruling would not be applied in cases arising previously because the law had been in doubt.

The government has not sought a retrial on this indictment.

Wage Hearing Slated For Conveyor Industry

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg set July 10 for a hearing to determine a minimum wage for the conveyor and conveying equipment industry under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

Although federal purchases in the industry amount to about $19 million a year, no previous determination of a minimum wage has ever been made.

COFFEE AND CONVERSATION are offered by Mrs. Loretta Fancher (right), Moore, Okla., as part of her campaign to save the jobs of her husband, Carl, and 45,000 other firemen or helpers on diesel locomotives whom the railroads want to fire. Too much kidding about Carl's Santa Fe job as "featherbedding" has convinced her that friends had heard too much company propaganda. With her in the picture are Mrs. Fay Hudson (left) and Mrs. Allyne Beasley.

Steelworkers Win 15-Vote Margin To Take Mine-Mill Sudbury Local

Sudbury, Ont.—The Steelworkers have all but won bargaining rights for 14,500 Sudbury nickel workers after eking out a 15-vote victory in a 14,133-vote contest with the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The USWA polled 7,182 votes—just 15 more than the 7,167 needed to wrest bargaining rights from Mine-Mill at the big plant of the Intl. Nickel Co.

The ballots were cast in February. The count was delayed by Mine-Mill charges of fraud and forgery.

Mine-Mill also protested the tally, claiming 36 USWA votes were on ballots not properly stamped by the Ontario Labor Relations Board, which conducted the election. The union filed a formal protest after A. R. Brunskel, board registrar and the man in charge of the vote, ruled the ballots valid.

The USWA triumph leaves Mine-Mill with only one big bargaining unit in Canada—at Trail, B. C.

The winning union, which entered Sudbury after a riot on Sept. 10, 1961, between Mine-Mill backers and dissidents, has already captured two other INCO units from Mine-Mill as part of a three-pronged campaign and has wiped it out east of the Rockies. In December the USWA took over bargaining rights for 2,000 Mine-Mill members at INCO's Port Colborne, Ont., operation. Last month it won a decisive vote among 2,000 employes at Thompson, Man.

In May the USWA also took bargaining rights for nearly 1,500 employes from Mine-Mill at the Anaconda Co.'s smelter at Anaconda, Mont.

Fight Dates to 1950

The fight between the USWA and Mine-Mill goes back to 1950, when the latter group was expelled first from the former Congress of Industrial Organizations and then from the former Canadian Congress of Labor because of Communist domination. The USWA was given Mine-Mill's jurisdiction in the non-ferrous metals industries and prior to the Sudbury vote had taken away 19,000 of Mine-Mill's Canadian membership.

Another round in the battle will be fought in July, when 2,300 nickel miners at Falconbridge, Ont., will choose a bargaining agent.

Counting of the ballots—subject to appeal—marked the end of three years of bitter infighting in Mine-Mill Local 598, which with 17,500 members is the largest in Canada. Anti-Communist Pres. Don Gillis and an executive board controlled by his followers had bitterly resisted efforts of old guard national leaders of Mine-Mill to take over the local and place it in trusteeship, under control of the international.

The local has been the key to Mine-Mill finances, providing $2 out of every $3 in the union's Canadian treasury. But for the past year the local has been under protection of the courts, which blocked two formal attempts to place it in trusteeship, and the per capita dues have been sequestered until the election procedures have been completed and a victor is certified.

Campaigning on the need for a union big enough and strong enough to cope with INCO, the Steelworkers in their drive relied almost entirely on volunteer organizers from the company's plants, mines and smelters. Wage differentials in favor of USWA members were emphasized.

Mine-Mill fought desperately to have the USWA election application dismissed before the votes were counted, but the OLRB after a careful investigation found nothing to substantiate its charges of fraud and forgery.

The board will rule within two weeks on Mine-Mill's formal protest.

The counting of the ballots took 14 hours, including time out for protests, with the official result coming at 4:30 a. m.

Emergency Board Given ORT Dispute

Pres. Kennedy has set up an emergency board under the Railway Labor Act to make recommendations for settlement of a dispute over job security issues between the Railroad Telegraphers and the New York Central Railroad.

The action averted a strike the union scheduled for June 12 to enforce its demand for a rule requiring management to negotiate with the ORT before abolishing any jobs.

A similar dispute between the ORT and the Chicago & North Western Railroad is before another emergency board which is scheduled to report June 23.

The union has said its proposed job protection rule is not sought as "a bar to technological advance" or a "means of perpetuating useless jobs" but to prevent unilateral action by management which would result in "undue hardship" or "mistreatment" of employes.

Injunction Proceedings Set in Republic Strike

(Continued from Page 1)

80 days, during which the board would study the facts and report them publicly, but could make no proposals for settlement.

Pres. Justin Ostro of IAM Lodge 1987 declared the local would "cooperate fully" with the board of inquiry but said the union "is somewhat surprised" at the government's "invocation of the Taft-Hartley Act in a dispute of this nature."

It has been unusual in Taft-Hartley history for the so-called national emergency section to be used except in industrial disputes involving an entire industry or major portion thereof rather than a single company.

Negotiations Deadlocked

Federal mediators had sought for more than a month to obtain a settlement of the strike, and union and company spokesmen conferred recently with Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. Goldberg and Mediation Service Dir. William E. Simkin reported to the President that negotiations were deadlocked.

Invocation of the injunction procedures marked Kennedy's third use of Taft-Hartley emergency powers. He invoked the law in an East Coast maritime dispute in 1961 and a West Coast dispute this year. His Board of Inquiry has just reported its findings of fact in the West Coast controversy, in which the 80-day injunction period will have run in less than three weeks.

The Republic dispute arose when the company announced its intention of laying off some 13,000 of its 15,500 employes across the next 30 months unless substantial new contracts were obtained to replace work on the F-105D fighter-bomber. The Defense Dept. had previously decided to cut back F-105D production but recently awarded Republic subcontracts on a new tactical fighter to replace the F-105D.

IAM efforts to obtain severance pay and supplemental benefits for laid-off workers produced from Republic only a last-minute so-called "final" offer that provided no severance pay and a proposed SUB plan the union said was wholly inadequate.

Analysis of the SUB plan showed the company proposed that workers finance most of the cost by agreeing to diversion of Christmas bonus money, equivalent to five cents an hour, and diversion of an additional one-cent pay increase due under a cost-of-living escalator clause. The company offered to contribute a total of four cents an hour.

The effect would have been to limit SUB payments to 10 weeks at $6 a week for workers laid off this year with more than 10 years of service.

The company rejected proposals for job security clauses, including prohibiting of contracting-out and use of supervisors and employes outside the bargaining unit in work normally performed by Machinists.

NLRB Order Reversed:

U.S. Appellate Court Bans Agency Shop

Cincinnati—The three-judge U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th circuit has rejected a National Labor Relations Board order directing General Motors Corp. to bargain with the Auto Workers on an agency shop clause at nine Indiana GM plants.

The court decided that the agency shop provision, under which non-union members must pay fees to the union for contract services, would violate Sec. 7 and Sec. 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act as amended and therefore GM was not required to bargain on an unlawful proposal. It set aside the NLRB order and denied its request for enforcement.

The decision affects a number of union contracts, and the likelihood is that the U.S. Supreme Court will be asked to review it. A request for review may be made by the labor board.

The appellate court's opinion said in part:

"We think the provisions of the act are clear and unambiguous and need no judicial construction. The language of Sec. 7 of the act which provides 'employes . . . shall also have the right to refrain . . . except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment' . . . means what it says and excepts from the operation of the law only agreements requiring membership in a labor organization.

"An employe involuntarily subjected to the agency shop arrangement as a condition of his employment is not a union member or the equivalent of it.

"If Congress intended to permit the exaction of these types of charges in lieu of union membership, as a condition of employment, it could easily have so provided in apt language."

The NLRB has made two recent decisions on the legality of the agency shop. On Feb. 20, 1961, it voted 3-2 that such a form of union security was invalid. On Sept. 29, 1961, after Members Frank W. McCulloch and Gerald A. Brown had replaced two appointees of former Pres. Eisenhower, the board reversed this ruling, 4-1.

The history of the dispute leading to the board decisions was this:

The UAW made a demand in writing that GM bargain with it on a proposal that the national UAW-GM agreement be supplemented to require, as a condition of continued employment, that all non-members and all new employes at GM's Indiana plants must pay to the union a sum equal to the initiation fee and monthly dues paid by members.

The employer refused to bargain on the ground that any such agreement would be a violation of labor laws. The UAW filed an unfair labor practice charge against the employer accusing it of refusal to bargain, and the board issued an order upholding the agency shop.

This is the order that the Court of Appeals has just reversed.

SEGREGATION IS SLAVERY covered up with niceties, Rev. Martin Luther King told members of Hotel & Club Employes Local 6, New York, as he accepted its annual Better Race Relations Award from Chairman Betty Bentz of the local's Civil Rights Committee. The award was voted to the president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference by the local's 27,000 members.

State Picket Ban Upset By High Court

The Supreme Court has upheld the appeal of the Marine Engineers from a Minnesota state court injunction against picketing a freighter in Duluth harbor.

The high court ruled 7-1 that the MEBA was right in claiming the case was one for the National Labor Relations Board.

In 1959 a Minnesota court ordered the union to stop picketing the freighter Samuel Mather, owned by Interlake Steamship Co. and Pickands-Mather & Co. Dock workers had refused to load the ship while MEBA pickets were present, and the owners sought an injunction.

The state courts ruled that MEBA Local 101 was not a labor organization but a group of supervisors, and therefore state law should apply. The union appealed, and the U.S. Supreme Court upheld its argument that the issue was not whether state courts decided correctly but whether the issue was one over which the NLRB had jurisdiction.

Justice Potter Stewart, for the majority, wrote that the concern of the high court must be "with delimiting areas . . . which must be free from state regulation if national policy is to be left unhampered."

The Minnesota courts must have known, Stewart said, that the NLRB had made a ruling in a similar MEBA case and therefore demonstrated that it claimed jurisdiction. Justice William O. Douglas filed a dissenting opinion. Justice Felix Frankfurter did not participate.

In another case the Supreme Court left standing a Court of Appeals decision that unions representing employes at different plants of the same employer may lawfully bargain for common expiration dates of all contracts. The United States Type & Foundry Co. had appealed from NLRB and lower court findings that two locals of the Steelworkers and one of the Molders were not guilty of an unfair labor practice for insisting on a common contract expiration date.

Earnings Limit Held Legal by NLRB Aide

A union may lawfully impose fines on its members for exceeding union-established production or piece-work earnings quotas, a trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

Examiner A. Norman Somers recommended dismissal of an unfair labor practice complaint against Auto Workers Local 283 based on charges filed by four UAW members employed at the West Allis, Wis., plant of the Wisconsin Motors Corp.

NLRB Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman, who issued the unfair practice complaint, announced he would ask the five-member Labor Board to reverse the examiner.

Somers said in an intermediate report that the fines—$100 levied against Russell Scofield and George Kozbiel, $75 against Lawrence Hansen and $50 against Emil Stefanec—fall within the confines of the union's internal disciplinary powers and are not a violation of the labor laws.

He said the company, while not a party to enforcing the production ceiling, nevertheless rendered certain assistance in making it effective. The ceiling plays an important role in negotiations and management appeared, Somers said, to be less hostile to the rule than its statements in negotiations would indicate.

Asserting that the local union did not seek to cause any of the four workers to lose his job for disobeying the rule, the examiner said the dispute concerns the rights and obligations of unions and their members in respect to each other and "that field is not reached by our statute, and is governed by state law."

Somers found that:

- The UAW rule went into effect in 1944, and affected only those members of Local 283 who are paid on a piecework or incentive basis.
- The rule did not concern production as such, but placed a ceiling on the amount of money a member could earn in excess of the minimum rate guaranteed under the union-company contract.
- The union kept the earnings limit in effect as a means of spreading the available work and keeping as many members as possible employed in the plant.

The trial examiner, who held hearings in Milwaukee last January, described the UAW-company contract as guaranteeing the employes a "machine" rate or minimum rate per hour, based on the amount that an average competent operator, working at a reasonable pace, can earn, as determined by time studies.

The guaranteed hourly rate is translated into the piece rate by what is called "factoring in." By waiving the allowances, a pieceworker can earn more per hour than the guaranteed machine rate. The union's rule limits the amount a pieceworker may earn in excess of the machine rate.

Somers said the ceiling is now between 45 and 50 cents above the machine rate.

'Seasonal' Supervisors Extended NLRB Vote

A seven-year-old rule barring seasonal supervisors from voting in union representation elections has been set aside by the National Labor Relations Board.

By a 3-2 vote the board decided that workers who perform supervisory duties only during certain seasons of the year will be included in the bargaining unit when they work as rank-and-file employes and will be excluded during those periods when they are assigned to supervisory duties. But they may vote even when they are serving as supervisors, the board said.

A majority—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown—voted to change a 1955 rule that permanently excluded from a bargaining unit those employes who spend a "regular and substantial part" of their time performing supervisory duties seasonally.

In future, such seasonal supervisors may vote even when a representation election is conducted by the NLRB during the time when they are performing supervisory duties, the majority decided. Voting against a change in the rule were Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom.

The case involved the Grain Millers, the unaffiliated Teamsters, and the Great Western Sugar Co.'s sugar beet processing plant at Gering, Neb.

The employes have been in a unit represented by the Grain Millers since 1938. They exercise supervisory powers 85 to 120 days a year, and are rank-and-file workers during the rest of the year, the board was told.

When the Teamsters filed a representation petition, the company contended the seasonal supervisors should not be allowed to vote and should be excluded from the bargaining unit. Opposing this position were the Teamsters and the Grain Millers. Several other union groups, including the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., were permitted to intervene.

The NLRB majority voted to modify the policy adopted in the Whitmoyer Laboratories case, and directed that the challenged ballots cast in an election last year by several foremen, the head pipefitter and chief electrician be counted.

The former rule, the majority said, denies to individuals who "spend the bulk of their working time as rank-and-file employes the right to bargain collectively." The decision was to include them in the unit only as to their rank-and-file duties. Thus they will not be "serving two masters at the same time," as the dissenting minority contended, but will be serving them at different times, the majority held.

Sam Eubanks Named To Labor Dept. Post

Sam B. Eubanks, formerly executive vice president of the Newspaper Guild and executive secretary of its San Francisco local, has been named director of technical assistance in the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports.

Eubanks was long a leader in the fight that drove the Communists from leadership in the ANG and was elected executive vice president in 1941. He served for 10 years, then declined to run for another term in 1951, and the following year took the post with the San Francisco local, of which he had been a member since the early days of the Guild.

James Brownlow Retires As Metal Trades Head

Pres. James A. Brownlow of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. has announced his retirement after 36 years of full-time union and public service.

Brownlow's resignation as president of the department, submitted a few days after his 65th birthday, takes effect June 15. Sec.-Treas. B. A. Gritta will handle the affairs of both offices until the department's excutive council elects a new president.

Brownlow has headed the department since 1950, when he succeeded John P. Frey. He had served as secretary-treasurer.

A journeyman plumber, Brownlow was business manager of Local 3 in Denver, Colo., from 1926 to 1936 and president of the Denver Building Trades Council most of that time.

He was a member of the Colorado state legislature during the 1930's and served as majority floor leader of the state's House of Representatives. From 1937 to 1945, Brownlow was secretary-treasurer of the Colorado State Federation of Labor.

His many civic and public activities included the vice chairmanship of the Denver Housing Authority. During World War II, he served on both the regional and national War Labor Boards.

Brownlow is a member of the Labor Dept.'s apprenticeship committee, a member of the Veterans Administration's advisory committee for vocational rehabilitation, and a member of the Atomic Energy Commission's labor-management advisory committee.

In a letter to presidents of affiliated unions thanking them for their cooperation during his term of office, Brownlow said he was entering retirement "with a feeling of mingled regret and anticipation."

JAMES A. BROWNLOW

Biemiller Tells Republicans:

Labor Seeks GOP Backing of Program

Milwaukee—Labor is in politics because it fights for the "principle of equal rights and human freedom" and because unionists have a "duty" to participate in the democratic process, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a Young Republican Conference here.

Acknowledging that labor has not obtained much Republican backing for programs it considers vital to the public interest, Biemiller said:

"We haven't given up. We are going to keep trying. I have seen some remarkable conversions."

AFL-CIO spokesmen "get few invitations" from GOP groups, he added, and pointed out that former Republican Sen. William F. Knowland, Jr., "had a justified complaint" when he told an AFL-CIO affiliate's legislative conference it was the first time he had been invited to appear at a national union gathering.

"I welcome the kind of interchange this meeting represents," he told the Young Republicans, and labor would welcome more Republican support for its "key idea"—that we need "action by elected officials working for the general welfare of all, not special privilege for labor."

The efforts of American trade unions have helped create the world's highest standard of living, he said, along with universal free public education, wage-hour protection, workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance, and social security protection for widows, orphans and elderly people.

"These are not and should not be partisan matters," he declared. "And labor's goals for the future are not partisan issues either. Better schools, better housing, protection for consumers and fair taxes ought to be everyone's objectives."

Registration Drives Non-Partisan

Biemiller pointed out that there were 12 legislative issues in the 13-point platform approved by the first American Federation of Labor meeting in 1881.

"The thirteenth called for political action by labor to carry out the first 12," he said.

Labor's registration campaigns are "totally without a partisan angle," he told the GOP conference. "We concentrate on districts where the outcome of past elections has been close" and where there is "a heavy proportion of wage-earners."

But this is both "natural and fair" because it helps prevent distortion of the "true will of the people as expressed at the polls."

Endorsements in actual campaigns, he reminded his audience, are "made by the local COPE groups in each area" on the basis of voting records kept for every member of Congress. They don't "look for a party label," but "for the way a man has voted."

"The Republican record on general welfare issues is pretty bad," he observed. GOP members of Congress voted 4-to-1 against the compromise 1961 wage-hour bill while Democrats voted 3-to-1 in favor, and the same ratios were seen on the area redevelopment bill, he said.

'Divorced' by Republicans

"We did not divorce ourselves from the Republican Party or its leadership" on these issues, he said, but "they divorced themselves from us."

Labor doesn't expect elected officials "to agree with us, every time, in every detail," he said. But "it is our hope that more and more Republicans will come to share" Lincoln's conviction that the government has a duty in the welfare field, he added.

"Those who genuinely accept that precept will have no lack of friends in labor," he declared.

FIRST AID INSTRUCTION is part of the apprenticeship training program of Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Local 72, Atlanta, Ga. Apprentice members of the local watch a Red Cross first aid expert demonstrate proper bandaging for a fractured forearm.

Kennedy to Ask Tax Cut in 1963 In Drive to Spur Recovery Pace necessarily bad for the nation and neither are federal budget deficits. He singled out the "misleading" nature of the regular "administrative" federal budget in terms of surpluses or deficits and denied that the federal debt is growing dangerously.

(Continued from Page 1)

Confident of Economy

Kennedy's news conference, coming shortly after the dramatic gyrations of the stock market, found the President strongly asserting his confidence in the basic health of the nation but urging measures to stimulate the economy further. The reason for the stock market decline, he told reporters, was the realization that an "overpriced market could not hold up once investors recognized that inflation was ending."

Asked if there was a possibility that a tax cut would be required before 1963, the President told his news conference that the across-the-board reduction planned for next year "is our best judgment at this time and, of course, if new circumstances brought a new situation, then we would have to make other judgments."

A number of economists have pointed out that the lagging rate of economic recovery calls for an immediate tax cut to stimulate demand and that the President's program for this year and next would place the emphasis on spurring investment rather than consumer purchasing power, which they hold is the key to improving the slack rate of recovery.

The Administration plans to introduce its across-the-board tax cut program before the current session of Congress adjourns, with indications that a general reduction in rates, including the corporate tax rate of 52 percent, would be offset by a plugging of existing tax loopholes. The President said the program would result in a "net tax reduction" although it is billed also as long overdue tax reform.

Tax Bill Weighed

The Senate Finance Committee continued consideration meanwhile of the House-passed tax bill for 1962, including the tax investment credit plan and a provision for withholding of taxes on dividends and interest payments.

Savings and loan organizations, which had triggered a massive letter-writing campaign against the withholding provisions, called it off but reiterated their opposition to the plan.

In his Yale speech, Kennedy said his Administration will not "give way to general hostility to business because there has been a single temporary disagreement." But, he warned, he doesn't intend to suffer attack indefinitely.

"If a contest in angry argument were forced upon it no Administration could shrink from response," he said, "and history does not suggest that American Presidents are totally without resources in an engagement forced upon them because of the hostility of one section of society."

Freedom Riders Detail Mob Violence in South

Twenty-one participants in student civil rights demonstrations, sit-ins, picketing and "freedom" rides in the South told a committee headed by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt that they have been beaten, roughed up, shot at, jailed for weeks and months on charges ranging from unlawful assembly to criminal conspiracy, and held in punitively high bail.

The wave of mob violence that started with the Greensboro, N. C., sit-ins two years ago and the freedom rides of 1961 has given way, witnesses said, to the kind of "civil violence" that can be wielded by police, sheriffs, and law enforcement authorities in the deep South.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Committee of Inquiry Into the Administration of Justice and the Freedom Struggle met in Washington to hear the testimony.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, chairman of the federation's Civil Rights Committee, and Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther and A. Philip Randolph are members of the committee of inquiry. Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights represented Schnitzler at the hearing.

One witness testified that since February 1960 more than 5,000 civil rights demonstrators have been arrested by police and sheriffs and held in bail totaling more than $2 million. In Jackson, Miss., alone, total cash of $372,000 for bailing out prisoners was raised by the Congress of Racial Equality. The witness was James Farmer, national director of CORE.

The witnesses were white and Negro, students and clergymen, residents of the North and the South.

Robert Moses, 27, a former teacher with degrees from Hamilton College and Harvard University and a staff member of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, described what happened late in 1961 when he was one of almost a dozen SNCC staff people working on voter registration in three southern Mississippi counties.

"Whites shot at the house where Dion Diamond of SNCC was staying, blasting windows; four SNCC members were beaten by whites; I was attacked by a relative of the sheriff and received a head wound requiring eight stitches; my assailant was acquitted," Moses said.

"Herbert Lee, Negro cotton farmer, drove us from place to place in his car. He was murdered Sept. 25, 1962, near Liberty, Miss."

Weldon Rougeau, 19, told how 23 CORE members picketed without noise or violence at 12 Baton Rouge, La., stores last Dec. 14; were arrested after 90 seconds of picketing and held in $1,500 bail. He stayed in jail 21 days. Expelled Jan. 18, 1962, from nearby Southern University, described as the largest Negro university in the world, he was arrested late that day for criminal trespass on the university grounds, held in $7,000 bond and kept in jail for 58 more days.

Arrested Twice

Ronnie Moore, 21, another Southern U. student, helped organize a protest march and was arrested twice—for illegal use of a sound truck and for "conspiracy to commit criminal mischief." Jailed for 21 days he returned to the university last January and was expelled Jan. 16, 1962, for joining a "kneel-in" on the lawn of the Southern U. president.

One witness "testified" in absentia through Moses of SNCC. She was Brenda Travis, 17, of McComb, Miss. Moses said she is now in Talladega, Ala., under six months' parole forbidding her to take part in any civil rights activities.

Moses said Brenda, a high school student, was arrested last Aug. 30 for sitting on a bench in the "white" section of the McComb bus station. She declined to move and was given six months in jail, fined $200, and released on bond after a month. Brenda and 115 other students were expelled from high school when they refused to promise to stay out of civil rights demonstrations. Taken to jail again, Brenda was held for six months in the Oakley Training School at Raymond, Miss., and paroled to Dr. Herman Einsman of Talladega College, Moses testified.

Freeman Hails ACWA For Family Farm Loans

Sec. of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman has hailed Clothing Workers' investments in the government-insured farm loan program as a "far-reaching" action which will help "strengthen the family farm."

In a letter to ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Freeman expressed appreciation for the $8.42 million the union has invested in the program since the first of the year and for the commitment of an additional $10 million.

The money comes partly from ACWA welfare funds and partly from investment funds of the union's Amalgamated Bank of New York. An ACWA spokesman said participation in the farm loan program is "in line with long established policy to invest in completely secure government programs."

"These funds will help farmers improve their holdings and develop efficient farming operations," Freeman wrote Potofsky. "They will strengthen the family farm—the backbone of our agricultural economy. . . .

"By joining hands with farm families through the extension of credit, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers will raise the level of the economy of the farmers and increase their power to purchase the goods produced by labor.

Faith in Agriculture

"We have long appreciated the support that labor has given farm programs that are in the long-range interest of all people. We welcome this evidence of faith in the future of American agriculture."

Loans under the program are made and serviced by the Farm Home Administration for the purchase or improvement of family farms, the refinancing of farm debts or the development of water systems. Borrowers pay 5 percent interest and lenders receive 4.5 percent, the government retaining the difference to cover insurance.

The Ladies' Garment Workers also is investing pension, welfare and other reserves in farm mortgages under the program. ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky announced last month that the union would make $100 million available for the program over the next four years.

Negro Rights Leader Receives UPWA Aid

Chicago — The Packinghouse Workers have presented to Dr. Martin Luther King a check for $5,000, authorized by the union's recent convention, to further the work of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, of which he is president.

The money comes from the union's Fund for Democracy, which is contributed by the members.

For the Class of '63

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of high school seniors will end their formal education this month when they receive their diplomas. In the high school Class of 1962 there are a great number of students thoroughly qualified to continue their education at the college level. That they will not is one of the tragedies of our times.

The decision to attend or not to attend a college or a university is in most cases an economic one. If the funds are available there is usually no question. But faced with a four-year expenditure for higher education, the barrier becomes insurmountable for many high school seniors.

A recent survey revealed that only 20 percent of the children of service or semi-skilled workers planned to attend college and 28 percent of the children of skilled workers, compared to 64 percent for children of persons in professional or executive occupations and 43 percent of fathers in small business.

Simply, this means that children in lower income families cannot attend college because their parents do not have the funds.

The nation desperately needs a federal scholarship program to guarantee that no young person need be deprived of higher education because he cannot afford it. It needs also a stepped-up program of federal aid to institutions of higher education if we are to meet the educational challenge of the 1960s.

It's too late for the Class of 1962, but the high school Class of 1963 can be the immediate beneficiaries if Congress moves quickly to enact federal aid to higher education.

The Nixon Record

THE CALIFORNIA AFL-CIO has come to grips with the central issue in the state's gubernatorial contest between former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon and Gov. Edmund G. Brown—the Nixon record.

The Nixon record has been shoved into a corner by the Republican primary campaign that found the former vice president opposed by a candidate drawing wide support from the ultra-conservatives and the Birchites. In the role of a GOP moderate and a "modern" Republican fighting off the radical right, Nixon drew on the sympathies of some liberal groups dedicated to the smashing defeat of the ultra-conservatives. Nixon won the gubernatorial nomination by slightly less than a two-to-one margin.

The California AFL-CIO strongly endorsed Gov. Brown in the Democratic primary. Executive Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts declared also that the state "cannot afford to risk its political future with a 20th Century Machiavellian opportunist like Nixon."

The Republican primary campaign, Pitts added, "exposed the fallen national figure as a master of political deceit who is embarrassingly ignorant of California's problems."

Nixon's voting record, the California AFL-CIO declared, is "hostile to the interest of workingmen and women and demonstrates that he has always served as the Charlie McCarthy of special interests."

In the 1960 presidential campaign, a compilation of Nixon votes as a congressmen and senator by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education revealed that Nixon had a "wrong" voting tally of 77 percent. It was on the basis of this record that labor supported Sen. Kennedy for the presidency.

This record has not changed and it, rather than the question of the moderate versus the conservative wings of the Republican Party in California or the nation, is the key issue in the gubernatorial contest.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, June 16, 1962 No. 24

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit

Federal Aid Is the Key

'The Great Price Conspiracy':

Greatest U.S. Ant-Trust Plot Put Spotlight on Business Ethics

THE AMAZING GYRATIONS of the stock market and the endless controversy engendered by the steel price episode are placing the business world in the hot glare of a spotlight it has not felt in some time.

However, another development in business—which merited just as much attention, but did not receive it—was the conviction late in 1960 of top executives in the electrical appliance industry on charges of rigging bids and setting prices in violation of the antitrust laws.

The story of these antitrust violations is now graphically reported, with all the sordid ramifications, in a book by Labor Writer John Herling. Called The Great Price Conspiracy, it is published by Robert B. Luce, Inc., Washington, D. C.

In explaining his book, Herling said it sets forth "the record of the greatest antitrust conspiracy in American history—the story of the multi-billion-dollar electrical industry's violations of the antitrust laws."

"In a sense it is an economic and political whodunit," he said. "In part it is a modern morality play. Taken as a whole it becomes the incredible biography of acquisitive corporation crime in which hundreds of executives and 40 corporations admittedly participated."

This was not a crime in a vacuum. The conspiracy involved prices on massive electrical projects of federal, state and local governments. Taxpayers were bilked of millions of dollars. To date, more than 2,000 damage suits have been filed against the companies.

What makes the great price conspiracy so remarkable is that leading electrical appliance companies, including General Electric and Westinghouse, were part of the operation. Some of their top officials were sent to jail; others received suspended sentences. More than $2 million in fines were imposed on individuals and corporations.

THOSE WHO WERE CAUGHT, tried and convicted were not really censured by society. If they had embezzled money from banks, or received kickbacks as union officials, their names would have been on almost everyone's blacklist. Instead, every convicted executive who wanted to continue working in the industry found jobs, in some cases even better positions.

It is true that many citizens could not stomach this seeming softness of corporate crime. Herling

"Until last month, the name General Electric meant the best to me. Now, no matter what the company does in the way of progress it will mean nothing but cheating to me. The thought of so-called intelligent men stooping to such dishonesty is sickening. It seems to me that the youths of the nation are having a struggle to find enough adults to look up to. And that is what worries me. . . ."

While all the press did not ignore the trial and sentencing, it generally protected the industry. Herling reports a survey by The New Republic of major newspapers. On the day following the admission of guilt by the executives, only 16 percent of the newspapers placed the story on Page One (each used but a single column head), 11 percent used less than a column on the front page, 43 percent less than a column on an inside page, and 30 percent omitted any reference to the story.

The Great Price Conspiracy does not gloss over the distasteful details which escaped so many of the press stories. It is an honest, straightforward reportorial job. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Ban on Aid to Red Nations Hints Kennedy-Senate Short-Circuit

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

THE PSYCHOLOGISTS keep telling us that much of the world's ills is due to a lack of communication, people not getting through to each other. Husbands don't get their feelings across to their wives and marital misunderstandings are bred. Diplomats fail to read each other's nuances correctly and crises ensue, and so on. The theory may be overworked but I suspect it has merit.

Morgan

This brings up the question of whom the U.S. Senate was trying to communicate with when it voted by the whopping margin of 57 to 24 to prevent the President, who is responsible for foreign policy, from dispensing any aid to any Communist-dominated country, so-called. Certainly that august body did not have its lines plugged into the world of reality at large or the White House switchboard. "The Senate," said Assistant Majority Leader Hubert Humphrey, who happened to be away from town at the time, "must have been out of its mind."

A little political lip-reading, however, might serve to translate the Senate's message and it is not a very reassuring one. It sounded the overtones of demagoguery, not statesmanship. It talked in the dangerously oversimplified terms of black and white, of good guys and bad guys, of total victory and no-win, terms which are so dear to the hearts of the radical right in their pursuit of the never-never land of total security. The senators know better than this.

Of the 34 Democrats who voted for the amendment, 12 are up for election in November. So are 10 of the 23 Republicans who supported the measure. Without a doubt many of them did so chiefly because they were afraid that if they didn't their campaign opponents would charge that they voted to help the Communists.

Nobody can issue an iron-clad guarantee that aid to Poland and Yugoslavia is going to pay off. It's a gamble, but a gamble that the best minds in both the Eisenhower and Kennedy Administrations have felt worth the risk. It could be particularly meaningful now as new strains are evident within the Communist bloc.

As Presidential Assistant McGeorge Bundy wrote to Majority Leader Mansfield urging rejection of the ban, "This is a moment of great delicacy in internal political balance within the Communist world. All our intelligence evidence, the reports of our ambassadors and our own appreciation of the relations we are conducting with the Soviets point to a struggle between those (within the bloc) who believe in putting the Soviets into a more aggressive 'Chinese' posture and those who assess American strength and determination for what they are, and wish the Communist bloc to deal with us more realistically and peacefully."

THE SENATE in its wisdom ignored that counsel. Asked why at his news conference, the President suggested a feeling of frustration might prevail about the aid programs and observed people do get tired waiting for results. But our adversaries don't get tired, he said. Indeed, borrowing a page from our book and reversing it, the Soviet Union has been dispensing aid to non-Communist countries since 1954, the year after Stalin died.

Nobody asked in the Senate whether the Communists have come to have more faith in our philosophy of foreign aid than we have. In fact (the Senate's) quick action caught everybody by surprise, indicating something of a hitch in communications between the Hill and the White House. Humphrey was out of town; Sen. Fulbright, whose Foreign Relations Committee has responsibility for the aid bill, was in Arkansas where he faces a summer primary. Pennsylvania's Sen. Clark was away. The word had been no crucial vote impended. But then Senators Proxmire of Wisconsin, Lausche of Ohio and Cotton of New Hampshire played to the galleries with an irresponsible denunciation of "aid to the enemy" and the stampede to be politically patriotic was on.

Maybe Administration and other observers have not watched closely enough the possible impact on Congress of the far right's strident demand for "total victory" and its companion accusation that the Kennedy regime is following a "no-win" policy. These crystal-clear phrases are hard to answer on the run. You have to sit down and examine them before their muddy meaninglessness comes through. But their superficial attractiveness may have helped jeopardize in the Senate earlier the President's United Nations bond-purchase proposal.

As the aid amendment stood presumably nobody could even send a CARE package to eastern Europe. Later Senate action lifts the ban on food to Poland and Yugoslavia—at the President's discretion —but the whole affair leaves a mountain of food for thought, hopefully on the theme that neither life nor foreign policy is really simple.

Backs Meany's Stand:

Humphrey Supports Challenge to NAM

THE FOLLOWING REMARKS by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) are excerpted from the Congressional Record of June 8, 1962:

Mr. President, recently the distinguished junior Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater), here on the floor of the Senate, took vigorous exception to the remarks made by George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, at the White House Conference on National Economic Issues.

The Senator from Arizona took President Meany to task for lacking a knowledge of our economic system and the place of business profits and losses in the employment picture.

After hearing the Senator's criticism of this distinguished leader of the American trade union movement, my curiosity was aroused; so I obtained a transcript of the actual remarks Mr. George Meany made before the national conference on May 22.

For the benefit of my colleagues, and especially for the benefit of my good friend from Arizona, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Meany's statement be printed in the Record.

The junior Senator from Arizona will, I am certain, be pleased to learn from reading the actual text of Mr. Meany's remarks that his fears about Mr. Meany's lack of knowledge of our economic system are quite unfounded. The Senator from Arizona will be pleased to learn that Mr. Meany does not question the right of any business establishment to make adequate profits.

All that Mr. Meany proposed was that the National Association of Manufacturers and other business groups specifically spell out how an increase in profits will help to alleviate the serious problem of unemployment. In other words, Mr. Meany is deeply concerned with the problem of unemployment, which is a continuing problem.

Let me quote directly from Mr. Meany's speech:

"I have been told time and time again that industry makes jobs, that a certain amount of investment in a business creates a single job, and I daresay that this is true.

"So I would like the National Association of Manufacturers, in this time of crisis for this country, to specifically lay down—I think they have an obligation to lay down their proposal as to how we are going to make jobs, how we are going to make 1,350,000 jobs a year for the next 10 years to take care of our increased labor force, and perhaps another 200,000 a year to take care of those who are replaced, permanently replaced, by automation or technological change. It is not enough to tell us that industry makes jobs and things will take care of themselves. . . .

"So I am all for profits, I don't care how high they go, if they will solve this economic problem of this nation."

* * *

IN MY OPINION, Mr. President, Mr. Meany's proposal is completely reasonable and constructive. I certainly feel that he had a right to make the inquiry, and that it should not be interpreted as being antiprofits or antibusiness. On the contrary, Mr. Meany is deeply concerned, as are most Americans, with the problem of unemployment; and he has asked the captains of industry and the National Association of Manufacturers to present proposals in regard to how increased earnings would be translated into increased jobs. I do not interpret his remarks as being critical of profits or of corporations. Instead, I interpret his remarks as those of an inquiring man who is interested in the problems of unemployment and how they can be corrected.

I fall to see anything in Mr. Meany's remarks which indicates a lack of knowledge of our economic system. I may say that his statement was made extemporaneously or informally at the conference called by the President. In fact, I was most impressed, from reading his statement, with the AFL-CIO president's grasp of our economic system. I commend him for what he said.

We in America can be justly proud that the labor movement in this country is headed by a man of the caliber of George Meany. He is a good citizen; he is a patriotic and loyal American; he is a man of complete integrity and of good judgment and common sense. He is not given to extremes or to narrow, dogmatic positions.

Washington Reports:

Party Chiefs in House Disagree On Effectiveness of Congress

REP. CARL ALBERT (OKLA.), Democratic leader in the House, predicted that the second session of the 87th Congress will establish a record as "one of the most effective Congresses in recent years" as he was interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Rep. Leslie Arends (Ill.), Republican whip, disputed this assessment, asserting that the House has accomplished little so far.

"We have been busy, but legislation on the floor has been very limited indeed," Arends said.

Albert's estimate was: "We haven't sent to the White House very many major bills, but I can't remember a time since I have been in Congress when we had so many bills of major importance out of committee or about out of committee—the farm bill, the trade bill, for instance."

Together, the majority leader and the minority whip listed the following additional major bills as still requiring action: health care for the aged; taxes, which has cleared the House and must still be acted on in the Senate; United Nations bonds, approved by the Senate but awaiting House action; trade expansion; foreign aid, passed by the Senate; youth employment opportunities, called the Youth Conservation Corps in the Senate; communications, passed by the House; federal aid to higher education, in conference; equal rights, the poll tax amendment, and Davis-Bacon amendments.

ALBERT said he believed the House could act on major legislative matters and "finish in six weeks if we put on full steam, if we knew the Senate were going to finish in that time. But I don't believe the Senate will."

Among the major accomplishments of Congress so far, he listed Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure, the Manpower Development & Retraining Act, Peace Corps extension, and a number of appropriation measures.

Arends said he hoped Congress can adjourn by Labor Day "because that affords us the only opportunity to get back home and run a campaign for re-election." He opposed a session after the elections, arguing that many House members would then be called upon to legislate after they had been rejected at the polls.

Albert attributed what he called "a good legislative record" to the President's leadership, "the desire of the members of the House and the committees to write a good record, and the support of the people." Arends, on the other hand, expected the President to be impelled to establish a priority list and cut the congressional agenda.

CONGRESS STILL HAS MUCH TO DO. That was one point on which Rep. Carl Albert of Oklahoma, left, Democratic Leader of the House, and Rep. Leslie Arends of Illinois, Republican whip, agreed, as they were interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. They disagreed on what Congress will do with bills on its agenda.

How to Buy:

The Old-Fashioned Shell Game Is Back Again—with a New Look

By Sidney Margolius

THE DECEPTIVE AND STEEP finance charges on shell houses are one of the most heartless of the current wide assortment of credit overcharges because they are perpetrated on moderate-income families.

A shell-house builder usually provides an outside finished exterior with the interior unfinished or semi-finished. The buyer provides the lot and finishes the interior himself. This type of building has been most popular in the South and West, but has been growing in the East too. Last year over 90,000 shell houses were built, close to 10 percent of all the new houses erected and triple the number of shell houses built in the late 1950's.

One of the biggest shell-house builders, the Jim Walter Corp. of Tampa, Fla., alone increased its sales from less than $2 million in 1955 to $42 million in 1961. The other big operator in this field is the Certain-teed Products Corp. and its subsidiary, the Institute for Essential Housing.

The big attraction is the low price. No doubt you have seen the models on highways outside of towns with large signs offering houses for $3,695, for example, and also stating "Easy Terms" or "No Money Down." Most of the buyers have been low-income families and minority group members with incomes under $5,000 a year.

This is why the finance charges are especially cruel. The money these families are trying to save by self-labor often is wiped out by the unusually high credit charges they pay to finance shell houses. The finance charges are usually 12 to 16 percent and sometimes more.

For you don't actually finance a shell house at the conventional mortgage interest rates offered on completed houses, Mark Walsh, New York State assistant attorney general, warned at a recent meeting of the New York City Central Labor Council Community Services Committee. The finance charges on shell houses are often three times usual mortgage interest rates.

Walsh, who is in charge of that state's rackets bureau, pointed out that you must own your lot before the shell house companies will sell to you. Then they sell you materials and labor, not a house. So they charge you an installment-type finance charge, not a mortgage rate. And—as readers of labor, co-op and credit-union papers must know by this time—the true annual interest rate on installment plans is approximately double the stated rate.

THE SHELL HOUSE SELLERS go even further. They use a balloon note "to deceive the people into thinking they are making no down payment," Walsh said. In one contract the rackets investigator reported, the balance to be financed was $5,300 at an add-on-rate of 10 percent for the first $500 (a true 20 percent) and 8 percent for the remaining $4,800 (a true 16 percent). The interest per year was $434, or a total of $2,170 for five years, on an original debt of $5,300.

The balance was to be paid off at the rate of $59 a month, and then the contract called for a final "sudden death" payment of $3,900.

Obviously no moderate-income family seeking this type of low-cost housing can afford a single final payment of $3,900, and the shell-house companies don't expect they will. This contract will have to be re-financed again while the finance charges pyramid into an unholy amount that may well be more than the savings the family made by its self-labor on the house.

Even without excessive finance charges the seemingly-low advertised prices of shell houses bear further investigating. The family must buy a lot if it doesn't already own one, and, depending on the model, may have to have a foundation dug, have the shell erected, have the wiring and plumbing installed, frame and finish the interior, buy or build cabinets and, finally, paint the place.

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

This Growing Up Is So Tough It Hardly Seems Worth While

By Jane Goodsell

WITH THE POSSIBLE exception of an unhousebroken puppy, there is nothing more nerve-wracking to have around a house than a daughter who is waiting for a telephone call from a boy.

Actually, I don't know whether it's worse to be the daughter or the daughter's mother. I think both are worse.

When my eldest daughter was in the eighth grade, she was telephoned every night by a boy who went to another school. Night after night for a solid week, they carried on interminable conversations which consisted, on her part, mostly of "Un-huh" and "Oh, you're kidding!"

Actually, I couldn't hear much of her conversation because these talks were conducted in an atmosphere of secrecy appropriate to the trading of atomic secrets. She carried the telephone to the upstairs landing, cupped her hand over her mouth and spoke in low muffled tones. Still these talks had an astonishing effect. After she hung up, there were stars in her eyes. And, even though she never saw the boy, she began putting up her hair every night.

Naturally, I deplored the whole business. She was much too young to be interested in boys, it was perfectly ridiculous, she ought to be studying instead of hanging on the telephone. . . .

Then, suddenly and inexplicably, the telephone calls stopped. It took me a couple of days to realize what had happened, but then in a sudden flash of recognition I knew. I recognized the symptoms of a girl waiting for a telephone call. She'd circle around the telephone and glare at it with a fixed, beady stare. She was willing it to ring. Then she would very deliberately go up to her room and close the door. She was trying out the watched-pot theory.

If you haven't lived through this ordeal by telephone (and if you haven't, you're a man) you'll never grasp its full implications of pity and terror. If you have been through it, I needn't itemize its horrors.

AS FOR ME, I was re-living an experience that I thought I'd put safely behind me when I got married.

I even got mad at my husband, whose fault lay in belonging to the perfidious, insensitive male sex. He asked me what was the matter with her, and I tried to explain.

"Does she like him so much?" he asked. "She hardly knows him."

"I don't know whether she likes him or not," I said. "That's beside the point, anyway."

Finally, on the fifth night, I answered the telephone and it was the boy asking for her! I raced upstairs and, with studied nonchalance, told her that he was on the phone. She yawned elaborately and said, "Well, I might as well talk to him. But only to tell him that I'm not speaking to him anymore."

Twenty minutes later, she charged downstairs, her face radiant.

"Mommy, Mommy!" she shouted. "The most wonderful news! Guess why he didn't phone me! He's got double pneumonia!"

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE for Free Labor Development, a program to train union leaders and strengthen democracy throughout the Americas, was unveiled by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany (left) and J. Peter Grace, president of W. R. Grace & Co. Grace is president and chairman of the board of the institute; Meany is vice-chairman. They head the business and labor advisory groups, respectively, of the Alliance for Progress.

In Washington:

Neighbors, Inc., Helps Areas to Integrate

THE EASE WITH WHICH PANIC and greed defy professions of democracy and turn neighborhoods into Negro ghettos is almost a mid-century American legend. But there is growing evidence in Washington, D. C., that the process is neither inevitable nor irreversible.

While the ghetto-makers press to turn a "frontier" area of the nation's capital into one more all-Negro enclave, a growing interracial group of residents who won't be panicked, pushed or bulldozed is defending homes and neighborhoods and setting an example in neighborhood democracy.

The motives of the group—called Neighbors, Inc.—are mixed. Because its members are residents of the area, they are fighting for their homes and neighborhoods against panic at the appearance of a Negro family and against the unscrupulous real estate agent looking for quick profits by turning over a neighborhood which to him is just so many parcels of commission-bearing real estate. They are fighting, too, because they believe that a racially-mixed neighborhood can be a good neighborhood.

To understand a situation in which residents of the nation's capital must fight for residential democracy, it is necessary first to understand a little of the capital itself. It is the only major city in the nation in which more than half the residents are Negro. With a reputation for being—or having been—a southern city in character, its white population dropped sharply immediately following the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court school desegregation decision.

One large part of Washington and the bulk of its suburbs are white residential areas; another large and growing section, and its schools, are virtually all Negro.

Between is the "frontier" area into which come Negro families seeking to escape their ghetto and find decent housing for their families in accord with their rising social and economic levels. They are accompanied by the real estaters and speculators.

Neighbors, Inc., was formed in this no-race's land by a group of white and Negro residents determined to block the profiteers and prove—initially to themselves but now to the world—that integration can be more than a word in a court edict and a cover for segregated housing.

Though no city is identical to any other city, what is happening on the Washington "frontier" is a carbon copy of similar situations in other American cities. The experience of Neighbors, Inc., may show other groups a way to beat segregation by real estate practice.

* * *

ONCE PEOPLE—including whites and Negroes in a mixed or changing neighborhood—start talking to each other, many of the things of which they may be afraid take on a truer, less frightening dimension and neighborhoods can be stabilized. This is part of Neighbors' job—to get people together and talking and to see that also present are the facts needed to combat myths—about race, myths about plummeting real estate values.

Neighbors, Inc., is also concerned—and effectively—with violations of a zoning ordinance against rooming houses, for instance, violations which can do more to break a neighborhood down than can racial change. It works on real estate people, and some will cooperate, to end the proliferation of "for sale" and "sold" signs and the phone and mail harassment which sow uneasiness among neighbors. It works on the municipal government (which in voteless Washington includes congressmen) to tighten up and enforce zoning and real estate regulations. It fights deteriorating streets and alleys. It does its own real estating to bring white families into its area and to help place Negro families in homes while preparing neighbors to live beside them.

Neighbors, Inc., is almost four years old. But it has been successful, more in some ways than in others. The number of real estate people who will cooperate with it is small, but growing. It has brought more than 30 white families into its integrated area, while preventing others from selling in panic.

Dues, Per Capita Hiked:

4-Day Week Goal Of Office Workers

Kansas City—Delegates to the 9th convention of the Office Employes have voted to press for a four-day, 30-hour week in future collective bargaining negotiations.

Pres. Howard Coughlin told the 300 OEIU convention delegates that the four-day week is "inevitable" in the white collar field because "the ever-increasing adoption of electronic data processing computers is wiping out white collar jobs at a fantastic rate and the automation revolution in the office is just beginning."

He described the successful development of a phonetic typewriter by the RCA Sarnoff laboratories and by Kyoto University in Japan which could affect the jobs of 1.5 million stenographers, typists and secretaries. The phonetic typewriter is actuated by the words spoken into a microphone and what is printed on the paper are words spelled according to their sound, not according to their normal spelling. A common business language code would be adopted so that the addressee could read the letter without difficulty.

Coupled with the shorter workweek resolution was another which called for federal government action to cushion the effects of automation on working people. The OEIU called for unlimited retraining for displaced workers, early retirement, extension of unemployment compensation and payment of expenses for workers who move from depressed to job-surplus areas. Additionally, local unions were urged to include in future contracts an "automation" clause to provide for training of present employes to fill mechanized jobs and liberal severance pay in case of layoffs.

To assure a greater income to the international as well as local unions, the delegates after several hours of debate voted an increase in monthly dues effective Oct. 1 from the present $2 minimum and $5 maximum to $3 and $6. However, the President is empowered to waive the new minimum in "special organizing situations."

A 10-cent across-the-board per capita increase will go into effect Oct. 1 and an additional 5-cent increase will take effect Oct. 1, 1963. The roll-call vote resulted in 459 and nine-twelfths for the increases and 87 and eight-twelfths against.

Large Majority for Raise

A special organizing drive among stock brokerage employes in New York and Chicago was announced by Coughlin as a major effort by the OEIU this year and next. The union now has contracts with the New York Stock Exchange and the American Stock Exchange. This new organizing campaign would center on the brokerage houses themselves which, Coughlin estimated, employ about 25,000 in Wall Street alone.

"The time has come for employes in brokerage firms to receive the same kind of protection for their basic rights as the employes whom we have organized in the shipping industry, the paper industry, breweries, atomic energy and other industrial plants throughout the nation," Coughlin declared.

HOSPITAL AND NURSING HOME workers need the benefits of union organization because they are "among the lowest paid workers" in the nation, Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes told delegates to the union's first conference on hospitals and nursing homes. Shown at the Washington, D. C., conference are, from left: Anthony G. Weinlein, BSEIU research director; Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kelly of BSEIU Local 250, San Francisco; Sullivan; BSEIU Sec.-Treas. George E. Fairchild, and Thomas Donahue, assistant to Sullivan.

Mount Drive to Create New Jobs Or Cut Workweek, Schnitzler Asks

New York—AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler called on business and the government to mount a massive campaign to provide new jobs or be faced with the only other alternative, a decrease in the workweek, even down to 35 hours a week.

Schnitzler spoke at the 11th convention of the Hat Workers here. Also scheduled to appear were Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg and Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

Schnitzler pointed out that a few years ago an increase in the gross national product of $1 billion provided between 45,000 and 65,000 new jobs. Today a similar increase in the GNP provides only 3,656 jobs, and with the unemployment figure hovering around 4 million, even the Kennedy Administration's public works program of $660 million is not going to create the necessary openings, he said.

"The National Association of Manufacturers thinks that more profits is the key to beating unemployment," he said. "But spokesmen for NAM refuse to speak out on how much profit they expect before the unemployment situation can be cleaned up.

"We have heard these stories from the NAM before, but we don't intend to believe them until they can show us in black and white that they have a plan, a formula, in which unemployment can be eliminated by creating greater profits for industry."

In his keynote address, Hat Workers Pres. Alex Rose noted that the nation's economic and political forces are being sharply realigned. This is evidenced by the recent policy statement adopted by congressional Republicans, he said, and constitutes a frontal attack "on the Kennedy program in both foreign and domestic affairs and sets the issues clearly for the 1962 and 1964 campaigns."

Rose said that this statement has wiped out the difference between liberal and conservative Republicans. The GOP, he declared, is heading for the same disappointment it had in 1936 when Pres. Roosevelt captured every state but Maine and Vermont.

"The people will rally to Pres. Kennedy because they know that at stake is an orderly recovery from a recession . . . and also at stake is the new faith and vigor which has inspired the whole free world," he said. "The success of the Kennedy program will lead our nation to greatness and guide the whole free world to a new high plateau of human progress."

The 200 delegates, representing 35,000 members, were welcomed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner, who declared that practical and reasonable guideposts "must be established to reconcile and accommodate the general public interest with particular interests certain groups."

"Their overall design must encourage the achievement of social gains for the groups which have lagged behind and for the earliest possible completion of the unfinished business of this generation," he said.

Relative Morality Cited

Schnitzler contrasted the morality of business and union officials by quoting from a speech given by J. Byers Miller, executive secretary of the Audit Control & Examiners Association, who cited figures showing that in 1960 there were 1,771 cases of embezzlement in the 13,000 banks in the United States. Of these, 42.7 percent involved tellers and office workers, 30 percent were committed by cashiers, the functioning officers in most banks, 12.7 percent were by bank managers, 6 percent by bank vice presidents and 8.6 percent by presidents.

He compared this with the more than 60,000 local unions in the country in which, since the passage of the Landrum-Griffin law, bonding companies had not had to pay a single claim.

Unions Ask Congress To Ban Rail Mergers

Rail unions have called on Congress to halt the "unrestrained rush toward monopoly control of the railroad industry" by blocking temporarily mergers which would eliminate competition.

Pres. G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks, Pres. W. P. Kennedy of the Railroad Trainmen and Pres. H. C. Crotty of the Maintenance of Way Employes joined in a warning that the growth in rail mergers threatens a disastrous breakdown in the nation's transportation system.

Testifying before the Senate Anti-trust & Monopoly subcommittee, the union leaders urged Congress to develop a new transportation policy which would more fully protect the public interest.

Meanwhile, they said, Congress should enact a bill sponsored by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) and 11 other senators which would place the railroads under the anti-trust laws until Dec. 31, 1963. This would prevent the Interstate Commerce Commission from approving mergers which would restrict competition.

An exception would be allowed, under the Kefauver bill, for any railroad in involuntary bankruptcy, trusteeship or receivership.

Leighty emphasized in his testimony that:

- Rail labor is not opposed to all mergers and recognizes that some consolidations are advisable under terms that will protect the public interest.
- Union opposition to mergers is based on broad public interest as well as the "legitimate interest" of unions in protecting members' jobs, and rail unions have opposed certain mergers even under conditions of guaranteed job security.

Harrison, who was a member of the six-man committee appointed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1938 whose recommendations formed the basis for the Transportation Act of 1940, charged that the ICC in acting on merger proposals has not followed the guidelines intended by the law.

Monopoly Aim Charged

He warned that "the giants of the railway industry are seeking to group themselves into supergiants, to profit through monopoly power . . . and to turn their combined financial and industrial power against the railroads outside their merged system."

Kennedy, whose union has been carrying on a large-scale advertising campaign to alert the public to the implications of pending merger proposals, said:

"Literally hundreds of American communities, scores of industries, vast economic regions will feel the impact if the drastic plans for contraction of railroad facilities and services become effective."

Crotty charged that ICC procedures and policies "fail to provide the protection of the public interest which Congress clearly intended to afford in railroad merger cases."

Declaring that passage of the Kefauver bill "is an absolute necessity," he added:

"Here an entire industry is requesting authority to drastically curtail its plant and to eliminate competition to a major extent."

Pace of Job Increase Slows Down in May

Non-farm employment expanded more than seasonally in May "but at a somewhat slower pace than in recent months," the Labor Dept. reported.

The department in a more detailed report on May jobs and unemployment noted also that the seasonally adjusted workweek fell to 40.6 hours in mid-May from 40.8 hours the month before because the slight gain was less than expected at this time of year.

The earlier job report disclosed a slight dip in the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment from 5.5 percent in April to 5.4 percent in May and 3.7 million unemployed.

The non-farm payroll employment was up 285,000 in May to a total of 55.1 million. This was a gain of about 60,000 more than expected for the month. Employment in durable goods industries rose by 54,000, also more than seasonally, and total manufacturing moved up 33,000 but was still some 200,000 jobs short of the pre-recession high.

Construction employment, the report showed, failed to make its usual seasonal gain in mid-May with jobs moving up 141,000 compared to an expected 175,000.

Average weekly earnings of factory workers rose 64 cents to $97.20, a new high, 57 cents above the previous record in December 1961 and $5.10 above May a year ago. Hourly earnings increased to $2.40 in manufacturing, up 8 cents over a year earlier.

Average weekly overtime earnings of factory workers rose two-tenths of an hour to 2.8 hours, the highest since mid-May 1955. The rise in overtime is reflected in the new record average weekly earnings.

Seymour Wolfbein, deputy assistant secretary of labor, hailed the gains in non-farm employment, pointing out the better-than-seasonal gain despite falling employment in the steel industry. The strength in the durable goods sector, he said, came in the auto industry.

The employment picture for the first five months of the year, Wolfbein said, was "good" with total employment rising about 1 million more than would have been expected from seasonal influences and non-farm jobs increasing by 900,000, with about half the gain in the manufacturing sector.

"The picture is not bad at all," he said.

The job report was released as other government agencies reported the first rise in downtown retail sales in May in five months and the smallest rise in personal incomes in four months in May.

Commerce Sec. Luther Hodges, assessing the various reports and economic indicators, said it appeared that the nation would not reach "full economic activity" this year.

'Much Too Broad':

Potential Abuse Seen In Wiretapping Bill

Wiretapping by law enforcement officers can be justified only in cases involving espionage, treason or kidnapping, the AFL-CIO has declared in testimony before a House Judiciary Committee.

Thomas E. Harris, the federation's associate general counsel, reiterated AFL-CIO opposition to a wiretapping bill proposed by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy. He termed it "much too broad."

Labor, he said, puts a "high priority" on protection of an individual's right to privacy and "to be free from inordinate government scrutiny of his private affairs."

Since national security is "an overriding consideration," Harris said, an exception can be made but "even then we would like to see any grant of authority to engage in wiretapping accompanied by adequate safeguards."

The Justice Dept. bill would permit federal, state and local officials to obtain court permission to engage in wiretapping during investigations of specified crimes, including transmission of gambling information. It is intended, in part, to resolve the contradiction between Supreme Court and state court rulings.

The Supreme Court has held that wiretapping under any circumstances is a federal crime and that evidence obtained by it is inadmissible in federal courts. Many state laws permit police wiretapping and the use of wiretap evidence in state courts.

Harris said the provision of the bill authorizing wiretapping by state and local officers is "utterly objectionable" to the AFL-CIO. He said labor's position, expressed in an AFL-CIO convention resolution, is for "an absolute ban" on wiretapping or divulging of tapped information by any persons or officials except federal agents, under court authority, who are investigating espionage, treason or kidnapping.

Harris pointed out that electronic listening devices have been developed which, while not technically wiretaps, enable conversations to be picked up at considerable distances. He suggested that the committee consider including control of "electronic eavesdropping" in any legislation regulating wiretapping.

10-Year Ban Pledged On Lockouts, Strikes

Vancouver, B. C.—A contract pledging no strikes and no lockouts for 10 years on the huge Peace River power project now getting under way recently was signed by the Allied Hydro Council, representing 17 construction unions, and Peace Power Constructors, Ltd., representing all contractors.

Missile Base Peace At Canaveral Hailed

Cape Canaveral, Fla.—Workers at this key missile and space site and the union - management - government committee set up to avert local labor disputes were praised by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg for an "oustanding record" of "uninterrupted and economical operations."

The message was delivered by Julius E. Kuczma, executive secretary of the President's Missile Sites Commission, at ceremonies marking the first anniversary of the Cape Canaveral committee. He termed the record of only one man-day lost for every 3,300 worked "indeed worthy of commendation."

Factory Turnover Rate Holds in April

Manufacturing labor turnover was relatively stable between March and April with most changes seasonal in nature, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept. has reported.

Hirings rose slightly to 38 per 1,000 while layoffs remained unchanged at 16 per 1,000 and quits, at 13 per 1,000, were about the same as in March. Layoffs, seasonally adjusted, were about half the rate of the recession's low point in February 1961, but hirings have not risen above the mark attained during the initial sharp pickup.

Missile Site Walkouts Drop to Record Low

(Continued from Page 1)

sion noted, "the missile site program opened a whole new field of labor relations questions for which there were no adequate precedents."

The commission lauded AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for leadership in dealing with these new problems and for throwing the weight of his office behind the commission.

The report also cited strong positions taken to back up labor's voluntary "no strike pledge" by Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., by Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters and by heads of other unions.

Praising the on-the-spot work of local missile sites committees representing unions, management and the government, the report said they have been "primarily responsible for anticipating impending problems" and working out solutions before they "flare into a work stoppage."

Kennedy, in his comment on the report, said the nation "can be justifiably proud . . . when men of so many divergent backgrounds can set aside their separate interests and work in harmony in the national interest." He added:

"The record that has been set, while good, is not perfect and perhaps we can never reach perfection. I am confident, however, that the commission will continue to get the cooperation of all our workers, our labor unions and our management officials in making sure that our missile and space programs go forward uninterrupted by labor disputes and as economically as possible."

Labor Editor Dies In Pennsylvania

Wyomissing Hills, Pa.—Elwood R. Keppley, director of education for the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO and editor of the Federationist, its monthly publication, died of a heart attack after being stricken in his home here. He was 47.

An early member of Hosiery Workers Branch 10 in Reading who was jailed during the struggle to unionize the industry there, he later turned to newspaper work and became a member of the Reading Newspaper Guild. He joined the staff of the former Pennsylvania Federation of Labor early in 1960 and continued in the education and editorial posts after the merger with the former State Industrial Union Council later in the year.

He was stricken while apparently recovering from an earlier heart attack that had kept him in a Reading hospital for a month. Neighbors, friends and trade union associates he had met during years of labor, educational, political, religious and community activities joined in a memorial service in Reading. He is survived by his widow, Helen, and two daughters.

How 20 Companies Beat the 'Profit Squeeze'

	CASH FLOW AND CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, 5 YEAR TOTAL, 1957-61						COMMON SHARE EARNINGS 5 YEAR AVERAGE, 1957-61
	Depreciation & Depletion	After-Tax Profits	Cash Flow	Cash Flow after Dividends	Capital Expenditures	"Net" Cash Flow as Percent of Capital Expenditures	Earnings per Share	Cash Flow per Share
	(In Millions of Dollars)
Standard Oil (N.J.)	$2,550.6	$3,444.2	$5,994.8	$3,626.4	$4,233.7	85.7%	$3.23	$5.62
Dupont	720.1	1,956.1	2,676.2	1,080.8	1,044.0	103.5%	8.32	11.38
IBM	990.3	736.5	1,726.8	1,515.3	1,582.3	95.8%	5.37	12.59
Ford Motor Company	1,061.8	1,699.1	2,760.9	2,037.8	989.4	206.0%	6.20	10.07
International Paper Co.	274.3	378.7	653.0	450.6	405.8	111.0%	1.83	3.16
Dow Chemical	414.1	308.9	723.0	556.4	656.0	84.8%	2.31	5.42
Goodyear Tire & Rubber	242.9	353.7	596.6	462.9	349.2	132.6%	2.11	3.55
Armco Steel	190.1	317.6	507.7	294.3	318.4	92.4%	4.47	7.15
National Dairy Products	157.5	239.9	397.4	263.5	241.9	108.9%	3.41	5.65
Safeway Stores	137.6	171.4	309.0	226.8	269.8	84.1%	2.68	4.83
Owens-Illinois Glass	96.5	182.6	279.1	173.1	169.1	102.4%	4.60	7.03
St. Regis Paper	116.4	112.8	229.2	160.2	157.3	101.8%	2.29	4.61
National Biscuit Co.	59.3	126.4	185.7	97.5	68.0	143.4%	1.80	2.65
American Can	175.3	209.9	385.2	212.8	302.8	70.3%	2.49	4.56
American Optical	13.7	12.8	26.5	18.5	14.2	130.3%	3.18	6.58
Melville Shoe	16.6	28.8	45.4	20.3	20.0	101.5%	1.83	2.89
General Electric	598.2	1,213.2	1,811.4	938.2	631.1	148.7%	2.75	4.10
Bethlehem Steel	509.3	689.5	1,198.8	626.2	671.0	93.3%	2.91	5.05
Cone Mills Corporation	25.3	18.9	44.2	29.7	25.6	116.0%	1.06	2.46
ABC Vending Corporation	10.7	10.7	21.4	15.7	14.6	107.5%	.89	1.78

SOURCE: Standard and Poor's and Moody's

THIS TABLE DOCUMENTS the "profit squeeze" contention of business as a myth and shows that most companies have sufficient or more than enough funds on hand for capital investment in new plant and equipment.

A five-year total of depreciation allowances and after-tax profits for the 20 widely diversified companies listed above results in a "cash flow" that after dividends provided 13 of the companies more than 100 percent of their capital expenditures over the five years involved. The other seven companies ranged from 70 to 95 percent in terms of available funds for investment.

In the above table the term "cash flow" means a company's after-tax profits plus the amount of its depreciation allowances on existing plant and equipment. It represents total funds available to the company before dividends are paid out to stockholders. "Cash flow after dividends" or "net cash flow" is the amount of cash a company has left for investing in new plant and equipment after payment of dividends.

The extent by which company funds available for investment exceeded or fell below actual investment is shown in the column headed "net cash flow as percent of capital expenditures." A figure of 100 percent would mean that net cash flow and capital expenditures were equal.

Net profits after taxes per common stock share is shown under "earnings per share." If depreciation allowances are added to after-tax profits, the share earnings are much larger. This is shown in the column "cash flow per share." The table was prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

Proposed by U. S. Workers:

ILO Urged to Widen Education Programs

Geneva, Switzerland—American labor has called on the Intl. Labor Organization to broaden its assistance to trade unions for the development of educational programs for workers.

The call was made in a 9-point resolution placed before the ILO's 46th annual conference here by Rudy Faupl, U.S. worker delegate. Faupl is also international representative of the Machinists.

"Workers' education is essential for promoting social progress and the operation of democratic institutions," the resolution stressed.

While recognizing the efforts already made by the ILO, the appeal urged intensification of the work being done. The need is particularly great, the resolution said, because of the growth of the labor movement in the newly developing countries.

The ILO was asked to give special attention to the furtherance of trade union progress to train instructors in methods and techniques of workers' education.

Before reaching the floor of the three-week conference of government, worker and employer delegates of the ILO's 102 member-countries, the resolution will be debated in the key resolutions committee, where AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is sitting with the workers' representatives.

'Development Decade' Backed

The committee has 20 resolutions before it, including one submitted by George L-P Weaver, assistant secretary of labor, who heads the U.S. delegation. It calls on the ILO to give full support to the United Nations "Development Decade" for the acceleration of economic and social development.

Working with Weaver as an adviser to the government delegation is George P. Delaney, a special assistant to Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg and Faupl's predecessor as American labor's representative to the ILO.

Pres. Al J. Hayes of the IAM is vice-chairman of the committee dealing with a proposed international pact to ban the sale, hire and use of machinery that could endanger the lives and health of workers because of inadequate safety equipment.

Lively debate between workers and employers was expected in a committee considering the issue of dismissals and layoffs. Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers is among the workers' representatives on the committee, which is laying the ground work for the first attempt by the ILO to set worldwide standards protecting the rights of workers whose employment is terminated.

The University of Geneva marked the opening of the conference by conferring an honorary doctor of laws degree on David A. Morse, the ILO's director general, who served in the Truman Administration as undersecretary of labor.

HARRY GOLDBERG of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs is shown addressing the recent fourth national congress of CISL, the Confederation of Italian Labor Unions, in Rome. Goldberg spoke as a fraternal delegate from the AFL-CIO. Other fraternal delegates included Sec. Gen. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

California Unions Marshal Forces To Back Brown in Tilt with Nixon

San Francisco—California labor came out swinging hard at Richard M. Nixon, Republican nominee for governor, in the wake of party primaries that chose the former Vice President to run against incumbent Democratic Gov. Edumund G. Brown.

In a statement hailing the "overwhelming success" of labor-endorsed candidates in both primaries, California AFL-CIO Executive Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts promised swift expansion of the already-created statewide labor committee to re-elect Brown.

Brown in his first term has made a record of "positive progress" in state affairs, Pitts said, and "California cannot afford to risk its political future with a 20th-century Machiavellian opportunist like Nixon."

Nixon captured the Republican nomination by slightly less than a 2-1 margin against a self-proclaimed "conservative," Joseph C. Shell. Brown easily won Democratic renomination.

"As far as labor is concerned, Richard Nixon's nomination pretty well epitomizes the working man's stakes in this general election," Pitts said. "His primary campaign exposed the fallen national figure as a master of political deceit who is embarrassingly ignorant of California's problems.

Pitts said that in the closing days of the primary campaign Shell exposed the "absurdity" of the "moderate" tag Nixon's supporters have recently attempted to give him. Shell, a small independent oil producer, said the only choice for Republican voters was between "a little oilman" (himself) and Nixon, the "big oilman's man."

'Minor-League Brain Trust'

Pitts cited Shell as also charging that Nixon "doesn't know state issues and doesn't speak out on them until his minor-league brain trust draws up a white paper."

An "unholy alliance" of bankers, big oilmen, private utilities and real estate lobbyists backed Nixon, Pitts said. He charged that the same groups were responsible for defeat of a proposed bond issue to finance low-rental housing for elderly people.

Nixon attempted to portray himself as "the champion of the working man" in a last-minute "well-staged telethon," Pitts continued, but his "accumulated voting record is 87 percent hostile to the interests of working men and women and demonstrates that he has always served as the Charlie McCarthy of special interests."

The former Vice President has repeatedly opposed as "federal intervention" programs that would benefit the people while exhorting the states to "do more," Pitts declared, but in each case he eventually relied on repetition of "vague, evasive generalities" used by special interests "to cover up the fact that, in truth, they want nothing done."

Nixon's agricultural program was designed to appeal to "right-to-work" supporters in "corporate agriculture," Pitts said.

"If Nixon were truly attempting to help the working people," Pitts continued, he would not "parrot the shopworn American Medical Association objections to the Anderson-King health care bill that working people overwhelmingly support."

Common Market Seen Boosting U.S. Exports

Western Europe's steadily rising standard of living can mean vast new markets for American products if tariff barriers are negotiated downward, an AFL-CIO spokesman declared in a radio interview.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said workers in the Common Market countries of western Europe are "just beginning" to develop the mass purchasing power which has typified the economy of the United States and are starting "to reach out" for household appliances and other consumer products.

Biemiller, interviewed on the Mutual Broadcasting Network's Labor News Conference, noted that American labor in its early history supported high, protective tariffs.

He emphasized that labor's position has changed over the years to "almost unanimous" support of expanded trade because experience has shown that American workers "gained more jobs by increasing exports than they did by restricting imports."

He emphasized, however, that the AFL-CIO conditions its support of the Administration's trade expansion bill on the special provision for help to workers and firms hurt by import competition. Labor has "insisted," Biemiller said, that "it was the duty of the government to protect those people who get hurt" because of tariff actions taken by Congress or the President.

Biemiller noted that the tariff wall erected around the Common Market would be a threat to many of the 4 million American jobs dependent on exports unless the President had authority to negotiate broad-ranging tariff reductions.

The bulk of American exports, he also pointed out, comes from "the highest-paid American industries . . . an interesting fact that is sometimes overlooked."

Biemiller said the trade bill is encountering less opposition in Congress than had been predicted earlier this year because "the President has done a very good job" in convincing congressional leaders that the power he is requesting to negotiate tariffs is actually needed.

While enactment of the trade program will not automatically bring about an agreement with the Common Market, Biemiller predicted that both sides will "find it to their advantage" to work out agreements.

Cogen Elected, Pledges Drive For Contract

New York—Full support of the United Federation of Teachers in its drive for a first contract for Greater New York's 40,000 teaching employes was pledged by winning and losing candidates in the union's officer elections, just completed.

Pres. Charles Cogen, returned for a two-year term by a vote of 6,300 to 2,801, said the first order of union business is to bring negotiations to a successful conclusion. Vice Pres. Roger A. Parente, who ran against Cogen, promised the winner full support in helping to make the union a "larger and more dynamic vehicle of expression" for teachers' views.

Cogen said the vote was a "mandate for continued militancy tempered by a sense of responsibility" and expressed the hope that the Board of Education and city fiscal authorities will cooperate in bringing a "sense of security and stability to a demoralized teaching staff."

Schools Get 1,500 Tapes of World Parley

Fifteen hundred tapes of the 1960 AFL-CIO Conference on World Affairs have so far been produced for use in high school and college classes. The tapes feature statements of principles with continued pertinence by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Gen. John B. Medaris, Dr. Henry Kissinger, then Under-Sec. of State Douglas Dillon, William Chapman Foster and other experts on world affairs.

A recent letter from Bobby R. DePoyster, teacher of social studies at Biggersville High School, Corinth, Miss., is typical of the response to the tapes:

"My students were amazed at the new teaching aid. This was the first time that this school has used any tape recordings. They created more interest in world affairs and some of my students have done additional research on the subjects discussed.

"The tapes have meant the beginning of our tape library. The PTA also was appreciative when they learned that the AFL-CIO had made such a library possible."

Primary Victory Won by Johnston

Columbia, S. C.—Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-S. C.) won a smashing victory in his bid for renomination to a fourth term, defeating conservative Gov. Ernest Hollings in the Democratic primary.

Johnston carried all but one of the state's 46 counties in rolling up his victory. He will face Republican W. D. Workman, Jr., in November. Johnston is chairman of the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee.

In the gubernatorial primary Donald S. Russell, former president of the University of South Carolina, defeated four other candidates, including Lt. Gov. Burnet R. Maybank, Jr.

Cathedral Dedicated to Worker-Saint

La Crosse, Wis.—Union officials participated in a public ceremony here dedicating the new Cathedral of St. Joseph the Workman, and heard Gov. Gaylord Nelson (D) salute the "dignity and skill of labor" at a civic dinner following the church ceremony.

Among those present at the dedication were AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Charles Heymanns, AFL-CIO staff Rep. Leon J. DeBroux, and three officials of the Wisconsin AFL-CIO, Pres. George A. Haberman, Sec.-Treas. George W. Hall and Vice Pres. John W. Schmitt.

Nelson said recognition of labor's dignity and skill, celebrated in the name of St. Joseph the Workman, was not achieved without help from church people. Social ferment and social change can, he said, take place in the United States within the religious framework of our society rather than outside, as in many other countries.

Labor representatives played a prominent part when the cornerstone of the new cathedral was placed Sept. 11, 1960. Principal speakers at that time were Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electric Workers; Bishop John P. Treacy of the Catholic diocese of La Crosse, and Heymanns.

Aim at 'L' and 'G':

House Democrats Hit NLRB Critics

(Continued from Page 1)

now seeks to reduce the law's effectiveness by "scattering important labor board functions" to federal judges.

● Congress has never in fact banned "all forms of secondary boycotting," but has written only a "general provision" which it then "hedged and limited by carefully chosen words of art" familiar in the legislative process.

● The first case cited by Landrum and Griffin as an example of the NLRB's "nimble footwork" in misconstruing the law was not a labor board decision at all—but a unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in an opinion written by retired Justice Harold H. Burton, a one-time Republican senator.

● The claim of Landrum and Griffin that the board "opened loopholes" which the courts were "reluctant to upset" ignores the fact that following passage of the Taft-Hartley amendments in 1947, the courts overturned "almost completely the entire previous line" of board decisions.

● The courts not only upset the principles of earlier decisions but also "chose to pass on the facts" of case after case to make certain the board had correctly reached conclusions based on a "preponderance of testimony" before trial examiners.

● The Supreme Court in 1960 reviewed six NLRB decisions and reversed five of them; in 1961 it reviewed nine and reversed six. U.S. Courts of Appeals in 1960 reviewed 125 decisions, reversed or remanded 33 of them, enforced 38 of them partially and enforced in full 54—only 43 percent of the total. They were not "reluctant to upset" board orders.

● In accusing the NLRB of taking "a first step away" from a secondary-boycott doctrine previously enforced rigorously against unions, Landrum and Griffin "did not tell us" that the labor board moved only after the doctrine had previously been "repudiated in three different courts of appeals in five different decisions."

● Numerous cases show that the labor board instead of "seeking to carve out sizable boycott loopholes" has instead gone "out of its way" to protect "the small independent contractor from the predatory practices of a few local unions."

A table of each individual board member's votes in 27 recent boycott cases showed many cases decided unanimously or by three-member panels; others decided 4-1 with one member of the majority filing a concurring opinion; only about 10 decided by 3-2 votes. Three members are serving terms to which they were nominated by former Pres. Eisenhower; only two by appointment of Kennedy.

Both Landrum and Griffin took the floor during the Democratic counter-attack to defend or restate their viewpoints. Griffin suggested board jurisdiction should be limited by setting up regional boards, by transferring trial of unfair-practice charges to federal courts, and by authorizing court review of refusal of the NLRB general counsel to issue an unfair-practice complaint.

Landrum reiterated a conviction that the "labor board has been wrong" and that not enough cases have been appealed to the courts.

Neither renewed the charge of "tortured interpretation" or "ingenious innovations."

Critics 'In Wrong Pew'

Pucinski, Thompson and Miller charged that the critics were in "the wrong pew." If they had a quarrel with decisions, said Thompson, they should "propose an amendment to Congress."

Problems of administering the law "are nettlesome, with the quality of quicksilver," said Pucinski, and "flew into one another with fluidity." The only "pattern" found in decisions is a "pattern of deciding each case on the merits."

Stating that renewed episodes were anticipated of "these long-range colloquies" on NLRB policy on the House floor, O'Hara invited Griffin to debate Pucinski's charge that giving federal courts jurisdiction over unfair-practice cases "would result in a patchwork-quilt national labor policy with different interpretations and standards" in more than 100 federal courts.

Speaking from his NLRB experience as a field examiner, Miller said that "almost each case" investigated presents a "borderline situation," and that the so-called "borderline" cases "are the order of the day rather than the exception."

There is "no litmus-paper test" for determining if a labor practice is "unfair," he said, and when members of Congress disagree with a decision on unfair practices or jurisdiction, "it is not the board that is derelict" or even Congress, but "the contrary, ordinary traffic in human events" that makes the facts of each case different and complex, he declared.

GREATER NEW YORK FUND presentation of a plaque to the New York local of the Television & Radio Artists (AFTRA) is shown above. From left to right are Irving Lewis, assistant executive secretary of the local; Marvin Kanter, representative of the fund, making the presentation to Pres. Cliff Norton of the local, and Kenneth Groot, executive secretary of the local. The presentation was made at the monthly meeting of the local's directors.

Congressional Leaders Seek Votes To Pass Key Administration Bills

By David L. Perlman

The Kennedy Administration and its legislative leaders have launched an all-out drive to line up the votes needed to pass as much of the President's program "as humanly possible" before Congress adjourns.

A White House strategy session with the House and Senate Democratic leadership focused on major measures which will be up for decisive votes in the near future:

● The Senate-passed farm bill, aimed at cutting the mounting food surplus piled up in costly storage facilities.

● The trade expansion bill, which the President is reported to regard as the most important legislation before Congress.

● A sharply-controversial tax bill, presently bogged down in a divided Senate committee after having passed the House.

● Health care for the aged under social security. (Story Page 1)

A preliminary test of the Administration's vote-corralling ability gave some encouragement to the Democratic leadership as the House voted 210-192 for a temporary increase in the nation's debt limit after defeating a GOP attempt to trim the amount by $2 billion.

Republicans had argued that limiting the Treasury Dept.'s ability to borrow money on a short-term basis pending tax receipts would force the government to spend less. The GOP then claimed "foul," charging that some Republicans had been told that defense contracts in their districts would be endangered if the debt limit was not raised adequately.

Up for a vote in the House—and expected passage—as the AFL-CIO News went to press was a major labor and Administration backed equal-pay-for-women bill.

Employer opposition to the bill, led by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, was expected to take the form of weakening amendments to the committee measure which would require employers in interstate commerce to pay the same wages to men and women doing "comparable" work.

The farm bill, which passed the Senate by a narrow 42-38 margin, had been scheduled for a House vote the week of June 11 but Democratic leaders postponed action a week in the hopes of switching a few more opposition votes.

Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman plunged into the thick of the battle for the bill and sharply attacked the powerful Farm Bureau, which has opposed it. The Farmer's Union and several other farm organizations support the bill which would impose tight new controls on the production of wheat, corn and other feed grains, expand the soil bank program and attempt to convert excess farm acreage to recreational use.

In a letter to each member of the House, Freeman declared:

"If Congress should fail to act on a farm bill in this session, the law requires that I carry out the programs in effect before 1961 for wheat and feed grains. These programs have already failed, and they would cost the public at least $1 billion more each year than the proposed program."

The trade bill, originally scheduled to be taken up the week of June 18, was pushed over to the following week as a result of the changed timetable on the farm bill.

Still uncertain are Senate prospects for the tax bill. Administration leaders are pressing Finance Committee Chairman Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), who opposes the measure, to bring it out for floor action in July.

6-16-62

Pilots Demand Standards for Airport Safety

Miami Beach—Delegates to the Airline Pilots convention here have voted to demand strict federal standards for airport fire and rescue facilities, backed up by legislation directing the Federal Aviation Agency to withhold funds from any airport or heliport with inadequate safety equipment.

The delegates, representing 14,000 crew members of 48 air lines, termed substandard fire and rescue facilities "a major hazard to air safety and the traveling public."

In other action as the union wound up its 17th biennial convention, the ALPA:

● Voted to seek contract language prohibiting reprisals against any flight crew personnel who respect a picket line and requiring that all passengers routed on a struck air line be informed of the strike.

● Passed a special assessment of 1 percent of members' earnings for one year, but authorized the payments to be spread over two years.

● Reiterated full support of the two-year Southern Airways strike and voted to extend benefits being paid to Southern pilots until two months after they are returned to work.

BLMR Publicity Post Given Conn

Richard Conn, onetime labor publicist and later a weekly newspaper publisher, recently was named director of the Office of Information in the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, Commissioner John L. Holcombe has announced.

Conn was director of publicity for the southern organizing operations of the former CIO from 1949 to 1953, when he founded the Jefferson Reporter, a suburban Louisville, Ky., weekly. He joined the Labor Dept. staff in 1961.

Back Pay Proposed for 186 Furniture Strikers

Ft. Smith, Ark.—Reinstatement and back pay for 186 members of the Furniture Workers who went on strike June 1, 1961, against the Ft. Smith Chair Co., have been recommended by a National Labor Relations Board examiner.

Trial Examiner Sydney S. Asher, Jr., found that management's "last offer" in contract negotiations—a demand that it be allowed to set wage and incentive rates unilaterally, without being required to arbitrate the issue—constituted an insistence on substantial changes in the contract.

Therefore the rights of the striking employes were protected by law, Asher said, despite the fact that UFW Local 270 had failed to notify the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service before striking as the law requires.

Action of management in firing the strikers, along with refusing to bargain, unlawfully prolonged the strike and converted it into an unfair-practice strike, the examiner found. He recommended:

● Full reinstatement of all employes to their former or substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, with discharge if necessary of any employe hired after June 8, 1961.

● Payment for any loss of pay at rates which the employe would normally have earned, plus 6 percent interest from date of firing.

ACWA Wins 12.5 Cents in Shirt Plants

New York—Wage increases of 5 cents an hour in September 1962 and another 7.5 cents an hour a year later, plus other improvements, have been agreed to by the Clothing Workers and major shirt manufacturers for a group of about 20,000 shirt industry workers.

ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky said the agreement is expected to set a pattern for 150,000 workers in the unionized shirt, outer-wear and single-pants industry.

The negotiators, headed by Potofsky for the union and Robert M. Dale of the Arrow Co. for the manufacturers, agreed to extend existing contracts from June 1964 to September 1965, subject to reopening by either party.

It was agreed also that trustees of the Amalgamated cotton garment welfare and pension program may improve program benefits by increasing the industry contribution from 6 percent of payroll to an amount not exceeding 6.5 percent, if they agree such an increase is needed.

The agreement, negotiated under an annual reopener clause, also provides increased minimum rates for hourly-paid workers in cotton garment plants.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 23, 1962 | No. 25

Meany Urges Tax Cut Now On Low, Middle Incomes

CHEMICAL WORKERS, on strike since May 4, man the picket line at the Wilmington, Calif., plant of the U.S. Borax & Chemical Corp., makers of Twenty Mule Team products. One picket was struck by a train on the crossing, where three policemen are shown. The strike began when company negotiators insisted on "management rights" clauses in the contract. (See story Page 3)

Action Necessary To Speed Recovery

An immediate temporary tax cut for low and middle-income families "is necessary as an emergency measure" to reduce unemployment and "avoid slowing the rate of economic growth," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has told Pres. Kennedy.

In a memorandum to the President on June 14, Meany declared the AFL-CIO is deeply concerned "that the pickup from the recession will be aborted" unless immediate action is taken.

The AFL-CIO president is currently in Geneva attending the Intl. Labor Organization meetings. His memorandum to Kennedy was conveyed by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

Meany told the President that the AFL-CIO is "vigorously opposed to an across-the-board individual income tax cut." The stimulus that the economy needs, he wrote, is the impact of a cut in the first individual income tax bracket which will be reflected in immediate spending and new purchasing power.

Kennedy had announced earlier that he would recommend to Congress later this year for action in 1963 an across-the-board tax reduction "in personal and corporate income tax rates."

Meany declared that a corporate tax cut "would also be very unwise."

Incentives to business "are already quite great" and another $2.5 billion will be given it through the tax investment credit provision in the House-passed tax bill and the revision of government depreciation schedules, he said.

Research Findings Cited

Citing studies by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research showing that a majority of 20 selected corporations had more than enough available funds after taxes and dividends to meet all their capital expendi-

(Continued on Page 12)

Agreement Reached in Air Dispute

A final 24-hour bargaining session in Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg's office — climaxing more than a week of unprecedented top-level government mediation to avoid an airline tieup —has settled a dispute between the Flight Engineers and Trans World Airlines. The agreement raised hopes for final solution of a six-year controversy over crew qualifications and job assignments on the nation's airlines.

Goldberg, tired but elated, told newsmen that the agreement is "clearly in the national interest." He expressed the thanks of Pres. Kennedy, "with whom I have been in constant communication," to all parties involved "in bringing about the voluntary resolution of this dispute."

He said he was hopeful that the pact would prove "helpful" in solving similar disputes on Eastern and Pan American airlines.

Negotiators for the Flight Engineers said they will recommend membership ratification of the pact as "the best agreement possible." Special ratification meetings will be held at TWA bases in the United States and overseas.

(Continued on Page 4)

Supreme Court Rules:

Individual Strikers Exempt from Suits

By Eugene A. Kelly

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that a company cannot collect damages from individual union officers and members for a peaceful work stoppage conducted by their local union.

The high court in its 8-0 landmark decision upheld the contention of the Oil Workers, and a supporting brief entered by the AFL-CIO, that union officers or members cannot be held personally liable for union actions in such cases.

Any other finding, the federation said in its amicus curiae brief, would be a "calamity for American labor relations" because the suit involved an "almost unprecedented situation—an attempt by an employer to hold his individual employes liable" for money damages for participating in "a peaceful work stoppage, allegedly in violation of a no-strike clause" in a collective bargaining agreement.

By the same 8-0 vote the court refused to delay the hearing of a suit by the same firm, the Sinclair Refining Co., for $12,500 damages against the OCAW and its Local 7-210 in East Chicago, Ind., for work stoppages on Feb. 13 and 14, 1959, allegedly in violation of contract. That suit was returned to the District Court for trial.

Injunction Denied

Another phase of the same lawsuit was settled by the court, 5-3, in a ruling that the lower courts correctly dismissed Sinclair's suit for an injunction against future strikes or work stoppages which are, or could be, subject to grievance procedure. Federal courts lack jurisdiction in such cases, the high court said, because the Norris-LaGuardia Act bars injunctions against strikes.

The AFL-CIO filed a brief also on the latter point and its position was upheld by the high court, according to the federation's counsel. The briefs were submitted by J. Albert Woll, general counsel; Theodore J. St. Antoine of Woll's office, and Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel.

(Continued on Page 4)

Human Rights Aid Campaign Urged on ILO

Geneva, Switzerland—Rudy Faupl, U.S. worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization, has called on the ILO to expand its technical assistance program into the field of human rights.

He told the 102-nation ILO's annual conference that the promotion of human rights through technical aid would give the agency the "new tool it needs if it is to discharge properly its mission of advancing freedom and social justice for workers everywhere."

Faupl, who is an international representative for the Machinists, launched the idea for a breakthrough in the ILO's activities during the general debate continuing through most of the three-week ses-

(Continued on Page 12)

Tory, Rightist Parties May Rule Canada

Ottawa, Ont.—A cliff-hanging, right-wing government appears to be in prospect for Canada as a result of the June 18 federal elections. The massive Conservative majority of Prime Minister John Diefenbaker was slashed back from 205 seats in the 265-seat Parliament to a minority of 118 seats. If, as expected, the Conservatives hold on to power it is likely they will form some sort of a coalition with the right-wing, monetary reform Social Credit Party, which scored a stunning upset in the Province of Quebec.

All other parties made gains at the expense of the Conservatives. The New Democratic Party, formed last summer by trade unionists, Canada's social

(Continued on Page 5)

Congressional Action Asked to Spur School Desegregation Enforcement

Legislation designed to speed enforcement of the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling has been endorsed by the AFL-CIO.

Federation spokesmen told a House Education & Labor subcommittee that congressional action is needed because many states "after eight years of opportunity have failed to implement . . . the mandate of the Supreme Court to desegregate the public schools with all deliberate speed."

Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair, accompanied by Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, supported key features of similar bills introduced by Representatives Herbert Zelenko (D-N.Y.) and Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.).

The AFL-CIO urged the subcommittee, headed by Rep. Dominick V. Daniels (D-N.J.), to approve legislation which would:

- Require every school board which has not desegregated its public schools to adopt a desegregation plan within six months, with first-step compliance not later than the 1963-64 school year.
- Direct the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare to certify to the Attorney General any school districts which fail to comply with the statute.
- Authorize the Attorney General to file suit "in the name of the United States" to compel compliance.

"This is the most vital feature of the proposed legislation," Fair declared. "If enacted, the burden of implementing the decision of the Supreme Court would not fall upon local families in the school district."

- Provide federal grants and

(Continued on Page 2)

'Free Competition' Preferred:

Brand-Pricing Bill Opposed by Labor

A bill to permit manufacturers to set the retail price of their brand-name products would result in "higher prices to consumers without compensating benefits for small business," the AFL-CIO has charged.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller recently urged a Senate Commerce subcommittee to kill a so-called "quality stabilization" bill, which he said differed only in detail from "fair trade" bills introduced in past years.

"Good quality in a product is its own best salesman," Biemiller said. "Under free competition a genuinely good product will command a sufficient volume of sales at a price adequate to insure its production. Good products, which consumers want, do not need artificial price supports."

Meanwhile, on the other side of the Capitol where a House subcommittee took up a companion bill, an Administration spokesman strongly opposed the measure.

Assistant Atty. Gen. Lee Loevinger said it would result in the prices of most products being set by one major manufacturer and also put such companies beyond the reach of the anti-trust laws.

"The only reason anyone is interested in this bill is to eliminate price competition," Loevinger declared.

In his testimony before the Senate subcommittee, Biemiller declared that if quality protection is to be the basis for price support, "we would need some kind of impartial product-evaluation system . . . so that the buyer could know for sure that when he pays a quality price he is in fact getting a quality product."

The bill, introduced by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey and seven co-sponsors, would not fulfill its intended purpose of helping small businesses, Biemiller contended. He added:

Small Business Advantage

"Freedom to compete on prices is often the chief competitive advantage of small business against big business rivals who are better able to afford services and advertising."

Furthermore, he said, under uniform brand prices, larger firms will find a bigger market for lower-priced "house brands," which are often identical to the brand name products. "The small business man usually cannot promote house brands of his own and thus will lose out," he added.

"At the very least," Biemiller said, "prescription drugs ought to have a blanket exemption from any form of legalized resale price-setting by brand-name owners."

He pointed out that even where the identical prescription drug is produced by several firms under different brand names, "no price competition will exist for the consumer if his doctor follows the usual practice of prescribing a specific brand of drug."

The "only price competition that can exist as far as that brand is concerned," Biemiller declared, "is between the different retail outlets. This bill would shut off that competition."

From the consumer's viewpoint, Biemiller emphasized, "there is no good argument" for the fair trade type bill.

If enacted, he declared, "the right to shop for the lowest price . . . would disappear. Costly competitive brand-name advertising would increase prices generally."

Ford Politics Caused Strike, Reuther Says

Detroit—Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther charged the Ford Motor Co. with provoking and prolonging a strike at the Walton Hills, O., Ford stamping plant to serve "its own political purposes in Michigan."

Reuther said the company was pressuring Gov. John B. Swainson to sign a bill nullifying a Michigan State Supreme Court decision which permits workers laid off because of a strike in another plant of the same corporation to collect unemployment compensation.

The strike at the Walton Hills plant started June 6 after month-long negotiations on production standards. As it continued about 70,000 Ford workers in other plants were laid off.

Reuther asserted the company "is trying to force production standards upon the workers which are both unfair and unreasonable and which the company's own department supervision has admitted to local officials and the workers involved are unfair and unreasonable."

The political charge stems from a letter sent by Kenneth D. Cassidy, Ford vice president for industrial relations, to Swainson urging him to sign a legislature-passed bill nullifying the state court decision.

20 Big Firms Each Top Combined Union Funds

A single corporation—the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey—had assets in 1960 nearly seven times as great as the combined assets of the entire U.S. labor movement. After deduction of liabilities, Standard Oil's net worth was still more than five times the comparable figure for all unions.

Fortune Magazine's directory of the largest U.S. industrial corporations showed 20 firms each having assets at least as great as the $1.5 billion reported by unions under the Landrum-Griffin Act. Thirteen of the firms exceeded the labor movement's net asset total of $1.3 billion.

The assets for the 20 corporations total $65.8 billion, with a net worth totaling $46 billion.

Total Union Assets Put at $1.5 Billion

Add together all the assets of virtually every local, district, national and international union in the United States—including the value of mimeograph machines, strike funds, buildings and bank accounts—and the total comes to $1.5 billion.

That's the figure the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports came up with after totaling the financial reports of 44,530 labor unions, including 260 national organizations. Deducting liabilities—money owed—left total net assets of about $1.3 billion.

BLMR Commissioner John L. Holcombe said the typical local union—halfway down the financial list—had net assets of $2,276. Based on financial reports submitted in late 1959 or 1960 under the Landrum-Griffin Act's reporting requirements, it took in $3,600 in dues and other income during the year and paid its officers $767 for their services.

The Labor Dept. statistical summary showed national unions having assets of $770.8 million, with liabilities of $147.9 million. Local unions reported assets totaling $670.1 million and liabilities of $43 million. Unions other than national or local had nearly $100 million in assets and almost $33 million in liabilities.

During the year covered by the report, local unions took in a total of $9 million more than they paid out, national unions $1 million more than disbursements, and intermediate unions, such as district councils, $300,000 more than they took in.

According to the report, 75 percent of national unions had total receipts of under $1 million, while 70 percent of local unions had total receipts of less than $10,000.

Congress Urged to Aid School Desegregation

(Continued from Page 1)

technical assistance to help local school districts meet "special problems" they may encounter in starting desegregation programs.

Fair said, however, that a provision of the Kowalski bill which would withhold up to 50 percent of federal grants-in-aid from states which fail to desegregate would "penalize children" for the actions of administrative officials.

Federal school desegregation legislation is necessary, Fair said, because "the long years of delay have taught us that this is the only way by which schools everywhere in the United States can be integrated with all deliberate speed ordered by the Supreme Court."

Also testifying in favor of the legislation was Selma M. Borchardt, vice president and Washington representative of the Teachers.

She endorsed the "needed enforcement provisions" of the two bills, suggested a provision that "neither teachers nor pupils are to be assigned or denied an assignment on the ground of race," and proposed establishment of an advisory board appointed by the President to assist the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in developing desegregation standards and programs.

Severance Pay Won in 3 ABC Pacts

Three contract settlements providing severance pay for displaced workers have been hailed by the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers as major breakthroughs in collective bargaining.

ABC local unions in Newark, N. J., Chicago and Paterson, N. J., concluded negotiations with employers of more than 2,000 members. Managements agreed to give up to 10 weeks' pay to workers who lose jobs as a result of plant closing due to consolidation, department shutdowns or elimination of jobs because of automation.

Severance also is provided in a San Francisco contract covering 450 members of Local 24 and major bread and cake bakers. In the event of a plant shutdown or a layoff due to automation, workers with three or more years of service may draw up to 10 weeks' pay.

A spokesman said ABC regards the payment of severance as a cushion to soften the impact of unemployment but not an answer to problems brought by increased mechanization, automation, mergers and plant consolidations.

The Chicago settlement followed a 5-day strike by 1,350 members of Local 1 at 14 plants. A new three-year pact includes wage increases of 10 cents an hour effective May 1 and additional 9-cent increases at one-year intervals; four weeks' vacation after 25 years.

Local 84 in Newark won increases of 7.5 cents this year and 8 cents next year; an additional one-half cent for welfare; severance payments and vacations up to four weeks.

Local 165, Paterson, got 8-cent increases for 112 Continental Baking Co. workers as of May 1 this year and next, plus severance and four-week vacations for 25 years of service.

The San Francisco contract provides longer vacations for veterans starting next Jan. 1; severance, and wage increases of 10 cents this year, another 8 cents next May 1, and an extra 1 cent to be paid toward medical care expenses of workers on pension.

UFT Offers Conditional Strike Ban

New York—The United Federation of Teachers has offered to include some form of no-strike pledge in its first proposed contract with the New York Board of Education provided a satisfactory agreement can be reached on other issues.

School board negotiators broke off talks on a first contract, saying further meetings would not be held unless the union agrees to a no-strike pledge.

The union—Local 2 of the Teachers—has asked board representatives to resume negotiations in an effort to reach agreement before summer vacation. The UFT hopes to finish the bargaining process by June 26, date of the last meeting of the school year for its delegate assembly.

UFT negotiators headed by Pres. Charles Cogen earlier had reached agreement with board representatives on a wage "package" increase of $36.5 million but still unsettled are grievance procedures, transfer rights and the holding of faculty meetings on school time.

Teaching employes have sought a contract for several years but long were frustrated. Last December the UFT won an election giving it the right to represent all 40,000 teaching employes in collective bargaining, and negotiations have been in progress since January.

Facts Catch Up with Story of Union Fine

Milwaukee—Remember the story about Mrs. Mary Ellen Benson and Local 356 of the Papermakers & Paperworkers, which allegedly fined her $5 because she wanted to go to church—and about Judge Robert J. Miech, who was supposed to have upheld the union? Well, it didn't happen that way.

Here's the story as reported by United Paper, official publication of the UPP:

On Sept. 16, 1954, Local 356 amended its bylaws to provide for a $5 assessment on any member who did not attend at least three out of the six meetings a year. Mrs. Benson, who joined the local the same year, attended but one meeting in the next six years and paid the $5 assessment each year.

Last year she simply refused either to attend the meetings or pay the assessment. The union sued in county court. There was no trial, but at a pre-trial conference Judge Miech pointed out that earlier court decisions had upheld a union's right to meet on Sunday and to fine members who do not attend. Mrs. Benson paid $5.40 in court costs—and the assessment.

The Milwaukee Journal carried a story which in effect said Mrs. Benson was fined for going to church instead of to the union meeting. United Press Intl. put on its news wires another version which gave the impression she had been fined $10.40.

Six days later the Journal carried an account of the UPI garble and quoted Judge Miech as saying: "The implication was that it was a criminal matter and that I levied the fine."

Mrs. Benson never mentioned church attendance as a reason for not going to the union meeting until the pre-trial conference with Judge Miech. She denied to the Journal—which printed it—that she had told the union she could not attend meetings because she wanted to go to church.

Never in the past had she raised the question of conflict in the times of the church service and the union meeting with any union officer or at any meeting, G. R. Van Till, secretary of Local 356, said.

"We have many members who hold high positions in their respective churches," he added, "and who manage to attend both union meetings and church services. Our chairman has never refused to excuse anyone who had to go to church.

"Not once in eight years has any member made an effort to change the Sunday morning meetings to any other time or day."

UPP Pres. Paul L. Phillips said an international union investigation showed that had Mrs. Benson "told her purported dilemma to the union secretary at the union office, which is right across the street from where she is employed, she would have readily been excused, as have many others before her."

British Unions Protest Aden Arrests, Jailings

London—The Public Service Intl. has protested to the British Colonial Office against the arrest and imprisonment of two Aden trade union leaders under an oppressive Industrial Relations Ordinance outlawing strikes. Sentenced to three months in jail were Assistant Gen. Sec. Ali Aswadi of the Aden Trades Union Congress and Pres. Abdul Latif of the British Forces Local Workers Union.

Under Kerr-Mills Program:

Aged Sick Forced To Pledge Homes

Many elderly persons unable to pay for needed medical care have been forced to put up their homes as security to qualify for help under the Kerr-Mills Act, the Senate Special Committee on Aging reported in a study of the act's first 18 months of operations.

The analysis found that the Kerr-Mills program of medical assistance to the aged (MAA) is so limited and qualified that it has failed to prove a "significant weapon in meeting medical requirements of America's elderly."

Only 24 states and three territories have put into effect the MAA program, which provides federal funds to match state payments on health care for needy persons 65 or over.

All of the programs, the report noted, apply humiliating means tests, 12 of them extend the means test to the sick person's relatives, 10 attempt to recover aid payments from a patient's estate after he dies, and nine "have recovery provisions . . . extending to the homes of people receiving help and collectible after death."

In releasing the staff report, Committee Chairman Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) declared:

Kerr-Mills 'Fell Short'

"The analysis shows quite conceivably that, measured against anticipated results, Kerr-Mills has fallen considerably short of the goal set by its more optimistic proponents."

Kerr-Mills is the program the American Medical Association says is all the nation needs to take care of the health requirements of its aged citizens.

McNamara, however, said the staff report underscored the need for enactment of the Anderson-King bill, which would provide old-age health insurance to retired persons under the social security program. This, he said, would make it financially feasible for more states to implement MAA for those not covered by social security.

"The two programs together would provide the broad base of financial assistance that would help assure older Americans independence, dignity and security in their old age," McNamara said. But MAA alone, he added, will not do the job "now or in the years to come."

The analysis made these other findings:

- Only half of 1 percent of the 65-and-over population received MAA help in March 1962. More than two-thirds of these 88,264 persons lived in three states—California, Massachusetts and New York.
- About 90 percent of federal funds spent so far on MAA have gone to just four states—California, Massachusetts, Michigan and New York.
- Benefits vary widely and are sharply limited in many states. One state, for example, provides only six days of hospital care.
- Limitations in a number of programs affect the quality of care provided and restrict the patient's right to choose his own doctor.
- Administrative expenses are a heavy drain on state funds. For each $1 spent on actual care in one state, they amounted to $1.24.

A DELEGATION of Auto Workers gathers on the steps of the Capitol on a recent visit. The UAW members were part of an AFL-CIO union group which urged members of the House and Senate to enact "equal pay for equal work" legislation. Speakers at a legislative conference in Washington included Jacob Clayman, co-director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Assistant Labor Sec. Esther Peterson, and Representatives Edith Green (D-Ore.), Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.), Gracie Pfost (D-Ida.), Martha W. Griffiths (D-Mich.), Ralph J. Rivers (D-Alaska) and Harold M. Ryan (D-Mich.).

Borax Strike Blamed On 'Management Rights'

Los Angeles—Company insistence on sweeping "management rights" clauses in a contract with the Chemical Workers has been blamed for causing and prolonging a strike of 400 workers which began May 4 at the U.S. Borax plant in nearby Wilmington.

The strike was similar to one in which 2,700 potash workers walked out at Carlsbad, N. M., claiming management demands for contract language were "right out of a U.S. Chamber of Commerce handbook" entitled "Model Arbitration Clauses to Protect Management Rights."

The issues here are much the same as in Carlsbad, according to ICWU Vice Pres. Jack T. Swift. He described company demands as follows:

- A stronger management rights clause.
- Job consolidation and classification changes with almost no protection for workers' rights.
- Changes to permit management to move work out of the plant by contract on the basis of management-defined efficiency or economy.
- Weakening of severance pay provisions.

Swift charged management with "bad faith" in operating production units manned by supervisors, in moving switch engines through the picket lines to pick up products for shipping, and for serving a court order on union officials while a federal mediator was conducting negotiating sessions.

One picket was hospitalized when hit by a train bringing materials into the plant.

Local 40 spokesmen reported that building tradesmen have been observing the picket line and that the strike has been sanctioned by the international union and the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO. They have asked labor bodies to put 20 Mule Team products on "Do Not Buy" lists.

Management has asked for an injunction to limit picketing to one man for each 10 feet of frontage. Picket lines are composed mainly of veteran employes, since the average length of service is 17 years.

Local 40 was originally a federal labor union organized in the 30's. It joined the Chemical & Allied Council, then became affiliated with the ICWU in 1944.

Since the strike began, management has met with the union at the request of a federal mediator, but, Swift said, has consistently clung to its management rights demands and seems "determined to break the union."

The U.S. Borax plant in Carlsbad is one of five potash plants struck June 1 by five unions—the Stone Workers, Machinists, Operating Engineers, Boilermakers and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. The unions charged that "eastern lawyers" brought about a deadlock by insisting on CofC handbook clauses and disrupted "more than 10 years of good relations."

Workers Willing to Pay Costs Of Health Care, Says Goldberg

New York—The American worker "is not only willing, but anxious" to pay the small additional social security premium needed to provide health care for the aged, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg declared in an address to the Hat Workers convention here.

"This is the dignified, sensible and fiscally sound way to meet the problem," Goldberg asserted.

He spoke in support of the Anderson-King bill, currently the subject of closed-door hearings by the House Ways & Means Committee. The measure embodies the Kennedy Administration's proposals for old-age hospitalization insurance financed by a social security tax increase of about 25 cents a week per worker, with matching amounts from employers.

"I am thoroughly convinced that the American worker wants to earn and pay for the protection he needs to take care of the problems after his working life, just as he does now for social security in general," the secretary declared.

"He is not only willing, but anxious, to contribute with his employers so that an insurance fund can be available; so that the care he needs is something he has paid for, and what he is entitled to have."

Part of Long Campaign

Goldberg's remarks to the Hat Workers were in keeping with his long campaign in support of the Administration's social security health care plan, expressed since his appointment to the Cabinet in countless speeches—not only to labor unions, but to doctors, businessmen, editors, educators and the public as well.

In speeches at the Chicago Medical School and Yeshiva University, for example, he urged doctors to "generate more light and less heat" on health care and refuted the American Medical Association's "socialism" tag.

"The plain simple fact is that our proposal is not 'socialized medicine' in any manner, shape or form—and will not lead to 'socialized medicine' in any manner, shape or form," he declared.

"The plain fact is that this proposal contemplates that every older person will have the right to choose his or her own doctor and his or her own hospital. The plain fact is that the federal government has no intention or desire to control in any way the medical profession, or to dictate its conduct or its responsibility for providing medical care.

"This is an insurance program, and since when has insurance become socialistic?"

On another occasion, the secretary told a group of newspaper executives at a Middle Atlantic Associated Press meeting that health care for the aged was one of the items on "the agenda of our democracy" that the press had a responsibility to clarify for the public.

"To be specific," he told the editors and publishers, "if instead of choosing up sides between the American Medical Association and the Administration on the question . . . if the press would get out and report exactly what the present medical care situation is for aged persons in your own communities, I feel the people would soon enough settle the matter one way or the other."

Before the Executives' Club in Chicago earlier this year, Goldberg charged that businessmen had developed "an almost atavistic blind resistance" to health care for the aged.

Contracts Cited

Noting that the Auto Workers had negotiated contract provisions with the major auto manufacturers to provide health insurance for retired workers, he told the group:

"Now I am not enough of an economist to figure out the cost, but I would imagine for General Motors the provision in that collective bargaining agreement was more expensive than what a social security tax would be if that were taken care of under social security. . . .

"Instead of blindly resisting change in this area, consult your actuaries and accountants; use your enlightened self-interest to find out today whether or not you would be better off, as I think the country would be better off, if you supported a legislative program in this area.

"I think it would cost less than you will pay when you have to face this problem in collective bargaining, as you are going to have to face it. The American worker will just not submit to the proposition that during his working life his medical care is taken care of, as it is for many millions of people under collective bargaining, and then when he retires and needs that care the most, that it is cut off."

Dimes Drive Grows To Counter AMA

A "Dimes for Truth" campaign has been launched by the National Council of Senior Citizens and its affiliates to raise funds for a half-hour network television program in answer to the American Medical Association broadcast from empty Madison Square Garden in New York.

Former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R.I.), who heads the NCSC, charged that the AMA was guilty of "massive deceit" in its broadcast opposing enactment of health care for the aged under social security.

Public reaction to the AMA program, he said, is reflected in the mounting collections of affiliates and individual contributions ranging from 10 cents to $100 sent to Dimes for Truth, Washington 3, D.C.

Deep Sea Crews Get 2nd Step Raise

New York—A 2.5 percent pay raise for some 38,000 crew members of 600 deep-sea vessels has gone into effect under the four-year contract negotiated last year by the National Maritime Union.

The raise was the second to become effective under the 1961 agreement. It increases the base pay of an ablebodied seaman to $392 a month and the overtime rate to $2.42 an hour.

MOST IMPRESSIVE PICKET LINE in Wisconsin history, made up of area labor leaders, marched around the Milwaukee Sentinel building for three hours to permit striking Newspaper Guild members to attend a union meeting. At right are ANG Executive Vice President William J. Farson and Tony Ingrassia (with glasses), chief negotiator for the striking local, while AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Charles Heymanns is at the left.

Marathon Talks Bring Agreement In Flight Engineers, TWA Dispute

(Continued from Page 1)

Later, in a statement from the White House, Kennedy reiterated his gratitude to all who participated in the "statesmanlike agreement." He said it was "of great significance" that the settlement was reached without a strike, and added that "it is thus a good example of what can be accomplished in like situations."

The settlement protects the job rights of Flight Engineers—both employed and on temporary layoff—when jet crews are reduced from four to three men on the basis of a 1961 report of a special presidential commission. The Flight Engineers will be required to take pilot training, thus meeting the demand of the Air Line Pilots for a "fail-safe" crew on jets with a third qualified pilot available if the pilot or co-pilot is incapacitated.

Flight engineers are to receive pilot training at company expense. Those who cannot qualify will be entitled to special severance pay if their seniority does not qualify them for service on non-jet aircraft, which require only two pilots.

Pilots Represented

While the Pilots did not participate formally in the negotiations, they had an observer present throughout the bargaining sessions.

TWA agreed not to train any of its pilots as flight engineers so long as any members of the Flight Engineers are on layoff. The Flight Engineers, in return, agreed that new hires will not be required to hold a mechanic's certificate in addition to a flight engineer license. This would permit pilots to seek engineer positions if future vacancies develop.

Negotiations between the Flight Engineers and TWA on economic issues in dispute will continue for a week, with Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger serving as a mediator. The union is seeking both wage increases and a reduction in hours. If agreement is not reached, Feinsinger is authorized to "prescribe procedures" for final settlement.

Spokesmen for Flight Engineer units on Pan American and Eastern expressed reservations about some features of the TWA agreement, including allowing new employes to be hired without mechanic certificates. Union executive councils on both airlines scheduled meetings to consider their position.

Two steps were taken in the agreement and an accompanying memorandum to ease the long dispute between the ALPA and the Flight Engineers.

In a special memorandum, Goldberg and Chairman Francis O'Neill of the National Mediation Board declared that it is the government's position "without qualification" that the Flight Engineers "will not suffer an increased risk of loss of representational rights" as a result of the agreement.

With the implied agreement of the parties concerned, they said a joint committee of TWA Pilots and Flight Engineers will be set up, with one member to be appointed by Goldberg, "to review the possibilities of merger of the representational functions of the two organizations . . . and to submit recommendations (which shall not be final or binding) to the organizations."

So long as this committee functions, the mediation board will not hold any collective bargaining elections involving any change of bargaining representative among flight crew members. It was a mediation board decision to hold an election for a unit covering both pilots and flight engineers on United Airlines which led to a nationwide strike by Flight Engineers early last year.

The other move towards resolution of jurisdictional differences was a provision that if a member of the Pilots is employed as a flight engineer, he will continue to be represented by the Pilots in grievance procedures, but the Flight Engineers may have a representative present at all proceedings.

During nearly two weeks of intensive government intervention to avoid a Flight Engineers strike, it appeared on several occasions that an insurmountable deadlock had been reached.

The most serious impasse appeared to have been reached on June 13, when the union rejected Pres. Kennedy's request to arbitrate all issues in dispute. After an all-night session, Goldberg on June 14 told newsmen:

"The talks are over, the union is free to strike. A deadlock has ensued and we have no agreement."

Later that day, at his news conference, Pres. Kennedy called on the Flight Engineers "to reconsider their action and to either submit this case to arbitration or agree with the carriers on some other way of settling this dispute."

The union, which had previously been prepared to strike three major airlines—Eastern and Pan American as well as TWA—then agreed to limit strike action to one airline, declaring that other lines could "easily absorb" TWA's traffic, thus avoiding disruption to the economy.

As the strike deadline — originally June 19 — approached, new mediation efforts began breaking bottlenecks and the walkout was postponed on an hour-to-hour basis while talks continued.

The final session, lasting from 10 a.m., June 20, to 9:30 a.m., June 21, centered on a new package proposal put on the table by Goldberg. Union negotiators consulted with local TWA officers across the nation by phone throughout the night. Not until the dawn hours did a settlement appear firm.

Supreme Court Rules:

Individual Strikers Exempt from Suits

(Continued from Page 1)

The decisions related to three counts of a suit brought by Sinclair against the union—(1) for damages from the union, (2) for damages from 24 union committeemen as individuals, and (3) for an injunction against continued work stoppages.

The lawsuit involved the East Chicago refinery where Sinclair employed 1,700 workers in February 1959. When the company docked three employes a total of $2.19 during that month, a thousand of their fellow workers stopped work in protest. On Mar. 12, 1959, management filed suit for damages and an injunction, naming the international union, the local union and 24 union committeemen as defendants.

Justice Byron R. White said for the court, in his first opinion since his appointment by Pres. Kennedy earlier this year, that all members except Justice Felix Frankfurter, who did not participate, were convinced that the damage claims against individual unionists must be dismissed on the merits for failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted.

Under any theory of the law, White said, the company's action in suing individual union members is governed by the National Labor Relations Act. Therefore he concluded:

"National labor policy requires, and we hold, that when a union is liable for damages for violation of a no-strike clause, its officers and members are not liable for those damages. Where the union has inflicted the injury, it alone must pay."

White also wrote for the court the unanimous opinion on the first count, stating that the lower courts properly denied the union's motion to dismiss this part of the suit, or to delay it pending arbitration of damage claims filed by employes against the company under the grievance sections of the contract.

The ruling was that the company took the proper course in suing the union for damages because "at no place in the contract does the union agree to arbitrate at the behest of the company," and therefore, the opinion said, the company's claim must be heard by the courts and not by an arbitrator.

Justice Hugo Black, writing for the five-member majority on the third aspect of the suit, declared that the injunction sought by the company against future work stoppages over grievances was prohibited by the Norris-LaGuardia Act. He said that Sec. 301 of the labor act contains no language that could "by any stretch of the imagination be interpreted" to repeal the anti-injunction provisions of Norris-LaGuardia. Reviewing the history of congressional legislation on injunctions, Black said Congress "actually considered the advisability of repealing the act insofar as suits based upon breach of collective bargaining agreements are concerned, and deliberately chose not to do so."

Justices William J. Brennan, Jr., William O. Douglas and John M. Harlan dissented from the anti-injunction ruling, which Brennan viewed as dealing a "crippling blow to the cause of grievance arbitration" and as not consistent with the "pattern of prior decisions."

Unions Dissent Sharply From Rail Tug Report

New York—Talks between three unions and 11 railroads over the size of crews on New York harbor tugs and ferries have been recessed to June 26 to give both sides time to "take a new look" at the report of a commission named by Pres. Kennedy following a two-week harbor strike in January 1961.

The nine-member Railroad Marine Workers Commission issued a report June 13 from which the union members dissented sharply, expressing "complete disagreement" with the majority findings, which neither side is compelled to accept.

The three public and three industry members recommended a reduction in the number of deckhands on tugs from 3 to 2 over a period of five years or more; severance pay up to 36 months for those displaced in crew reductions, and preferential rehiring rights. If manning disputes cannot be settled in the future by direct negotiation, the majority asserted, they should be referred to final and binding arbitration without any strikes.

A six-point dissent by the three union panelists—G. P. McGinty of the Seafarers, Capt. John Bishop of the Masters, Mates & Pilots, and Ned Phillips, Marine Engineers—said the majority was "overwhelmed by the industry-wide railroad issues" raised in another dispute and had "lost sight of the distinctly different issues" on tugs and ferries owned by the railroads.

The three based their dissent on these positions:

- There has been no technological change in the work of the deck department on railroad tugs in 40 years, and no issue of so called "featherbedding" was raised in the hearings.
- No economic benefit to the railroads can result from the majority's recommendations; the railroads always have exercised the right to remove boats and entire crews when work is not available.
- Reducing deck crews from three to two would place the workers in danger of life and limb in an already highly hazardous occupation.
- A crew reduction would place an unreasonable burden on remaining crewmen; the work load of tugboat deckhands has been increasing steadily for years.
- The findings were based on hearsay testimony by a key management witness, and the unions were denied the right of rebuttal.
- The majority recommendations restrict free collective bargaining by "fortifying the railroads with a predetermined judgment" and make a sham of the union's right to bargain on the issue.

Fish Locals Form Councils For Bargaining

A law exempting union fishermen from the danger of prosecution for seeking to bargain on the price of the fish they catch has been set as the main objective of the National Conference of Fishermen & Fish Cannery Workers.

Meeting in the U.S. capital, delegates from 16 Seafarers' locals with 18,000 members on the East and West coasts and Alaska voted to set up a permanent organization with headquarters in Washington and named Lester Balinger, San Diego, as national chairman and coordinator. Balinger has been secretary-treasurer of the Cannery Workers & Fishermen's Union of the Pacific.

The conference will urge Congress to enact legislation freeing union members from the danger of prosecution on anti-trust charges. It presented this picture of conditions:

Salmon and tuna fishermen do not work for hourly wages, but for a share of their catch. Their unions bargain for them on fringe benefits, but not on wages.

When a boat docks, owners and canners bargain on the price of the catch and the crew gets a share of the resulting payment. Union members say this works to their disadvantage because the cannery employers often own the boats and therefore are disposed to set lower prices. Workers want the right to bargain, in advance of a voyage, on the minimum price to be paid per pound.

A bill to accomplish this has been introduced by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) and Sen. E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska), and several companion bills have been introduced in the House.

Delegates also voted to make monthly reports in a bulletin for all locals, and to coordinate drives aimed at the organization of about 50,000 workers.

Election Reform Under Way:

Courts Goad Legislatures To Act on Reapportionment

State and federal courts are prodding rural-dominated legislatures toward reapportionment and electoral reform in a swift follow-up to the Supreme Court's historic decision that city dwellers can challenge denial of fair representation as a violation of their constitutional right to equal protection of the law. Less than three months after the Supreme Court broke new judicial ground by allowing a court challenge of Tennessee's 60-year-old legislative districts, the reverberations were being felt from Alabama to New York and from Maryland to Michigan.

Still undecided was the effect of the decision on Tennessee, where the challenge originated. The legislature, called into special session, recently adopted a so-called "compromise" redistricting plan but it immediately came under attack in the courts. The citizens' group which brought the original suit asked a three-judge federal court to rule that the legislature did not go far enough in granting representation to city voters.

The State AFL-CIO, granted court permission to enter the case, joined in arguing that a more far-reaching reapportionment is necessary to protect the constitutional rights of a majority of the state's citizens.

The legislature's attitude, the AFL-CIO declared, was typified by the statement made by Lt. Gov. William D. Baird during Senate debate that a more complete reapportionment would put "the liberals, the extremists and the educated crackpots" from the cities in control.

In other major developments:

- Georgia voters will choose their candidates in the September Democratic primary by popular vote or a close equivalent of it instead of the unit system which made the vote of a resident of rural Echols County worth 99 votes from residents of Atlanta. A three-judge federal court has held the unit system unconstitutional. While the Supreme Court has agreed to review the decision, the case will not be heard until after the election. Another federal court decision ordered the Georgia legislature to reapportion at least one of its houses according to population before the beginning of the January 1963 session.

- A Michigan suit, brought by State AFL-CIO Pres. August Scholle to force reapportionment of the Senate, has been scheduled for hearing in July. The State Supreme Court had originally dismissed the case, holding that apportionment was not subject to judicial review, but the U.S. Supreme Court directed the state court to consider the case on its merits.

- The Alabama legislature, which has not redistricted since 1901, is in special session as a result of a three-judge federal court's ruling that if it does not reapportion both houses by July 16, the court will do the redistricting itself.

- The Maryland legislature redistricted its lower house to give greater representation to urban and suburban areas, but left its upper house unchanged. A citizen's group for fair representation is seeking a further court order to compel redistricting of the Senate.

- Another Supreme Court decision ordered a lower court to hear on its merits a challenge to the constitutionality of New York's legislative districts. A suit brought by Radio Station WMCA charged that both houses of the legislature are apportioned so as to discriminate against New York City and other heavily-populated areas.

- A Kansas judge upheld the legality of a suit to force reapportionment of the legislature and the case is expected to be heard by the State Supreme Court.

- The Idaho Supreme Court ruled that a 1951 reapportionment of the state House does not "clearly" violate constitutional rights and refused to order a new apportionment.

- A Vermont judge ordered reapportionment of the state Senate on the ground that current districting violates the state's own constitution, which requires apportionment after each census on the basis of population, with each county having at least one senator.

- A Mississippi state judge has served notice that he will redistrict the legislature unless action is taken on reapportionment by this fall.

- A special session of the Wisconsin legislature is tackling reapportionment under a federal court order. During the regular session last year, the Republican-controlled legislature killed a redistricting plan recommended by Gov. Gaylord Nelson (D).

- In Oklahoma, a three-judge federal court invalidated all of the state's apportionment laws because of discrimination against urban residents. It gave the state until July 31 to call a special session to correct the inequities.

A key issue in many of the reapportionment cases—and one which is certain to reach the Supreme Court on appeal—is whether one house of a legislature can be apportioned on a basis other than that of population.

Those who say it can point to the federal government, where the House is apportioned according to population but each state has two senators. Opponents counter that the makeup of the Senate was a compromise among sovereign states, while counties have always been subordinate to state control.

In a recent speech, U.S. Solicitor Gen. Archibald Cox hinted that the government may argue that one house of the legislature must provide representation directly based on population while the other house might allow for variations for geographical and other factors provided the departure from equal representation "is not too extreme."

UNION DUES of 3,560 employes of the Illinois State Dept. of Mental Health are transmitted to Council 34, State, County & Municipal Employes, under a new checkoff system authorized by the legislature. Left to right, at the presentation ceremony in the state capitol, are: George Olsen, secretary-treasurer of Council 34; Pres. William R. Russell; Intl. Rep. Joseph D. Gleason, and Michael J. Howlett, state auditor of public accounts.

T-H Injunction Halts Walkout at Republic

New York—A Taft-Hartley injunction has sent 8,000 Machinists back to their jobs at Republic Aviation Corp. after a presidential board of inquiry reported there "appears to be no immediate possibility of the parties settling this dispute."

U.S. Federal Judge Walter Bruchhausen issued an injunction under the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act halting the strike for an 80-day cooling-off period. The permanent injunction followed by a few days the preliminary order sending the workers back into the plant.

IAM Lodge 1987 struck the aircraft firm at Farmingdale, N.Y., on April 2 after the company had failed to come up with "adequate severance pay and supplemental unemployment benefit cushions despite an announced threat of mass layoffs."

The company, which makes F-105 jet fighter bombers, is the only producer of the plane, production of which has been tentatively scheduled for a tapering off in favor of other fighters.

IAM Vice Pres. Matthew DeMore of New York City declared the Republic situation provided another example of the unfairness of the Taft-Hartley law. He said it "gives a great advantage to management in a dispute involving a firm like Republic which produces defense equipment for the government. Republic Aviation knew that when the Air Force began to need the F-105 fighters, it could count on the Taft-Hartley Act."

Wage increases have played little part in the dispute, said DeMore, with the union proposing that workers receive an average of the pay raises negotiated later at four other aviation plants. Before the contract expired the members rejected the company's last offer by a 9 to 1 margin and followed by voting 16 to 1 in favor of a strike.

In moving for a Taft-Hartley injunction, Pres. Kennedy told the Justice Dept. that a court order was necessary to "remove a peril to the national safety" and that the strike must be terminated.

The board of inquiry headed by Lloyd K. Garrison, New York industrial relations expert, said the parties "have not been derelict in their willingness to meet and confer."

"Nevertheless, after 44 meetings, and after all the efforts at settlement which have been made by the government, an impasse remains."

Justin Ostro, president of Lodge 1987, said Republic workers would abide by the temporary injunction reluctantly and return to work.

Invocation of the injunction marked Kennedy's third use of T-H emergency powers. The previous cases involved East Coast and West Coast marine strikes.

Canadian New Democrats Win 19 Seats democratic CCF Party and liberal-minded groups, more than doubled its representation from eight to 19 seats.

(Continued from Page 1)

The Liberal Party, which had expected to recapture the government, fell far short of its expectations and Gallup poll predictions, but managed to climb from 51 to 96 seats. Returns from the sprawling Northwest Territories are not yet in and one seat will not be contested until July because of the death of a candidate before polling day.

Biggest surprise of the election was Social Credit upsurge in Quebec where the party took 26 of its 30 seats. Socreds had been described by the Quebec Federation of Labor as 'hysterical demagogues" who were "without scruples." The party, said the 235,000-member Quebec federation, was "a peril, not only to trade unionism but to democracy itself." The Socred government of British Columbia has passed the worst anti-labor laws of any Canadian province and the party has a fringe which leans towards Birchism and anti-Semitism.

Socreds Showed Strength

The Socred victory in Quebec was attributed to a general dissatisfaction with the old-line Liberals and Conservatives and the inability of the New Democrats to capitalize on this. Led by Real Caouette, a garage operator from Rouyn in northwest Quebec, the Socreds also moved into the vacuum left when the right-wing Union Nationale Party disintegrated following the death of Premier Maurice Duplessis.

At the provincial level, the Liberals swept away remnants of the Union Nationale machine but could not repeat the trick with the big federal Conservative representation elected in 1958.

Caouette, a demagogic orator, will undoubtedly dominate the 30-member Socred group with his 25 fellow French-speaking Quebec members, although national Socred Leader Robert Thompson is from Alberta.

The personal defeat of T. C. Douglas, former premier of Saskatchewan and national leader of the New Democratic Party, took the edge off the NDP success in its first federal election under its new banner.

Douglas, Canada's best orator, who drew record crowds from coast-to-coast in a tireless campaign, went down to defeat in Regina.

The Regina Leader-Post, Liberal daily, gave an indication of what probably happened at the polls in a pre-election editorial. It noted, in a strong hint to Liberals to vote Conservative in a move to keep Douglas out, that "the vote may not express itself on straight party lines. This, of course, is a matter for the electors to decide in terms of their desire to elect or defeat Mr. Douglas."

Ideals Still Stand

In a statement after conceding defeat, Douglas said that his personal failure to gain election did not mean that the ideas and ideals for which he stood had been defeated. He urged a new effort to complement political democracy with economic democracy.

The 19 NDP candidates elected from coast-to-coast all were returned from industrial areas. The predecessor CCF had had strong rural representation from the Prairies. NDP candidates elected included six trade unionists; two writers; four lawyers, two specializing in labor law; four school teachers; one businessman; one pharmacist; and one professor who directs an Atlantic area labor school.

Stanley Knowles, former CLC executive vice-president and Canada's top parliamentarian, won a seat in Winnipeg North Centre which he had lost in the Tory sweep of 1958.

Affiliated organizations of the Canadian Labor Congress played an active role in the campaign assisting with funds, personnel, services, etc., for what was probably the most significant political role in labor's history. Some 200,000 Canadian trade unionists are now NDP affiliates paying a per capita of 5 cents per month.

The Conservatives generally managed to hold their strength in the Atlantic provinces and the Prairies but lost seats to the NDP in British Columbia and Manitoba, to the Liberals in Ontario and to Socreds in Quebec. Four Conservative cabinet ministers and the speaker of the House of Commons were among those who went down to defeat.

Liberals Gained in Ontario

The Liberals had hoped for substantial gains among Quebec's 75 seats and Ontario's 85 seats, but only in Ontario did the party, under Lester B. Pearson, make significant strides. West of the Great Lakes the Liberals did not fare well and Newfoundland, traditionally Liberal, was the main bright spot in the East.

Almost complete returns showed Conservatives, 118 seats with 37.4 percent of the vote (against 204 seats and 53.7 percent in 1958); Liberals, 96 seats with 36.7 percent of the vote (against 51 seats and 33.7 percent); New Democratic Party, 19 seats and 13.9 percent of the vote (against eight seats and 9.3 percent); and Social Credit, 30 seats and 11.7 percent of the vote (against 3.2 percent and no seats).

The handful of Communist and other candidates who ran all lost their $200 deposits.

Doloff, Tupper Win Maine Vote

Portland, Me.—Democrat Maynard C. Doloff will face Gov. John H. Reed in the November gubernatorial contest in Maine, winning his party's nomination by a thin margin over Richard J. Dubord.

Rep. Stanley R. Tupper (R) won the primary contest with Rep. Peter A. Garland (R) in the newly merged 1st Dist., which consists of the two separate districts each had previously represented. Tupper will face Democrat Thomas L. Maynard in the fall.

There were no contests in the 2d Dist., where Rep. Clifford G. McIntyre (R) will face William D. Hathaway (D) in November.

The Future Is Being Shaped

THE SHAPE OF THE 1962 ELECTIONS is taking place across the nation in state primaries and party conventions. Candidates are being selected by both parties, issues are being shaped and control of party machinery is being put to the test.

This is the critical period for liberal forces. The decisions being made now and in the primaries later this year will determine whether the voter will have a clear choice of programs and policies in November.

The labor movement has a vital stake in the 1962 congressional elections and the races for the governorships and the state legislatures. The lagging pace of economic recovery, the high and chronic rate of unemployment, so-called "right to-work" laws, adequate social welfare programs, the increasingly sharp impact of automation—all these will be issues in the November elections.

For many of the problems confronting the labor movement today are no longer soluble at the bargaining table alone. An editorial in Justice, the paper of the Ladies' Garment Workers, dealing with the union's recent convention, focuses on this problem:

"We have passed out of that phase of our history in which our best energies were used to fight primitive battles on the picket lines to lift ourselves a notch above the subsistence level of living. In those battles we fought bitterly and savagely to rip from the hands of a hostile industry and a hostile society another dollar for our pay envelopes, another hour of daylight out of the shop for ourselves.

"We lifted ourselves and dragged a reluctant society upward. Today, for the most part, we have won these elementary battles and unions have achieved prestige, status, power and responsibility. Now we can lift ourselves only by broad social and political pressures exerted within national concepts of welfare and security.

"In our industry and in other industries we still face serious organization problems. We must still deal with the runaway bargain hunter. We are hemmed in by restrictive labor laws. Increasingly, we feel the impact on our industry—the nation's most competitive—of other products peddled by high-pressure advertising and imports coming from low-wage countries."

* * *

THE PROBLEM OF POLITICAL ACTION for the trade union movement is to sharpen and expand for its members the relationship between the mounting problems faced in the plants and factories, the stores and offices and the legislative and political solutions. When this relationship is fully understood, the apathy and disinterestedness will disappear and the response will strengthen the liberal forces in the elections.

Health care for the aged through social security will be decided in Congress, not at the bargaining table. Permanent improvement in unemployment compensation laws will be decided in Congress and the state legislatures. How candidates stand on these and a score of other issues in the primaries and in the state party conventions are of overriding importance if the voter in November is to be given a significant choice.

But there can be no effective political action by the labor movement until the basic steps are taken: registration of all trade union members so that they can vote to back up their opinions and choices. An unregistered union member, a member who has not contributed to COPE, is allowing the political decisions that affect him to be made by someone else.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve *
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, June 23, 1962 No. 25

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'First Things First'

'Nothing to Fear':

Majority of New Nations in UN 'Going Our Way'—Stevenson

THE MAJORITY of new nations in the United Nations is "going our way" and the U.S. "has nothing to fear from these forces," Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson said in an article introducing the current issue of Intercom, published by the Foreign Policy Association.

"Even in the criticisms and the demands loosed upon our heads in the UN debates, we can hear the language of our own revolutionary forebears . . ." he continued. "This is the underlying fact behind the Soviets' efforts to subvert and devitalize the UN . . . The UN Charter is the creation and the expression of western democratic thought. We support our own most cherished concepts of the democratic community when we support the UN; the Communists must seek to distort the UN to serve their philosophy."

Stevenson points out that Communist propaganda does not find a favorable platform at the UN.

"It is more effective where it is unquestioned . . . where no one interrupts with difficult questions about means and costs," he said.

He added that the Russians' "excessive misuse of the UN forum is bringing into play the good old law of diminishing returns, to devalue the currency of accusation and imprecise promises."

Intercom's handbook on the U.S. in the UN includes consideration of the "complicated machinery of policy-making which must draw upon the skills and experience of dozens of government officers as well as committees in Congress."

It describes the role of the President, the State Dept., Congress and more than a dozen U.S. agencies in forming U.S. policy in the UN and points out how the checks and balances of our constitutional system work on that policy.

The 81-page handbook sets forth various ways in which UN activities are financed and defines the current dispute about the legality of assessments for special UN operations such as the Congo force. A chart gives a comparative scale of contributions of representative member nations in various parts of the world.

In a section dealing with U.S. government responsibilities as host country, the handbook describes the many problems facing the members of UN delegations and their families and how federal, state and city agencies as well as private groups are helping to meet these problems.

STEVENSON CALLED for careful attention to informed and scrupulous critics of the UN. To treat them as if they were against the UN is not only unfair to the critics, in his estimation, but also could deprive us of instructive insights.

It is also a mistake, he said, to think, because the UN is a useful international instrument that we need to abjure the use of the other instruments.

"The charter itself recognizes the priority of national defense and the need for regional and other international arrangements," he observed. "A world organization in which more than 100 nations seek to harmonize their actions need never fear technological unemployment no matter how many other regional or specialized groupings of nations may be formed, so long as those other groupings operate within the spacious framework of the objectives defined in the UN Charter."

Stevenson urged Americans to have faith "in the persuasive power of the free institutions under which we have built our pre-eminent prosperity and power, a faith in our capacity to flourish, and maintain our leadership, in any democratic community of nations."

Intercom is published seven times a year. The Foreign Policy Association is a non-profit, nonpartisan organization devoted to citizen education in world affairs. Besides the focus on some area or problem of wide national interest, each issue reports on what's new and who is doing what in world affairs.

Single copies of "Focus on the U.S. in the UN" are 75 cents. Subscription rates for seven issues are $5 a year, with a special $3 rate to teachers. Intercom is located at 345 East 46th Street, New York 17, N. Y.

Those British Always Get To the Heart of Things

London—The British weekly magazine, New Statesman, comes up with this statistical analysis:

If 70 million American workers paid an average of $1 a month for old-age health insurance, that would be $840 million a year.

Add the equal contribution of their employers and the total would be nearly $1.7 billion a year.

A lot of money—until you consider that Americans spend $3 billion a year on their dogs, cats and other household pets.

Morgan Says:

Lack of Community Planning Disenchanting a Lot of Voters

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

PUNDITS AND WORLDLY political types are forever railing at the public to broaden its views and think in global terms. Citizens are implored to regard a Pakistani's problem as his own and to take an active interest in the evolution of Peru. American horizons are and must be widening but pretty soon now there has got to be, if the ladies' undergarment people will pardon the phrase, more of two-way stretch in this process. That is to say, officials have got to broaden their own understanding of what the public is up against at home.

Morgan

The difficulty of establishing an identity with the natives of Nigeria and cultivating a participating sympathy with them in their problems is readily recognizable. What government on every echelon, from city hall to the U.S. Senate, seems to be ignoring—at its peril—is the growing frustration of the voters over not international but neighborhood crises, crises in which they are intimately involved but increasingly impotent to do anything about.

A prime target of their wrath is community planning or rather the lack of it, the arrogant combination of politicians and promoters exploiting the population explosion with cheap, ugly housing developments that will be the slums of tomorrow, with super-highway systems eating up the landscape with such gluttonous appetite that if we don't watch out, all that's left of the country will be its marrow, wound with asphalt.

The citizens of Los Angeles County, for example, are not oblivious of the cold war but they are much more acutely aware of the growing pains of this throbbing megalopolis and the migraine headaches they are suffering in the bargain.

ON A RECENT MORNING I sat with a professor of geology on his Pasadena patio watching bulldozers attack a wooded ridge across the arroyo. Like primeval monsters these powerful machines reared their yellow heads over the horizon, diesel smoke belching from their exhaust pipes, steel jaws open to devour another great mouthful of the hill, crushing the verdure in with it as an elephant consumes a bale of hay. Soon the naked trunks of power poles would replace the oak and eucalyptus on the ridge and the flat planes of new roofs would fan out along the rise like a spilled deck of cards. Pasadena has restrictive zoning laws but this development was out of reach just over the city line of Los Angeles, where zoning is a loosely interpreted business.

On the gentle, stylish slopes of Beverly Hills, a public-spirited young householder asked me to step out onto his patio. "How," he said, "how do you beat a freeway?" He gestured toward the northern horizon where, he explained, a syndicate of New York and California developers planned a saturation of dwellings for—it was reported—180,000 people, and was in the process of negotiating with politicians and construction combines a major access route which apparently would condemn a number of homes.

While a high fog hung over the western ocean, an old friend who lives on the Pacific Coast highway on the way to Santa Barbara revealed that the authorities were toying with two possibilities: a 10-lane turnpike through her front yard or a causeway over the sea viewed out of her bay window and edging the Pacific shore.

Now these people, I submit, are not crotchety fanatics ready to throw their warm bodies in the path of growth and progress. They realize there is a problem of finding living room for the bursting population. But they are outraged with the conviction that this problem is not being solved with any intelligent planning but is being made, potentially, worse by an alliance of promoters and politicians for profit and let the welfare of the community be damned.

They are not alone. Their fellow-sufferers are legion from coast to coast. They include aroused citizens of Fairfax County, Va., who are victims of a crude and ruthless deal whereby skyscraper apartments are proposed for the scenic banks of the Potomac River despite considerable editorial and incipient congressional opposition to the defacement of the beauty surrounding the nation's capital.

What to do? Some argue planned parenthood is a partial answer to the population bulge. Intelligent, coordinated, forward-looking community planning would help counter the hideous and uneconomic urban sprawl. Neither measure will come quickly. But without some real proof that officials recognize the problem and are honestly wrestling with it, they are going to have a lot more disenchanted voters on their hands who in their frustration may strike out at a lot of sound liberal reforms that otherwise they would support.

Washington Reports:

Income Tax Loophole Plugging Seen Yielding $1.2 Billion Yearly

ANNUAL TAXATION of income earned by U.S. companies overseas would bring in $200 million a year and withholding of taxes on dividends and interest income could assure the U.S. Treasury of as much as $1 billion in taxes now lost, Senators Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) and John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) estimated in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Cooper said it is evident from his mail that the proposed withholding of taxes on dividends and interest is not popular, but it is also apparent that many who write him do not understand the proposal.

"This isn't a new tax at all," he said. "Since 1913, taxes have been due and payable on both income from dividends and income from money in savings accounts.

"Is it right for those who have not paid their taxes (either from inadvertence or purposely) to continue to evade their taxes?

"Also, since the U.S. is losing $1 billion a year because of this non-payment of taxes, are all the rest of the taxpayers treated right if steps are not taken to collect this $1 billion?"

Gore explained that a tax is now deferred on profits earned abroad until those profits are brought back to the U.S.

"There are many ways," he said, "in which the companies take advantage—and citizens, too—of this tax deferral privilege.

"What I am trying to correct is what amounts to a tax subsidy for movement of factories, jobs and business abroad. I simply cannot understand why we should reward a concern for building a plant in France or Belgium or Germany, and penalize one built in the U.S. This simply doesn't make sense.

"There may have been a time, immediately after World War II, when Europe was war-torn and it was in our urgent interest to see that western Europe was rehabilitated. But the rate of growth in western Europe today is twice as great as the rate of growth in the U.S. They have no problem of unemployment there, while we have 4 million jobless."

COOPER POINTED OUT that most persons over 65 are worried about the withholding tax without cause.

"They must remember that every person over 65 has an exemption double that of others," he said. "The Treasury Dept. has figured that if a couple were over 65, and had an income of their full social security and interest or dividends income of $3,000, they would not be required to pay any tax and none of their interest or dividends would be withheld."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

(Willard Shelton, whose commentary on the Washington scene normally appears in this space, is on vacation.)

THERE WAS A TIME a man who earned $50 or $100 a week was handed $50 or $100 on payday and he would have been mighty shocked if there were anything less in his pay envelope.

But those days are long since past. Wage and salary workers have been accustomed to having their income taxes and social security taxes conveniently removed by the accounting office even before they get paid. This has become so universal that when the Labor Dept. publishes its monthly statistics on the earnings of factory production workers, the report is entitled: "Net Spendable Earnings."

That means, for example, that during the month of March 1962 the factory worker earned an average gross of $95.91 a week but took home considerably less. If he were a married man with three dependents, he took home only $85; if he were a single man, he took home only $77.34.

This has been going on for quite a long time now and when the end of the year comes, more than one worker has heaved a sigh of relief that his taxes have been paid up, even if he's had to stint himself and his family in the meanwhile.

Yet the idea that this same principle of withholding taxes at the source may be applied to dividends and interest payments has produced shocked horror in the business community. Why?

All businessmen will agree that of course people should pay the taxes that are due on their non-wage and salary earnings. But the bald fact remains that they don't.

* * *

NORMALLY YOU WOULD expect conservatives to cry out against the loss of such income to the Treasury. But that hasn't been the case. Business groups, banks, savings and loan associations have all rushed to spare the dividend and interest receiver.

The arguments are all hoary ones. Widows and orphans will suffer if their dividend and interest payments are subject to withholding taxes. What right does the government have to deprive the taxpayer of his money before it comes due? It will be an intolerable burden on banks and corporations to have to withhold taxes—all that paper work will swamp them.

There is not a single argument that cannot equally well be applied to withholding on wages and salaries.

Economic hardship? The Treasury's present income tax withholding tables on wages start at $13 a week, which is just about as low as you can get and still have to pay taxes at all. The government—if the employer turns the tax over as he should—gets the use of your money long before it is due. And the paperwork has settled down to a routine that has yet to kill anyone.

In addition, the Kennedy Administration, which is anxious to get that $1 billion a year in dodged taxes, has done everything it can to make sure that "widows and orphans" will not go hungry because of withholding. Elderly couples could receive as much as $3,200 in interest or dividends plus $2,180 in social security benefits "without paying a penny in income tax." All they would have to do would be to file "exemption certificates" with the source of their income.

* * *

SUCH A COUPLE would have to have savings or investment of about $80,000 a year which would scarcely put them in the "indigent" class. Children under 18 would not be affected, so that rules out the "orphans."

Actually, conservative concern for the "little" investor is largely hypocrisy. Only about one in 20 American families with incomes under $5,000 a year owns stock.

What it boils down to is that the richer the family, the more stock it owns and the more likely it is to be caught in the net that the Kennedy Administration would like to spread for the $1 billion tax money that it ought to be collecting and isn't.

Finally, there is the question of public morality. By what possible logic can a system of withholding be justly applied to wages beginning at $13 a week and yet not be applied to dividends and interest? (PAI)

AVERAGE TAXPAYERS will benefit by more than $1 billion if overseas tax havens are ended and withholding begins on interest and dividends, according to Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), left, who was interviewed on overseas tax deferment, and Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.), who talked about the proposed withholding, on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Consumer Protection Bills Still Bogged Down in Congress

By Sidney Margolius

CONSUMERS SO FAR have gotten none of the protection sought by several congressmen and recommended by Pres. Kennedy in his consumer message to Congress last March.

The box score so far shows no runs for the consumers, with Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) still on second base with his bill to reduce drug prices, Sen. Paul Douglas' (D-Ill.) truth-in-lending plan blocked on first and Sen. Philip Hart (D-Mich.) still at bat while the grandstand watches to see what he actually does about deceptive packaging.

Nor has the Council of Economic Advisers yet set up the consumer advisory committee which the President announced last March.

Here is what's happening about the price of medicines and truth-in-lending, and how your pocketbook is affected:

THE DRUG BILL: The Kefauver-Celler bill to reduce prices you pay for drugs and increase safety controls is foundering in the Senate but getting unexpected support in the House.

In the Senate Judiciary Committee, the team of Senators McClellan, Eastman and Ervin has succeeded in eliminating the provision to end the patent monopoly on drugs. This provision would have required manufacturers after three years to license other firms to produce patented drugs. Now the major drug manufacturers usually license only each other and they all charge the same price.

The reason behind the drug bill's difficulties is that Congress got a flood of letters protesting drug prices when the initial public hearings were held. But now that the needed legislation is in the home stretch, there is little mail from the public, while the drug industry is generating a considerable protest against the bill.

Unions and consumer co-ops are strongly backing the section limiting patent monopoly. The AFL-CIO told the recent House hearing that while the other provisions of the bill are helpful, the patent reform is essential if drug prices are to be reduced.

But the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare has helped to undercut the Kefauver-Celler bill by supporting another bill of its own which has no provisions to end the drug patent monopoly.

Here is just one example of how limiting the patent monopoly would reduce drug prices. Recently a large wholesaler, McKesson & Robbins, started manufacturing prescription drugs. Since the patent on prednisone, an arthritis medicine, is tied up in a legal argument, there is yet no patent monopoly on it. McKesson's basic cost for manufacturing prednisone—not including distribution, overhead, or research—has turned out to be less than a penny a pill, Kefauver found. McKesson charges retail pharmacists 2.1 cents a pill, and the public can buy it for 3 cents. In contrast, the major manufacturers charge druggists 17 cents a pill for prednisone, and the public pays 28 cents.

The entry of McKesson into drug manufacturing is one of the greatest helps the public has gotten with the drug-price problem. McKesson, for example, also now sells reserpine, used as a tranquilizer and for hypertension, for $2.75 per 1,000 pills to the druggist. The production cost is only 63 cents. Ciba sells its patented trade-name version, Serpasil, to druggists for $39.50 per 1,000 while the public pays $65.83.

The need for additional testing and safety controls, less controversial than the patent provision, is emphasized by the recent case of the cholesterol-reducing drug triparanol. The American Heart Association reported that the manufacturer, the William S. Merrell Co., withdrew it because of harmful side effects, including loss of hair, cataracts and skin troubles. The drug was introduced in 1959, had been approved by the U.S. Food & Drug Administration, and has been taken by some 400,000 Americans.

But the drug-buying public has taken another licking in the announcement that Spiegel's, a Chicago mail-order house, has discontinued its cut-rate drug plan. What happened was that local pharmacists got the Illinois Dept. of Registration & Education to change its rules so that it could withdraw the license of any registered pharmacist who handles prescriptions by mail.

TRUTH-IN-LENDING: Retailers and lenders, except for credit unions, have fought this bill so hard that Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) recently reassured the National Retail Furniture Association that it probably will not be enacted. But he advised the retailers to "keep a watchful eye on it," since the Administration has endorsed it. Monroney is himself a former furniture merchant, reports Home Furnishings Daily.

The Douglas truth-in-lending bill would require merchants and lenders to tell the true annual interest rate they charge on installment purchases and loans, instead of "1.5 percent a month" (really 18 percent a year) or "$6 per $100," (really about 12 percent per annum).

The two Bennett brothers have been especially active in blocking this bill. Sen. Wallace Bennett (R-Utah) has been the major spokesman against the bill. His brother, Harold Bennett, is a department store president (the big Zion store in Salt Lake City) and also is executive committee chairman of National Retail Merchants Association, a leading battler against it.

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

MOOSE FUR, NO LESS, is what gives individually to this confection, which was one of several on display during the Hat Workers' convention in New York. Trying it on for size is Jenny Wiseman of Local 50, Montreal, with the help of Frances Moran, manager and secretary of Local 92, New York.

UM Survey Shows:

Time Payment Plans Used Conservatively

ALMOST ONE-HALF of American spending units continue to make use of installment credit—and in a generally conservative manner, according to the University of Michigan Survey Research Center.

There are no indications that the burden of installment debt has become greater over the past five years, center researchers report in "1961 Survey of Consumer Finances."

Based on interviews with families in their homes, the book represents a comprehensive analysis of the current financial position, the recent transactions and attitudes of American families. It presents extensive data on the distribution of income and employment, purchases of automobiles and other durable goods, installment debt, medical expenses and income history, as well as a report on consumer attitudes and their influences on demand.

The most significant change shown by data on installment debt consists of an increase in the incidence of debt among spending units with incomes over $10,000. Early in 1961, 48 percent of spending units in this income group owed installment debt, compared to 38 percent early in 1959.

"In previous years it has been repeatedly observed that installment buying is a middle-income phenomenon," SRC economists observe. "It was most frequent a few years ago among spending units with incomes between $3,000 and $7,500 a year, and much less frequent among units with lower and higher incomes.

"The lesser participation of low-income people in installment buying persisted from 1959 to 1961, and was perhaps even more evident than in earlier years. But survey data no longer indicate a substantially lower level of installment buying in the top income group."

THE CHANGE MAY be explained partially, the economists add, by the fact that "many families have advanced into the higher income group in the last few years, and it appears that they have carried over their previous habit of using installment credit into their new income position. As a result of this process, some improvement in the ability of the average debtor to carry his debt burden is probable."

Age appears to be an important factor. Installment debt is most frequent among people 25 to 34 years of age, and this group has the highest average debt as well (median amount $680, or $100 more than the median for the 35-44 bracket, the next highest group).

Education appears to be a less important factor, although installment debt is not as frequent among people with college degrees and those who have only a grade school education as it is among other educational groups.

Installment debt is slightly more frequent among Negroes than among whites, but large debt is more frequent among whites.

It also is more frequent, and in larger amounts, among people with relatively stable employment—indicating that people buy on the installment plan when they feel they have a good chance to repay.

Only 10 percent of spending units had installment debts representing 20 percent or more of their annual income. Families inclined to make new purchases tend not to be those with no installment debt, but those with low debt levels relative to income.

The SRC researchers conclude that "during the last five years the American people have used installment credit in a fairly conservative manner."

From Soup to Nonsense:

The Urge Not to Contradict Is Sometimes Overwhelming

By Jane Goodsell

STATEMENTS you'd better contradict no matter how heartily you agree with them:

"We've had a lovely time, but I'm afraid we've stayed much too long."

"I feel terrible about Johnny spilling ice cream on your new dress. You must send us the cleaning bill for it."

"I'm afraid I'm not very good at telling jokes."

"You must be furious at me for being so late."

"It was so nice of you to put me up, and give me your bed. It must have been awfully uncomfortable for you, sleeping on the davenport."

"I ought to take off at least five pounds."

"Goodness, I'm not company! Do let me help you with the dishes."

"I'll bet you're mad at me for not returning your ladder right away as I promised."

"I'm afraid I'm not much of a cook."

"That swan dive of mine wasn't much good, was it?"

"I'm getting too old to wear a two-piece bathing suit."

"I hope you'll excuse the way the house looks. It's an awful mess."

"I'm afraid we've spoiled our children."

"I know I'm not handsome, but. . . ."

"I'm afraid my telephone call woke you up."

"That's the first time in my life that I sank a 30-foot putt. But of course it was just luck."

Labor-Backed Proviso Under Fire:

Republicans Drive to Weaken Kennedy Foreign Trade Bill

House Republicans, with some southern Democratic support, are seeking to scuttle Pres. Kennedy's trade expansion bill by knocking out a key provision for government aid to workers and companies hurt by lowering of tariff barriers.

As the House prepared to take up the bill, Rep. John W. Byrnes (R-Wis.), chairman of the GOP Policy Committee, and Rep. A. Sydney Herlong, Jr. (D-Fla.), announced co-sponsorship of a substitute bill which would give Kennedy the authority he is seeking to negotiate sweeping reciprocal cuts in tariffs, but would eliminate adjustment benefits which the AFL-CIO has said are "inseparable" from the rest of the bill.

The section of the bill under attack from the conservative coalition would entitle a displaced worker in an industry hurt by imports to a maximum of 65 percent of the average manufacturing wage for up to 52 weeks of unemployment, plus an additional 13 weeks for persons over 60, and up to a total of 78 weeks for persons in approved retraining programs. It also provides relocation allowances for heads of families and supplementary payments for workers put on part-time.

The Byrnes-Herlong proposal would mean that workers in import-hurt industries would be limited to regular state unemployment benefits and to retraining available under the Manpower Development & Training Act. It would also eliminate tax relief, technical assistance and loans for adversely affected business firms.

In other congressional developments:

- The House postponed a scheduled debate and vote on an Administration and labor-backed bill to assure equal pay for women workers.

The decision to put off action was made after opponents introduced a number of amendments to modify key provisions of the bill.

- Conservation forces won a significant victory when the House voted to authorize $170 million to divert water from the Fryingpan River in western Colorado across the Continental Divide to the Arkansas River basin in eastern Colorado, which is deficient in water and power resources. The bill, urged by Kennedy in his conservation message, had been before the House for nine years and was passed three times by the Senate during that period.
- Senate leaders agreed to put aside temporarily a controversial bill which would establish a private company to own and operate a commercial communications satellite system and to speed action on tax extension and other revenue measures which must pass by June 30, the end of the fiscal year.

Meanwhile congressional leaders sought a solution to a deadlock over "prerogatives" between the House and Senate Appropriations committees. As the result of a dispute over where conference committees should meet and whether the chairman of the House should get a chance to serve as chairman of the joint committee, bills which have passed both houses in differing form have not been acted on.

Unless the deadlock is broken by the end of the fiscal year, many government agencies will be without money to operate and employes will face payless paydays.

- A House Banking & Currency subcommittee approved legislation to provide $500 million in grants over the next three years to help metropolitan areas meet mass transportation problems. The Administration bill had bipartisan support in the subcommittee.
- As the AFL-CIO News went to press, a showdown vote was approaching on the Administration's farm bill, with Republicans in almost solid opposition and Democrats striving to hold party ranks firm to pass the measure.
- House-Senate conferees began a series of meetings on a college aid bill with knotty problems still to be resolved, including a Senate provision for scholarships—which the House conferees are committed to oppose—and a House provision for grants to both public and private colleges, which some critics have charged would provide unconstitutional aid to church-supported institutions.
- Government union leaders pressed for pay raises for federal employes above the level recommended by the Administration in hearings before the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee.
- The House-passed tax revision bill has run into stiff opposition in the Senate Finance Committee, which put off further hearings to take up other legislation.

WITH A HAT FOR BACKGROUND, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler (right) receives a guest badge at the Hatters' convention in New York from Pres. Alex Rose. Schnitzler told the delegates that government and business must start an immediate campaign to create new jobs or face demands for a shorter workweek.

Ballots Mailed In Post Office Union Election

The biggest union representation election ever held got under way June 16 as 495,000 postal workers were sent mail ballots listing the unions which seek to bargain for them at the local, regional and national levels.

Soon after July 1—the deadline for return of the ballots—tabulation will begin at the Post Office Dept.'s 15 regional headquarters throughout the United States.

Ten unions, including six AFL-CIO affiliates, are campaigning to represent employes in one or more of the seven bargaining units which have been set up. In addition to the two big groups—postal clerks and city letter carriers—separate bargaining units have been established for rural letter carriers, mail handlers, custodial and maintenance employes, special delivery messengers, and motor vehicle employes.

Although each union on the ballot has specified the group or groups it seeks to represent, employes in any bargaining unit may vote for any of the 10 unions listed, write in an organization not on the ballot, or vote against union representation.

If at least 60 percent of the eligible employes vote, a union winning a majority of votes cast in a bargaining unit will be entitled to exclusive recognition under the presidential executive order on employe-management relations in the federal civil service.

AFL-CIO unions on the ballot are the Postal Clerks, Letter Carriers, Mail Handlers, Special Delivery Messengers, Motor Vehicles Employes, and Government Employes.

Unaffiliated groups seeking bargaining rights are the Rural Letter Carriers, Maintenance Employes, National Postal Union and National Alliance of Postal Employes.

AFM Convention Acts To Aid Band Promotion

Pittsburgh—The Musicians wound up the best-attended convention in the union's 65-year history here by re-electing all officers for new one-year terms and instructing them to add the promotion of bands to the AFM agenda.

The convention's 1,235 delegates cleared a crowded legislative calendar by approving a recommendation for promotion of concert and marching bands, and by voting for continuance of Pres. Herman Kenin's campaign for a Federal Council of the Arts, Sec. Stanley Ballard's promotion of the annual Congress of Strings, and Treas. George V. Clancy's annual project, the Best Band contests.

The parley also adopted reports favoring continuance of voluntary non-partisan political action, and praised Ballard for his leadership in establishing the Western Hemisphere Secretariat of Entertainment Unions.

Returned to office without contest were Kenin, Ballard, Clancy, Vice Pres. William Harris and Board Members Lee Repp, Cleveland; Al Manuti, New York City; E. E. Stokes, Houston; Charles H. Kennedy, San Francisco, and Walter M. Murdoch, Toronto.

The convention sent a message of condolence to the mayor and people of Atlanta on the death of many music and arts leaders in a plane crash at Orly Airfield, France.

The assembly in addition:

- Instructed officers to seek copyright revisions to protect performers' rights.
- Voted to seek a working agreement with college band officials and to include such agreements in the AFM Code of Ethics now covering union relationship with secondary schools.
- Changed bylaws to give locals the right to strike without recourse to the international union.
- Recommended that members decline to record music when it is to be combined with "live" performances, and voted to ban the use of pre-recorded music in connection with live instrumental performances except under conditions imposed by the AFM or its locals.
- Voted to lift the limit on commissions allowed licensed personal representatives of musical artists, heretofore 5 percent.

Metropolitan Life Pact Approved

New York—Members of the Insurance Workers here voted to end a two-week strike against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and to accept a two-year contract which IWIU locals in three other states had previously ratified.

The union said it will renew its fight in the New York legislature for a law which would prevent an insurance company from cancelling policies because of failure to pay premiums during a strike.

Lack of such protection during the Metropolitan dispute, the union said, enabled the company to threaten to lapse policies and compel policyholders to cross the striking agents' picket lines or face the loss of their insurance protection.

Labor Urged to Tell Story of U. S. Abroad

New York—In his first speech to a union audience since becoming a Cabinet member, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy urged American labor unions to increase their efforts to spread democracy's story abroad. He spoke at the 11th convention of the Hat Workers here.

"There are misunderstandings and misinformation about the United States in many areas of the world," Kennedy said. "And this means we haven't done the job. It doesn't mean that just the government hasn't done the job or that we as American citizens haven't done our part. It means that there is still a great deal to be done and this is a particular responsibility as far as labor unions are concerned.

"The federal government alone cannot do the job; it must be done by people like yourselves."

He urged the trade union movement to bring labor leaders from other countries to the United States and to send representatives of American unions abroad to exchange ideas.

"Tell the world about our labor unions," he said, "tell what is being done, what efforts have been made and what progress has been made over the past 30 years. This can be a major step forward."

Kennedy spoke the day after Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg presented to the convention the Kennedy Administration's labor and business philosophy.

"We are not anti-business and it is nonsense to believe that a President of the United States, committed to our institutions, can be," he said. "We are not anti-labor. We want that very clear because we do not believe that a progressive administration can or should be anti-labor. We believe that what made our country great is the progress that has been made by both the business and the labor communities and we do not see how one can progress without progress on the part of the other."

Goldberg warned that the danger facing the nation is not that the Administration is anti-labor or anti-business, but that "progressive objectives are beclouded by outmoded attitudes and take a back seat to vested and petty interests."

The 200 delegates, representing 35,000 workers, adopted a resolution calling on Congress to establish a national 35-hour work week, although the union's present arrangement of 35 hours for women and 40 hours for men would be maintained at the direction of the union's executive board.

The delegates also passed resolutions affirming support of the Kennedy Administration and calling for prompt action on aid to education, the Anderson-King bill and civil rights.

Pres. Alex Rose was elected for the third straight time to a three-year term and all members of the executive board were re-elected.

Top Officers Re-elected by Leather Union

New York—The Leather Workers concluded their biennial convention here by adopting a series of resolutions supporting AFL-CIO policy set at the 1961 convention.

In addition, the delegates voted unanimous support for a proposal by Sen. Edmund Muskie (D-Me.) to restrict imports of commodities produced at substantially lower labor costs than American-made goods. All LWIU locals are embarked on a letter-writing campaign in support of the Muskie proposal according to Pres. Richard B. O'Keefe.

O'Keefe, Vice Pres. Richard K. Stapleton and Sec.-Treas. Joseph A. Duffy were reelected by acclamation to their top posts. By secret ballot, the delegates elected 15 international executive board members, 11 of whom were incumbents.

Speakers included Richard T. Leonard, administrative assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City Central Labor Council; Rev. Francis J. McDonnell, archdiocesan director of the Catholic Labor Guild of Massachusetts; Benjamin Naumoff, New York regional director of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, and Paul Ornburn, AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

THE SECRETARY-TREASURER, J. Howard Hicks, had to do all the work what with two presidents present at the Office Workers convention in Kansas City. He's pinning a convention badge on former Pres. Harry S. Truman, as OEIU Pres. Howard Coughlin looks on.

OEIU Delegates Hail Truman at Convention

Kansas City—Former Pres. Harry S. Truman, peppery as ever, was the special guest of the Office Employes convention and as he entered the hall received a tremendous ovation climaxed by a roar from one of the delegates: "Give 'em hell, Harry."

Truman grinned and when he spoke, he said:

"This 'Give 'em Hell, Harry' started during the 1948 campaign. But I never gave anybody hell. I just told the truth about them and they said it was 'hell'."

He said he should have belonged to "your white collar organization and then I might have been able to get a salary increase when I was running a little job at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave."

"You are doing something that ought to be done," said Truman, "because the people in your union need organization. Nobody until you were organized was looking after the boys and girls in the offices who do the work for which the high-hats get paid."

Asked later what he thought about the shorter workweek proposals of organized labor, Truman said work helped keep people out of "devilment." He added, however, that "of course, the reason for this (the shorter workweek campaign) is to provide more jobs—and I hope it does."

Truman labeled the "peaceful coexistence" slogan of the Soviet Union "nothing but a bunch of hooey—all the Communists want us to do is to disarm unilaterally."

Soviet pressure against West Berlin, he said, "shouldn't worry us because the Soviets got their ears knocked down once and they'll get them knocked down again."

During his presidency, Truman ordered an airlift in 1948 to break the Soviet land blockade of West Berlin.

Howard Coughlin was re-elected president of the union for a fifth term.

Also re-elected were Sec.-Treas. J. Howard Hicks and Vice Presidents J. O. Bloodworth, Tampa; J. E. Corum, Seattle; John Kinnick, Oakland; Donald Hilliker, Minneapolis; Helen Wise, Ft. Wayne; George Firth, Pittsburgh; W. A. Lowe, Vancouver, B. C.; Frank Morton, Ft. Worth; Edward Springman, Philadelphia; and Leo Wallace, Boston.

Newly elected as vice presidents were W. J. Mullin, Hawkesbury, Ont.; John Cahill, Washington, D. C.; and Don Camp, Los Angeles.

Board Offers Telegraphers New Program

A Presidential Emergency Board has proposed what it termed "a comprehensive program" of employe protection as a basis for settling a seven-year-old dispute between the Railroad Telegraphers and the Chicago & North Western Railway.

The union, which had won a Supreme Court decision upholding its contention that the railroad was obligated to bargain on the abolishment of jobs, had sought a rule under which no jobs would be eliminated except by agreement between management and the union.

While denying this request, the three-member board recommended that the parties negotiate protective conditions including:

- Ample advance notice of the railroad's intent to abolish positions to permit full consultation between the parties.
- Special benefits and payments for up to five years for employes whose jobs are terminated under the same formula—known as the Washington Job Protection Agreement—which is applied when jobs are lost as a result of a merger. These include separation allowances, payment of moving expenses and protection of real estate losses resulting from transfers.
- A program of retraining to prepare employes for other jobs.

Both parties are required to negotiate for at least 30 days after the emergency board's report before the union is free to strike.

Strike Idleness Continues Low

Strike idleness in April accounted for .13 percent of total estimated working time, compared with .11 percent in April 1961 and .21 percent in April 1960, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

Approximately 320 stoppages involving 125,000 workers began in April and 140 stoppages continued from March. For the first four months of the year, strike idleness was about 50 percent higher than in the corresponding 1961 period but remained relatively low by postwar standards, the BLS said.

Exhaustions Pile Up:

Delay on Extended Jobless Aid Driving Idle to Charity, Dole

Hundreds of thousands of long-jobless workers have been forced to turn to public welfare and private charity while waiting for Congress to act on extension of the federal temporary unemployment compensation program for another year.

During the 12 months the program was in full operation, it provided up to 13 weeks of additional benefits for more than 2.74 million persons who had exhausted their regular state unemployment compensation—and pumped $740 million of additional purchasing power into the economy.

Except for persons already receiving extended benefits before the cutoff date, the program came to an abrupt end on Apr. 1. An Administration bill to continue it another year is backed up on the crowded agenda of the House Ways and Means Committee. Meanwhile, in the words of Pres. Kennedy, "every week, thousands of people . . . must go on public assistance" because they have exhausted their state unemployment compensation.

This, the President told his June 7 news conference, "should be a matter of great concern to all of us." He urged members of Congress to extend the program "before they go home."

During April, 162,000 persons went off the state compensation rolls—still unemployed. For May, the figure was 150,900.

Statistics on exhaustions for the first two months after expiration of the program gave every sign of bearing out a warning by the AFL-CIO Council last February that unless new legislation were enacted, more than 500,000 jobless workers "will be left stranded with neither help nor jobs" within four months.

The council then called for action by Congress to avert "disaster" for long-jobless workers in the spring.

Labor and the Administration had pressed for permanent improvements in unemployment compensation programs as provided in the McCarthy-King bill. When it became apparent that the House Ways & Means Committee—which has dealt with such matters as tax legislation, trade expansion and social security health care—would not get around to a permanent unemployment compensation bill this year, Kennedy in April urged that, as a minimum, the expiring emergency program be continued another year.

Growing concern at the fate of jobless workers after they exhaust state benefits was expressed at the recent session of the general board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

The board, meeting in New York, heard an appeal by Rev. Charles C. Webber, AFL-CIO representative for religious relations, for letters to members of Congress urging that the federal program be continued.

New State Constitution Opposed in Michigan

Battle Creek—Michigan labor has called for rejection of a proposed new state constitution which will be submitted to the voters in November. Nine hundred delegates to the State AFL-CIO convention here voted unanimously to oppose the measure after hearing a two-and-a-half hour debate between Republican supporters and Democratic opponents of the proposed constitution.

The AFL-CIO resolution blasted the Republican-controlled constitutional convention for failure to reapportion the legislature on the basis of population.

Delegates also criticized "Con Con"—the headline shorthand used by Michigan newspapers for the constitutional convention—for refusing to allow non-controversial portions of the proposed constitution to be submitted separately to the voters.

Among 14 major drawbacks cited in the proposed constitution, the resolution said, are weakening of the civil service merit system, a revenue structure which would mean "higher taxes for average income groups and lower taxes for the rich," and a requirement for cutting back state services when revenues fall below expectations.

In other action, the convention:

- Re-elected by acclamation Pres. August Scholle, Executive Vice Pres. William C. Marshall and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins. All three were voted 3 percent salary increases effective July 15, and an additional 3 percent a year later.
- Endorsed for re-election Gov. John B. Swainson and Lt. Gov. T. John Lesinski, and backed Neil Staebler, the state's Democratic national committeeman, for a new congressman-at-large seat.
- Urged affiliates to step up registration drives after hearing a report by Roy Reuther, director of the AFL-CIO registration campaign.
- Adopted a legislative program calling for improvements in unemployment compensation, a $1.25 state minimum wage, enactment of health care for the aged through social security, and the "total elimination of segregation."

Delegates gave a "welcome home" ovation to former Gov. G. Mennen Williams, now assistant secretary of state for African affairs. Other major speakers included Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, Gov. Swainson, and Stanton Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and city central bodies.

Upholsterers Expand Organizing Program

Cleveland—An expanded drive to organize non-union workers in the South's growing furniture industry was given a firm financial base by the Upholsterers' 34th convention here as delegates approved a 10-cent increase in monthly per capita payments.

The convention also authorized local unions to tap their defense funds for organizing purposes. It raised minimum local dues to $3.50 in the United States and $3 in Canada, up 50 cents a month.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler lauded the 60,000-member union—currently celebrating its 80th anniversary—for its long history of trade union democracy.

Schnitzler contrasted the record of the UIU and of labor generally with that of the banking business, in which, he said, there were 1,771 embezzlements in 1960 alone, 8.6 percent of them committed by bank presidents.

Earlier the convention had elected UIU Pres. Sal B. Hoffman and First Vice Pres. Alfred R. Rota to their ninth consecutive terms.

In major policy resolutions, the delegates:

- Urged an increase in the federal minimum wage to $1.50 an hour in 1964. The rate, now $1.15, is scheduled to go to $1.25 in 1963.
- Termed equal voting rights for Negroes in the South a major national objective.
- Called for legislation to set federal minimum standards for state unemployment compensation.
- Supported the bill sponsored by Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) to require lenders to state true interest rates as a protection for consumers.
- Urged other unions and management to join the UIU in sponsoring community educational programs on the nature of communism.

The AFL-CIO News in its issue of June 16 omitted the name of Martin L. Garber who was re-elected to a four-year term as vice president representing a casket workers group. The convention's action authorizing a pension of 75 percent of salary for Hoffman when he retires was limited to the president and did not include First Vice Pres. Alfred R. Rota, as reported in the June 16 issue.

ORGANIZED LABOR in New York City is selling this Algerian Solidarity Stamp, at the behest of the AFL-CIO, to assist the General Union of Algerian Workers in the finale of Algeria's fight for economic and political freedom.

For Remainder of '62:

Scheduled List of Labor Conventions

Herewith is a list of conventions scheduled for the remainder of 1962 for AFL-CIO national and international affiliates and by state central bodies. Changes and additions will be reported:

Date	Organization	Place
July 2-6	Bookbinders	Seattle, Wash.
July 9-12	Washington	Bellingham, Wash.
July 9-17	Maintenance of Way Employes	Cincinnati, O.
July 9-13	Newspaper Guild	Buffalo, N. Y.
July 10	Masters, Mates & Pilots	Cleveland, O.
July 16	Potters	San Francisco, Calif.
July 16	Stove Mounters	St. Louis, Mo.
July 22-Aug. 4	Glass & Ceramic Workers	Miami Beach, Fla.
July 23	Yardmasters	Chicago, Ill.
July 27-29	Nevada	Las Vegas, Nev.
July 30-Aug. 3	Technical Engineers	New York, N. Y.
Aug. 4-10	Typographical Union	Cincinnati, O.
Aug. 6-8	Utah	Orem, Utah
Aug. 6-8	Virginia	Norfolk, Va.
Aug. 12-22	American Bakery & Confectionery Workers	Washington, D. C.
Aug. 13	United Garment Workers	Evansville, Ind.
Aug. 13-17	Post Office Motor Vehicle Employes	Chicago, Ill.
Aug. 20	California	Long Beach, Calif.
Aug. 20	Fire Fighters	San Antonio, Tex.
Aug. 20-23	Special Delivery Messengers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Aug. 20-24	Teachers	Detroit, Mich.
Aug. 20-25	Photo Engravers	Chicago, Ill.
Aug. 20-25	Postal Clerks	Portland, Ore.
Aug. 27-31	Oregon	Salem, Ore.
Sept. 2-8	Letter Carriers	Denver, Colo.
Sept. 3-7	British Trades Union Congress	Blackpool, England
Sept. 3-7	Government Employes	Seattle, Wash.
Sept. 4	Asbestos Workers	Atlantic City, N. J.
Sept. 5-7	Connecticut	Hartford, Conn.
Sept. 10	Pulp-Sulphite Workers	Detroit, Mich.
Sept. 10-12	New York	New York, N. Y.
Sept. 10-14	Bricklayers	Washington, D. C.
Sept. 10-14	Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers	Montreal, Canada
Sept. 10-14	Stereotypers	San Antonio, Tex.
Sept. 11-13	Iowa	Sioux City, Ia.
Sept. 17	Steelworkers	Miami, Fla.
Sept. 17-20	Alaska	Juneau, Alaska
Sept. 17-22	Carpenters	Washington, D. C.
Sept. 17-21	Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers	Cleveland, O.
Sept. 17-19	Minnesota	Rochester, Minn.
Sept. 17-21	Rubber Workers	Long Beach, Calif.
Sept. 27	Missouri	St. Louis, Mo.
Sept. (Date not set)	Sleeping Car Porters	Montreal, Canada
Oct. 1	Broadcast Employes	Chicago, Ill.
Oct. 1-3	Nebraska	Scottsbluff, Neb.
Oct. 1-4	Wisconsin	Milwaukee, Wis.
Oct. 3-5	Indiana	Indianapolis, Ind.
Oct. 5-6	Delaware	Wilmington, Del.
Oct. 8-19	Illinois	Springfield, Ill.
Oct. 10-12	Railway Patrolmen	Boston, Mass.
Oct. 12-13	Railway Supervisors	Chicago, Ill.
Oct. 15	Cement Workers	St. Louis, Mo.
Oct. 15	Chemical Workers	Las Vegas, Nev.
Oct. 15-19	Shipbuilders	Miami Beach, Fla.
Oct. 16-18	Airline Dispatchers	Las Vegas, Nev.
Oct. 24-26	Kentucky	Louisville, Ky.
Oct. (Date not set)	Massachusetts	Boston, Mass.
Oct. (Date not set)	New Mexico	Albuquerque, N. M.
Oct. (Date not set)	Sheet Metal Workers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Nov. (Date not set)	Arkansas	Little Rock, Ark.
Nov. (Date not set)	Rhode Island	Providence, R. I.

A "NEW TYPE OF LABOR LEADER" is needed if labor is to be a strong and equal partner with employers and governments, Serafino Romualdi declared at opening of American Institute for Free Labor Development in Washington, D. C. Forty-two union leaders from Latin America and Caribbean area heard Romualdi, institute's executive director and AFL-CIO inter-American representative, appeal for dedicated leaders equipped with technical knowledge and operating in a framework of representative democracy.

New Type of Labor Leader Needed For Latin America, Romualdi Says

The American Institute for Free Labor Development has launched its first intensive course for training a "new type of labor leader" for Latin America and the Caribbean area.

This "new type," said Serafino Romualdi, the institute's executive director, in welcoming 45 young union leaders to the course, must have "deep within himself a burning desire" to serve his fellow workers and his own country and he also must acquire a great deal of technical knowledge.

The new concept of organized labor, he added, requires that "labor must be recognized . . . labor must be respected" if it is to meet on equal terms with employers and governments.

And only a strong and independent labor movement, Romualdi added, can work as a partner in achieving "the economic development which will make possible higher standards of living through greater purchasing power."

He said this development in turn "requires an atmosphere of freedom and a political stability that can only be obtained through the existence of representative democracy."

The first group of students, half Spanish-speaking and half English-speaking, will receive three months of intensive training in the techniques of union organization and administration. They will then return to their home countries to train fellow trade unionists during nine-month internships on diverse social projects under the Alliance for Progress.

Regional Centers Coming

The institute plans to train 100 to 120 young leaders each year at the Washington center. It also is establishing regional or national training centers in Latin nations to provide short-term, part-time courses for local leaders and advanced courses for institute graduates. The centers in addition will be used as labor temples or central union headquarters.

The institute grew out of $20,000 in "seed money" which the AFL-CIO Executive Council appropriated in mid-1960. The idea won early praise from Pres. Kennedy, Pres. Romulo Betancourt of Venezuela and former Pres. Jose Figueres of Costa Rica.

Grants totaling $250,000 recently were awarded the institute by the Agency for Intl. Development to cover fellowships and social projects under the Alliance for Progress.

Romualdi, who is the AFL-CIO's inter-American representative, told the first group of students that today's labor leader, in meeting with management and government, "must be able to hold his own in debates based on facts and figures rather than in eloquence and rhetoric."

Building a strong labor movement, Romualdi said, requires a leadership aware of labor's role in the community, in the nation's political life, in economic planning, in preventing inflation, in the area of social and economic legislation, on issues of commodity prices and trade, on taxation and industrial development.

Free labor, he declared, opposes all forms of totalitarianism—whether Communist, fascist or militaristic—because trade unions can only develop in "a free society where the freedom of one will be the freedom of all."

CWA Convention Spurs Political Action in '62

Milwaukee—Labor's stake in politics and in international affairs was outlined in the course of the Communications Workers' 24th annual convention here.

"We have got to get into the political fight of the 1962 elections," declared CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne in his keynote address, if liberals are to be elected to pass "legislation our nation needs."

Later in the four-day convention, the delegates heard a report that 238 CWA locals had met or exceeded their minimum quotas of 50 cents per member in contributions for the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. CWA contributions to COPE totaled $71,173—topping 1961 by some $6,000 but short of the union's 1960 record.

A series of resolutions urged a renewed effort to attain a goal of $1 per member per year for COPE; called on locals to intensify register and vote campaigns to elect 39 "new faces" to the House and six to the Senate; appealed to all members to take part in politics, "particularly at the precinct level," to produce capable candidates.

A wide-ranging foreign policy statement pledged the United Nations "our continued support as the greatest hope for a secure future;" backed the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions program of aiding infant unions in less developed areas and regretted the "sluggishness" of the Alliance for Progress effort and the "adverse response" of certain Latin American governments to it.

The CWA's own work in Latin America received repeated attention and praise. A resolution called "Operation—South America" commended CWA districts and locals which have set up special union-to-union projects and urged others to join in. The projects were worked out in cooperation with the Inter-American Office of the Postal, Telegraph & Telephone Intl., the trade secretariat.

As Beirne observed, CWA Dist. 9—on the basis of $2 per month from each local—is financing organizing activities in Ecuador of Jose Larco, general secretary of the Federation of Telecommunications Workers. Beirne said this recently enabled free trade unionists there to create their own national federation.

A similar campaign by CWA Dist. 7 brought Humberto Londono from Colombia for training in the U.S. Londono, head of the Telephone Communications Union in his country, is receiving continuing support now that he has returned home.

CWA Dist. 3 has established and is supporting an office in Miami for Cuban telephone workers in exile.

Vicente Rubiera, president of the exiled Cuban telephone workers, told the delegates that his union, which had opposed former Dictator Batista, has lost its hard-won gains and democratic safeguards under Fidel Castro. The Castro regime, he said, appointed union leaders without elections, outlawed bargaining and took "absolute control" of the labor movement.

Initial UAW Agreement Follows NLRB Victory

Lapeer, Mich.—Lapeer Metal Products, which moved from Detroit three years ago, has reached agreement with the Auto Workers giving its 130 workers benefits most of them never had—paid holidays and vacations, welfare benefits, plantwide seniority and a union shop. Wages are raised 8 cents this year, and 10 cents more in 1963 and 1964.

Members must vote to ratify the agreement, first with the auto parts stamping plant since the UAW won an election last month.

Meany Asks Temporary Tax Cut Now

Emergency Action Held Vital To Speed Economic Recovery

(Continued from Page 1)

tures for the last five years, Meany asserted:

"In view of the present availability of funds, plus the failure of adequate utilization of capacity, there should be no further efforts now to grant further incentives to corporations in the hope of stimulating expenditures for plant and equipment. That is not the way to stimulate the economy at this point in time."

The AFL-CIO president said that a tax cut concentrated in the low and middle-income groups can be achieved through dividing the first individual income tax bracket, increasing personal income tax exemptions, setting a tax credit for all taxpayers or reducing the withholding tax for a limited time.

A clear distinction should be made, Meany wrote Kennedy, between "an immediate tax cut, which is designed to shore up the economy, and the long-run structural tax reform proposal." Such reforms must not be confused with changes to stimulate economic activity, he added.

In addition to an immediate tax cut for lower income groups, Meany recommended allowing the Korean wartime excise taxes, due to expire June 30, to lapse—thus providing a $900 million additional stimulus—and action to "increase and accelerate the rate of government expenditures from funds already authorized and appropriated."

Extended Jobless Aid 'Imperative'

Enactment of the McCarthy-King bill to improve the unemployment compensation system "is imperative," said Meany. However, he wrote, "recognizing that the demanding schedule of Congress may delay consideration of this measure, we urge the immediate extension of temporary extended unemployment compensation with additional weeks of benefits in order to provide payments for the long-term unemployed through 1962."

In the long run, said the AFL-CIO president, "a vigorous tax and expenditure policy by the U.S. government will do more to help our balance of payments and gold problems by stimulating economic growth, private investment and job opportunities than reliance upon stimuli designed to have private enterprise alone promote economic growth."

Meany recalled the AFL-CIO's position on Mar. 12, 1962, when he and a group of AFL-CIO vice presidents met with Kennedy to discuss the economic situation. Nothing has changed since then, he added, to "dispel" the fear that the pickup from the recession is lagging badly.

A rise in business spending for plant and equipment has not materialized to offset the slackening rate of government expenditures; personal consumption will be rising at a slower rate than in the past year and gross national product has failed to meet expectations for the first quarter, he wrote.

Economic recovery is continuing but falling short of expectations. Unemployment at 5.4 percent of the labor force in May was higher than at similar points after the last three postwar recessions. Industry, said Meany, is operating at 10 to 15 percent "below optimum capacity levels."

"Retail sales have not responded to the pickup and new orders for goods do not indicate the strength needed to bolster production," he went on.

"The combined demand of consumer, government and business is clearly not enough to keep the economy fully employed at present. There is a danger that the gap between the economy's lagging demand for goods and services and its increased ability to produce will persist."

The program of public works recommended by Kennedy and passed by the Senate will be helpful, Meany wrote.

"However, it is not nearly enough to stimulate the rate of economic growth so necessary for this nation," he said.

No Shortage Seen

Turning to the problem of business investment in plant and equipment, Meany noted that some $148 billion has been so invested over the past five years and that in the same period American corporations have had available from internal sources a sum equal to $147 billion. He continued:

"Why then must additional outlays be secured from profits and tax cuts? Obviously nothing is wrong with these corporations either reducing their dividend distribution or going to the public to borrow funds either on the equity or bond market. But these corporations do not seem particularly interested or concerned about any problems except the so-called 'profit squeeze.'"

The profit squeeze argument is "fallacious," Meany declared, because total cash-flow to corporations has consistently increased in recent years. Cash flow is the money available from profits after taxes as well as from depreciation and depletion allowances.

"A fear of government expenditures and an archaic approach to handling budgets should not prevent the United States from boldly facing up to the unmet needs of our American society," Meany asserted.

Larger scale government expenditures to meet these social needs, he added, "will bring our federal budget into balance at a level of economic activity whose growth rate would so stimulate private investment that this nation could once again get on the move."

SAMUEL GOMPERS ROOM at Intl. Labor Organization headquarters in Geneva, embellished with murals donated by the AFL-CIO in honor of the first president of the former AFL, is studied by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany (left) and Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.). Meany is an adviser to the U.S. worker delegation to the 46th ILO conference, McNamara an adviser on the government delegation.

Three Unions Set Parleys In Aluminum

The Steelworkers, Aluminum Workers and Auto Workers have opened negotiations with the aluminum industry, well in advance of July 31 contract expiration dates, on new agreements affecting the job and income security of more than 40,000 workers.

At sessions in New York City, the Steelworkers have met with representatives of five firms—the Aluminum Co. of America, Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., Reynolds Metals Co., Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. and Ormet Corp., employing about 27,000 workers in USWA bargaining units.

Union bargaining teams are headed by Pres. David J. McDonald as general chairman and Vice Pres. Howard R. Hague as coordinator.

McDonald said negotiations were started more than two months in advance of expiration dates in an effort to get "mutually satisfactory agreements before contract deadlines." Sessions have been devoted to individual plant problems and employe economic problems.

The Aluminum Workers have recessed talks with Alcoa pending settlement of a strike of nearly 1,000 workers at the Alcoa plant in Cressona, Pa. Bargaining continues with Reynolds, and talks will be held later with Kaiser on contracts expiring in October.

Union officials headed by Pres. Eddie R. Stahl sought to help settle the Cressona strike, called to protest work-rule changes ordered unilaterally by Alcoa management.

The UAW started meeting June 13 in New York with Alcoa representatives on new contracts for about 5,000 workers in fabricating and die cast plants at Edison, N.J., Chicago, Cleveland, and Vernon, Calif. Nelson Jack Edwards, Detroit, UAW executive board member-at-large, heads the union bargainers.

ICFTU Congress Opens In West Berlin on July 5

The seventh world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will open in Free Berlin on July 5 to plan expansion of trade union activities in the free world and continue the struggle for peace and freedom.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will head a delegation of top federation leaders to the congress, which will be attended by delegates representing 138 affiliated organizations in 106 countries. The combined present membership of the ICFTU is 56 million.

Among issues to go before the eight-day meeting are union activities in the newly developing countries in Africa and Asia, economic policies to achieve and maintain full employment, economic problems of underdeveloped nations and the role of free labor in the United Nations.

The AFL-CIO delegation includes, besides Meany, Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, James B. Carey, Joseph D. Keenan, James A. Suffridge, Harry C. Bates, L. M. Raftery, Paul Hall, William L. McFetridge, Emil Rieve, Al J. Hayes, Paul L. Phillips, Richard F. Walsh, Joseph Curran, Peter T. Schoemann and Karl Feller; Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians; Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes; and Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Technical Aid on Rights Urged on ILO By Faupl

(Continued from Page 1)

sion of government, worker and employer delegates.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany meanwhile was urging the conference's resolutions committee to act positively on the workers' demand that the Libyan government abide by its obligations as an ILO member state.

Presented by Jean Moeri of Switzerland, chairman of the Workers' Group, the demand protests the Libyan government's failure to allow Gen. Sec. Salem Shita, of the Libyan General Workers Union leader, to carry out his duties on the ILO's Governing Body.

Shita has been refused permission to leave the country despite his acquittal in the courts of charges of improper conduct brought against him by the government.

The government has appealed, but no court has ruled that Shita should be denied the right to leave the country pending the new hearings, Meany said.

Right to Attend 'Essential'

In the absence of such a ruling, the AFL-CIO leader told the committee, the Libyan government was violating its obligation under the ILO constitution to guarantee the right of a delegate to attend the agency's sessions.

This right, Meany declared, is an "essential guarantee" of the ILO's independent functioning.

Because of the complicated legal issues involved, discussion on the workers' resolution may continue well into the session.

On another front, the workers received quick satisfaction when the principle of the 40-hour-week won almost unanimous endorsement in committee. The action virtually assured adoption by the conference of the proposed recommendation to governments on the progressive reduction of hours of work.

A similar resolution was stalled at last year's session by an employer delegation procedural maneuver. Favorable action was taken in committee at the current session following private negotiations between its worker and employer members.

As the committee's worker vice-chairman, James P. Griffin of the Steelworkers headed the workers' negotiating team that secured recognition, in the recommendation's preamble, that the 40-hour-week is a "social standard" for all countries.

The recommendation, Griffin commented, "will assure considerable progress in improving working and social conditions the world over."

In a major address, Faupl stressed that newly-developing countries, particularly those that were under colonial rule, may often have only a vague notion of what is meant by human rights.

Since these countries can already call on the ILO for aid in such fields as social security, vocational training and manpower organization, Faupl said, they should also be able to obtain ILO "help and guidance in establishing the basic human rights which the ILO seeks to ensure and which the workers of all countries have the right to enjoy."

He warned the new countries not to be misled by the "mirage" that sometimes gives undemocratic and tyrannical practices the appearance of a "shortcut to economic development."

"Only when people are free—free to fight for their own rights, free to advance their own interests, free to disagree if they wish with government doctrine—only in freedom do people advance and prosper," Faupl declared.

Faupl, who was elected by the workers as their vice chairman for the conference, strongly endorsed the ringing speech of Willi Richter, veteran West German union leader, calling for self-determination for the people of Communist East Germany.

Despite the wall Russia's "stooges" built across Berlin, Richter said, the people of East Germany are entitled "to live in peace and work in freedom."

"They have the same right as we to decide freely in which state and social order they wish to live," he declared.

6-28-62

Coast Building Trades Win New Pacts

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, June 30, 1962 | No. 26

Tieup Ends In Pay Hike For Crafts

Los Angeles — Agreement on new contracts for most of the building industry unions in California has ended a series of strikes and lockouts affecting nearly 300,000 workers.

An eight-week tieup in Northern California ended when the Laborers there signed new contracts providing wage and fringe benefits totaling 70 cents an hour over a three-year period. Another settlement in the area provides for increases between 62 and 65 cents for Carpenters.

The Laborers began partial walkouts on May 1. On May 11 employers retaliated with a general shutdown in the northern part of the state.

The strike-lockout there idled some 78,000 construction workers and caused work stoppages or slowups for 20,000 to 30,000 workers in related industries.

In Southern California, the Carpenters walked off jobs June 18 when contractors refused to sign interim agreements pending final settlement of master agreements with four contractors' associations.

The contractors in this area retaliated, too, but only laid off Carpenters, keeping the other crafts at work wherever possible. (The Carpenters did not set up picket lines.)

Cement Masons Strike

On June 20, the Cement Masons went on strike and most of the $1.8 billion worth of construction projects in 11 Southern California counties began shutting down.

After a series of marathon bargaining sessions, the Carpenters and Cement Masons reached agreement on new settlements with the employers providing for package increases totaling 63 cents an hour in three years, with reopeners on cost items for the last two years of five-year contracts.

A settlement also was near with the Operating Engineers.

Agreement on the Laborers' contract in Northern California broke deadlocks in negotiations with all the crafts.

The Laborers' contract provides

(Continued on Page 11)

Steelworkers Win Contracts In Aluminum

New York—Agreement on a two-year contract covering 27,000 workers in five major aluminum plants has been reached by the companies and the Steelworkers providing for "positive advances toward job and income security."

The agreements, effective Aug. 1, call for reopening on wages after one year. They apply to the aluminum industry the basic settlement terms reached earlier this year in the steel industry, with necessary modifications to take care of different problems.

The new contracts include a savings-vacation plan financed by company contributions, an increase in employer contributions to the supplemental unemployment benefits plan, improved pension benefits and an easing in eligibility rules, extension and improved pay for regular vacations and an improved seniority plan.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald said the agreement was reached "without government intervention

(Continued on Page 4)

Kennedy Trade Bill Wins House Approval 298-125

ANOTHER BARRIER AGAINST WOMEN FALLS as Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt announces the issuance of a presidential directive that civil service jobs be filled on the basis of merit alone. Mrs. Roosevelt (right center) chaired Hyde Park session of President's Commission on the Status of Women. Other members: Sen. Maurine Neuberger (D-Ore.), far left; Dr. Richard Lester, vice chairman, upper left; Mrs. Esther Peterson, executive vice chairman, far right; Norman Nicholson of Kaiser Industries, bottom; Dr. Cynthia Wedel, bottom. (See story, Page 4.)

Aid Voted Displaced Workers

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy scored a major victory as the House passed his trade expansion program by an impressive 298-125 margin with all major features intact.

Final approval was foreshadowed by the 253-171 defeat of a Republican motion to kill the bill by sending it back to committee.

Protectionists had sought to scrap the President's program by substituting a simple extension of the expiring Reciprocal Trade Act. This would have blocked the Administration's plans for boosting trade because the limited tariff-cutting authority provided under the reciprocal trade program has already been virtually exhausted.

The AFL-CIO had strongly backed the bill, but had served clear notice that if provisions for special adjustment assistance to workers in industries hurt by rising imports were deleted, labor's support would be withdrawn. An expected conservative effort to kill adjustment aid failed to develop as GOP opponents decided instead to make a direct attack on the entire program.

Although the program has had some Republican support, House GOP Leader Charles A. Halleck backed the recommittal motion which would have killed the bill.

On the key vote, 43 Republicans joined 210 Democrats to defeat the motion to recommit the bill, which was supported by 43 Democrats and 128 Republicans. The vote on final passage was 218 Democrats and 80 Republicans in favor; 35

(Continued on Page 2)

Health Care Test Vote Set In Senate

By John M. Barry

A key test of congressional support for social security old-age health insurance was assured as Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. M.) prepared to offer a new version of the plan as a rider to the federal welfare bill.

Senate Democratic leaders cleared the amendment for action, probably during the first week in July.

Anderson, who with Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.) co-authored the original Administration bill on health care for the aged, said his modifications were designed to improve the plan, help meet objections raised against parts of the Anderson-King bill, and swing some Republican votes.

He said his purpose was "to get a law, not an issue."

In shifting the health care battleground to the Senate, the Kennedy Administration is seeking not only Senate passage, but at least a record vote in the House where Anderson-King is hung up in the Ways & Means Committee and its prospects are dim.

The revised tactics were revealed following the weekly breakfast meeting of Democratic congressional leaders with Pres. Kennedy.

"Sen. Anderson holds the key to what we do," Senate Majority

(Continued on Page 2)

Kennedy Stresses Election:

'Working Majority' Needed in Congress

Pres. Kennedy has said Democrats must pick up additional seats in the "important" November congressional elections in order to give the Administration a "working majority" for its legislative program.

The President bluntly told a news conference that defections of nominal Democrats who "have voted with the Republicans for 25 years" have made it "very difficult to secure the enactment of any controversial legislation."

Expressing disappointment in the record of Congress to date, Kennedy said it has been possible to "water bills down and get them by" or pass non-controversial legislation. But controversial bills such as medical care for the aged and farm programs "are much more difficult."

"That is why this election in November is an important one," the President declared. "If we can gain some more seats, we will have a workable majority, and if we don't, then of course we will not."

Kennedy pointed out that in January 1961, at the opening of the 87th Congress, the Administration won by only five votes the "very basic issue" of enlarging the Rules Committee to give the "national Democratic Party" a slim majority —and then only after the late Speaker Sam Rayburn had made the issue "a matter of his own personal prestige."

The President called on Congress to stay in session to act on the backlog of major bills "which will strengthen our country and our economy."

Democrats in Congress "have to do better," he said, "and I hope that some Republicans will support us (as) we supported Pres. Eisenhower in important matters."

In emphasizing the significance of the November elections, Ken-

(Continued on Page 11)

AMA Vows Warfare On Anderson-King Bill

Chicago—The American Medical Association, lashing the Kennedy Administration and organized labor, has vowed a continued war against health care for the aged under the social security system.

The AMA's policymaking House of Delegates ended its 111th annual session by overwhelmingly adopting a resolution to "reaffirm its position of active opposition to Anderson-King-type legislation."

The Anderson-King bill, now stalled in the House Ways & Means Committee, would utilize the insurance principle of the social security system to provide health care as well as income protection for the aged.

Outgoing AMA Pres. Leonard Larson of Bismarck, N. D., set the tone of the convention in his keynote speech. He declared the AMA has fought "a formidable alliance of government and labor" and the "odds are running in our

(Continued on Page 2)

SENIOR CITIZENS' council in Chicago furnished free bus service from downtown hotels for delegates to the American Medical Association convention. The "Welcome, Doctor, Wagons" had as hosts Chicago senior citizens described as "eager to discuss the best method of financing health care for the aged with the nation's doctors." Assisting AMA delegates from the bus is AFL-CIO Community Services Staff Rep. James Ganly, who helped on the project.

AMA Vows Warfare On Anderson-King Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

favor." Larson said the Administration is "frantically" seeking an 11th-hour compromise.

Pres. Kennedy said earlier, however, that while the Administration is willing to discuss the extent of health care protection, there can be no compromise on having such a program included in the social security system.

The resolution adopted by the 218 delegates on a voice vote strongly backed the Kerr-Mills program and urged state medical groups to campaign for enabling legislation in their states.

The AMA rejected the idea of a "strike" or "non-participation" in any federal program, as put forth by Louisiana doctors.

The key AMA committee also gave a cool reception to a doctor who urged the organization to support the Anderson-King bill.

"The social security approach to health care for elder Americans represents a practical and conservative method of meeting this problem," said Dr. Benedict Duffy of Hudson County, N. J. The AMA's opposition to social security financing is "unrealistic," he declared.

Duffy cited a report of the Senate Committee on the Aging which, he said, "showed that the Kerr-Mills Act—whatever the hopes of its sponsors may have been—is failing to provide adequate medical care for elder citizens. Indeed, 90 percent of the federal funds under Kerr-Mills are going to four states."

Duffy, who spoke for the Physicians' Committee for Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security, said more than 325 Boston physicians and some 200 doctors at Columbia University Medical School support the social security approach.

Phrases such as "socialism," "socialized medicine," "government control," "government payroll for doctors" and "loss of freedom" were frequently used in the resolutions group and in floor discussion.

While the AMA represents an estimated 187,000 of the nation's 262,000 doctors, the 218-member House of Delegates long has been the center of power and policy-maker and spokesman for organized medicine.

Larson's farewell speech was well received by the delegates as he pictured the AMA pitted against "the most massive concentration of power ever brought to bear against the medical profession . . . a formidable alliance of government and labor."

"The executive branch of the federal government, using federal employes and taxpayers' funds controlled by Pres. Kennedy and the AFL-CIO, utilizing the farflung empire of money and manpower commanded by its national leadership, have combined their enormous strength against us," he added.

Joining the AMA in the battle, Larson said, were such groups as the American Farm Bureau Federation, the health insurance and pharmaceutical industries, the Blue Shield Plans, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and local chambers, the American Dental Association, the Young Americans for Freedom and others.

UPP Beats Dist. 50 In 2 NLRB Votes

The Papermakers & Paperworkers scored two decisive victories over Dist. 50 of the unaffiliated Mine Workers in recent National Labor Relations Board elections.

Workers at the Brightwater Paper Co., Adams, Mass., who had been represented by Dist. 50 for more than 18 years, voted 105 to 58 to choose the UPP instead.

UPP Local 924 then repelled a Dist. 50 bid for bargaining rights at the Mead Paper Corp., Lawrence, Mass., by a vote of 153 to 40.

Major Kennedy Victory:

House Okays Trade Measure, Displaced Workers to Be Aided

(Continued from Page 1)

Democrats and 90 Republicans against.

The bill would give the President authority to join with other nations in major reductions of tariffs and to negotiate lower duties covering broad categories of goods with the European Common Market.

Tariffs could be eliminated completely over a five-year period for products where the United States and the Common Market nations together account for 80 percent of world trade. Other tariffs could be reduced by up to 50 percent on a reciprocal basis, with the reduction spread over five years.

If the Tariff Commission finds that reductions in duties cause or threaten to cause "unemployment or underemployment," the President would be authorized to provide a readjustment allowance for workers equal to 65 percent of average wages, payable for up to 52 weeks.

Persons over 60 would be entitled to an additional 13 weeks of coverage and workers taking retraining could receive up to 78 weeks of benefits. Relocation allowances for heads of families would also be provided.

The trade fight came on the heels of a bitter battle over the Administration's farm bill, which ended in what the White House bluntly termed "a staggering defeat" for the President's program.

By a 215-205 margin, the House rejected the Senate-passed Administration bill which would have given farmers a choice between cutting back their acreage and receiving high price supports or taking their chances on a free market.

The White House statement said rejection of the program will cost the taxpayers $1 billion next year to pay storage costs for grain and other crops which the United States cannot consume or sell. It charged the Republicans, who voted 167 to 1 to kill the bill, with "responsibility" for "continuing chaos" in agriculture.

Democrats, however, were far from solid on the measure. While 204 voted for the bill, 48 opposed the measure, including 17 from northern states. Southern Democrats divided 65 to 31 in favor of the bill.

In a quick attempt to salvage what it could of the farm program, the Administration proposed a compromise measure continuing payments for farmers who voluntarily curtail their output. If passed by the House, the measure would then have to be reconciled in conference with the broader Senate-passed bill.

In other developments:

- Health care for the aged was scheduled for a key test vote in the Senate as an amendment to a House-passed bill. (See story, Page 1.)
- The House passed by voice vote a bill authorizing federal grants to states for three years to carry out community programs to vaccinate children under five years of age against polio, diptheria, whooping cough and tetanus. A committee report said two-thirds of the nation's children in this age group have not been fully vaccinated against these diseases.
- The Administration's mass transportation bill, to help cities and metropolitan areas provide adequate transit facilities, moved one step further along as the House Banking & Currency Committee voted 16-7 approval. It had previously won subcommittee endorsement.
- Continuing differences over aid to private, church-supported colleges, compounded by questions raised as to the implications of the Supreme Court's ruling on school prayers, brought a new postponement of a House-Senate conference on college aid legislation. The meeting was put off until the week of July 9.
- The Senate Finance Committee approved a House-passed bill to raise the national debt limit temporarily to $308 billion, after defeating, 8-7, a Republican move to set the limit at $306 billion.

Rail-Bus-Ship Fare Tax Repeal Voted

Congress has voted to repeal the 10 percent federal tax on rail, bus and ship tickets and to reduce the 10 percent tax on plane fares to 5 percent, effective Nov. 15.

The transportation tax cuts, estimated at $195 million a year, had been recommended by Pres. Kennedy.

The bill also included an extension of existing corporate income taxes and federal excise taxes, which otherwise would have expired June 30.

Senate Test Vote Set On Health Care Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) said.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), Democratic whip, said party leaders hoped to pick up eight to 10 Republican votes as a result of revisions in Anderson-King.

Among the changes Anderson proposed were:

- Extension of coverage to some 3 million elderly persons not now eligible for social security or railroad retirement benefits, with financing to come directly from the Treasury.
- Establishment of a separate trust fund for the health care program completely divorced from Old-Age & Survivors Insurance and disability insurance funds—as a depository for the increase in social security taxes required to finance the plan.
- A new provision permitting the government to turn over much of the administration of the program to private organizations such as Blue Cross.
- Use of the accreditation standards of the American Hospital Association and the American Medical Association for automatic certification of hospitals as eligible to take part in the program.

These changes, Anderson observed, should make it plain to the AMA and other critics that sponsors of the program are not trying to "control the doctors through control of the hospitals."

The modifications were worked out after a series of conferences between the New Mexico senator, Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff and Republican sponsors of alternative health care bills based on social security financing.

Confers With Javits

Final details of the Anderson amendment were held up as the senator conferred with Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) in an effort to reach some accommodation over Javits' "optioning out" proposal. This would give beneficiaries, if they chose, a cash benefit with which to buy private health insurance.

Anderson has rejected this approach, declaring that it would be administratively unworkable.

The House-passed welfare measure to which the amendment would be attached extends and increases federal welfare payments to states, some of which expire June 30.

Immediate Hike in Social Security Urged

Ann Arbor, Mich.—An immediate increase in Social Security payments to the elderly was called for here by a principal speaker at the 15th annual University of Michigan Conference on Aging & the Economy.

Six spokesmen for organized labor were among the 500 specialists at the three-day conference who heard Herbert E. Striner, director of the Urban Studies Program for the Stanford Research Institute in Washington, D. C., call for a much more understanding approach to the needs of older persons.

A visitor from another planet, eavesdropping on U.S. debates over our national ability to finance programs for education, housing, defense and retirement, would, said Striner, "relegate the U.S. to the position of one of the more impoverished nations on this planet."

Asserting that the nation has either "forgotten or radically diluted" the intent of the Social Security legislation of the Thirties, Striner called for an immediate boost in pension payments to the elderly covered by Old Age & Survivors Insurance.

Millions of elderly persons, he said, are "still insecure and nearly destitute" because Congress has failed to adjust OASI payments to the rise in U.S. living standards. Some 55 percent of those over 65 have incomes of less than $1,000 a year. The situation, he said, represents increasing grounds for a "bill of complaint" by the deserving elderly against our policies. Said Striner:

"Surely a nation capable of a Marshall Plan, a continuing foreign aid program of about $4 billion a year, farm subsidies of several billion a year, and a national security budget of close to $50 billion a year is also capable of providing more than a subsistence level of life" for those beyond the age where there is "adequate economic demand for their services."

Spokesmen for labor, citing an increase in long-term unemployment among older workers, urged positive action to meet the needs of a rapidly expanding older population.

Pres. David Livingston, of Dist. 65, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, told a conference panel that "we should not go along with the view that with automation and other improvements the older workers should get out of the way" of younger ones.

It is a mistake, he said, for "those of us classified as experts or specialists to set the level of income we believe older persons should have." Senior citizens themselves should set this level, and can do so, Livingston said, by organizing and presenting their case.

The program included as participants Richard E. Shoemaker, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security; Dir. Charles E. Odell of the Auto Workers Older & Retired Workers' Dept.; James C. O'Brien, executive director of the Steelworkers' Committee on Older & Retired Workers; Intl. Rep. Clement J. Lewis, Utility Workers, and Jack Ossofsky, retirement plan director, RWDSU Dist. 65.

Shoemaker, speaking as a panel member on pension measures for over-65 workers, cited the advantages of early vesting and the transfer of credits when an employe changes jobs.

Unions Urge Ratification:

West Coast Seamen Voting on New Pact

San Francisco—West Coast seamen are balloting on acceptance or rejection of a new contract with shipowners providing substantial improvements in wages, pensions and welfare benefits.

Negotiators for the three unions involved, all affiliates of the Seafarers, have recommended ratification of a settlement worked out at the urging of Pres. Kennedy and with the aid of Prof. James J. Healy of Harvard University, Kennedy's personal representative, and Robert H. Moore of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

The settlement came before the expiration date June 30 of a Taft-Hartley Act injunction secured by the President and the Attorney General, and before possible resumption of a ship tieup interrupted by the injunction.

Healy said the agreement is retroactive to Oct. 1, 1961, and runs to June 15, 1965. It represents a compromise on the part of the unions—Sailors Union of the Pacific, Marine Firemen, and Marine Cooks & Stewards—and 12 companies bargaining as the Pacific Maritime Association, and was, he said, substantially in the public interest.

Improvements, as reported by the Stewards News, call for a 2 percent across-the-board wage increase during the first contract year, plus an increase in vacations from three to five days per month, added company contributions to the health and welfare program including a medical clinic, and an allowance averaging three-tenths of 1 percent for work rule improvements; in the second year, increased pension benefits and establishment of two funds for job stabilization; in the third year, an increase of 7.58 percent in the fund used to pay overtime to firemen.

The settlement has been ratified by SUP members subject to later action by the Marine Firemen and the Cooks & Stewards. The last of the locals involved will meet July 5, according to SUP Sec.-Treas. Morris Weisberger, chairman of the union negotiators.

Commenting on Kennedy's action in taking a hand in the strike and negotiations, Weisberger said: "At least we have a government today that will intervene." The only problem under such a policy, he said, is that the shipowner may "use the government to settle his disputes."

The strike started Mar. 16 when the three Seafarer unions were unable, in more than five months of bargaining talks, to get a contract replacing one that had expired Sept. 30, 1961. The strikers returned to work after the government secured a T-H injunction Apr. 11 that forbade strike action for 80 days.

The unions involved said employment had fallen from about 20,000 to not many more than 6,000 when the strike started.

'Right-to-Work' Forces Attack REA Program

Supporters of so-called "right-to-work" laws have now turned their guns on the nation's farmers through an attack on the federal rural electrification program, the National Council for Industrial Peace has charged.

The citizens' group said state chambers of commerce, which in many areas have spearheaded drives to outlaw union shop agreements, now propose "to turn over control of the generation and transmission of electrical power in rural areas to private power companies, to double the existing interest rate on Rural Electrification Administration loans, and to shift the financing of rural electrification from the federal government to Wall Street."

A former REA administrator, John M. Carmody, pointed to the two-edged attack on unions and rural co-ops in an appeal to Oklahoma farmers to join with the labor movement in fighting a "right-to-work" constitutional amendment proposal in that state.

Carmody urged members of Oklahoma REA cooperatives to "study the record" and note that "many of those who fight to cripple or destroy the cooperatives fight to cripple or destroy labor unions."

Terming "right-to-work" a slogan "to befuddle and mislead," Carmody added:

"Organized labor has defended the right of farmers to their cooperatives, to their farm price programs—to the right of self-determination—over and over again in my lifetime, since I was a boy on my father's farm."

A similar warning was issued by the head of a Vermont rural electric cooperative, Frank M. Sahlman, who said:

"Farmers in Vermont and elsewhere in New England must be fully alert to the fact that the attack on rural electric co-ops and the attack on freedoms of working people through the so-called 'right-to-work' laws are cut out of the same cloth."

He added that "farmers, businessmen and working people must continue to work hand-in-hand for further development of the economy."

The Council for Industrial Peace statement declared:

"State chambers of commerce who have been attacking the collective bargaining rights of organized labor through so-called 'right-to-work' laws have now enlarged the area of their destructive proposals with a frontal onslaught on the American farmer.

"The Council of State Chambers of Commerce has joined the United States Chamber of Commerce and the private power lobby in calling for a 'phasing out' of the federal program that has lifted farmers out of the kerosene lamp era and brought electric power to the American farmer at rates he can afford."

The statement charged that the proposal by the state chambers of commerce "shows a remarkable identity of viewpoint with earlier recommendations made by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the private power companies."

It termed the drive against REA "a blow below the belt aimed at America's farmers" by "the same people who are supporting and directing violent attacks in many states on organized labor through the so-called 'right-to-work' laws, which seek to destroy collective bargaining and the freedom of contract between labor and management."

ORGANIZED LABOR in New York supports Beth-El Hospital strikers in a mass picketing demonstration on Brooklyn sidewalks. Demonstration was voted by the New York City Central Labor Council to protest refusal of hospital management to recognize Drug & Hospital Local 1199, chosen by nonprofessional workers, and to object to anti-picketing injunction. Picketing was orderly and police watched but made no arrests.

1,000 New York Unionists Rally In Support of Hospital Strikers

Brooklyn—A citywide labor protest against the "intolerable conditions" under which hospital workers earn their living erupted into a mass demonstration on a union picket line at Beth-El Hospital.

More than 1,000 representatives of unions affiliated with the New York City Central Labor Council walked the picket line of Drug & Hospital Local 1199, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, and thus invited arrest for violating an anti-picketing injunction. The picketing was orderly and no arrests resulted.

The demonstration followed a Central Labor Council meeting at which delegates heard reports of "primitive" working conditions in many hospitals. At the meeting, one woman worker pleaded: "We work 12 hours a day for $42 a week; please help us."

The council adopted this three-point program:

- Withdrawal of labor representatives from the Permanent Administrative Committee, which oversees labor conditions in voluntary hospitals.
- Support for hospital workers "with all the resources at our command."
- A call to every union in the city to join the demonstration at Beth-El Hospital.

Local 1199 set up picket lines at Beth-El and also at the Manhattan Eye, Ear & Throat Hospital when nonprofessional employes joined the union and asked for recognition, a contract and a living wage.

The strike at Beth-El was called May 23 after the hospital board of trustees refused to recognize the union as bargaining agent for employes of the kitchen, laundry, dietary and housekeeping departments and for nurses' aides. Later the Manhattan hospital was struck.

Beth-El management applied for an injunction against the strike and the picketing which was granted by State Supreme Court Justice Louis L. Friedman. Union Pres. Leon J. Davis returned to the picket line, charging the injunction was unconstitutional, and was given a 30-day jail term for contempt of court. Also sentenced for 30 days were Marshall Dubin and Elliott Godoff, RWDSU organizers.

City Labor Commissioner Harold A. Felix urged officials of the Greater New York Hospital Association to seek a reconciliation with labor members of the committee. Previous meetings on the subject have been fruitless, labor representatives reported.

Of the hospital situation in general, Sec. Morris Iushewitz of the Central Labor Council said: "You can safely predict that more hospital workers will go on strike. The condition of the workers is intolerable—it resembles slavery."

He put the number of unorganized workers in area hospitals at 30,000.

$1.60 Minimum Pay Set in Hospital Pact

New York—A minimum wage of $1.60 an hour—$60 for a five-day 37.5-hour week—is provided for some 5,000 employes of 35 private hospitals, operated for profit, in a new three-year contract negotiated by Hotel & Allied Service Employes, Local 144, affiliated with the Building Service Employes.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner and BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan observed signing of the renewal agreement at City Hall here. Terms, including a number of "firsts," raise all wages by $4 to $8 a week; provide time and a half for overtime starting next Jan. 1, nine paid holidays instead of eight, a third week's vacation after five years, and four weeks vacation for X-ray technicians exposed to radiation.

The bargaining unit was enlarged to take in all nonprofessional workers including, for the first time, assistant dietitians. Local 144 Pres. Peter Ottley headed the union negotiators.

Fugitives from Chlorine Justified in Walking Out

Rockwood, Tenn.—Several hundred Steelworkers who refused to swallow any more dust and chlorine gas fumes at the Roane Electric Co. plant here last September were protected by the law when they stayed away from work and should be restored to their jobs with lost pay, a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has concluded.

But other workers in nearby departments who stayed out in sympathy with the strikers were not protected, and were not entitled to engage in a walkout in support of their fellow workers under a no-strike clause in their contract, Examiner Owsley Vose found.

He recommended that the company, owned by New York Financier Louis Wolfson's Tennessee Products & Chemical Corp., be directed to reinstate these strikers with lost pay back to Sept. 5 or 6:

- All who were stationed within 100 feet of the plant's metal-crushers and grinders, and within 75 feet of the furnace gas chlorinators.
- All who customarily spend 25 percent or more of their working time within the affected areas.

The union will continue its fight for all members. Said USWA Regional Dir. M. C. Weston: "We aim to get 'em all back."

Things have been tough for the embattled local, which staged 10 walkouts in five years to compel management to improve working conditions. Last November, after a meeting in the office of Gov. Buford Ellington (D), all efforts at settlement failed and the union filed an unfair labor practice charge, withdrawing its pickets from the plant. Of the original 585 safety strikers, a little more than half remain in town.

In support of his conclusion that working conditions were "abnormally dangerous," the trial examiner cited repeated complaints to management and the union safety committee about heavy concentrations of dust around two furnaces and a strong chlorine odor in several areas. Several workers said they could not breathe when dust was heavy, and others had to leave their work stations because of chlorine gas emissions.

Vose noted that the dust collector had been completely inoperative for almost a week before the walkout and had been "known to the company to have been malfunctioning several days before that."

"The employes were justified in concluding that they could not afford to wait for the company to repair the equipment causing the hazardous conditions," he concluded. "It was not unreasonable for the employes to decide that they had to resort to the only effective measure of self-help available, namely refusing to work."

LABOR HISTORY ARCHIVES at Wayne State University, Detroit, received a $10,000 boost from the Auto Workers when UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock (left), a member of the university board of governors, presented a check for that amount to WSU Vice Pres. Arthur Neef. At right is Dr. Philip P. Mason, who will direct the project.

Flight Engineers Strike 2 Airlines, Vote at TWA

Government attempts to mediate a dispute over the crew complement for jet planes were suspended for the time being as 575 members of the Flight Engineers struck Eastern Air Lines and 500 others returned to work at Pan American World Airways after a short walkout ended by a temporary injunction.

Engineers on the two lines refused to accept a formula worked out by union and management negotiators at Trans World Airways, where some 625 FEIA members will start voting July 1 to ratify or reject an agreement reached with the aid of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and federal mediators.

FEIA negotiators agreed to recommend ratification of the pact as "the best agreement possible" to settle a six-year-old dispute over crew qualifications and airline job assignments.

Goldberg had expressed hope that the settlement formula, reached after more than a week of steady meeting, could be applied to the union's disputes with Eastern and Pan American, but the FEIA walked out at both those lines on June 23.

A few hours after the Pan American strike began, management obtained a temporary restraining order under which union members returned to work. U.S. District Judge George Rosling later extended the injunction to 4 p. m., July 6, for further study.

All Eastern Air Lines flights were grounded and the union set up picket lines. The line grounded 208 planes and laid off most of its 18,000 employes.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a statement issued June 23, said the TWA settlement seemed to be "fair and adequate" and would "fully protect the workers, the safety of the flying public, and the economic well-being of the nation."

Pointing out that the basic issues in dispute have been before the AFL-CIO Executive Council on several occasions, have been "fully heard by several impartial boards" and figured prominently in a Pan American-Pilots case arbitrated by a presidential board on which Meany served, the AFL-CIO president said:

"I earnestly urge the Flight Engineers to reconsider strike action at Eastern and Pan Am and immediately resume negotiations toward the achievement of as fair and equitable a settlement as was negotiated with TWA."

The pact contains other special provisions to help settle the question of jurisdiction between Pilots and Flight Engineers. Meanwhile negotiations on economic issues between TWA and the engineers continued with Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger as mediator.

Railroads Again Bolt Parley on Work Rules

Chicago—Rail operating unions have accused management of attempting to "push the nation into a transportation crisis" by walking out—for the second time in two months—on negotiations over work rules.

Company negotiators stalked out of a meeting, held a press conference to accuse the rail unions of "delaying tactics," requested the National Mediation Board to drop its efforts to bring the parties together—and hinted that the railroads may attempt to impose unilateral work rules changes, including abolition of the jobs of thousands of locomotive firemen.

Union leaders in turn charged the management spokesmen with "bad faith" and warned that any effort by the railroads to impose work rules changes unilaterally would bring about a strike.

Despite the sharp conflict, the machinery of the Railway Labor Act has built-in delays before either side is free to act. The first step was taken when the National Mediation Board formally invited both sides to arbitrate the dispute—a proposal the unions are expected to reject.

The most recent round of talks broke down over the same basic differences which caused an earlier management walkout on May 17. The railroads say they are prepared to accept the recommendations made early this year by a presidential railroad commission. Any negotiations, management has insisted, must be within the "framework" of the commission's recommendations.

The unions, for their part, have flatly rejected the commission's report and have called for unrestricted negotiations.

Two hundred thousand operating employes are represented by the five unions—the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railroad Trainmen, and Switchmen, all AFL-CIO affiliates, and the Locomotive Engineers and the Conductors & Brakemen.

In Federal Service:

Kennedy Order Strengthens Job Chances for Women

Hyde Park, N. J.—Pres. Kennedy has issued a directive to insure equal opportunities for women in the federal government.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, chairman of the President's Commission on the Status of Women, announced the Kennedy order as the commission met here to act on removing obstacles facing the working woman.

Mrs. Roosevelt said she received a letter from the President advising her of an opinion from the Attorney General which reversed a 1934 interpretation of an 1870 statute.

The 1934 opinion was that government appointing officers had absolute authority to specify sex in filling jobs.

But Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy has ruled the matter is one which may be regulated by the President under his constitutional and statutory authority.

This opinion, Pres. Kennedy wrote, has enabled him to order an amendment of civil service regulations so as to require federal appointing officers to justify the filling of positions by men only or by women only.

"The new regulation should increase the opportunities of women for federal employment," he wrote Mrs. Roosevelt.

Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., reported to the meeting that the rate of selection for key civil service jobs now is about the same for women as for men.

He referred to the federal service entrance examination, the chief route through which young people of college calibre are hired for career, professional and administrative jobs.

Macy said Washington agencies now ask for eligible job applicants of either sex in 99.8 percent of their requests.

This is, he added, "a vast improvement" over the situation before the President's commission was created. A pre-commission study, he said, showed requests in the September 1960 to February 1961 period were 56 percent for men only, 17 percent for women only and 27 percent for either sex.

In other actions, the commission:

- Endorsed the broad principle of minimum wage legislation for both men and women and recognized the need for extending such protection to unprotected workers. It was pointed out that 17 states still have no minimum wage laws and some have minimums below 50 cents an hour. Some fields of employment, such as laundries, hotels and restaurants, are falling further behind in wage levels.
- Recommended to the Defense Dept. the removal of quota limitations on women in the armed services.

Other commission studies moving forward are one in the area of political and civil rights for women, under the chairmanship of Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.), and another on social security and taxation concerning employed women, under the leadership of Sen. Maurine Neuberger (D-Ore.).

Jobless Benefit Dispute Still on as Strike Ends

Detroit—Auto Workers at the Walton Hills, O., Ford stamping plant have ratified an agreement to settle a walkout over production standards but the unemployment compensation problem raised by the stoppage continued to flare in Michigan.

The dispute, which led to the layoff of 70,000 Ford workers throughout the nation, was settled with an agreement by the company to add another man and machine and to make engineering changes on the process of stamping out parts for the Comet so that a production rate of 300 parts an hour can be achieved. If the workers cannot turn out the 300 parts after the changes, the dispute will be handled by the plant's grievance procedure.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared during the strike that Ford has pressured Michigan Gov. John B. Swainson to sign a bill nullifying a State Supreme Court decision which permits workers laid off because of a strike in another plant of the same corporation to collect unemployment compensation.

Shortly before the end of the walkout, Reuther wrote Ford, General Motors and Chrysler proposing that they join with the UAW in agreeing on legislative language which would eliminate the corporations' oft-repeated claims that the decision would force them "to finance strikes against themselves."

He pledged that the UAW would join with the Big Three in good faith in urging the legislature to enact and the governor to sign statutory language agreed upon by company and union attorneys.

Henry Ford II rejected the proposal as "outrageous" and the other two firms also turned down the UAW approach. Reuther replied to Ford, terming his letter turning down the plan "intemperate, disappointing and shocking."

"I am saddened by the lack of understanding of the democratic process that your letter reveals," he added.

A bill nullifying the state court decision on unemployment compensation was passed last year by the GOP-controlled legislature but vetoed by Swainson. A similar bill was adopted at the current session and is now before the governor. This is the bill the auto firms are urging him to sign.

Steelworkers Win Contracts In Aluminum

(Continued from Page 1)

or pressure from any outside source." He termed the new pacts a tribute to the principles of free collective bargaining that will contribute to the economic welfare of the nation. The job and income security incorporated in the agreement is a "great forward step," he said.

The pacts cover USWA-organized plants of the Aluminum Co. of America, Reynolds Metals Co., Kaiser Aluminum Corp., Olin-Mathieson Chemical Corp. and Ormet, Inc.

The Aluminum Workers are continuing talks with Reynolds and plan later parleys with Kaiser. Bargaining with Alcoa has been recessed pending settlement of a strike of nearly 1,000 workers at the company's Cressona, Pa., plant.

The UAW is negotiating for about 5,000 workers in a number of Alcoa fabricating and die cast plants.

Negotiations for the new USWA contract were started more than two months before the July 31 expiration date of the current three-year agreement.

AGVA to Act On Contract Enforcement

Top officials of the American Guild of Variety Artists have told a Senate committee that the union will act to tighten up enforcement of contracts barring use of "exotic dancers" or other entertainers as bar girls.

Joey Adams, president of AGVA, and Jackie Bright, national administrative secretary, testified in the closing days of a 10-day investigation of the B-girl entertainers and the union.

Adams defended the union before the Senate Permanent Investigations subcommittee headed by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), declaring that the "few degraded people—whether they call themselves B-girls or prostitutes, or whether they are vindictive, rejected former union officials—(do not) speak for or represent AGVA, its officers or its members."

"If there is a member of AGVA who violates the law, he or she should be punished, as should anyone who violates the law," Adams declared. "Our union and its administration would mercilessly reject any person who brings discredit on our membership."

Bright told the committee there would be "intensive action" to clean up a number of situations disclosed at the hearings. He said he would be willing to take a lie detector test on his testimony that he did not receive funds, as charged, from former AGVA official Clayton Hart. Hart also offered to submit to a test.

McClellan said the testimony would be turned over to the Justice Dept. to determine if perjury was involved and to study whether the Landrum-Griffin and Taft-Hartley Acts had been violated. The committee claims Bright accepted resort hotel accommodations and a cruise from persons with whom AGVA had contracts.

The Arkansas senator said the record of the hearings would be made available also to the Bureau of Internal Revenue because club owners have failed to deduct either social security or income taxes from entertainers' pay. Club operators semingly have evaded federal tax responsibilities of their own, he added.

UAW Aide Named To Voter Drive Staff

Willoughby Abner, education-citizenship staff representative of the Auto Workers, has been named a special assistant to Roy Reuther, national director of the AFL-CIO's voter registration drive.

Abner, who has been given a leave of absence from his UAW post in Chicago, will work on registration campaigns in key areas of the nation.

BROAD CULTURAL INTERESTS of its members find an outlet in the Annual Art Exhibit of Dist. 65, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Workers, featuring demonstrations by noted artists. Painter Allan Stone is shown conducting a class in oil painting during the recent 11th Annual Exhibit, which ran for eight weeks at "Gallery 65" on the fourth floor of the district's New York headquarters.

"STIMULATING," was the comment of judges for the "65" show: Philip Reisman (left), treasurer of the New York Chapter of Artists Equity, and Abraham Harriton of the ACA Gallery.

For a Fuller Life, Art at 'Gallery 65'

SCULPTOR - LECTURER Aaron J. Goodelman, whose work is on view at many museums, holds a "65" audience in rapt attentiveness as (left) he starts with a mass of clay and transforms it into the figure of a charging bull (right), stressing all the while the need to capture and convey the action of the charge. Surrounded by paintings on exhibit, Goodelman earlier had discussed art and civilization and their relation to average people, some 4,000 of whom visited this year's "65" art show.

AWARD WINNERS at the exhibit are displayed by Paul Skoorka, chairman of the Dist. 65 Art Committee, whose own "By the Sea" (right) took the Noted Artists' Award in oil painting. First prize in watercolor went to Eugene Gordon's "Behind the Skyline" (center). Topping the popular balloting among visitors to the gallery was Irving Graff's "Lunchtime Siesta" (left).

PROFESSIONAL TECHNIQUES are explained by Allan Stone as part of the full schedule of lectures, instruction and demonstrations which accompanied the eight-weeks exhibit. Expert guidance supplied under Dist. 65 sponsorship over the years was reflected in the high quality of members' work at this year's show.

PORTRAIT CLASS works with various media to develop skills in classes sponsored by Dist. 65, whose recreation and education program goes beyond the work place and the union hall to help develop a full life for its members.

INDIVIDUAL INSTRUCTION, made possible through small classes, is supplied by Maurice Kish (left rear), Dist. 65 art teacher, exhibitor and co-chairman of this year's exhibit committee. Kish himself won a professional award in oil painting given by an art materials firm.

The Wrong Target

THE KENNEDY ADMINISTRATION'S proposals for an across-the-board tax decrease effective Jan. 1, 1963, including both personal and corporate income taxes, will be too late and aimed at the wrong target.

The recovery from the 1960-61 recession may well slow down and sputter to a halt if the Administration waits another six months and presents a program that fails to concentrate on low and middle-income groups.

For the past year the Administration has been preparing a long overdue tax reform program designed to eliminate the numerous inequities written into the tax laws in the past decade and to bring the basic law into line with principles of a progressive system tied in realistically with ability to pay. The President has said that this program will contain across-the-board reductions in personal and corporate income tax rates.

There is an important distinction to be made between the need for an immediate tax cut in the low and middle-income brackets to stimulate the lagging recovery and the long-term tax law overhaul that will restore equity in the tax system. While a revamped tax system will have an effect on the economy in terms of sustaining an adequate growth rate, the problem now is to stimulate.

The policy of attempting to stir the economy into faster recovery and a higher growth rate by tax credits to business, revising depreciation schedules and lowering corporate tax rates will not provide the necessary shot-in-the-arm.

A tax cut now in the area where purchasing power can be augmented—the millions in the low and middle-income groups will put tax cuts immediately into the spending stream—can avert the piling up of new economic woes.

Labor's True Assets

THE PRESS HANDLING of the Labor Dept.'s report on the assets of American trade unions provides a classic example of shallow reporting and distortion by omission.

The papers dutifully reported that the total assets of the labor movement amounted to $1.5 billion and summed up the other figures in the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports' compilation.

It remained for labor papers generally to supply the missing ingredient—a comparison with the assets of the companies with which the unions bargain. The figures were easily at hand from either Fortune Magazine's directory of the largest U.S. corporations or from a news story in Business Week listing 57 corporations with assets over $1 billion. The information was probably available also from a cursory reading of the business and financial pages of any large newspaper.

The comparison made by the labor press gives the story its proper significance and places it in context of the realities of power in the second half of the Twentieth Century.

Comparing the relative financial strength of unions and industrial firms helps explode the mythology, carefully built up by anti-union forces, of the financial resources of the labor movement. It also focuses attention on another element—that the strength of the trade union movement is essentially people and ideas.

These are the basic assets of unions that have carried the labor movement through times of struggle and stress: the determination to win an adequate living standard, to be treated as human beings deserving of respect and dignity and to oppose all forms of exploitation.

These assets are not measurable in dollars, but backed by minimum financial resources, they give the trade union movement its sinews of strength to help build a stronger nation.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery, Harry C. Bates, Wm. C. Doherty, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, L. S. Buckmaster*, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Geryase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, June 30, 1962 No. 26

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Fill 'Er Up

Biemiller Says:

Anti-Trust Laws for Unions Really Aimed at Labor's Goals

The following is excerpted from an article in World by Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, on why anti-trust laws should not apply to unions.

IT IS TRUE that a union seeks to organize all the plants operated by a company, and then fights for the same job rates and other benefits at each location. What's wrong with that?

Take the auto industry. The Automobile Workers don't have a fraction of the resources of the General Motors Co.; the union's only effective weapon is its ability to shut down the whole company. That weapon would be destroyed if the workers in each separate plant had to put themselves separately against the power of the whole corporation.

As for the wages and working conditions, is there any logical reason why the same job should pay less in Memphis than it does in Detroit? General Motors doesn't have geographical price tags on its cars, or a geographical dividend rate for its stockholders.

It is also true that a union seeks to organize all the companies in the same industry, and fights for the same job rates and other benefits throughout. The steel industry is the most dramatic example, because negotiations with all the major companies are carried on at the same time.

This is wrong, the opposition tells us, since all the companies can be shut down at once by the concerted action of one union.

But the whole industry is also shut down by the unanimous refusal of the companies to come to an acceptable agreement. The union is not only willing but anxious to come to terms with one or several of the companies. But the companies act with a unanimity that is supposed to be dangerous when exercised by labor.

Aside from being ridiculous and unworkable, the "anti-trust" notion would create a double standard of labor-management morality. Employers could continue to make common cause openly or tacitly; unions, even local unions in the same industry or company, could not.

THESE SAME PROPAGANDISTS assert, with pious protestations, that they really do love the working man, and will defend to the death his right to organize. Yes, they think unions are fine—if they are fragmentized. They love unions as long as they are company unions. What they don't like are effective unions.

Nothing proves the point of cynicism more clearly than to call for "local bargaining." We have always had local bargaining over local issues, even in nationwide corporations. We have always had local bargaining in strictly local operations, such as the building trades. But local bargaining over basic terms of employment in a national corporation is nonsense.

The goal of the labor movement since the early years of the republic has been to achieve something approaching equality of bargaining power with employers. That goal has never been reached. In a few industries, unions are strong enough to put up a successful fight if they have to—because their members are willing to make the sacrifices that such a fight entails. But no union can match the united resources of the employers with whom it deals.

Advocates of this "anti-trust" nonsense know the American people don't want a rigged contest. So they reason this way: The people know monopoly is bad. The people believe unions are good. Let's pin a bad name on a good thing. Maybe it will weaken the public's support of labor's objectives.

That is the whole purpose of this otherwise purposeless propaganda campaign. It's just as cheap as that.

". . . and we have very short coffee breaks."

Morgan Says:

Farm Bill Defeat Condemns U.S. To More Uncontrolled Surpluses

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

AS A RIPARIAN RANCHER who can't even grow one measly little old radish I disqualify myself as an expert on crops, but as a consumer and a taxpayer I have a ripe harvest of angry thoughts about the farm problem and the clumsy spectacle of Congress muffing its solution year after year.

Morgan

There is, of course, no single tidy recipe for dissolving the agricultural surplus or dealing fairly and efficiently with all the complicated aspects of this overgrown dilemma. Obviously the Administration's farm bill, which the House killed by 10 votes, would not have brought Utopia to rural America or to the grocery stores and supermarkets where the urban population shops and pays too much for its food.

But the legislation would have made a sharp stab at cutting the costly phenomenon of overproduction. Instead of going along with that effort the Republicans and a number of Democrats, in a touching gesture of statesmanship, refused to do anything except commit sabotage. GOP policy was to sink the ship and leave the lifeboats lashed to their davits. The Republicans had no substitute bill of their own. So the country continues to drown in surplus grain.

What did the House defeat? As summed up by Congressional Quarterly, the main thrusts of the original Administration measure were: "First, the national minimum allotment for wheat was to be repealed. Second, all feed grains were to be controlled together, so that meaningful quotas could be imposed. Third, quotas could be set below actual needs, so that the government could dispose of some of its surplus stocks (which are costing the taxpayer a million dollars a day just to store). Fourth, controls were to be generally tightened up; loopholes which permitted exemptions for small farms were to be revised; quota penalties were to be made more stringent, and farmers were to be prohibited from planting surplus crops on land removed from production of other surplus crops. Fifth, if farmers were to reject marketing quotas in a referendum, no acreage controls would be in effect, no price support purchases would be made, and the government would be allowed to sell some of its surplus stocks at the market price."

Now such a law would not prevent another Billie Sol Estes case from sprouting up somewhere and Administration implications that it would were not quite cricket. But the measure did attempt to tether the most reckless monstrosity of the farm program—guaranteed prices for unlimited production—by telling the farmer he couldn't get price supports unless he curbed his crop to an assigned allotment.

CAN THE REPUBLICANS and the dissident Democrats who wrecked the bill without producing any alternative get away with letting this chaos continue? "What they have voted, if their action stands," one White House source said, "is back to Ezra Benson and a total economic debacle with uncontrolled surpluses piling up costing the taxpayer additional billions. This bill would have saved a billion dollars a year for four years, and that bothers them. They don't like to hear that."

Urban voters, presumably, don't like to hear it either and as they come increasingly into their own—thanks to a monumental Supreme Court decision this spring potentially breaking the rural stranglehold on state legislatures—they are very likely to let the farm bloc know that they don't intend to tolerate much longer the extravagant and wasteful mess that the management of American agriculture has become.

In a way we are bedeviled by our own efficiency. As the Des Moines Register observed recently, the amazing technological revolution in agriculture through publicly-sponsored research and education has produced bigger and bigger crops with fewer and fewer hands. There were 11 million farm workers in 1940; now there are 7 million. In 1960 alone more than 800,000 people left the farms. The farm population has been cut in half in the last 20 years though its continued fall is expected to be slower. Out of 185 million people, less than 15 million now live on farms and a lot of them are not really farmers. With a relatively few big operators responsible for the bulk of our mighty production it seems clear that there are still too many farmers and too much land being farmed despite the total population spurt.

There is a very thin chance that something can be salvaged from [the] catastrophe. A move to extend the emergency feed grain bill has already been made. With not unpalatable modifications the Senate has already passed—by four votes—the Administration measure. It would go into conference with any substitute the House might pass. But what the country should remember is that 167 Republicans and 48 Democrats voted to continue the unpardonable mismanagement and waste of American farm abundance.

Washington Reports:

Mass Transit Legislation Seen As Answer to City Traffic Jam

CONSTRUCTION OF MORE super-highways and parking lots will not alone solve the problem of rush hour traffic congestion in America's urban areas, Rep. Leonor Sullivan (D-Mo.) and Rep. William B. Widnall (R-N. J.) agreed in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Both are members of the House subcommittee which approved the mass transportation bill.

"Continued traffic congestion threatens the welfare of both cities and suburbs," Mrs. Sullivan declared. "It affects retail sales and real estate revenues, causes urban blight. Traffic congestion already costs this country some $5 billion a year in lowered tax revenues, in added fuel costs, loss of time, air pollution and other ways."

"The unfortunate thing is that many people think the cities should be nothing much more than huge parking lots surrounding business offices," Widnall asserted. "We have seen right here in Washington what happens when we provide more parking. The impact of passenger car vehicles on the streets has increased, the rush hours are worse. Cars that used to take 4 or 5 persons to work are now taking only the driver."

Both House members thought that bus and other present mass transportation should be improved "with modern, up-to-date equipment, and lower fares." Mrs. Sullivan said that more public transportation should be available at all hours of the day, including Saturdays and Sundays, as many witnesses testified, she reported, "We cannot do this out of the fare box alone. There must be some form of financial help."

WIDNALL SAID he thought it "imperative to have something like a monorail or a combination subway and elevated," with the proposed legislation not used only to improve bus transportation.

The 1961 Housing Bill provided funds for demonstration projects, and the 1962 measure will also provide for such projects, as well as setting up a $500 million three-year grant to municipalities.

Both representatives expected some opposition to the measure on the House floor, particularly from the more rural areas which regard it as a "big-city" bill. The objections, Mrs. Sullivan said, are most likely to be aimed at the financing provisions. Both urged representatives of non-urban areas to realize that the legislation is needed for the economic health of all parts of a state and that the coordinated aid necessary can be realized only under federal auspices.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

(Willard Shelton, whose commentary on the Washington scene normally appears in this space, is on vacation.)

THE LONG ROAD toward a "fair share" vote for our urban citizens is being traveled at a far more rapid pace than most observers had thought possible.

It was on Mar. 26 of this year that the United States Supreme Court handed down its epochal decision in the Tennessee case, which placed our judicial system squarely in the dispute to secure for city voters guarantees for equal protection of the laws, as provided by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

It was generally believed that the courts would take their own time in enforcing steps that must be taken by state legislatures to assure this. Many compared it with the high court's "all deliberate speed" ruling in the famed school desegregation case.

On the urban vs. rural vote issue, an almost immediate impact has been felt in 10 states and action is expected in many more.

An unusual example is Georgia. There was no need of involvement with the legislature: a three judge federal court ruled Georgia's unit vote system was unconstitutional. Use of it was forbidden in the Sept. 12 primary election.

This is expected to lead to a far more liberal state legislature. In addition, it sets up major obstacles against former Gov. Marvin Griffin, a reactionary arch-segregationist seeking another term as chief executive. It has given his moderate opponent, Carl Sanders, unexpected hope of victory.

Also, Rep. James C. Davis of Atlanta, an ultra conservative, has held on to his seat for eight terms, although he lost the majority vote in his district frequently. The county unit system put him in. His re-election now appears doubtful.

IN NEW YORK STATE, rural Republican control of the legislature may be upset by the high court ruling.

The Supreme Court held that a lower court must determine whether there was an "arbitrary impairment of votes by means of invidiously discriminatory geographical classification."

In layman's language, this means that the case was being returned to a three-judge district court to decide whether there has been a violation of the 14th Amendment.

Although Gov. Rockefeller, who pushed through a lopsided gerrymandering of the state's congressional districts last year to aid the GOP, had steadfastly refused to call a special session of the legislature to consider reapportionment, as urged by Democrats, he may be forced to do this by the district court.

Michigan is another state where there has been some decisive action. August Scholle, president of the Michigan AFL-CIO, had brought suit charging unfair apportionment of seats. The Michigan Supreme Court turned down his plea, but the United States Supreme Court referred the case back to the state high court for reconsideration in light of the Supreme Court's Tennessee ruling.

Maryland, under pressure from Circuit Judge O. Bowie Duckett, has moved. A special session of the state legislature, called by Gov. Millard Tawes, gave 16 additional seats to urban areas for the lower house. The urban areas still have a disproportionate representation and there has been no change in the state senate.

In Alabama, the District Court ruled that if the state legislature did not carry out its first redistricting since 1901 the court, itself, would step in and do the job. A deadline of July 16 was established.

Tennessee, where the first case broke and opened the hole in the dike of rural domination, also has seen some action, although it remains a question whether it will satisfy the courts. The legislature gave some additional strength to the urban representation, but an unfair share of the seats is still held by sparsely settled rural districts.

In Kansas and Vermont the courts called for reapportionment. In Idaho the court said that a 1951 redistricting was not clearly violating the principle of equal protection.—(PAI)

AMERICA'S URBAN AREAS are being choked to death by rush hour congestion, but the proposed mass transportation bill offers hope of improvement, Rep. William B. Widnall (R-N. J.), left, and Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D.-Mo.) declared in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People, heard on more than 500 stations.

How to Buy:

Cheap Fillers Added to Meat Used to Deceive Consumers

By Sidney Margolius

HOW MUCH FAT is in the hamburger you buy? How much do you pay for turkey and how much for bread crumbs in those new pre-stuffed frozen turkeys, and how much for added water in processed meats?

All around the country, worried local officials are battling against a rising tendency of processors and retailers to add cheap fillers to expensive meats.

In Kansas, Evan Wright, head of the state's food and drug department, recently told the Association of Food and Drug Officials that false ads and misbranding are "more prevalent than ever." New Jersey marketing officials have been having a rough time trying to get meat packers and retailers to reveal the net weight of the turkey itself in the pre-stuffed birds.

In Philadelphia, officials report the same problem. In Detroit, St. Paul, Harrisburg, Sioux City and other towns, local officials are reviewing local laws and standards that butchers must observe in making hamburger. In New York City, marketing officials are making a determined and noticeably successful fight against short-weighting, fat hamburger, watered meats and other deceptive meat-selling practices.

After investigations by its Markets Department showed hamburger often contained 40 to 50 percent fat and sometimes as much as 80 percent, New York City passed a law forbidding more than 30 percent. This is the same as the federal standard for hamburger sold interstate.

New York now also requires that butchers grind customer-selected cuts right out in front where the buyer can observe without difficulty. Now Markets Commissioner Albert Pacetta has asked the City Council for another law limiting the amount of added water in processed meats to 10 percent.

SPEARHEADING that city's drive against deceptive practices is a woman investigator for the Markets Department's Bureau of Weights and Measures—Mrs. Esther Hendler. Using various disguises, this determined woman has carried on a store-to-store campaign to expose deceptive practices in the sale of meat.

Mrs. Hendler feels that the danger of hamburger with excessive fat is not only to your pocketbook, but possibly to your health as well. She points out that pork scraps added to hamburger can be risky, especially if the buyer cooks the hamburger rare.

As this department has previously reported, butchers sometimes use meat blood to make fat hamburger look rare. Mrs. Hendler reports she often has found supplies of blood in butcher shops hidden in old coffee cans, juice cans and other innocent-looking containers. She has even found barrels of ground fat in butchers' refrigerators. The ground fat is kept in a press because it turns red under pressure and will look more like ground meat.

In fact, Mrs. Hendler advises consumers that if already-ground hamburger looks very red, she herself gets suspicious. Some fat should show through even in high-quality hamburger.

The issue of pre-stuffed turkeys is an important one to the public. If the packers and retailers are allowed to omit showing the net weight of the turkey itself, the way is open for selling other combinations without stating the weight of the meat. Other examples include combination packages of hamburgers and french fries, and bracciola (a cut of round) packaged with cheese.

Markets officials in other cities are watching a test case brought by the New York City Markets Department against Swift & Co. and a local meat market. In this case Mrs. Hendler bought a pre-stuffed turkey that was marked seven pounds, four ounces, and cost $2.93, or 39 cents a pound. The department found that the weight of the turkey itself was five pounds, two ounces, and the bread stuffing weighed two pounds, two ounces.

There is nothing illegal about combination packages as long as the stores continue to state how much actual meat the combination contains. Otherwise it is impossible for you to know how much actual meat or poultry you are getting. In the example of the test-case turkey, the bread stuffing comprised 29 percent of the total weight.

DETERMINED LOCAL OFFICIALS can do a great deal to end short-weighting and other deceptions, the New York experience shows. The largest number of short-weighting cases found by that city were in poultry. Deceptions often are found in the sale of fresh fish too, Mrs. Hendler advises. Among such flagrant recent cases were the sale of ocean perch, worth 10 to 20 cents a pound, sold as red snapper for 59 cents a pound, and Mississippi spoonbill fish sold as sturgeon.

Most frequent cases of meat-market deceptions are found in low-income neighborhoods, and especially in stores that advertise unusually low prices, Mrs. Hendler reports. But instances of butchers using blood to color hamburger have been found in more well-to-do as well as low-income neighborhoods.

Nor can you always rely on the fact that you're a regular customer, Mrs. Hendler asserts. She reports one meat dealer bawled out his clerk when he was caught short-weighting, because the clerks had been instructed not to short-weight strangers.

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

It's a Most Dramatic Outfit, But It's Just Not for You, Dear

By Jane Goodsell

THE FASHION MAGAZINES speak a language of their own that is, to the uninitiated, as incomprehensible as Chaucerian English. For the benefit of those who can't understand this strange and esoteric tongue, I have worked out a handy vocabulary guide to clarify the situation:

Amusing: The sort of thing you can wear once.
Classic: Never exactly in or out of style (British tweeds, gray flannel, Scotch plaid, sensible shoes).
Gentled lines, easy fit: Baggy.
Flowing silhouette: The skirt is gathered.
Tubular silhouette: The skirt isn't gathered.
Accessorized: Worn with.
Fluid, supple: Clinging.
Understated: Plain.
Feminine: Fancy.
Demure: Little round collar.
Dramatic, dashing, exciting: Unwearable unless you look like a model.
Muted shades: Dull colors.
Misty shades: Pastels.
Breathtaking shades: Bright colors.
Diaphanous: Chiffon.
Limpid: Limp, saggy.
Sheer: You can see through it.
The New Look: They've moved the waistline again.
Brief, willowy: Tight, skimpy.
Taffy, taupe, chutney, cafe au lait: Brown.
Simulated: Looks like something it isn't (fake leather, leopard).
Graceful: Full-skirted.
Basic: You're supposed to wear pearls with it.
Nubby: Scratchy.
Chalky touches: Trimmed with white.
Chunky: Clumsy.

ILGWU Songs Still Timely:

'Pins and Needles' Revived on Records

ON THE NIGHT of Nov. 27, 1937, a group of garment workers who had been rehearsing for many months gave their first public performance of a topical musical revue which they planned to stage on weekends only for fellow members of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. Between weekends, these performers made their living working as cutters, pressers, operators, general help in the garment shops along New York's Seventh Ave.

But the word soon spread that something special was happening at Labor Stage where the ILGWU was producing one of its unique educational activities. The critics came to see. They liked what they saw and said so. Society matrons, Broadway stars, political figures began to compete with unionists in bidding for tickets.

Suddenly, "Pins and Needles" was a smash hit on Broadway. Its irreverent quips, its amateur charm, its anti-platitudinous patter, its barbs directed at domestic and foreign phonies, above all its healthy good spirits set to lilting tunes with sharp, singable lyrics by Harold Rome drew standing room audiences.

FOR 25 YEARS, the mark of the oldtimer in the labor movement has been the remembrance of "Pins and Needles" numbers, the ability to hum the melody of "Sunday In the Park" or "One Big Union for Two." Many thousands who saw the show as performed by one of its four companies, either in New York or on national tour, cherish the memory of an unforgettable night in the theatre.

Now, a quarter of a century later, the lovely, invigorating songs of "Pins and Needles" ring out again—not from the stage but from a new recording done with zip and imagination by Columbia Records and just issued in an attractive album.

The album cover is a striking, three-dimensional color photograph of a garment worker's work box. Inside the album there are articles by Harold Rome, who supervised the recording as well as participated in it, and ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky.

Producers Elizabeth Lauer and Charles Burr have done a prize-winning job in getting a recording in which every word is fully articulated, for the words, reflecting Harold Rome's special gift, are as fresh and pertinent today as they were when first heard.

"Doing the Reactionary" is out of today's headlines as is "Not Cricket to Picket." The 15 numbers, ranging from blues to ballad, spiritual to patter song, include also "Sing Me a Song With Social Significance," "Nobody Makes a Pass at Me," "Four Little Angels of Peace," and "Mene, Mene, Tekel."

Soloists include Barbara Streisand of "I Can Get It For You Wholesale," and Rose Marie Jun, Elise Bretton and Jack Carroll. The attractive instrumental quartet is headed by pianist Stan Freeman.

"Pins and Needles," is back again on record, for every union man and woman in the nation.—Leon Stein.

"No competition whatsoever, the boss said."

Appeal Rejected:

L-G Subpena Powers Upheld by Top Court

The U.S. Supreme Court has allowed to stand a lower court ruling that the secretary of labor has authority under the Landrum-Griffin Act to subpena records on which reports filed under the law are based.

The high court refused to hear an appeal from the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia upholding the secretary's powers under the law as it concluded its spring term with a series of decisions on labor matters, anti-trust laws and a wide range of other questions.

The appeal was made to the high court by the Teamsters, who refused to supply books and records for a 22-month period on which its official reports under the law were filed. Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg obtained a court order to enforce his directive that the union comply with his request. The Teamsters challenged his authority and the constitutionality of the law as it involves the power of Congress to require recording of internal union affairs.

The Supreme Court also rejected on technical grounds a challenge to a lower court decision that employes who have accrued seniority rights under a contract which has expired are entitled to follow their jobs when the employer relocates the plant where they worked.

The court did not rule on the merits of the case but in effect allowed to stand the appeals court decision that workers had earned vested rights by compliance with terms of a contract. The case involved the Glidden Co.'s Durkee Famous Foods Div. which closed a plant at Elmhurst, N. Y., and moved to Bethlehem, Pa. The company had a contract with Teamster Local 852.

In other decisions the court:

- Held that the 1950 amendment of the Clayton Act aimed at corporate mergers was designed to curb at an early stage any tendencies towards concentration in industry. It specifically and unanimously held that acquisition by the country's fourth largest shoe manufacturer, Brown Shoe Co. of St. Louis, of the largest national family shoe chain, G. R. Kinney Co., violated the anti-trust act.
- Ruled unanimously that the criminal provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act apply to individual corporate officers.
- Held in a 6 to 1 decision that the reading of an official prayer at the start of each day in New York public schools is in violation of the First Amendment of the Constitution prohibiting "an establishment of religion."
- Agreed to review in the fall seven convictions arising from sit-in campaigns by southern Negro students.
- Refused to reconsider its decision of May 14 that affirmed the contempt of Congress conviction of Maurice A. Hutcheson, president of the Carpenters, who was sentenced to six months imprisonment and fined $500.

RECENTLY ORGANIZED Civil Rights Committee of the Building Service Employes is shown above at a meeting in New York. Left to right are Thomas Fox, Detroit; Edward T. Sullivan, Boston; Sec.-Treas. George Fairchild; Pres. David Sullivan; Committee Chairman Charles C. Levy, Pittsburgh; Assistant Dir. Donald Slaiman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights; Committee Sec. Thomas R. Donahue; Thomas C. Young, New York, and James Kemp, Chicago.

Canada's Highest Court Backs Hotel Strikers

Toronto, Ont.—The Supreme Court of Canada has written the epitaph on the 11-month Royal York Hotel strike by ruling that the parent Canadian Pacific Railway had no right to fire 600 strikers last July.

Although the walkout was settled in April and only 61 strikers still have to be rehired, the court verdict was hailed by Ontario labor as a major victory.

In a unanimous verdict upholding the right to strike in Ontario, the high court ruled that the CPR could not fire the strikers because the walkout was legal under common law and not forbidden by the Ontario Labor Relations Act.

The court said that the Ontario act provided that while the strike was in progress, the employes on strike did not cease to be employes of the hotel. It added that the act prevented the hotel from firing them "by reason only of the employe ceasing to work as the result of the strike."

It rejected the CPR argument that the walkout was a breach of personal contracts the workers had with the hotel. The court said requiring workers to terminate employment before going on strike "made nonsense" of a labor act that expressly preserves the employer-employe relationship.

Earlier, the Supreme Court of Ontario and the Appeals Court had repudiated the judgment of Toronto Magistrate T. S. Elmore, who had ruled the Royal York was entitled to fire the strikers.

Onofrio Zambri, business manager of Local 299, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, which conducted the marathon strike, said the verdict of the courts was a victory for labor. He said it preserves the right to strike for labor as a whole although it would not affect the present "satisfactory" relationship between the local and the Royal York.

Douglas Hamilton, secretary-treasurer of the Ontario Federation of Labor, said the decision vindicated labor's stand.

The strikers were fired last July when they refused a hotel ultimatum to return to work or else. The courts have ordered appropriate penalties imposed against the hotel by Magistrate Elmore.

Automation's 'Myths' Seen Exploded

A decade of experience with automation has exploded many "myths and platitudes" about its ability to produce new jobs, the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has declared.

The IUD, in a 28-page study, quoted 1955 predictions of business leaders who foresaw "a continuing shortage of labor for the next 10 years" and the creation of "whole new industries."

"The economic behavior of our nation over the past decade has made a mockery of these and similar predictions," the study said. "We have been witness to the paradox of higher levels of output and productive potential while the ranks of the unemployed grow."

The IUD said only the federal government can acquire the know-how and has the resources to deal with rapid technological change. It called for creation of a permanent commission on technological change which would make recommendations to Congress and to the President "to insure that the social gains and social costs of technological progress are fairly shared."

Legislation also is needed, it stressed, to improve the jobless pay system, expand educational and retraining opportunities.

The IUD said labor and management in a more limited way can "cushion the impact of automation on people and jobs" by including in contracts supplemental jobless pay, early retirement, seniority and transfer rights, retraining and shorter hours.

Drive for Full Equality Mounting, JLC Finds

Unity House, Pa.—A continued rise in pressure from Negro groups seeking full equality now was reported to the executive board of the Jewish Labor Committee's Trade Union Council for Human Rights by JLC Field Dir. Emanuel Muravchik.

Muravchik's report, which also discussed the different forms this development is taking in the North and South, was one of the highlights of the board's three-day meeting, which was presided over by Charles S. Zimmerman, a vice president of the Ladies' Garment Workers and a member of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who was unable to attend, sent a wire thanking the council and its staff "for the dedicated, skillful and most effective services furthering the AFL-CIO civil rights action program and policies."

"In our drive for fair practices," he said, "what each of us can do alone can be done much better if we work together with each other and with all fair-minded people in the community."

The executive board examined specific moves that might be made to combat discrimination on the job, in apprenticeship training and in upgrading, and discussed steps to fight racial and religious bias in the community.

Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights described AFL-CIO efforts to end the use of segregated facilities by labor organizations in the South, and told about formation of the southern advisory council to the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, which is made up of the executive officers of state labor bodies in the South.

Extremist right wing groups were denounced as anti-labor and anti-social welfare. The council condemned the new wave of Soviet anti-Semitism and charged that arrests and executions of Jews for so-called economic crimes proved that the Soviet Union "is catering to the lowest form of anti-Semitic sentiment among the population."

Named to fill vacancies on the board were Administrative Dir. Jacob Clayman of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Executive Sec. Hy Faine of the Musical Artists; Sec.-Treas. I. Gold of the Rubber Workers; Pres. Harry Spodick of the Jewelry Workers; Sec.-Treas. Jack Wieselberg of the Leather Goods, Plastics & Novelty Workers; Leo Kramer, assistant to the president of the State, County & Municipal Workers, and Kalmen Kaplansky, Canadian Labor Congress international affairs director.

New York City Outlaws Imported Strikebreakers

New York—The nation's largest city has made it a crime for an employer to import professional strikebreakers to replace employes during a legal strike or lockout.

An anti-strikebreaker ordinance, strongly supported by the city's labor movement and by Mayor Robert F. Wagner, won unanimous passage by the City Council. Patterned after similar laws enacted by a number of states and municipalities, the New York ordinance:

- Prohibits third parties, other than licensed employment agencies, from providing strike replacements to an employer.
- Prohibits anyone, including employment agencies, from bringing strikebreakers into the city to replace workers on strike. The measure defines a strikebreaker as any person "who customarily and repeatedly offers himself for employment for the duration of a strike or lockout."
- Sets a maximum penalty of one year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

Printing trade and newspaper unions have spearheaded the nationwide drive for "citizens' job protection laws" barring professional strikebreakers and agencies of so-called "scab-herders" which furnish strikebreakers to publishers. A statewide anti-strikebreaker bill passed one house of the New York legislature this year but died in the Senate.

'Freedom from Hunger' Goal of 40 Nations

Scientists, farmers, businessmen and workers have teamed up to establish Freedom from Hunger Foundations in 40 countries, James G. Patton, head of the foundation in the United States, reported in an interview on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service radio program heard on the ABC network.

Patton, who is president of the National Farmers Union, noted that the foundations have been set up as non-governmental organizations under the Food & Agricultural Organization of the United Nations.

"Pres. Kennedy set up a Food for Peace Council, which is a governmental instrument, and that Council in turn created a committee which set up the Freedom from Hunger Foundation," he recalled. The board of trustees includes AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Patton said the foundation will help distribute U.S. food surpluses to needy persons abroad, but that helping underdeveloped countries to increase their food production "is the most important part of our task." He said the foundation will seek to develop self-help projects "which will come to us mainly from the FAO. Most of the underdeveloped countries are dependent on agriculture, and this makes our work all the more important."

"If we can help these countries get a better living, then they can begin to industrialize. Since we are associated in this effort with foundations in Germany, England, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, Canada and other countries, we think this is one of the most promising developments of the decade."

Vince Cardon, former director of the agricultural research division of the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture and later director-general of the FAO, will head the U.S. foundation's projects committee. Associated with Cardon, said Patton, will be scientists in all agricultural fields, including soil, forestry, fertilizer, plant nutrients, food processing and preservation.

The foundation will be supported by private contributions, he emphasized.

OUTSTANDING SERVICE to the elderly won awards for Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther, former Sen. Herbert H. Lehman and James P. Dumpson, New York City welfare commissioner, from the Retired Members Local of Dist. 65, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union at a New York rally for 700 retirees. Left to right, Dist. 65 Pres. David Livingston; Dumpson, Reuther, and Retirement-Community Service Dir. Jack Ossofsky of the district.

'Political Witch Doctors' Attacked by Reuther

New York—With a blast at the "unholy alliance of the little men of big business and the American Medical Association," UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said that the labor movement is totally dedicated to the struggle for the principle of health care for the aged through social security.

Reuther spoke to 700 members of Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union Dist. 65, who gave him one of three Senior 65ers awards for outstanding service to America's elderly. The other recipients were former Sen. Herbert H. Lehman and New York City Welfare Commissioner James P. Dumpson. The ceremonies were held at the union's headquarters.

The Senior 65ers awards have been given for the past six years by the retired members of Dist. 65, largest RWDSU affiliate. The retirees, who number more than 1,000, are active in local and national community projects. They have been in the forefront of nationwide efforts to enact the Anderson-King bill, frequently visiting their senators and representatives in Washington and at home to press for this legislation.

Presiding over the award session was Pres. David Livingston of Dist. 65. Jack Ossofsky, director of the union's retirement plan and community services, also spoke.

Reuther said labor's quarrel was not with individual doctors, but with "the small group of doctors who control the AMA." "These men don't practice medicine, they manipulate the policies of their association—I call them political witch doctors," he said.

Dumpson was cited for extending the facilities of his department to New York's elderly. He praised the "judgment, knowledge and understanding of senior citizens" and urged that all retired New Yorkers participate fully in the life of the community.

Lehman, who was prevented from attending because of illness, sent a telegram of greeting.

The former New York governor and senator, now past 80, was honored for setting an example of vigor for all Americans of advanced age

Curtis to Face Lodge In Bay State Primary

A primary battle for the Republican senatorial nomination in Massachusetts was assured when Rep. Laurence Curtis (R-Mass.) announced he would enter the September contest against George Cabot Lodge.

Lodge won the nomination support of the state GOP convention earlier this month, but under Massachusetts law the nomination is finally settled in the primary. A primary battle will take place also for the Democratic senatorial nomination between Edward Kennedy and Edward McCormick. Kennedy won the support of the state Democratic convention.

In Indiana, party conventions nominated Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R) and Birch E. Bayh, Jr. (D), former speaker of the Indiana House, to fight it out in November. Capehart, seeking re-election, won party support easily. Bayh won in a three-way contest on the first ballot.

In North Dakota, Sen. Milton Young (R) easily won renomination in the state's primary and will face Democrat William Lanier in November.

In South Dakota the death of Sen. Francis Case, who won renomination in a recent primary, and would have faced Democratic nominee George McGovern in the fall, brought out a number of contenders for both the interim appointment and the nomination.

In South Carolina, in a runoff Democratic primary for the 2nd Dist. congressional nomination, Albert M. Watson, leader of Democrats for Nixon-Lodge in 1960, won out over a Kennedy leader, Dr. Frank Owens, by a slim margin. Watson will face Rep. Floyd Spence, a Democrat turned Republican, in the November election.

In Idaho, Orval Hanson won the GOP nomination in the 2nd Dist. in a runoff election and will face Rep. Ralph Harding in the fall.

Collective Bargaining Report:

Unions Warned on Pitfalls In Work Standards System

Union officers and members have learned so much about the time study man with the stopwatch and how he operates that factory management is replacing this time-honored technique with new work measurement systems.

One of the most popular is "standard data," the development, use and limitations of which are discussed in the current Collective Bargaining Report, a feature of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

"It is not the method used by management in setting production standards that is the prime concern of unions," the article warns, "but rather the effect of a method on workloads and earnings.

"Unions must protect workers against unreasonable workloads, and ensure that workers receive equitable compensation for their efforts. To accomplish this, union representatives must be equipped to meet these 'newer' techniques just as they have learned to handle stopwatch time study problems."

The organized development and use of standard data is rather new, the article points out, but the principles upon which it is based have long been recognized. It recalls that in early piecework shops the price of a new job was often determined by comparing the job to other jobs in the shop. If an old job could be found which was "similar" to the new job, "the old job price was established for the new job."

"In modern applications of standard data," the article explains, "the comparisons are based on time rather than money and parts of jobs (called work elements) are usually the basis for comparison rather than the whole job. In its simplest form, the use of standard data involves applying the times for work elements of prior time studies to similar work elements on jobs set up in the future."

Pitfalls Noted

The Federationist discusses in some detail the claims made for standard data by its proponents and points out the pitfalls for unions and their members around which contract clauses should erect safeguards.

"When management uses stopwatch time studies of individual operations as the means of setting production standards, unions may question through the grievance procedure any individual standard without questioning or threatening the total system," it notes. "Adjustments may be made by management in any individual time study without fear the adjustment will cause any chain reaction.

"But when unions question a production standard set from standard data, a different situation exists. If an investigation shows the time for one or more elements taken from the tables of standard data are wrong, then every job which contains the same elements also may have an incorrect standard . . . Agreements on adjustments to production standards are harder to arrive at."

Many unions, on the basis of experience, oppose the use of standard data in any form, the article says, and have negotiated contract clauses guaranteeing the establishment of production standards only through stopwatch time studies of each operation.

"When proper safeguards are negotiated," the article adds, "when management fully recognizes the limitations of standard data and when the data is properly and carefully developed and applied, then standard data may provide an economical and at the same time 'acceptable' means for setting time standards."

NMU Gives 12th Term To Curran

New York—Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the National Maritime Union has been returned to office for his 12th term in a national referendum conducted on all coasts, the Great Lakes and major rivers by the Honest Ballot Association.

Unopposed, Curran got 19,697 votes of the 24,107 cast. Also unopposed was David J. Ramos, former vice president, who was elected secretary-treasurer with 16,992 votes.

For the first time all officers were elected for four-year terms instead of the usual two years. Secret ballot voting was conducted in the union's 30 port headquarters betwen Apr. 1 and May 31.

Other winners: for vice president, Shannon J. Wall and Rick Miller, both re-elected, and Mel Barisic, former NMU national representative; for national representative, Robert Nesbitt and James J. Martin, re-elected, and Peter Bocker, former San Pedro, Calif., field patrolman.

Edward J. Pogor, Brooklyn, won re-election as New York port agent over Charles Torres, 12,290 to 4,997. Other winners as port agent were Louis Parise of Philadelphia, Layton Overstreet of Mobile, Ala., and John T. Hunt of Boston, re-elected; Leo Strassman of Baltimore, John T. Kelly of Galveston, William D. Trussa of St. Louis, Joseph V. Reddy of Pittsburgh, James Q. Rice of Norfolk, Va.; S. D. George of New Orleans, William Neill of Chicago, Jesse C. Turner of Port Arthur, Tex., and Kirby-Smith McDowell, Houston.

Apprenticeships Held Vital to Future Jobs

Kiamesha Lake, N. Y.—Apprenticeship training provides the best assurance of putting to work hundreds of thousands of Americans who are losing or face loss of their jobs through automation, employment and manpower experts from eight states agreed at the 18th Eastern Seaboard Apprenticeship Conference here.

Some 600 delegates to the week-long meeting represented management; unions in the building and construction trades, electronics, public utilities, graphic arts, manufacturing industries, culinary arts, and the automotive trades and state and federal labor departments.

Training programs to help meet future skilled manpower needs were examined in a dozen different panels on subjects ranging from automation to tests used in the selection of apprentices and trainees.

The conference focused attention on the Manpower Development & Training Act, which goes into effect July 1. John S. McCauley, the Labor Dept.'s director of manpower development and utilization, urged industry to expand training programs currently in effect or in the planning stage.

"The social cost of action on automation must be borne by the entire nation," McCauley declared. "What is needed is a long-range approach to resolving the problems of automation. From what we have observed about the effects of technological change, it is important to get a broad base of training and then adjust, rather than specialized training and then discover that one is unable to adjust to technological change."

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.) called for a broad attack on every level to meet the challenge of automation, noting that while business conditions have improved, the past year has seen "a troublesome stickiness in the unemployment rate."

"It is my opinion that the single most important factor in this picture is the emergence of automation, which is now with us to a degree never dreamed of even five years ago," he said.

William A. Kraengel, coordinator of evening trade schools for the New York City Board of Education, urged industry and labor to pool their resources and effort in the training of apprentices and journeymen. He held that industry has not cooperated when it comes to public education in this regard, with the result that there is now a "wild scramble to keep up."

Pension Fund Accounts for IBEW 'Assets'

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has moved to correct recent newspaper accounts that it is the "wealthiest union" in the U.S. with assets of more than $111 million and yearly "receipts" of more than $65 million.

To set the record straight, the IBEW made these comments on news stories based on a report by the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports on "Union Financial Statistics, 1959-60":

Total assets of $111.131 million listed by the newspapers include pension and death benefit funds of more than $102 million. The remaining $9.059 million is in the general fund and available for all operating expenses of the 771,000-member IBEW.

Actual per capita receipts, turned over to the general fund, were a little more than $6.6 million and not the $65.3 million reported in the newspapers. The difference was laid to the fact that government bonds, in which pension funds have been invested, matured last year and were reported as receipts at their face value.

Every year, the IBEW said, it pays death benefits of more than $3 million and pension benefits of more than $10 million. Most of its assets are held in trust and cannot be used for any purpose except to pay pension and death benefits.

Desegregation Laws Given IUD Approval

Legislation to speed enforcement of the Supreme Court school desegregation decision has been urged by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. in a letter to a House Education & Labor subcommittee.

IUD Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey wrote Subcommittee Chairman Dominick V. Daniels (D-N. J.) that bills which would authorize the Attorney General to file suit to compel desegregation are needed because of the "snail's pace" at which desegregation is being carried out.

'Not Suitable' in Jobless Era:

Canadian Labor Hits Tight Money Policy

Ottawa, Ont.—Measures proposed by Canada's Conservative government to meet the so-called "exchange emergency" are likely to increase already serious unemployment and hasten a recession, a top Canadian labor leader has declared.

Sec.-Treas. Donald McDonald of the Canadian Labor Congress said the new government policy is, "in some respects, not suited to a period of unemployment such as we are now in. Certain of these measures will probably result in increased unemployment and a slower rate of economic growth."

Within a week after being re-elected to power, but with representation slashed to 116 seats in the 265-seat Parliament, the Conservatives announced steps aimed at improving Canada's precarious financial position. A count of the servicemen's vote, which strongly favored the Liberals, cost the Conservatives two additional seats, including one formerly held by a cabinet minister.

Although Prime Minister John Diefenbaker in a radio and television address to the nation stated that the exchange emergency had been "precipitated into proportions . . . only in very recent days," Canada's financial crisis has been well known to the government and its advisers for months.

Foreign exchange reserves were down to $1.1 billion at June 24 from $1.5 billion at May 31 and from $2.1 billion at Jan. 1. On May 2 the Canadian dollar was pegged at 92.5 cents American and was held at the Intl. Monetary Funds fluctuation of 1 percent only with great difficulty.

In an attempt to retain financial stability and regain international monetary confidence, the Conservatives have now:

- Fixed the Bank of Canada's lending rate at 6 percent, up from the floating rate that stood at 5.17 percent last week.
- Revised government spending estimates downward by $250 million, with cuts most likely in defense.
- Announced tariff surcharges of 15 percent on luxury goods, 10 percent on a wide range of consumer goods and 5 percent on a group of less significant imports.
- Cut the duty-free exemption on Canadian tourist purchases in the United States to $75 and on overseas tourist purchases to $100. Both formerly were $300.

McDonald said the CLC "laments the fact that the present crisis could have been largely avoided" if the government had not abandoned the free exchange rate in the first place and if it had pursued expansionary internal policies in recent years to combat high unemployment and a slow rate of economic growth.

Nevertheless, with the crisis at hand, he said the CLC recognizes the need for "strong measures" and "reluctantly" supported the higher tariffs and limitations on duty-free imports.

It views "with grave apprehension," however, the return to a tighter monetary policy and higher interest rates and the announced cut in government expenditures, McDonald declared, adding:

"It must be remembered that these restrictive internal measures are being imposed at a time when we do not have full employment, when our economic growth rate is less than satisfactory, and when we are being warned by many economists that our economy may be headed very shortly for another recession.

"Consequently, it is only too easy to draw the conclusion that such restrictive measures will only aggravate the unemployment problem and hasten a recession. To the extent that this happens, such restrictive measures can only be self-defeating. They will deter long-range foreign investments coming to Canada, which the government is presumably trying to encourage for the purpose of relieving pressure on the Canadian dollar."

He said the CLC also hoped that the emergency "will not be allowed to interfere with Canadian support of Pres. Kennedy's trade liberalization program."

"Emergency or no emergency, the top priorities for Canada are still economic growth, full employment and trade expansion," he concluded.

APPRENTICESHIP CONTEST sponsored by Florida State Conference of Bricklayers brought these competitors to Jacksonville. Prizes were awarded to winners in bricklaying, plastering and tile-setting divisions. Contestants are shown with the union's first vice president, William R. Conners, center, and Florida State Conference Pres. F. W. T. Smith and Sec.-Treas. Ted Harris.

AFL-CIO Supports School Aid For Migrant Farm Families

The AFL-CIO has urged a House subcommittee to act promptly on educational aid for migrant farm workers and their children and so help lift them "out of a vicious circle of ignorance and poverty."

The Senate-passed bill would provide aid to the states for regular school attendance, for summer schools and for planning and pilot projects.

The Kennedy Administration threw its strong support behind the bill as "not a cure-all" but "a beginning" toward solving migratory worker problems. The AFL-CIO Teachers and a number of religious and social action groups joined in support of the legislation.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, which has opposed all federal action in the farm labor area, testified against the bill as "undesirable" federal aid to education.

AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair, testifying before a House Education subcommittee headed by Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N.Y.), pointed out "too few of us are aware of the nation's shameful neglect of the education of migratory agricultural workers' children."

Fair said American educators have recognized the need for a school year with a minimum of 180 days. The better school systems have school years of 200 days. Yet, he said, a school attendance officer from Florida reported migratory children receive a maximum of 100 to 120 days per year.

Federal 'Stimulation' Essential

It is no surprise, Fair continued, that the 1960 White House Conference on Children and Youth showed the children of migrant farm workers to be far below the school achievement of fourth graders. By the time they adjust to a school environment, he added, they must move on to another school.

Samuel V. Merrick, Labor Dept. special assistant for legislative affairs, reviewed special projects set up in various states and said that despite constructive action of some states and communities "general improvement awaits federal stimulation and assistance."

He pointed out studies showed nearly three-fourths of migrant children in schools are enrolled in grades below normal for their ages.

Selma Borchardt, vice-president and Washington representative of the Teachers, also testified in support of the bill.

One section of the proposed bill provides $2 million to help states finance costs growing out of regular attendance of migrant children. It provides a 100 percent payment for the first two school years and 50 percent for the three years following.

Another section provides $300,000 a year for summer schools, with the aid covering 100 percent of costs initially and 50 percent thereafter. Other sections provide $250,000 a year for five years for summer school planning grants and $200,000 a year for five years for pilot projects for adult education of migrants.

Coast Building Unions Win New Contracts

(Continued from Page 1)

for a 10-cent hourly pay hike now and 15 cents more in 1963 and again in 1964. The old scale was $3.22 an hour.

The rest of the 70-cent increase was made up of contributions to funds for vacations and pensions, benefits the Laborers have never had before.

The critical negotiations in Southern California involved the Carpenters, who received a 10-cent hike effective July 1; a hike of 5 cents hourly in the employers' present 10-cent contribution to a vacation fund on Aug. 1; and an 8-cent boost in the present 10-cent contribution to health and welfare programs starting next Jan. 1.

On June 1, 1963, the employers will put up another 20 cents an hour, giving the Carpenters the option of using 5 cents of that amount for fringe benefits. On June 1, 1964, another 20 cents will be paid, with the same option to the union for 5 cents on fringe benefits.

Similar terms were worked out for the Cement Masons, but the first 10-cent boost July 1 will go to a vacation plan, while the Jan. 1 raise of 10 cents will be used to start a pension plan.

IUE Creates New Civic Affairs Dept.

A new Civic Affairs Dept. headed by Edmond F. Rovner has been established by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Pres. James B. Carey has announced.

The department will coordinate the unions' political action, legislation and civil rights programs, Carey said. It was created, he added, "for the purpose of accelerating IUE's efforts and making its efforts more effective."

Pact Urged to Expand Seamen's Port Services

New York—The creation of an international body, "operating under the umbrella of an international agreement," to facilitate the development of seamen's services in world ports was proposed by Executive Sec. Hoyt Haddock of the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee at the ninth annual forum of the National Conference on Social Welfare.

Haddock was one of the speakers at a session on "Changing Waterfronts—Today and Tomorrow," presided over by Sanford S. Marlowe, director of the Office of Private Cooperation in the U.S. Information Agency.

The plight of seamen who have a few hours to spend in a strange port was discussed by Harry Nilsson of the Norwegian Seamen's Welfare Office in New York.

"Ships no longer stay in port for days or weeks, and a seaman's brief freedom is now measured in hours," he said.

"The fact that men no longer have the time to go ashore does not mean that no problem exists; it means that the nature of the problems has changed and we must meet these problems with new techniques."

Haddock briefly reviewed the gains seamen have made through the Intl. Labor Organization. The objectives of seamen of all nations were spelled out by Sec. Robert Santley of the Seafarers' Section of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation, who cited the ITF's Intl. Seafarers' Charter as the "best program."

Santley described as a "decisive step forward" three resolutions adopted by the ILO last year. They called for eased customs restrictions on films, ship libraries and other cultural and welfare materials; world handbooks on welfare facilities for seamen, and international conferences of projects to provide welfare facilities where they are lacking.

The meeting was planned by the United Seamen's Service and was held in cooperation with several other agencies, including the AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, Urban League and United Community Funds & Councils of America.

Kennedy Asks Voters For 'Working Majority'

(Continued from Page 1)

nedy in effect kicked off the drive to overcome the traditional mid-term apathy of the electorate in a non-presidential year and to break the so-called "iron rule" of American politics—that the party which controls the White House invariably loses seats in mid-term elections. Only in 1934, under the impetus of Pres. Roosevelt's soaring popularity, was this "rule" broken.

In other comments on legislative issues, Kennedy:

- Said that if the Administration decides a tax reduction is needed to bolster the economy, then "we will propose it." At present, he said, "there are good signs in the economy and signs which are not so good. So we will continue to watch very carefully and make a judgment."
- Again urged passage of an Administration bill providing stand-by power to cut taxes "if the economy turns down" but conceded that "it doesn't seem that we are going to get action on that." Pointing out that Congress has not yet completed action on the tax revision program proposed 18 months ago, Kennedy said: "That is why stand-by powers are important."
- Expressed the hope that Congress will enact college aid legislation "and also that some arrangement may be made on scholarships."
- Predicted that as a result of House defeat of the Administration farm bill, "surpluses will pile up, and the farmers' income will go down, and no one will benefit."

Administration Plan Hit:

Speed, Equity Urged In Federal Pay Hike

An Administration proposal to raise the pay of government employes in three yearly steps, beginning in 1963, would be "too little and too late. . . for the average federal worker," the AFL-CIO has told Congress.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said the Kennedy Administration "deserves full credit" for sponsoring a pay bill.

"It is a new and pleasing experience to see an Administration propose increases in the federal salary scale, instead of lagging behind or frustrating congressional efforts," he told the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee.

Biemiller emphasized, however, that federal workers need a "raise right now—not inadequate increases postponed until next year and spread out over two or three years."

He said labor backs the President's request for large increases in the salaries of the government's professional and scientific career officials. "If the government is going to attract and retain talented, efficient people in these positions, it must offer them realistic salaries," he noted.

Lower Grades Trail

Labor's position, Biemiller declared, is that lower-paid postal and classified employes "have an equal right to fair treatment." While increases up to 32 percent have been proposed for the top grades, salary increases for most employes "would be less than 4.5 percent," Biemiller said.

Biemiller said the AFL-CIO strongly supports the position taken by its affiliated postal and government employe unions in support of an average 14 percent pay raise. It would, he told the committee, help government workers catch up with the rise in earnings of manufacturing workers in recent years.

Average earnings of federal employes in the 10 lowest grades have increased only 51 percent since 1950 as compared with a 66 percent rise for manufacturing workers, and only 164 percent since 1939 as compared with 309 percent for factory workers, Biemiller stated.

Postal workers, he charged, are "shamefully exploited" by low wages which "do not cover the bare essentials of family life."

The result, Biemiller said, is that "throughout the nation post offices are plagued with a high turnover in their employes . . . It is apparent that the postal service is in serious difficulty and that the lack of a reasonable wage scale is at the root of its troubles."

A "fair, reasonable salary increase," Biemiller emphasized, would also "give a boost to our sagging economy by raising the purchasing power of low and middle income families."

The House committee was scheduled to begin executive meetings on the pay legislation shortly and to seek to bring a bill to the floor during July. Meanwhile the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee, which held hearings earlier this year on both pay legislation and a House-passed revision of postage rates, was expected to resume consideration of both measures and possibly link them in a single bill.

AFL-CIO DELEGATES to the 46th session of the Intl. Labor Organization pause for a picture on the roof terrace of the Palais des Nations overlooking the Lake of Geneva, Switzerland. From left, Bert Seidman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research; District Dir. James P. Griffin, Steelworkers; Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers; Pres. Al J. Hayes, Machinists; Rudolph Faupl, U.S. Worker delegate to the ILO and IAM staff representative; Pres. Miles Stanley, West Virginia AFL-CIO.

Balance in Price Shifts Leaves CPI Unchanged

The family cost of living leveled off in May as the rise and fall in goods and services balanced out, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The Consumer Price Index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics remained at 105.2 after rising for three straight months. The May index means the market basket which cost $10 in the base period of 1957-59 now costs $10.52.

Some 160,000 workers whose union contract escalator clauses are tied to the May index will receive increases of 1 to 3 cents an hour.

A companion report on spendable earnings reported a rise of 50 cents over April to an all-time high of $78.37 a week for the factory worker with no dependents and $86.05 for the worker with three dependents. Spendable earnings represent take-home pay after deduction of federal income and social security taxes.

All the increase in spendable earnings represented a gain in purchasing power since consumer prices remained unchanged. The factory worker's purchasing power as of May thus neared the record high of last December and is nearly 4 percent above a year ago.

Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner of labor statistics, described the May CPI as a "welcome little respite" from recent steady increases. He did foresee "a little increase" ahead for June.

The report for May said "the stability of consumer prices in the main reflected a balance between lower prices for food, solid fuels and gasoline and further price gains for services and used cars."

The cost of medical care continued upward, rising two-tenths of 1 percent from April because of "higher professional fees, hospital room rates and health insurance rates, partly offset by reductions in average prices of prescriptions and drugs."

"Since May 1961," the report noted, "medical care prices have advanced by nearly 3 percent, almost entirely because of increases for medical care services; average prices of prescriptions and drugs declined 1 percent."

Of workers due for wage raises, some 60,000 whose contract clauses call for a quarterly review will receive 1-cent hikes; most are in aerospace. Some 85,000 in meat packing will receive a 1-cent increase on the basis of a six-month adjustment. The remaining 15,000 workers, employed in metalworking firms, will receive either 2 or 3-cent hikes based on semi-annual or annual reviews.

Board Appointed In Airline Dispute

New York—Nine thousand mechanics and other ground employes of American Airlines remained on the job as Pres. Kennedy headed off a scheduled strike by appointing an emergency board to hold hearings and make recommendations on the dispute.

The Transport Workers, representing the ground employes, have been seeking wage increases, job security and fringe improvements in renewal of a contract which expired May 1.

McCormick Of OCAW Dies at 52

Denver—Thomas M. McCormick, secretary-treasurer of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, died June 22 in a Lincoln, Neb., hospital after having been stricken by a cerebral hemorrhage while driving back to Denver. He would have been 52 on July 10.

McCormick had been secretary-treasurer of the OCAW and its predecessor, the Oil Workers Intl. Union, since 1946. He had previously served as a vice president and international representative of the Oil Workers and as secretary of its Texas City, Tex., local.

A telegram of condolences from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler hailed McCormick as "a valued associate and friend" who had served the labor movement "with distinction, combining the wisdom of experience with the vigor of youth." McCormick was a member of the operating committee of the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education and had represented his union on the federation's general board.

Long active in political and civic affairs in Denver, McCormick was chairman of the finance committee of the Denver Democratic Central Committee and had served as chairman of the Denver Housing Authority.

Born in Texas, McCormick grew up in California's San Joaquin valley, where his father in 1918 helped organize one of the first local unions of oil workers—at Taft, Calif.

He is survived by his widow, Lucy, and a daughter Elizabeth, 13, both of whom were with him when he was stricken, and a son, Thomas M. Jr., 16.

THOMAS M. McCORMICK

African Nations to Get Larger Voice in ILO

Geneva—The 102-nation Intl. Labor Organization decided at its 46th session here to enlarge its Governing Body to give increased representation to the newly independent nations of Africa.

The Governing Body, the agency's key executive group, now consists of 20 government, and 10 worker and 10 employer delegates.

By unanimous vote the conference fixed the executive's total membership at 48, instead of 40, by adding four seats for governments and two each for workers and employers.

One of the first items on which the three-week session completed action was a recommendation to governments to adopt the 40-hour week as a "social standard to be reached by stages if necessary."

The recommendation, adopted by a vote of 219 to 23 with 32 abstentions, also called for the immediate reduction of the workweek to 48 hours wherever this figure is exceeded. All reductions in hours should be accomplished "without any reduction in the wages of the workers," it was stated.

James P. Griffin, Steelworkers member of the U.S. worker delegation, told the conference that he regarded the agreement as "a significant step forward in management-labor cooperation at the international level."

No specific provision was made on how the four additional seats for governments were to be assigned because their holders must be elected, under the ILO constitution, by the conference. However, it was generally recognized that the Governing Body was being enlarged to give increased representation to the new African countries.

The Communist bloc attempted to tack a rider to the proposal by pressing for a resolution calling for wider representation of "different social and economic systems." The resolution was in line with Communist attempts to force the ILO's worker and employer delegates to include among their elected representatives on the Governing Body some so-called trade-unionists and employers from Iron Curtain countries.

But the Soviet Union had to drop the resolution when it was ruled out of order and there was no support from outside the Communist bloc for a reversal of the ruling.

Rudolph Faupl, U.S. worker delegate, who had called for greater emphasis on the part the ILO should play in the promotion of human rights, won the strong endorsement of Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver, leader of the U.S. government delegation.

The American worker delegate's proposal for a technical assistance program to develop trade union rights and human freedoms, Weaver said, "should be carefully studied by the Governing Body."

An "appropriate role" should be defined by the ILO in the light of the work of the United Nations Human Rights Commission, he added.

6-30-62

Camden, N. J., Unionists Ask Help on Jobs

Two busloads of union members from Camden, N. J., have given government officials in Washington and members of Congress a first-hand report on their area's critical unemployment problem.

The caravan, organized by the Camden Central Labor Union, was made up of delegates from layoff-hit unions in the area—including the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, the Technical Engineers, the Boilermakers and the Packinghouse Workers—and was accompanied by Camden Mayor Alfred R. Pierce.

In an opening statement at a meeting with key Labor and Defense Dept. officials, CLU Pres. Joseph J. McComb said the delegation did not seek "handouts" but urged channeling of contracts and public works projects to relieve unemployment—currently 8.5 percent of the area's labor force.

The delegates cited layoffs of 2,000 workers at RCA plants in the area, a decline in employment at the New York Shipbuilding Corp. from 10,000 to 4,700, and a drop in Campbell Soup Co. employment from 4,800 to 2,600.

Open Wall for a Month, Meany Urges

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, July 7, 1962 | No. 27

Jobless Rate Remains High, Edges Up to 5.5% for June

Asks Action By UN Body In Berlin

Berlin—A hundred yards away from the Communist wall of shame the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions opened its 7th world congress and heard AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany plead that freedom of movement be permitted for one month between Free Berlin and Communist Berlin "as an experiment in humanitarianism."

The eight-foot high cement and brick wall which threads its serpentine route through this city is a few minutes walk from Kongresshalle, the handsome modernistic structure built by the American government and presented as a gift to the city of Berlin. It is the scene of the ICFTU convention.

Addressing several hundred delegates from all parts of the world, Meany appealed to the United Nations to make still free West Berlin the headquarters for the UN Commission on Human Rights.

"The month of July is rich in the tradition and history of man's uphill struggle for freedom and individual liberty," he said.

"July is the month of the American Declaration of Independence. July gave mankind Bastille Day marking the historic triumph of freedom in France. July is the month of the proclamation of national independence of the Algerian people.

"Let the UN Human Rights Commission act speedily in this

(Continued on Page 8)

LABOR'S SUPPORT of scouting activities was demonstrated at Paul Bunyan Exposition at Michigan State Fair Grounds, attended by some 90,000 Detroit area scouts and their parents. Wayne County AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Mike Novak, who served as vice chairman of the exposition, is shown with a representative group.

Debate Opens on Amendment:

AFL-CIO Backs Revisions In Senate Health Care Bill

The AFL-CIO has endorsed a new version of the Anderson-King bill designed to consolidate congressional support for a health insurance program for the aged financed under the social security system.

Senate debate opened on the measure, introduced as an amendment to the House-passed public welfare bill by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.), with the co-sponsorship of 20 other Democratic and five Republican senators.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank, in telegrams to all members of the Senate urging support of the amendment, said the program had the federation's "full approval." They described it as "one of the most important issues to come before Congress in years."

The National Council of Senior Citizens also backed the changes, noting they would preserve the system of financing under social security and would leave unchanged the basic Anderson-King benefits of up to 90 days of hospitalization and 180 days of nursing home care.

Anderson, who co-authored the original Administration measure with Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.), devised the modifications after a round of talks with Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham Ribicoff and GOP sponsors of alternative health care plans using the social security approach, chiefly Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.).

The result, declared Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.), another co-sponsor, is not a "compromise" but a "synthesis."

In opening debate on the proposed amendment, Anderson called on the Senate to enact the program into law, not leave it as a campaign issue.

"Unless favorable action is taken now, health insurance for the aged is likely to be a major issue in the fall elections," the New Mexico senator declared. "And next year a bill will be passed. But the problem that confronts our aged people is so pressing that I hope we will not delay a solution. . . ."

The changes proposed by Anderson as "significant improvements" include:

- Coverage or "blanketing-in" of presently retired persons not eligible for social security or railroad retirement benefits, estimated to number some 2.5 million, with the cost to be borne directly by the federal government. (Anderson estimated that in 1964, the year the proposed health care program would become effective, the cost of this provision would run to about $250 million, but that resulting savings in other public assistance programs would leave a net cost for the year of $50 million.)

(Continued on Page 3)

Free Nations Warned Of Red Drive in ILO

Berlin—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany warned the free world that the Intl. Labor Organization is "rapidly being captured by the Iron Curtain countries" in opening debate in the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions on free labor's relations with the ILO.

Meany, who has been attending ILO meetings for a quarter of a century, expressed "shock at the situation which today prevails in the ILO."

"Unless the ICFTU and those of us of the free nations and our governments do something about this situation," he said, "the time will soon arrive when you can kiss the ILO good-by.

"It has become a political battleground and a propaganda front for the Iron Curtain countries. If we don't do something about it during the next year or two, the ILO will fall into Iron Curtain hands and will become an instrumentality of international communism."

Meany, who attended the annual ILO session last month, directed his fire as well at member governments

(Continued on Page 8)

New Report Marks Lag In Economy

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's rate of unemployment edged upward to 5.5 percent of the work force in June, the Labor Dept. has announced. The slight rise halted the recent slow improvement in the job picture.

The summary job report said the entrance of more than 2 million young people into the job market was the main factor behind unemployment rising by 750,000 to 4.5 million and employment increasing by 1.3 million to 69.5 million.

A Labor Dept. spokesman said the June labor force figures showed "we continue a less than normal increase in the work force." He said the second quarter figures reveal a gain of about 600,000 over the same quarter a year ago; an increase of from 1 to 1.2 million had been expected.

The number of longterm unemployed—those jobless 15 weeks or longer—dropped by 250,000 to a total of 1 million. But of this total, nearly 600,000 have been jobless 6 months or longer.

The key seasonally adjusted rate of 5.5 percent in June means 55 of every 1,000 members of the workforce were actively seeking work and could not find it.

The jobless rate was 5.4 percent in May, the lowest figure since the 1961 recession. The rate was 6.9 percent in June 1961; 5.4 percent in June 1960 and 5.0 percent in

(Continued on Page 7)

Strike Call Approved in Aerospace

Los Angeles—Aerospace industry workers in plants and missile bases around the nation have given their overwhelming approval for a strike if no agreement is reached in current negotiations for new contracts.

The negotiations are being conducted by the Machinists and the Auto Workers for an estimated 400,000 workers in all parts of the country, including 100,000 in Southern California.

While bargaining is conducted separately with each company, the two unions are coordinating all their efforts in what a spokesman said is "an attempt to make first-

(Continued on Page 7)

60 Cents 'Fair' Wage:

Senate Rejects Hike In Sugar Pay Floor

Congress—as it has since 1937—has directed that workers in U.S. sugar cane and sugar beet fields be paid "fair and reasonable" wages in return for the price subsidies which the government pays to their employers.

But only a scant 29 senators voted for an amendment to the Sugar Act extension bill which would have put teeth into this requirement by declaring that a "fair" wage, set by the secretary of agriculture, cannot be less than the federal minimum wage for non-agricultural workers.

In Louisiana, the federal wage floor for sugar cane workers ranges from 60 cents an hour for unskilled workers to 85 cents for skilled workers. Rates are generally higher in the western sugar beet areas, but only in Hawaii—where it is $1.46—does it exceed the Wage-Hour Act floor.

The 57-29 defeat of the amendment proposed by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) went largely unnoticed as news stories centered on the heated controversy over allocation of import quotas on sugar and the debate over whether the United States should continue to pay premium prices for the sugar it buys abroad.

It led, however, to a sharp debate over the issue of wage protection for farm workers comparable to that provided by Congress for workers in business and industry.

Said McCarthy, in arguing for adoption of his proposal:

"So long as the price support program provides adequate prices and adequate support to those who produce sugar and those who process it, we ought to provide an adequate return for those who work in the beet fields, the cane fields, and the processing plants."

Retorted Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.):

"In all the years that Congress has adopted requirements for a minimum wage, agricultural labor has always been excluded. If the amendment of the senator from Minnesota were adopted, it would be in violation of every action taken by Congress with reference to fixing of minimum wages and national standards for agricultural workers."

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) quoted from a statement prepared by the Packinghouse Workers tracing the legislative history of the provision to show that in 1937 Congress intended the "fair and reasonable" rate to be not less than the wage floor in the Fair Labor Standards Act, then also before Congress.

The UPWA statement, Morse declared, "demonstrates that the issue before us now is not a substantive change in the minimum wage provision of the Sugar Act, but a clarifying amendment designed to bring to the sugar workers the wage rates to which they were properly entitled all these years."

On the rollcall, 23 Democrats and six Republicans supported the McCarthy amendment, while 34 Democrats and 23 Republicans opposed it.

A PICKET BOAT on the Ohio River near Monaca, Pa., was one of the devices used by the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers to call public attention to strike against the Kobuta plastics plant of the Koppers Co., Inc., called May 1. Shots fired at the boat led OCAW Local 8-74 to withdraw it from service but picketing by land continues in spite of security guards and salaried workers used as strikebreakers.

Union Fights Revival Of Mohawk Formula

Monaca, Pa.—The importation by the Koppers Co. of "security" police, transported here from Colorado during contract negotiations, has led to a charge by Oil Workers Local 8-74 that the company wants to revive the Mohawk Valley Formula, once used to strangle unions.

The local, representing 615 workers at the company's Kobuta plastics plant on the Ohio River, 30 miles downstream from Koppers headquarters in Pittsburgh, went on strike May 1 over company insistence on "management rights" language in the contract. Three meetings have been held since that time, the union said, without any genuine collective bargaining by C. A. Kozelski, company personnel director, and other company negotiators.

The union has maintained picket lines at seven plant entrances, the Koppers docks on the Ohio River, and between negotiating sessions, at the Koppers building in Pittsburgh. Some members used their own boats to carry picket signs into the river but the practice was stopped when gunshots greeted them one night.

The strike is the first in the 18-year history of the local, whose officials say it grew out of a company plan originated some 18 months ago to force the union into a long stoppage. They list these management demands:

- A "management rights" clause providing that "employes must perform any duties to which they may be assigned."
- Forced arbitration of grievances.
- Cancellation of insurance and hospitalization benefits with notice that employes must pay their own premiums.
- Complete rewriting of the contract with demands that the union accept the new version without change.

A week before the old contract expired Apr. 30, Koppers brought in 18 "security" police transferred from Colorado by the Wackenhut Corp. of Coral Gables, Fla., and hired 42 other guards locally. Also it built a $50,000 fence enclosing its 422-acre plant, and tried to continue production with salaried personnel, including firemen and safety men whose jobs were taken over by the imported guards.

An unfair labor practice charge, based on the presence of imported strikebreakers and a "packaged" set of company proposals, was filed with the National Labor Relations Board before the strike started.

AWIU, Alcoa Talks Resume On Contract

St. Louis—The Aluminum Workers have resumed negotiations here with the Aluminum Co. of America, and will meet soon with the Reynolds Metals Co. in continuing attempts to reach agreement on contracts involving about 20,000 workers.

In talks which began in May the union has sought to win job and income security for workers in an industry which has kept production and profits at near-record levels while operating with 10 percent fewer workers.

Contract Offers Made

Pres. Eddie R. Stahl heads the union negotiating team in meetings here with Alcoa. That firm and Reynolds have offered to settle on terms similar to those accepted by the Steelworkers—two-year agreements aimed at more stable employment conditions but no general wage increase.

AWIU agreements with the two firms have a July 31 expiration date. A contract with Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. extends into October and covers some 3,000 members of the Aluminum Workers.

The Auto Workers have contracts involving about 5,000 workers in Alcoa fabricating and die cast plants at Edison, N. J., Chicago, Cleveland, and Vernon, Calif. Talks on renewal terms began June 13 and another session is scheduled for July 16.

The USWA agreement was reached with five firms employing 25,000 workers—Alcoa, Reynolds, Kaiser, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. and Ormet Corp. The new pacts provide for continuation of the 23-cent an hour cost-of-living allowance, improved vacations, supplemental unemployment pay boosts, longer vacations and increased pension rights, and other gains.

Overseas Tax Havens Scored by AFL-CIO

An end to all special tax benefits now given to American firms operating overseas and to U.S. citizens living abroad has been strongly urged by the AFL-CIO in a new round of testimony before the Senate Finance Committee.

The committee, which has been considering the House-passed tax revision bill since March, reopened hearings on Administration proposals for full and immediate taxation of income earned abroad. Under present law, U.S. firms with foreign subsidiaries can defer indefinitely paying taxes on overseas profits by reinvesting the money in other countries.

Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research said labor is "unalterably opposed" to any retreat from or compromise of the Administration's recommendations on taxation of foreign subsidiaries. He told the committee:

"The time has come to end all tax privileges which induce American firms to favor investment overseas in preference to investment at home and thereby discourage job creation and economic growth in the United States."

The "vital interests" of the United States and "the welfare of its workers" will be endangered, he said, if Congress does "anything less than completely eliminate tax deferral on the earnings of all American-owned foreign subsidiaries, except in less-developed countries."

Ruttenberg said that each U.S. dollar invested in an overseas plant because of tax advantages hurts U.S. economic growth in two ways:

- If the same dollar were invested in the U.S., it would help create employment and income.
- When goods produced abroad are sold abroad—often to third countries as well as in the country of production—fewer goods are exported from the U.S. As a result of this displacement of exports, "it is apparent that the jobs of thousands of Americans are being wiped out."

4 Named Advisers on Disclosure

Four representatives of labor groups have been named by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to the Advisory Council on Employe Welfare & Pension Benefit Plans, provided by Congress in the 1962 amendments to the Disclosure Act.

The four are Richard E. Shoemaker, assistant director, AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security; Leonard Lesser, director of social security activities, AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Research Dir. Edward Kennedy of the unaffiliated Mine Workers, and Wilbur Daniels, New York City attorney who has represented several labor unions.

All four were recommended by labor organizations, Goldberg said, and will serve for two-year terms with nine other advisers representing other agencies—three representing the general public, two from management, one from the insurance field, one from the corporate trust field, and two from other interested groups.

The council will advise the secretary on carrying out his functions under the law. Reporting that "dozens of exceptionally well qualified persons" were recommended, Goldberg said it was not possible to name to the council representatives of "all the important groups which demonstrated an interest" in the administration of the act.

130 Striking Steelworkers Battle Runaway Brass Plant in Georgia

Moultrie, Ga.—Rugged is the word for a little band of 130 Steelworkers who have for the last six months defied every effort of the Bridgeport Brass Co. and its owners, the powerful National Distillers & Chemical Corp., to starve them into submission.

Averaging about $42 a week when the walkout started, the men and women of Moultrie, supported by AFL-CIO locals in Georgia and in USWA Dist. 35, have stuck it out on the picket line—two pickets per gate, no congregating within a mile of the plant, according to an injunction obtained by the company.

Three years ago Bridgeport Brass, which never had a strike in 90 years of existence, moved its plumbing goods division from Bridgeport, Conn., to a "runaway" location here in the deep South.

All employes of the new plant were carefully screened by management, with the help of the local Chamber of Commerce, for any trace of union background. The Meat Cutters have organized the Swift Co. plant here, and any former Meat Cutter got failing grades on the CofC scorecard, according to union sources.

Nevertheless the workers signed USWA cards, and a National Labor Relations Board election was held Aug. 10, 1961.

The union won the election and negotiations dragged on for five months. The final company offer provided no seniority, no dues checkoff, no grievance handling during working hours, no arbitration, and no increases in wages, fringe benefits or any other money items.

The union filed charges of company failure to bargain in good faith, but the regional NLRB office dismissed them. An appeal was taken to the NLRB in Washington.

The day the strike began, management terminated hospitalization insurance. The second day the company got an injunction limiting the union to four pickets and forbidding groups of more than three to be within 500 yards of the plant.

Only 15 of the original 145 Brass workers are out of the unit now, and not all of those have returned to work.

The Moultrie city government owns the water, light and gas utilities and is helping management, the union says, by pressuring strikers to pay these bills or lose service. The banks and some businessmen also are pressing for payments due on homes, cars and furniture. Only national finance organizations have agreed to wait for payments.

National Distillers, which owns the plant, also produces such items as Old Grand Dad, Old Taylor, Old Crow, Bourbon DeLuxe, Old Overholt, Gilbey's Gin and Vodka, Kordite freezer supplies, and plastic storm windows.

To Prod Lagging Economy:

Support for Tax Cut This Year Growing

A tax cut in 1962 to stimulate the lagging economy is drawing increasingly wide support as concern about the country's economic health mounts.

The support has come from members of Congress, governors and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which declared that stimulation of the economy was more important than a budgetary deficit. The chamber has traditionally opposed any policies that would create a deficit.

A tax cut was strongly urged on the Administration by the AFL-CIO four months ago, and on June 14 AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent a memorandum to Pres. Kennedy calling for immediate emergency action on taxes to aid the economy.

The AFL-CIO proposal, however, called for the cut to be concentrated in the low and middle income brackets to stimulate consumer purchasing power, while the Chamber and other supporters called for across-the-board reductions in both personal and corporate tax rates.

The AFL-CIO is opposed to reductions in corporate rates and the across-the-board approach, stressing that the need is in the lower and middle income brackets and that corporations have enough funds to finance investments in new plant and equipment.

Kennedy to Ask 1963 Cut

The President has declared in favor of a tax cut in 1963 and called for action by Congress on the current tax measure granting tax credits to business, closing the tax loophole on income earned by American firms overseas and placing dividends and interest income under a tax withholding system. The Administration's proposed tax reform measure, to be submitted to Congress soon for action next year, would contain an across-the-board reduction in personal and corporate tax rates, the President said.

At a recent news conference, Kennedy said he would recommend an immediate cut "if we think it is needed."

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), assistant Senate majority leader, said he was hopeful Congress would vote to reduce corporate and individual taxes by at least $5 billion before it adjourned. The House-passed tax revision bill now before the Senate Finance Committee, he said, is not adequate to put the American economy into "high gear."

Humphrey's views were echoed by Republican Senators John Sherman Cooper (Ky.) and Clifford P. Case (N. J.).

At the National Governors Conference in Hershey, Pa., a number of state executives backed an immediate tax cut. They included New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R), California Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D) and Ohio Gov. Michael V. DiSalle (D).

Reuther Sounds Warning

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, chairman of the federation's Economic Policy Committee, called for a cut beginning in August of $10 billion as the "fastest practical way to give the economy the thrust it needs." If action is not taken quickly, he warned, "we could get a worsening of unemployment in the fall."

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, in supporting a tax cut, declared "the best hope and prospect for future balanced budgets and fiscal sanity lies in removing immediately the tax rate deterrents to economic growth."

The chamber's proposals, estimated by its president, H. Ladd Plumley, to amount to as much as $7.5 billion, would cut top-bracket rates from 91 percent to 65 percent; divide the bottom bracket and set up a new minimum of 15 percent of the first $1,000 (the present minimum is 20 percent on the first $2,000); scale down other rates, which would mean the higher the rate the bigger the cut; and reduce the corporate rate from 52 to 47 percent.

C. F. Stinson Dies, NALC Ex-Officer

Clarence F. Stinson, a national officer of the Letter Carriers for 20 years until his retirement in 1946, died in Washington, D. C., just short of his 84th birthday.

Stinson, who started his career as a letter carrier in Bayonne, N. J., became assistant secretary-treasurer of the NALC in 1926 and was elected secretary-treasurer in 1946.

In a message of condolence to his family, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treasurer William F. Schnitzler praised his pioneering leadership in building the Letter Carriers and declared:

"The cause of trade unionism in government service, to which he devoted much of his life, is now at the threshold of a great new era; he and his fellow workers, who carried on the struggle over the years, have earned the thanks of the new generation."

Mourning his passing, NALC Pres. William C. Doherty described him as one of the best-known union representatives on Capitol Hill, where he worked for passage of legislation to help postal workers.

Eisenhower 'Proud' GOP Is the Party of Business

Gettysburg, Pa.—Former Pres. Eisenhower told GOP leaders here that the Republicans are considered the party of business "and I'm proud of the label."

Addressing 100 party leaders gathered at his farm to launch a group called the All-Republican Conference, Eisenhower said politics should be the first business of a businessman.

"If we don't exercise the function of self-government," he said, "by golly, we'll be governed by someone else, and that I don't like."

Former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon also had some words of advice to the GOP leaders. Republicans, he said, should demonstrate to the people "that government which spends less, taxes less, and allows and encourages the people to do for themselves is the best."

FOR THE FIRST TIME in five years, collective bargaining talks resume between the Kohler Co., plumbing wares firm, and the Auto Workers. Union bargainers at Sheboygan, Wis., are headed by UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, lower left, second from the end. Chief management spokesman across the table was Vice Pres. Lyman Conger, center, light suit. A dispute which resulted in a strike of Kohler workers starting Apr. 5, 1954, was climaxed last month by the refusal of the Supreme Court to hear a company appeal from a decision finding the firm guilty of unfair practices. The UAW has offered to negotiate "a fair and honorable settlement."

'Cleopatra' Studio Using Red Union

An AFL-CIO fraternal delegate to the recent fourth national congress of the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions (CISL) in Rome has reported that Twentieth Century-Fox has been making the film "Cleopatra" "mainly with the help of, and in conjunction with," a Communist - dominated entertainment union in Italy.

In an interview over the Mutual Broadcasting System radio network, Harry Goldberg of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs charged the company's explanation that it is not interested in politics, but only making a picture, is a "fake."

Twentieth Century Fox pleaded "ignorance" of the situation in Italy, he noted, "but they continue to go on . . . because they are afraid that if they break the contract, they might have trouble with the Communist Party and the Communist union.

"This is not a new thing," he said, "but this has been one of the most scandalous aspects . . . of American movie companies in their work in Italy."

Appearing on Labor News Conference, Goldberg said he had been assured by Pietro Nenni, left-wing Socialist leader who formerly supported the Communists, that he and his followers will not insist upon Italy's withdrawal from NATO. Goldberg quoted Nenni as saying "it is our opinion that most Italians, or the majority of Italians, support Italy's being in NATO; therefore, I will abide by that decision."

Goldberg warned against the belief that the Communist Party of Italy is autonomous or independent.

"The Communist Party of Italy remains tied to Russia, remains tied to the Communist Intl.," he insisted.

Goldberg was questioned by Alexander Uhl, editor of Press Associates, Inc., and Endre Marton, international and diplomatic correspondent for the Associated Press.

Virgin Islands Labor Dedicates New Home

St. Thomas, V. I.—The Virgin Islands Labor Union has named its new two-story office building and auditorium at Charlotte Amalie the Ashley L. Totten Labor Center in tribute to one of the islands' prominent labor leaders. Totten, secretary-treasurer of the Sleeping Car Porters, recently was named by Pres. Kennedy as a director of the Virgin Islands Corp.

Senate Near Showdown On Health Care Plan

(Continued from Page 1)

- Use of private insurance organizations, such as Blue Cross and the Kaiser Plan in California, at the discretion of the secretary of health, education and welfare, to deal directly with hospitals and nursing homes in the administration of the program.
- Acceptance as automatically eligible to take part in the program any hospital certified by the joint commission of the AHA and the American Medical Association.
- Use of state agencies to determine eligibility of hospitals and nursing homes not accredited by the AHA and the AMA.
- Establishment of a separate trust fund for the health insurance program, which would be financed by an increase of one-quarter of 1 percent in social security taxes for both workers and employers, instead of mingling the funds with other social security accounts.
- An option giving beneficiaries the right to continue private health insurance programs in lieu of the direct social security program, if these plans have been in force for a specified period before retirement and provide at least the basic Anderson-King benefits. Where such a choice is exercised, the insurance carrier would be reimbursed for statutory benefits, plus administrative costs.

The last point represents a compromise not wholly satisfactory to most Republican co-sponsors. Javits, in fact, has introduced an "amendment to the amendment" setting forth his own "optioning out" plan, which would allow beneficiaries to continue private insurance plans that meet specified standards, with the government paying up to $100 a year of the premiums.

If Javits' proposal fails, however, the Republican co-sponsors have agreed to go along with the Anderson amendment as introduced. They include, besides Javits and Cooper, Senators Clifford Case (N.J.), Thomas Kuchel (Calif.) and Kenneth Keating (N.Y.).

By proposing the amended plan as a rider to a House-passed bill, Anderson and the Administration are by-passing the House Ways & Means Committee, where the health care measure originated but has been stalled.

Canadian Labor Assails Saskatchewan Doctors

Regina, Sask.—The Canadian Labor Congress has accused Saskatchewan doctors of "open and brazen defiance of constituted authority" in refusing to treat patients under the province's new medical care plan, patterned after Great Britain's National Health Service.

CLC Executive Vice Pres. William Dodge said the doctors' action was "in no sense a strike" but might properly be described as a "mutiny" which deserves "the strongest condemnation by all groups which place any value on democratic government and its procedures."

Most of the province's 900 doctors closed their doors to patients when the Saskatchewan Medical Care Insurance Act became effective July 1. Although they announced they would continue to provide treatment in emergency cases, a number of deaths already have been attributed to the unavailability of physicians' services.

William Mahoney, a CLC vice president and Canadian director of the Steelworkers, denounced the doctors' action as a "shameless political power play, designed to force an elected government to repeal legislation properly passed by an elected legislature."

The province's physicians also drew a strong rebuke from officials of the Canadian Medical Association's Quebec division and prominent Montreal laymen.

As the protests mounted, there were signs that the ranks of the mutinous doctors were less than firm. The provincial government estimated that about 100 physicians already had indicated they were prepared to work under the new medical plan.

Meanwhile, hospitals and clinics were being manned by public health physicians and volunteer doctors, a growing number of whom were arriving from other provinces, Great Britain and the United States.

Trade Breakthrough

THE HOUSE-PASSED trade bill marks a significant breakthrough in the development of national economic policy and the role of American workers. The key issue before the House was the government's obligation to provide special assistance to those injured by legislation that is deemed of overriding importance to the nation's economic strength and security.

Conservative groups in the House sought to scuttle this concept which provides for adjustment assistance to workers and industries adversely affected by reduction of tariffs and a rise in imports. For workers, this assistance would mean a readjustment allowance equal to 65 percent of average wages payable for up to 52 weeks as well as retraining and relocation allowances.

Attempts to eliminate these provisions were narrowly defeated in the House Ways & Means Committee, and a conservative bid to oppose adjustment aid on the floor was finally channeled into a move for a simple one-year extension of existing legislation. Besides being meaningless in terms of trade legislation, this would have effectively wiped out the special aid provisions as well.

The same sort of conservative attack on this pioneering concept of aid to those injured through application of a program in the national interest is expected in the Senate. It must be rebuffed as it was in the House.

Organized labor will not support trade legislation that would have one segment of society pay the price in unemployment and economic distress while others prosper.

How Many More?

HOW MANY MORE children will die in the Canadian province of Saskatchewan before the "striking" physicians recall their Hippocratic oath that "into whatever house I enter I will go for the benefit of the sick and will abstain from all wrongdoing and corruption?"

Their refusal to care for the health of the 930,000 persons in the province is nothing more than a form of blackmail. By withholding medical care from the ill they hope to kill a carefully worked out and democratically approved plan on how the cost of modern medicine can be met so that all persons have full and complete access to the best treatment.

The Saskatchewan doctors might well heed the injunction, "physician, heal thyself," for they are suffering from an illness that is debasing their profession.

A Rededication

THIS PAST FOURTH OF JULY marked the 186th anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, a day of rededication to basic principles. In our age of peril and anxiety and uncertainty, there is a recurring need to return to Thomas Jefferson's "self-evident" truths:

"That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just power from the consent of the governed, that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, July 7, 1962 No. 27

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Against All Totalitarianism:

LosAngeles Labor Challenges Role of Ultra-Right Extremists

The following is excerpted from a pamphlet produced by the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor, AFL-CIO, titled "Mark for Reaction."

THE LOS ANGELES COUNTY Federation of Labor has over the years vigorously opposed communism at home and abroad as a threat to the material well-being, the human spirit and the freedom of man. In cooperation with the National AFL-CIO, the LA federation has fought against the worldwide danger of Soviet imperialism and the international Communist movement—its totalitarianism, its conspiratorial organizations, its monolithic ideology, its mask of propaganda, its tactics of infiltration and its ultimate goal of world domination

The LA federation and American labor have worked with the free labor movements of the world against the main sources of the Communist peril: The military power of the great Communist states and their intervention in other countries; and the Communists' efforts to stir up turmoil in the areas of social change throughout the world, to exploit the problems of emerging nations, to capitalize on the unfulfilled hopes and aspirations of peoples everywhere.

Here at home, the Communists have been discredited and rejected. The LA federation has contributed substantially to their defeat and vigilantly opposed their continued efforts to penetrate, influence, and pervert other movements, organizations and institutions.

Coupled with these activities—and imperative to their success—the LA federation has supported an affirmative program of promoting social justice, human dignity, equal opportunity, and liberty in our own community and nation, and aid and sympathy for the forces of freedom in other lands.

It is therefore with the gravest concern that the LA federation views the recent out-cropping of "schools", "projects", "crusades", and "societies" which have been guilty of assailing programs of social progress under the guise of fighting communism. Attacking programs that offer positive answers to communism undermines the fight against communism. Identifying social progress with the Communists plays the game of the Communists and gives them aid and comfort. Curtailing democracy paves the way for totalitarianism.

Yet this is precisely what is being done by many of the very groups that profess to oppose communism.

Such activity emulates the methods of the Communists themselves. It seeks to tear down the very policies and institutions of democracy which serve as a bulwark against communism. It attempts to drag us backward from the social advances of the last decades, and pull us downward into isolation from the world of rising expectations.

THE LOS ANGELES COUNTY Federation of Labor believes that the ultimate answer to communism is a positive program to expand the frontiers of freedom and progress.

Here are some of the tell-tale evidences by which the ultra-right extremists give themselves away. Their leaders subtly or openly advocate:

- Destroying decent wages enjoyed by American workers.
- Depriving senior citizens of social security.
- Eliminating programs for decent housing.
- Attacking educational institutions.
- Discrediting church leadership.
- Ending income taxes based on ability to pay.
- Terminating efforts to avoid war through the United Nations and stopping foreign aid to combat communism.
- Weakening unions by so-called "right-to work" and other restrictive laws.
- Vilifying the State Dept.
- Undermining the U.S. Supreme Court.

Amid the perils and problems of our times, authoritarian extremist groups—of whatever kind—can not be permitted to stir passion and prejudice unchallenged. In answer, therefore, the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor will undertake a program to:

- Study and evaluate the general character of authoritarian extremist movements—their philosophy, program, tactics, leadership.
- Examine and assess specific groups and activities to determine whether they are extremist in character.
- Issue reports on the results of these studies.
- Provide information to the AFL-CIO membership and the general public through reports, literature, meetings, conferences, and the mass media.
- Cooperate with other concerned community groups in projects to counter the threat of totalitarianism and authoritarianism.

The price of liberty is eternal vigilance and unending effort. The preservation of democracy demands of every citizen his individual dedication to the struggle to combat the totalitarianism of communism and the ultra-right.

Morgan Says:

Americans Must Try Harder To Understand and Help Africa

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

AFRICA IS STILL a steaming, brooding enigma which Americans officially and individually continue to do far too little to understand and help.

The spectacle of diplomats from newly-emerging African nations not being able to find satisfactory housing in Washington, the supposedly sophisticated world capital to which they have been assigned, is a shameful thing which has not escaped the eye of anti-American propagandists, Communist and otherwise. There is not even an adequate international social center where African and other foreign officials can comfortably mingle.

Morgan

But it should be reported that there are people of good will who are working hard to improve these and related problems. The chief of protocol of the State Dept., Angier Biddle Duke, has set a standard along with some other members of the New Frontier by resigning from the exclusive Metropolitan Club because it would not even permit Negroes as guests at meals let alone as members.

A State Dept. team has been working, with some success, with District of Columbia officials and businessmen to ease the housing problem and has also made some headway against segregation in restaurants on Maryland's Route 40, the highway diplomats take when driving to New York. Embarrassing incidents along this asphalt strip of prejudice have been minimized.

On a shoestring, two valiant school teachers, Millidge Walker and his wife, Irene Tinker Walker, with a handful of other public spirited souls have established a Club of All Nations in Washington where adult foreign residents and Americans can meet each other informally. But they need larger quarters and an angel to help them with their modest bills if they are to keep their doors open even though the Administration has beamed approval on their project.

As a diplomat from Thailand said with a mixture of wistfulness and chagrin to the Walkers the other day, foreigners are not lost in Bangkok because the Thai government virtually subsidizes their membership in the Royal Bangkok Sports Club and he hoped the small beginning of the Club of All Nations would not fail.

Here is another heartening example of good will in action: for three years that wonderful, silently operating Quaker group, the American Friends Service Committee, has been maintaining units in Morocco and Tunisia to help some 250,000 refugees fleeing the hideous strife in Algeria. In addition to immediate assistance the committee ran schools where Algerian boys and girls learned such things as carpentry and knitting.

SUCH TRUST AND RAPPORT developed between the Algerian officials and the field staff that —now that peace is in sight, the transitional government has just asked the Quaker group to operate a $1 million program to resettle refugees back in Algeria. With a serious shortage of doctors, with so many homes destroyed and so much cropland full of explosive mines and the population desperately in need of food, this is going to be a huge task—and the million still has to be raised.

For two months now the AFL-CIO Committee for the United Nations, Inc., has been doing a brisk business a stone's throw from New York UN headquarters as a center where trade unionists in UN delegations can meet and exchange views with officials and the rank and file of American organized labor. An impressive number of delegates from underdeveloped countries have trade union backgrounds but they have been at sea socially with no non-official contacts in New York. The merged U.S. labor movement, which long ago sensed the importance of ties with emerging African and other unions as a helping bulwark against Communist thrusts in their own countries, established the hospitality center.

At the moment the AFL-CIO is engaged in another constructive international operation—cooperating with a number of agencies in finding summer jobs for foreign exchange students. For a number of the 60,000 foreigners now studying in the United States—most of them on minimal budgets—vacation time work spells the difference between continuing their training and having to cut short their courses and go home.

The AFL-CIO effort is concentrating on placement of African students, of whom there are some 3,000 in the country. The response has been good but not quite good enough, yet. CARE, the Group Health Association in Washington and several individual unions from coast to coast have found employment for many students, from Kenya, Nigeria, Ghana, Sierra Leone and elsewhere. Some of them are training as union organizers who may become tomorrow's labor leaders in their own countries.

The visiting foreign students, especially the dark-skinned ones, face a bewildering experience in this country, a mixture of American hospitality and the humiliation of racial prejudice. Our relations with their homelands depend, in large measure, on how we are able to help them through this bewilderment to an enriching experience. This is the goal of all these projects and it is a commendable one.

Washington Reports:

Congressmen Warn on Playing Politics with Misery of Elders

"WE MUST NOT PLAY politics with the misery of our senior citizens. And this can be avoided by enacting without delay an effective program of protection for the health needs of the elderly of this nation."

Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N.Y.) made this plea for House and Senate passage of "the improved health insurance bill," introduced in the Senate by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.Y.) and co-sponsored by 23 other senators, including five leading Republicans.

Rep. Sidney Yates (D-Ill), said in an interview on the same program—Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program carried by more than 500 radio stations—that the Illinois State Hospital Association has issued a report showing the inadequacy of the existing Kerr-Mills Act, which provides federal matching grants to states to cover health care for indigent retired persons only.

"We are implicated in destroying the individual's sense of personal security even while saving his life or restoring his health," he quoted the association as finding in reference to the means test required by Kerr-Mills.

Halpern, who has introduced health-care-for-the-aged bills for the last several years, explained the procedure by which the Senate amendment to the House-passed welfare bill will get back to the House for a vote.

HE SAID he had "no doubt" that the bill would pass the House on its return "since so much of the political implication has been removed by the Senate bill."

Yates pointed out that implementation of the Kerr-Mills Act has been undertaken in only 38 states, with the elderly in the other states not protected in any way. Both congressmen stressed the basic necessity of placing health insurance for the elderly under social security.

"This is a dignified way of raising the funds," Halpern declared. "The old folks have the insurance as a matter of right. And they don't have to submit to a degrading means test."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

(Willard Shelton, whose commentary on the Washington scene normally appears in this space, is on vacation.)

THE WALL STREET SLUMP has turned out to be a golden opportunity for business propagandists to demand special tax relief.

The same groups who were silent during the Hoover Administration and the stock market crash of 1929, or the three recessions of the Eisenhower Administration, are now proclaiming that the "anti-business" policies of Pres. Kennedy have so terrorized the business community that they have lost faith, confidence and hope in the future of the country.

Actually, today's uncertain economy is largely due to relatively conservative Administration policies rather than to any anti-business radicalism, and is not going to be cured by surrendering to business desires for tax relief that inevitably will give the upper brackets the lion's share of whatever relief Congress votes. This happened in 1954 and is likely to happen again.

Wall Street weakness is now being used as a propaganda instrument far out of proportion to its real importance as a barometer of what really ails the economy.

We are told, of course, that the market sank because of lack of confidence in an "anti-business" Administration. Yet the worst plunge that the market has ever taken occurred during a "pro-business" Administration in 1929.

We are told that stocks were too high and that a "corrective" movement was necessary to place value and earnings on a sound relationship. Yet the President is now importuned to take action that would boost the market again and presumably re-establish the high stock prices that were supposedly out of line.

Undoubtedly more Americans own stock today than ever before, yet the fact is that the overwhelming ownership of stock is in the hands of a relatively few families which get the lion's share of the national income. Only 12 percent of American families with incomes under $5,000—which means the vast majority of our people—owned stock in 1960. And of these, the number who owned stock worth more than $10,000 was so negligible that it wasn't even listed. Actually, most Americans do not own a single share of stock.

At the other end of the scale, 56 percent of families in the $15,000 or over bracket owned stock and 25 percent of these owned more than $10,000 in stock. Thus the recent slump has affected a relative handful of Americans and even these mostly on paper.

EVEN ON THE ASSUMPTION that Wall Street is a bellwether of economic conditions and that the cure for the present economic sluggishness lies in capital investment, how vital a role does Wall Street actually play in such investment?

There was a time when a vast amount of business and industry financing was done through stock issues to the public. That day is gone. Great corporations don't go to Wall Street as they once did to finance their growth and modernization. Today the customer does the financing through high prices and undistributed profits with tax amortization contributing most of the needed new funds.

Some $148 billion was invested in plant and equipment over the past five years. In that same period American corporations had available from internal sources—that is, from retained allowances—a sum equal to $147 billion.

Two months ago Business Week said: "The fact is that business will make new investment only when it sees expanding markets and the opportunity to make a fair profit in them."

If American tax policy is now to be shaped in the interest of Wall Street, as the renewed cries for tax relief would have it, we will be putting the tax cuts where they aren't needed and will be encouraging a new Wall Street inflationary boom.

Wall Street prices and the manipulations of Wall Street speculators should not be the criteria by which we judge what to do about taxes to head our economy into a new period of growth.—(PAI)

PROSPECTS FOR CONGRESSIONAL APPROVAL of health insurance for the aged have been increased by new improvements in the Anderson-King bill, Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N.Y.), right, declared in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People. He and Rep. Sidney Yates (D-Ill.), left, stressed the necessity of social security financing for the health insurance program.

Key Rollcall on Trade Expansion Bill

Here is the key rollcall vote by which the House turned down an attempt to kill the trade expansion bill by sending it back to committee. The recommittal attempt was defeated 253-171. Democrats voted 210 to 43 against scuttling the bill; Republicans voted 128-43 to recommit the bill.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote for recommittal was a wrong vote (W), while a vote against recommittal was a right vote (R). Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large; NV—not voting.

ALABAMA
1. Boykin (D) W
2. Grant (D) R
3. Andrews (D) W
4. Roberts (D) R
5. Rains (D) R
6. Selden (D) R
7. Elliott (D) R
8. Jones (D) R
9. Huddleston (D) R

ALASKA
AL Rivers (D) R

ARIZONA
1. Rhodes (R) W
2. Udall (D) R

ARKANSAS
1. Gathings (D) R
2. Mills (D) R
3. Trimble (D) R
4. Harris (D) R
5. Alford (D) PW
6. Norrell (D) R

CALIFORNIA
1. Clem Miller (D) R
2. Johnson (D) R
3. Moss (D) R
4. Mailliard (R) R
5. Shelley (D) R
6. Baldwin (R) R
7. Cohelan (D) R
8. George P. Miller (D) PR
9. Younger (R) W
10. Gubser (R) W
11. McFall (D) R
12. Sisk (D) R
13. Teague (R) W
14. Hagen (D) R
27. Sheppard (D) R
28. Utt (R) W
29. Saund (D) A
30. Wilson (R) W

Los Angeles County
15. McDonough (R) W
16. Bell (R) R
17. King (D) R
18. Hosmer (R) R
19. Holifield (D) R
20. Smith (R) W
21. Hiestand (R) W
22. Corman (D) R
23. Doyle (D) R
24. Lipscomb (R) W
25. Rousselot (R) W
26. Roosevelt (D) R

COLORADO
1. Rogers (D) R
2. Dominick (R) W
3. Chenoweth (R) W
4. Aspinall (D) R

CONNECTICUT
1. Daddario (D) R
2. Seely-Brown (R) W
3. Giaimo (D) R
4. Sibal (R) R
5. Monagan (D) W
AL Kowalski (D) R

DELAWARE
AL McDowell (D) R

FLORIDA
1. Cramer (R) W
2. Bennett (D) R
3. Sikes (D) W
4. Fascell (D) R
5. Herlong (D) R
6. Rogers (D) R
7. Haley (D) W
8. Matthews (D) R

GEORGIA
1. Hagan (D) R
2. Pilcher (D) R
3. Forrester (D) R
4. Flynt (D) R
5. James C. Davis (D) W
6. Vinson (D) R
7. John W. Davis (D) R
8. Blitch (D) A
9. Landrum (D) R
10. Stephens (D) R

HAWAII
AL Inouye (D) R

IDAHO
1. Pfost (D) R
2. Harding (D) R

ILLINOIS
14. Hoffman (R) W
15. Mason (R) W
16. Anderson (R) W
17. Arends (R) W
18. Michel (R) R
19. Chiperfield (R) W
20. Findley (R) W
21. Mack (D) R
22. Springer (R) R
23. Shipley (D) W
24. Price (D) R
25. Gray (D) R

Chicago-Cook County
1. Dawson (D) R
2. O'Hara (D) R
3. Murphy (D) R
4. Derwinski (R) W
5. Kluczynski (D) R
6. O'Brien (D) R
7. Libonati (D) R
8. Rostenkowski (D) R
9. Yates (D) R
10. Collier (R) W
11. Pucinski (D) R
12. Finnegan (D) R
13. Church (R) W

INDIANA
1. Madden (D) R
2. Halleck (R) W
3. Brademas (D) R
4. Adair (R) W
5. Roush (D) R
6. Roudebush (R) W
7. Bray (R) W
8. Denton (D) R
9. Wilson (R) W
10. Harvey (R) W
11. Bruce (R) W

IOWA
1. Schwengel (R) R
2. Bromwell (R) W
3. Gross (R) W
4. Kyl (R) W
5. Smith (D) R
6. Coad (D) R
7. Jensen (R) W
8. Hoeven (R) W

KANSAS
1. Avery (R) W
2. Ellsworth (R) W
3. McVey (R) PW
4. Shriver (R) W
5. Breeding (D) R
6. Dole (R) W

KENTUCKY
1. Stubblefield (D) R
2. Natcher (D) R
3. Burke (D) R
4. Chelf (D) R
5. Spence (D) R
6. Watts (D) R
7. Perkins (D) R
8. Siler (R) W

LOUISIANA
1. Hebert (D) R
2. Boggs (D) R
3. Willis (D) R
4. Waggoner (D) W
5. Passman (D) W
6. Morrison (D) R
7. Thompson (D) A
8. McSween (D) A

MAINE
1. Garland (R) W
2. Tupper (R) R
3. McIntire (R) W

MARYLAND
1. Johnson (D) R
2. Brewster (D) R
3. Garmatz (D) R
4. Fallon (D) R
5. Lankford (D) R
6. Mathias (R) R
7. Friedel (D) R

MASSACHUSETTS
1. Conte (R) W
2. Boland (D) R
3. Philbin (D) R
4. Donohue (D) R
5. Morse (R) R
6. Bates (R) R
7. Lane (D) R
8. MacDonald (D) R
9. Keith (R) R
10. Curtis (R) PR
11. O'Neill (D) R
12. McCormack (D) (Speaker) NV
13. Burke (D) R
14. Martin (R) W

MICHIGAN
2. Meader (R) W
3. Johansen (R) W
4. Hoffman (R) A
5. Ford (R) W
6. Chamberlain (R) W
8. Harvey (R) W
9. Griffin (R) R
10. Cederberg (R) W
11. Knox (R) W
12. Bennett (R) W
18. Broomfield (R) R

Metropolitan Detroit
1. Nedzi (D) R
7. O'Hara (D) R
13. Diggs (D) R
14. Ryan (D) R
15. Dingell (D) R
16. Lesinski (D) R
17. Griffiths (D) R

MINNESOTA
1. Quie (R) R
2. Nelsen (R) W
3. MacGregor (R) W
4. Karth (D) R
5. Judd (R) R
6. Marshall (D) R
7. Andersen (R) W
8. Blatnik (D) R
9. Langen (R) W

MISSISSIPPI
1. Abernethy (D) W
2. Whitten (D) W
3. Smith (D) R
4. Williams (D) W
5. Winstead (D) W
6. Colmer (D) W

MISSOURI
1. Karsten (D) R
2. Curtis (R) R
3. Sullivan (D) R
4. Randall (D) R
5. Bolling (D) R
6. Hull (D) R
7. Hall (R) W
8. Ichord (D) W
9. Cannon (D) R
10. Jones (D) R
11. Moulder (D) R

MONTANA
1. Olsen (D) R
2. Battin (R) W

NEBRASKA
1. Weaver (R) R
2. Cunningham (R) W
3. Beermann (R) W
4. Martin (R) W

NEVADA
AL Baring (D) W

NEW HAMPSHIRE
1. Merrow (R) R
2. Bass (R) R

NEW JERSEY
1. Cahill (R) R
2. Glenn (R) W
3. Auchincloss (R) W
4. Thompson (D) R
5. Frelinghuysen (R) R
6. Dwyer (R) R
7. Widnall (R) R
8. Joelson (D) R
9. Osmers (R) R
10. Rodino (D) R
11. Addonizio (D) R
12. Wallhauser (R) R
13. Gallagher (D) R
14. Daniels (D) R

NEW MEXICO
AL Montoya (D) R
AL Morris (D) R

NEW YORK
1. Pike (D) R
2. Derounian (R) W
3. Becker (R) W
26. Dooley (R) R
27. Barry (R) R
28. St. George (R) W
29. Wharton (R) W
30. O'Brien (D) R
31. King (R) W
32. Stratton (D) R
33. Kilburn (R) W
34. Pirnie (R) W
35. Riehlman (R) W
36. Taber (R) W
37. Robison (R) R
38. Weis (R) R
39. Ostertag (R) W
40. Miller (R) W
41. Dulski (D) R
42. Pillion (R) W
43. Goodell (R) W

New York City
4. Halpern (R) R
5. Addabbo (D) R
6. Rosenthal (D) R
7. Delaney (D) R
8. Anfuso (D) R
9. Keogh (D) R
10. Kelly (D) R
11. Celler (D) R
12. Carey (D) R
13. Multer (D) R
14. Rooney (D) R
15. Ray (R) W
16. Powell (D) R
17. Lindsay (R) R
18. Santangelo (D) R
19. Farbstein (D) R
20. Ryan (D) R
21. Zelenko (D) R
22. Healey (D) R
23. Gilbert (D) R
24. Buckley (D) R
25. Fino (R) R

NORTH CAROLINA
1. Bonner (D) R
2. Fountain (D) R
3. Henderson (D) R
4. Cooley (D) R
5. Scott (D) R
6. Kornegay (D) R
7. Lennon (D) W
8. Kitchin (D) W
9. Alexander (D) W
10. Jonas (R) W
11. Whitener (D) W
12. Taylor (D) W

NORTH DAKOTA
AL Short (R) W
AL Nygaard (R) W

OHIO
1. Scherer (R) W
2. Clancy (R) W
3. Schenck (R) W
4. McCulloch (R) W
5. Latta (R) W
6. Harsha (R) W
7. Brown (R) W
8. Betts (R) W
9. Ashley (D) R
10. Moeller (D) R
11. Cook (D) R
12. Devine (R) W
13. Mosher (R) W
14. Ayres (R) W
15. Moorehead (R) W
16. Bow (R) W
17. Ashbrook (R) W
18. Hays (D) W
19. Kirwan (D) R
20. Feighan (D) R
21. Vanik (D) R
22. Bolton (R) W
23. Minshall (R) W

OKLAHOMA
1. Belcher (R) W
2. Edmondson (D) R
3. Albert (D) R
4. Steed (D) W
5. Jarman (D) W
6. Wickersham (D) R

OREGON
1. Norblad (R) R
2. Ullman (D) R
3. Green (D) R
4. Durno (R) W

PENNSYLVANIA
7. Milliken (R) W
8. Curtin (R) W
9. Dague (R) W
10. Scranton (R) R
11. Flood (D) A
12. Fenton (R) W
13. Schweiker (R) W
14. Rhodes (D) R
15. Walter (D) R
16. Kunkel (R) R
17. Schneebeli (R) W
18. Whalley (R) W
19. Goodling (R) W
20. Van Zandt (R) W
21. Dent (D) R
22. Saylor (R) W
23. Gavin (R) W
24. Kearns (R) W
25. Clark (D) R
26. Morgan (D) R
27. Fulton (R) R
28. Moorhead (D) R
29. Corbett (R) R
30. Holland (D) R

Philadelphia
1. Barrett (D) R
2. Granahan (D) R
3. Byrne (D) R
4. Nix (D) R
5. Green (D) R
6. Toll (D) R

RHODE ISLAND
1. St. Germain (D) R
2. Fogarty (D) W

SOUTH CAROLINA
1. Rivers (D) W
2. Riley (D) W
3. Dorn (D) R
4. Ashmore (D) R
5. Hemphill (D) R
6. McMillan (D) W

SOUTH DAKOTA
1. Reifel (R) W
2. Berry (R) W

TENNESSEE
1. Reece (R) R
2. Baker (R) R
3. Frazier (D) R
4. Evins (D) R
5. Loser (D) R
6. Bass (D) R
7. Murray (D) R
8. Everett (D) R
9. Davis (D) A

TEXAS
1. Patman (D) R
2. Brooks (D) R
3. Beckworth (D) W
4. Roberts (D) W
5. Alger (R) W
6. Teague (D) W
7. Dowdy (D) W
8. Thomas (D) R
9. Thompson (D) R
10. Thornberry (D) R
11. Poage (D) R
12. Wright (D) R
13. Purcell (D) W
14. Young (D) R
15. Kilgore (D) R
16. Rutherford (D) W
17. Burleson (D) W
18. Rogers (D) W
19. Mahon (D) R
20. Gonzalez (D) W
21. Fisher (D) W
22. Casey (D) W

UTAH
1. Peterson (D) R
2. King (D) R

VERMONT
AL Stafford (R) R

VIRGINIA
1. Downing (D) R
2. Hardy (D) R
3. Gary (D) W
4. Abbitt (D) W
5. Tuck (D) W
6. Poff (R) W
7. Harrison (D) R
8. Smith (D) W
9. Jennings (D) R
10. Broyhill (R) W

WASHINGTON
1. Pelly (R) W
2. Westland (R) W
3. Hansen (D) R
4. May (R) W
5. Horan (R) A
6. Tollefson (R) R
7. Magnuson (D) R

WEST VIRGINIA
1. Moore (R) W
2. Staggers (D) W
3. Bailey (D) R
4. Hechler (D) R
5. Kee (D) R
6. Slack (D) R

WISCONSIN
1. Schadeberg (R) W
2. Kastenmeier (D) R
3. Thomson (R) W
4. Zablocki (D) R
5. Reuss (D) R
6. Van Pelt (R) W
7. Laird (R) W
8. Byrnes (R) W
9. Johnson (D) R
10. O'Konski (R) W

WYOMING
AL Harrison (R) W

Study of Petitions Goes On:

'Work' Forces Lose Round in Oklahoma

Oklahoma City—"Right-to-work" forces in Oklahoma lost another round in their fight to get a proposed constitutional amendment banning union shop agreements placed on the November election ballot.

Oklahoma Sec. of State William N. Christian refused to cut short the time allowed opponents of "right-to-work" to examine and challenge signatures on the initiative petition. He acted after hearing a progress report on the inspections of more than 75,000 of the 213,000 signatures on the petitions.

Attorneys for groups challenging the petition said examination of signatures has revealed evidence of "wholesale signing of the petitions by non-registered voters" and "gross fraud and misrepresentation" in a high percentage of other signatures.

Christian confirmed the Aug. 13 date he had previously set for a final hearing on challenges to the petition. He denied the request of "right-to-work" supporters for an immediate ruling or, alternatively, for weekly reports on the progress of the investigation.

In making an interim report to the secretary of state, opponents of the petition brought to the hearing two of the staff of 30 people who have been examining the signatures. They testified to finding numerous duplications of signatures and other faults in petitions they examined.

A first check of 1,689 signatures against Tulsa County registration records showed that 23 percent of the signers "are not even registered voters," the secretary of state was told, and more than half the signatures appeared to be improper.

Attorneys for the challenging groups and individuals said a "common finding" of the petition examination has been that many names were in the handwriting of the same person.

In addition to challenging signatures, the citizens opposing "right-to-work" are also contesting the legality of the petitions themselves, which were bedecked with the colors of the national flag "making it appear that . . . to sign it was an act of patriotism." The challengers also charged that the petitions were filed after the legal deadline.

Christian gave attorneys for the "right-to-work" group 30 days to answer the protests and said he would schedule oral argument on the legal issues 15 days thereafter.

Opponents must successfully challenge more than 78,000 names or invalidate the petitions on other grounds in order to keep the issue off the ballot.

BUILDING TRADESMEN in Philadelphia, recruited by local union officers like the two above—Business Manager James J. O'Neill, left, and Recording Sec. Albert Volpe of Plumbers Local 690—gave up their Saturdays for more than four years to build a dormitory for 68 orphan boys at Camp St. Joseph-in-the-Pines, Egg Harbor, N. J. The dormitory, valued at $200,000, is shown, rear, with a group of volunteer builders. Most materials were donated by contractors.

Showdown Nearing In Aerospace Talks

(Continued from Page 1)

class citizens of workers in this vital industry."

Companies involved include Lockheed, North American, Douglas, General Dynamics (Convair), Ryan, Boeing, Aerojet-General and Rohr.

Last of a series of mass rallies at which strike authorization votes were taken were held among employes of North American and Lockheed on July 1. The critical stage of bargaining is expected to be reached by mid-July.

Both union and industry officials have said they anticipate the Administration will be deeply involved in the bargaining because of the vital nature of the industry to the nation's defense. Eighteen Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service commissioners have been assigned to the negotiations.

The two unions have started a unique campaign, which includes distribution of thousands of leaflets at plant gates; television and radio programs giving the union position in the bargaining; and mass rallies and meetings with civic leaders here and in other aerospace centers.

The unions are seeking wage hikes based on productivity increases, plus "catch-up" increases aimed at bringing rates closer to scales paid in the steel, auto and rubber industries.

In addition, they are asking supplemental unemployment benefits, severance pay and other forms of job security, plus union shop clauses which now prevail in less than one-third of the industry.

First announced industry offer was made by General Dynamics to the IAM, which represents some 27,000 hourly employes of the firm's California facilities and workers at nine Atlas missile bases around the country.

The offer was for a 2.3 percent pay hike now and another 2.5 percent boost in one year. IAM Vice Pres. E. R. White termed the proposal ridiculous.

A similar offer was made by North American, and it, too, was rejected as "totally inadequate." UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock said it "all but completely ignored the 'must' program put together to meet the problems of aerospace industry workers and their families."

The proposal for a hike of from 5 to 8 cents an hour "would have widened the already wide wage gap that exists between aerospace workers and workers in other industries," Woodcock said.

"Time is running out," he declared, and "the price of peace is progress."

A spokesman for the two unions said they are "pledged to move forward together, on all bargaining fronts, and not to permit management to 'pick off' one UAW local or one IAM lodge with a superficially sweet contract offer and then ram that hoax down the throats of aerospace workers in other locals or lodges."

Americans at Work Films Given N. Y. State

Albany, N. Y—.The New York State AFL-CIO has presented the State Dept. of Education with 25 films in the Americans at Work series produced by the National AFL-CIO.

The movies were made not "to sell a union point of view" but rather to acquaint the public with jobs and workers that often are taken for granted, State AFL-CIO Pres. Harold C. Hanover said in presenting the films to Dr. Walter Crewson, associate commissioner of elementary and secondary education.

Unionists Aid Orphans by Free Labor

Philadelphia—Four and a half years of Saturday work, donated by Philadelphia area union members, have gone into the dormitory which 68 orphan boys will occupy in September at Camp St. Joseph-in-the-Pines, Egg Harbor, N. J.

The dormitory would cost about $200,000 to duplicate. Its 18 bedrooms were built by the sweat and muscle of volunteer workers from the building trades, with materials furnished by electrical, sheet metal, plumbing and heating contractors and others.

Plumbers Local 690 staged two boxing shows and raised about $12,500. The camp board of directors gave $12,000, saved through the years. Now other friends of the boys are furnishing the 33 by 176-foot stucco building.

Brother Francis William, director of the camp, started the whole thing in 1957 when he called on James J. O'Neill, business manager of Local 690, to ask for help in building cottages in which teen-age boys could live all year and attend school in Egg Harbor.

Floor Plan Outlined

O'Neill and the late John Henley, business manager of Bricklayers Local 1, drove 60 miles to Egg Harbor the next weekend with a squad of union members. They outlined a floor plan on brown paper bags and began digging a foundation.

Since then O'Neill and others have returned to Egg Harbor on successive weekends almost without interruption. Albert Volpe, recording secretary of O'Neill's local, was job foreman on the project, originally intended for 35 boys but now large enough for 72.

Some 75 workers have donated their labor free of charge—carpenters, cement finishers, bricklayers, lathers, plasterers, electricians and tile setters. All will be invited to share the applause when the building is dedicated at a public ceremony.

Study of Automation To Aid Handicapped

A special study of the effect of automation on the handicapped worker has been undertaken by the Federal Advisory Council to the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped.

Conducting it is a subcommittee of the council headed by Under-Sec. of Commerce Edward Gudeman. On it are representatives of the Depts. of Commerce, Labor, and Health, Education & Welfare, the Civil Service Commission and the President's committee.

Single Category of Aid Proposed for All Needy

Elimination of all present categories of public assistance and the substitution of one general type of aid with federal standards was urged by National Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities in a nationwide radio broadcast.

There are now four federal categories of help—aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, aid to the aged and aid to the disabled—and general assistance or home relief which is subsidized by the state, he explained.

"You know the most controversial relief program is home relief or general assistance," Perlis said on Labor News Conference, aired by the Mutual Broadcasting radio network.

"I think the real answer to the whole problem is the elimination of all categories and the substitution thereof of one single category of general assistance, which would include aid to the blind, etc., with federal aid and federal standards."

Recent controversies over alleged relief "chiseling" in Newburgh, N. Y., and Washington, D. C., have centered on the home relief category. Perlis said he favors "entirely" enforcement of the law, but dismissed newspaper and magazine stories about sensational abuses as "the kind of nonsense which circulation-seeking" publications "like to talk about."

"Ih our competitive society there now are, I believe, 4.5 million unemployed," he pointed out. "Where unemployment compensation is completely inadequate to meet the needs and is exhausted soon, where there are disabled, where there are blind, where there are children who are dependent, where there are aged who are not covered by social security, where automation puts a great many people out to pasture, so to speak, and does not provide any transition period at least with jobs—the answer is public assistance—public assistance for all the federal categories and home relief."

Fewer than 1 million of the 7 million persons receiving all categories of aid are in the employable class, Perlis noted. He blamed much of the public antipathy to direct relief on the basic unwillingness of people to pay taxes, and on a bias against "foreigners." Because of discrimination and segregation, more Negroes and Puerto Ricans are on relief "than there ought to be," he said.

Perlis, who also briefly discussed AFL-CIO union counseling programs, was questioned by John Herling of the National Newspaper Syndicate and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc.

Jobless Rate Still High, Reaches 5.5% in June

(Continued from Page 1)

June 1959; the low for postwar Junes was 2.6 percent in 1953.

An earlier separate report on the nation's 150 major labor market areas showed the total with "substantial unemployment"—a jobless rate of 6 percent or more—fell to 51 in June from 54 in May.

The three areas removed from the list were Kansas City, Missouri-Kansas; San Bernardino-Riverside-Ontario, Calif., and Trenton, N. J. They were reclassified from the 6.0 to 8.9 percent jobless grouping to the 3.0 to 5.9 percent category.

Four especially hard-hit areas also showed improvement.

Scranton, Pa. and Wheeling, W. Va., were moved from the 12 percent or more jobless grouping to 9.0 to 11.9 percent.

Duluth-Superior, Minn.-Wis., and Altoona, Pa., were shifted from the 9.0 to 11.9 percent jobless rate to the 6.0 to 8.9 percent group.

The job gains in these areas were traced to recent improvements in the manufacturing sector and seasonal upswings in construction, trade and transportation.

Three areas reclassified into the "low unemployment" or 1.5 to 2.9 percent grouping were Cedar Rapids and Des Moines, Ia., and Rochester, N. Y.

Boilermakers' Richardson Dies

Rumson, N. J.—Final tribute to Vice Pres. Peter V. Richardson of the Boilermakers, who died unexpectedly on the way home from his office in Jersey City, was paid here at funeral services in Holy Cross Catholic Church.

Richardson, 57, joined the union in 1925 and worked for years as a boilermaker, welder and mechanic. He was widely known as secretary-business manager of Jersey City Lodge 28, and as business manager of the union's Dist. 3.

On Mar. 1, 1961, the late Pres. William A. Calvin appointed him to the union's executive council.

Meany to West Germans:

Communist System 'Totally Bankrupt'

Berlin—The wall the Reds have thrown across Berlin "is only an ugly monument to the total bankruptcy of communism as a system," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the people of Western Germany in a July 4 television appearance.

"It can never end the magnetic pull and attraction of freedom," he declared. "It can only serve to fortify the spirit of those who love liberty and loathe despotism."

Meany's address was preceded by a showing of the AFL-CIO film, Land of Promise, with the narration in German. The documentary movie, which was shown in the U.S. the last two Labor Days, usually ends in film commentary by the AFL-CIO president, but for the West German showing he spoke in person after being introduced by Mayor Willi Brandt of Free Berlin.

All freedom-loving Berliners, both East and West, Meany said, have "their backs to the wall"—the "Wall of Shame" which "with all its barbed wire and pillboxes, can never hide the crimes of communism."

But the wall, like the Hitler period, is only a "dark interlude" which will pass into history, he declared.

"History was on the side of democracy in its struggle against Nazi totalitarianism," he recalled. "History is also on the side of democracy in its struggle against Communist totalitarianism.

"Liberty-loving people everywhere can draw great inspiration and strength from the continuous progress of the democratic ideals of the American revolution. All of us who are devoted to democracy face a common enemy and share a common fate. We will win."

On the day that more than any other commemorates the American revolution, Meany recalled that Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, said the American struggle for freedom was "intended for all mankind."

"For the 17 million Germans and for all peoples now saddled with dictatorship," Meany said, "this Jeffersonian ideal is today more appropriate and inspiring than ever before.

"All dictatorships, Nazi, Fascist, Falangist, Communist, hate and fear the basic ideals of the American revolution — respect for the dignity of the individual and freedom of conscience. These ideals are the essence and foundation of true liberty, the mainspring of a free way of life."

He said that in its social and political aspects, the American revolution was only a beginning, not a "final act."

"The American revolution brought national freedom to the New World," he continued.

A Genuine Revolution

"Our national history began with our democratic revolution. Our revolution was genuine—not totalitarian. It did not replace one tyranny with another. We built no walls to prevent our citizens from leaving our cities. Young America built no walls to shut out men and women from other lands coming to our shores to enjoy greater opportunities for a further and happier life in freedom."

In fact, Meany noted, America's democratic ideals were "invigorated" and her culture "enriched" by millions of immigrants who sought refuge from "political tyranny, religious oppression and poverty."

"We became a haven of the oppressed of all nations," he declared. "The history of our country and the cruel ordeal through which your beleaguered city is now passing confirm one great truth—down through the ages, men and women have fled from despotism to freedom. Never in human history have human beings fled from freedom to despotism."

SIGNING OF A NEW AGREEMENT covering 5,000 workers in New York private hospitals was witnessed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes in the mayor's office at City Hall. Pictured left to right, front, are Sullivan, Pres. Peter Ottley of BSEIU Local 144, Wagner and Dr. Samuel Berson, president, Association of Private Hospitals, Inc.; rear, Sylvan Elias of the local's legal counsel, and City Labor Commissioner Harold Felix. The renewal contract set a wage minimum of $60 a week and provided nine paid holidays and other benefits.

Communist Propaganda Backfires, ILO Condemns 'Modern Colonialism'

Geneva—The Soviet Union's ruthless domination of once free peoples was sharply denounced as "modern colonialism" in the heated debate that marked the final hours of the Intl. Labor Organization's 46th session here.

An uncomfortable Soviet delegation found itself voting with free workers and other non-Communist delegates for a resolution that branded the takeover of a country by "military occupation, economic domination or other means" as another form of "colonialism."

Colonialism "can not be condemned in Africa and condoned in eastern Europe," Bert Seidman, adviser to the U.S. worker delegate, told the conference of more than 1,000 government, employer and trade union representatives. Seidman is an AFL-CIO economist.

Sponsored originally by the Soviet delegation as a propaganda gimmick, amendments pushed through by the free workers in committee broadened the resolution's condemnation of colonialism to turn the tables on the Reds.

As finally reported out, the document represented the "collective wisdom of the majority" of the resolutions committee, as the worker vice-chairman, Kalmen Kaplansky of the Canadian Labor Congress, explained during final debate.

Its adoption, he added, "would be giving voice to the determination of workers' organizations throughout the world" to condemn "every form" of colonialism and foreign domination.

While protesting because of the amendments, the Communists were obliged to go along. The resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote.

Faupl Resolution Adopted

The conference also adopted at the final sitting of its three-week session a resolution calling for the intensification of the ILO's workers' education program presented by Rudy Faupl, the U.S. worker delegate, who is an international representative of the Machinists.

The proposal said that the 102-nation ILO, a United Nations specialized agency, should use all appropriate means "for reinforcing the effectiveness of trade union organizations through the education of workers."

It won unanimous endorsement except for the Soviet bloc, which abstained after failing, as Seidman told the conference, in an attempt "to twist" the proposal for "political ends."

By a vote of 171 to 69 and 28 abstentions, the conference rebuked the Libyan government for having refused authorization to Salem Shita, a Libyan worker member of the ILO's Governing Body, to attend one of its sessions.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who served on the U.S. worker delegation as an adviser, had helped steer through committee the resolution calling on the Libyan government to "fulfil the obligation which it has voluntarily assumed" under the ILO constitution not to interfere with the right of an ILO delegate to attend sessions.

Other action included the adoption of an international convention on social security, a recommendation on vocational training and preliminary conclusions on standards to be set next year on layoffs and the sale or use of machinery unsafe for the workers operating it.

The convention for assuring the same social security benefits for foreigners as received by citizens will be binding between the ratifying states. It was hailed by Pres. Miles C. Stanley of the West Virginia Labor Federation as "progressive in character" and a "milestone in promoting equal treatment for all workers in all participating nations."

Stanley served on the committee that hammered out the document.

Safety Measure Accepted

"We cannot compromise with human suffering, we cannot compromise with death," Pres. Al J. Hayes of the Machinists told the conference in urging the adoption of conclusions drafted in committee for banning the sale, hire or use of machinery inadequately equipped with safety devices.

The conclusions will serve as the basis for the international standard next year's conference will draft for submission for government action.

When the work begun this year is carried through, Hayes declared, it will prevent not only human suffering but will "save hundreds of millions of man-hours of work for our various economies."

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers termed a "good beginning" the preliminary work done on standards for avoiding reductions in work forces and for cushioning the moral and material blow of loss of jobs to workers and their families.

Potofsky said he hoped the employer delegates would withdraw some of their reservations so that "we will have a better instrument next year," when final action will be taken on a recommendation to be sent to governments.

ILO Seen Threatened by Soviet Drive

(Continued from Page 1)

from the free world which "have the feeling that they have something in common with Iron Curtain governments."

He said that on the important issue of representation at the tripartite body all government representatives of Europe and the Americas voted with Communist governments against worker delegates on the theory that all governments have the right to appoint anybody they want as worker delegates.

This violates the ILO constitution, said Meany, which provides that a worker delegate must represent workers from his country and come from a bona fide labor organization. Fascist and Communist countries keep sending delegates supposedly representing employers and workers when, in reality, said Meany, they represent only a totalitarian government.

Thomas P. Healy Joins NLRB Staff

Thomas P. Healy, a reporter and editor for 24 years, has been named by the National Labor Relations Board as associate director of information.

A staff writer since 1953 for the Daily Labor Report of the Bureau of National Affairs, Healy served before that with Telecommunications Reports and Broadcasting Magazine in Washington, D. C., and with the New York City News Association. He is a graduate of Notre Dame University and served in the Army Air Corps in World War II.

UN Urged to Help Open Berlin Wall for Month

(Continued from Page 1)

month of July to alleviate the cruel situation into which all Berlin has been forced. Let this great commission call for the opening of the wall for a trial period of one month—from July 14 to Aug. 13. This proposal is a practical step. It would endanger no one. Who has any reason to fear the reunion of families or a breath of fresh air of freedom or a trial period of one month?"

Delegates to the congress represent 56 million workers from 138 affiliated organizations in 106 countries.

The ICFTU congress has given a tremendous lift to West Berliners and added to the acute discomfort of the East German Communists and the Iron Curtain world.

Reds Attack Congress

Moscow's propagandists have labeled the session "a provocation" while the East German Communist press has denounced it in a series of special articles plus unflattering caricatures of Meany, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, ICFTU Sec.-Gen. Omer Becu, Pres. Willy Richter of the German Federation of Labor (DGB) and others.

In addition, the Communists have undertaken a program of "competitive co-existence" in an attempt to blanket news of the ICFTU congress. Special Communist mass meetings were scheduled for the opening day and further meetings have been announced for later next week.

Prior to the opening of the congress the ICFTU executive board cabled congratulations to Pres. Benkhedda of the provisional Algerian government on the overwhelming vote for independence in the national referendum which, said the ICFTU message, "will enable the Algerian people to build a free nation based on democracy, economic progress and social justice."

The ICFTU executive board also demanded that the UN General Assembly appeal to member nations "to apply economic sanctions against South Africa" because of the apartheid government's passage of an anti-sabotage law.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, July 14, 1962 | No. 28

UN Must Be Strengthened, Meany Tells World Labor

Hope Rises For Action On Tax Cut

There is a rising hope that Pres. Kennedy will "reconsider and recommend an immediate tax cut" to spur the lagging economy, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg told a nationwide radio audience.

He said that the President could most quickly achieve a tax reduction concentrated in the low and middle-income brackets by suggesting an amendment to the tax reform measure now before the Senate Finance Committee. The bill has passed the House.

Ruttenberg, appearing on Labor News Conference aired over the Mutual Broadcasting radio network, predicted that chances for an emergency tax cut before Jan. 1, 1963, "are increasing considerably" and that continued pressure from "all sides" may bring presidential action.

Pres. Kennedy told his latest press conference that he is "seriously considering" the recommendations for an immediate tax cut. The President has declared for a tax reduction in 1963.

The President, meanwhile, announced new depreciation guidelines that will reduce business taxes by an estimated $1.5 billion. The first revision in depreciation schedules since 1942, the new program, said Kennedy, is designed to "make American products more cost-competitive, to step up our rate of recovery and growth and to provide expanded job opportunities for all American workers."

The new schedule would shorten an asset's depreciable life by

(Continued on Page 7)

Mrs. Murray to Get Labor Day Award

Pittsburgh—Mrs. Elizabeth Lavery Murray, widow of the late Philip Murray, president of both the former CIO and the Steelworkers when he died in 1952, has been named recipient of the 1962 Labor Day Award of the Catholic diocese of Pittsburgh.

Bishop John J. Wright said the award committee felt Mrs. Murray's selection would "recall the memory of the great labor leader whose personality and integrity still inspires the labor movement," and through her would "pay tribute . . . to the wives of working men and the helpmates of all champions of the cause of workers."

The award will be presented at the annual Labor Day mass.

ON BEHALF OF AMERICAN LABOR, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany lays wreath at Berlin sidewalk memorial "in memory of Ida Sieckmann" and all Berliners who have died to maintain their freedom. The 87-year-old woman died last summer in her jump from the 4th floor of the building in background, which is part of the Berlin wall in Communist territory. (See story, Page 8.)

Showdown on July 17:

Senate Set to Vote In Health Care Test

A showdown vote in the Senate on a labor-backed program to provide hospital and nursing home care for the aged financed through social security was scheduled for July 17.

Under a unanimous consent agreement, the Senate will vote on a motion to table—and thus kill—a bipartisan health care amendment by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) and 25 other senators to a House-passed public welfare bill.

House Battle Next

If the tabling motion is defeated, passage by the Senate would be virtually assured and the battle would shift back to the House, where social security health care legislation has been bottled up for more than a year in the Ways & Means Committee.

One of a number of Republican "alternatives" to social security financing of health care benefits was buried when the Senate rejected by voice vote a substitute to the Anderson proposal offered by Sen. Thruston B. Morton (R-Ky.).

This would have taken an estimated $1.2 billion a year out of the federal treasury to pay for private health insurance premiums for persons over 65, with the type of benefits provided to be determined by the states. The subsidy each person would receive to pay insurance premiums would be scaled by income, with persons with little or no income entitled to a maximum of $125 a year.

In a move to broaden support for the social security health care

(Continued on Page 2)

Raps 'Neutralism' In ICFTU Address

Berlin—Neutralism and free trade unionism are incompatible, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the Seventh World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in presenting a labor program for strengthening the United Nations.

He said: "If we want to be neutral we surely would not have selected Berlin as a place to meet. When we look on the other side of that wall do we see any worker freedom? Do you think that those who are on the other side of this barbaric barrier have any illusions about neutrality and about equating democracy with tyranny?

"We just cannot be neutral when we are so close to hundreds of thousands of workers, many of whom are ready to risk their very lives to traverse that last 300 yards or to swim across that little river braving the gun fire of guards to get a breath of free air."

In his formal report to the congress Meany took up the apprehension that the United Nations is a lost cause. He pointed to the support of colonial peoples as "one of the positive achievements" of the United Nations, the UN technical assistance program, financial aid, International Labor Organization teams and other projects of its specialized agencies.

Millions Under Colonialism

Although nineteenth century colonialism has sharply declined in the postwar period and especially in the last five years, "there are still too many millions of people living under colonial rule" in Angola, South Africa, Southwest Africa, Rhodesia and Nyasaland, he said.

"In accordance with its anti-colonialist principles and traditions," Meany said, "the international free trade union movement will continue to press in the United

(Continued on Page 8)

New Talks Urged by Rail Unions

Five rail operating unions have called on management to return to the bargaining table and abandon its threat to put into effect unilateral and drastic work rules changes, including large-scale abolition of jobs.

The unions rejected as "premature" a National Mediation Board proposal that the dispute be submitted to arbitration. The proposal was made after management negotiators walked out of bargaining sessions for the second time and accused the rail brotherhoods of "delaying tactics."

Management had accepted the arbitration offer and an industry spokesman told newsmen that if the unions refused to arbitrate, the railroads would soon serve formal notice they will put into effect the work rules changes recommended early this year by a Presidential Railroad Commission.

Chiefs of the operating unions —the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brake-

(Continued on Page 6)

Aerospace Unions Fix Deadline For Settlement Covering 400,000

Los Angeles—With aerospace negotiations nearing the critical stage, bargainers on new contracts for 400,000 workers represented by the Machinists and the Auto Workers set July 23 as the deadline for settlement and warned management and government that an industry-wide strike is a "distinct possibility."

Bargaining has reached a crisis point because of the industry's refusal to recognize the basic needs of its employes, IAM Vice Pres. Ernest R. White and West Coast Dir. Paul Schrade of the UAW said in a report to all AFL-CIO unions in California.

'Prepared to Fight'

IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther put it this way in a summary for all aerospace employes:

"IAM and UAW members know their responsibilities, but we must have justice. We must be prepared to fight for what is right."

Putting the responsibility not only on management but also on the government, Hayes and Reuther asserted that the aerospace industry is "government enterprise run for private profit" and that "neither the U.S. nor the Canadian government can permit these companies once again to deny us justice which other industries already have granted."

Bureau of Labor Statistics figures put the average hourly pay of aerospace workers at $2.71, auto workers $2.87 and steel workers $3.18. A union statement asserted the duty of the government to help workers overcome their "second class" economic status by bringing wages and benefits up to the levels of the auto and steel industries. In addition, one of the major union objectives is supplemental unemployment benefits, won by auto and steel workers some years ago.

(Continued on Page 6)

PETITIONS CONTAINING 500,000 additional signatures supporting health care for the aged through social security are presented to Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.), center, by a delegation from the National Council of Senior Citizens. To date, more than 2.5 million persons have signed the council's petition for the Anderson-King bill.

In Saskatchewan Battle:

Indignation Mounts At Doctors' 'Mutiny'

Ottawa—Slowly but surely the doctors of the Province of Saskatchewan are shattering the once-bright image of the selfless physician devoted to the care of the sick and suffering, a wide range of observers agree.

The campaign of the Saskatchewan College of Physicians and Surgeon—provincial arm of the Canadian Medical Association—against comprehensive medical care for the province's 900,000 people is responsible for this change. Across North America and from around the world the Saskatchewan doctors are being condemned for flouting their Hippocratic oath as they try to stem the tide of public responsibility for health care. Canadian labor has joined in the condemnation.

The withdrawal of medical service by most of Saskatchewan's 700 practicing doctors on July 1 and the tactics of the college in trying to blackmail the Saskatchewan government into changing the law has created a grave threat to life and health.

July 1 marked the introduction of the medicare program to provide residents with complete medical and surgical care on a prepayment basis under government sponsorship. At least one-third of the population was not covered by private plans and in April 1959 the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF) government proposed a plan to provide universal coverage. The provincial general election of June 1960, which saw the CCF returned to power for its fifth consecutive four-year term, was fought almost entirely on the medicare issue. When the ballots were counted the government had won 38 of the legislature's 55 seats, more than two-thirds.

The medicare plan, approved by the legislature last fall, is financed by a personal premium of $12 per single person and $24 a family annually, plus part of the provincial sales tax and a small portion of tax on income. Total payment for medicare each year will range from approximately $40 for a family with $3,000 income to $100 for a family with $7,000 annual income.

Canadian Labor Congress Executive Vice Pres. William Dodge said that "the withdrawal of service by Saskatchewan doctors on the orders of the provincial College of Physicians and Surgeons can in no sense be considered a strike. . . . It could be more properly described as a mutiny, and deserves the strongest condemnation by all groups which place any value on democratic government and its procedures."

He added: "The medical politicians have stressed the importance of the so-called 'doctor-patient relationship'. In deserting their patients, the doctors of Saskatchewan have shown a callous disregard not only for the law but for the health and safety of the people of the province."

Solid Front Breaking

The college has organized what it calls emergency medical service only, served by skeleton medical staffs, at 36 hospitals throughout the province. The solid front of resistance is beginning to break down, however, as some doctors returned to work and others were imported from Britain on an emergency basis.

The Medical Care Commission claims that 50 to 55 hospitals outside the emergency centers are now operating, and of the remaining 68 hospitals, all but two which are closed are providing first aid and nursing care. Some 200 doctors are providing the emergency care organized by the college, about 50 are practicing normally under the terms of the medicare plan, another 50 practicing outside the medicare plan.

About 20 British doctors and a further group from other provinces have gone to Saskatchewan to assist in the emergency. Hospitals with doctors now represent about 8 percent of the province's bed capacity.

Saskatchewan Premier Woodrow Lloyd has been seeking a mediator in the dispute, and British Labor peer Lord Taylor, a medical doctor, will study the whole question. Still, hopes for an early settlement are dim. The college reiterates that nothing short of repeal of the legislation will satisfy it and the government feels that it will open the door to anarchy if it withdraws the act for which it had a substantial mandate from the people.

Textile Chain Ordered to Pay $150,000

The nation's largest textile chain, Burlington Industries, Inc., must give $150,000 in back pay to the 1,700 workers whose jobs were lost when management shut down its Peerless Woolen Mills plant at Rossville, Ga., last year, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

A panel of three board members upheld a charge made by the Allied Industrial Workers last fall that the giant company broke the law when it questioned Rossville plant workers about their union activities, threatened to close the plant because of the union, and refused to bargain collectively for Rossville production and maintenance employes.

The board directed its Atlanta regional director to determine how much back pay is to be given to individual workers out of the $150,000 award, which averages $88.23 per worker.

The union won a representation election at Rossville last August, and was attempting to negotiate a first contract in Burlington Industries' first organized plant when the company announced it was shutting down the mill.

Rossville workers, some with more than 30 years of service, have no retirement plan and received no severance pay. In the past year, the NLRB found, the mill sold and shipped outside of Georgia woolen cloth worth more than $1 million.

The NLRB order to management directs that, if and when operations are resumed at Rossville, the company shall bargain collectively with the union on request.

Board to Probe Ship Picket Dispute

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg announced that the Seafarers Intl. Union has agreed to call off "its boycott and picketing activities" of certain Canadian-operated ships and that an Administration-appointed public board will investigate the dispute.

Goldberg said the board will report its findings "with appropriate recommendations" by Aug. 1. He said he had conferred with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany about the boycott and "as a result of these conversations and of the intercession by Meany in this dispute, the SIU has agreed" to end its boycott activities.

Senate Set to Vote In Health Care Test

(Continued from Page 1)

measure, Anderson agreed to accept a modification of his own proposal to provide an additional "option" for persons who choose to receive health care benefits through a private insurance company instead of directly through the social security program.

The new option, proposed by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.), would allow an insurance company to offer persons covered by the program a choice between the standard benefits provided, which include up to 90 days of hospitalization for each illness, with the patient required to pay $10 a day for the first nine days, or, as an alternative, a maximum of 45 days of hospitalization with no deduction for the first nine days.

In both cases, the insurance firm would be reimbursed by the social security trust fund for actual benefits paid, plus an allowance for administrative costs.

In other congressional developments:

- The House prepared to vote, as the AFL-CIO News went to press, on a foreign aid authorization bill already passed by the Senate. A conservative coalition succeeded in tentative votes in inserting a bar against U.S. loans to the United Nations or contributions other than actual assessments until other member nations had paid up all overdue obligations. Administration forces hoped to remove this restriction either on a later rollcall vote or in conference.

Other key controversial issues included whether the President would be given authority to waive restrictions on U.S. aid to Communist countries and to nations which expropriate U.S. property when he considers it in the national interest.

- The Senate Finance Committee, in a series of votes on the House-passed tax revision bill, deleted one provision strongly supported by both the AFL-CIO and the Administration, and retained another provision backed by the Administration but opposed by labor. By a 10-5 vote, the committee killed the provision for a withholding tax on dividend and interest income comparable to the present withholding tax on wages. Then, by 10-7 vote, the committee retained a tax credit for businesses which invest in new equipment. The AFL-CIO has said that this would provide an unwarranted "multi-billion dollar windfall" for big business.

- A Senate floor fight was scheduled by supporters of the manpower retraining program to restore at least part of the drastic slash in training funds made by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The committee had cut the requested $100 million for the first year to $50 million. Lack of funds has set back the timetable for start of government-financed retraining, originally set for July 1.

U.S. Drops Assault Charges Against Hoffa

The government has dropped assault charges in Washington, D. C., against Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa, declaring there were "serious conflicts" in the testimony of witnesses to a clash in Hoffa's office last May.

Broader Housing Plan Called 'Urgent' for Aged

Legislation to expand federal programs to provide "decent housing at reasonable cost" for the nation's elderly has been strongly endorsed by the AFL-CIO at hearings held by a House Banking subcommittee.

Boris Shishkin, secretary of the federation's Housing Committee, described two bills introduced by Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.) as "important steps in the right direction in meeting the housing need where it is most acute and most urgent."

Rains proposed doubling the present $125 million-a-year authorization for low-cost government loans to non-profit groups constructing housing for the elderly to $250 million.

In a separate bill, he proposed a new $100 million program of direct loans and loan insurance to meet the housing needs of elderly persons and families in rural areas.

Shishkin said both programs could well be expanded, and urged $500 million for the urban program and $250 million a year for rural housing. Noting that the outlays will be repaid, he said:

"What we have here is not federal spending, but federal investment. And what better investment can there be than investment in good homes for America's senior citizens?"

Shishkin, who was joined at the witness table by AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. George D. Riley and Alexander Bookstaver, director of the federation's Dept. of Investments, cautioned against "isolation" of the elderly.

There is a need, he said, for special features and facilities in housing for the elderly. "But we believe it would be wrong and socially unsound to encourage isolation of the older people into separate housing for the exclusive occupancy of the old people only."

Shishkin said the housing need of rural areas goes "beyond the limited objective of housing for elderly persons and families."

There is, he emphasized, "a most urgent need to provide decent rural housing, especially for hundreds of thousands of migrant farm workers and their families whose living conditions are among the worst in our land."

Both the urban and rural housing programs, he said, should be "available to all without regard to race, creed, color or national origin."

He recommended that the rural housing bill be amended to put administration of the program under the Housing & Home Financing Agency rather than the Dept. of Agriculture.

Success of Telstar Hailed by Beirne

"Warm congratulations" have been issued by Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne to both the government and American Telephone & Telegraph Co. "on the outstanding scientific achievement" involved in the successful launching of the communications satellite Telstar.

The joint activity, Beirne said, "offers a splendid example of the constructive manner" in which industry and the government can work together.

"We in communications," he said, "are proud to be associated with this exciting new chapter in the history of communications progress."

Morgan Broadcasts Cancelled:

FCC Probe Asked Of Alabama Station

The AFL-CIO has demanded an inquiry by the Federal Communications Commission into the cancellation by Station WBRC of Birmingham of the Edward P. Morgan radio news program.

The AFL-CIO, which sponsors the nightly Morgan program over the American Broadcasting Company network, charged an "inadvertent error" by Morgan was seized on by the Alabama station and the mayor of Birmingham to shut off a source of free comment.

Other Agencies Notified

The labor federation also called the action of Station WBRC to the attention of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, the Senate Subcommittee on Freedom of Information and the Dept. of Justice.

A Justice Dept. suit against the city of Birmingham—to enforce desegregation of facilities at the municipal airport—was an indirect cause of the dispute with WBRC.

Morgan, in reporting the suit, said the Birmingham airport had segregated drinking fountains. Mayor Arthur J. Hanes protested this as untrue. Morgan on the following night reported the mayor's protest; the next day, Mayor Hanes announced WBRC was dropping the Morgan program.

Merely a 'Pretext'

AFL-CIO Public Relations Dir. Albert J. Zack, in his letter to FCC Chairman Newton Minow, declared "it is our conviction that Mr. Morgan's inadvertent error . . . was merely seized upon as a pretext."

"The real motive of Mayor Hanes, actively supported by WBRC, is to shut off one of the few remaining sources of free and critical comment available to Birmingham citizens."

In support of this charge, Zack included newspaper clippings reporting Mayor Hanes' role in the case.

When Morgan reported the mayor's protest and reported the fountains and restrooms at the city's new airport were integrated in accordance with federal law, he noted the Justice Dept. suit was aimed at the airport restaurant which serves only whites and at Mayor Hanes as co-defendant. A Birmingham ordinance compels segregation in eating places, Morgan reported.

Mayor Took Initiative

News stories then revealed Mayor Hanes as having been in touch with the ABC network and the local station to discuss the "possibility" of dropping Morgan.

"We've had all of this we can stand," the mayor was quoted as saying, Zack wrote Minow. It was the mayor, Zack noted, who then announced the cancellation of the Morgan program.

Zack told Minow the AFL-CIO has arranged to sponsor the Morgan program over Birmingham's WCRT, but this is a temporary arrangement since the particular time period is available only during the summer.

Baseball, Anyone?

He lashed the "transparent pretext" offered by WBRC Manager Jim Bailey. Bailey was quoted as saying the Morgan program was cancelled "in the best interests of the public" so the station could offer live baseball coverage. The baseball season is half over, Zack said, and few games are likely to be available at 6 p.m., Birmingham time.

He urged the FCC to investigate WBRC's "capricious and indefensible action" in cancelling the Morgan program and he urged a public hearing on whether WBRC is meeting its responsibilities when the station's license comes up for renewal.

10,000 Vote On TWU Airline Pact

New York—More than 10,000 ground service employes of American Airlines in 52 cities are voting on ratification of a two-year contract agreement calling for substantial wage increases and other improvements negotiated by the Transport Workers and the company.

The agreement was reported to a presidential emergency board headed by Prof. Paul N. Guthrie of the University of North Carolina, who said its terms will not be revealed until balloting is completed. Guthrie said it was the first time labor and management had continued to negotiate and reach a settlement after the appointment of an emergency board.

Meanwhile there were these developments in disputes involving the Flight Engineers and commercial airlines over plane crews and working conditions:

- Some 622 engineers employed by Trans World Airlines were voting on a union-management agreement reached recently with the aid of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.
- American Airlines management was meeting with negotiators for 700 FEIA members at Goldberg's suggestion. Contract terms, including the makeup of jet crews, were the subject of a discussion which the labor secretary called "constructive." Also meeting with Goldberg were members of the Air Line Pilots on American and Eastern Airlines.
- Some 575 engineers remained on strike against Eastern, which grounded all planes when the walkout started June 23. A strike of engineers against Pan American World Airways was halted by a U.S. District Court here at least until Aug. 1.

A major issue in the negotiations between the engineers' union and the airlines is the makeup of the crew of a jet airliner. The union's tentative agreement with TWA calls for a reduction of the crew from four men to three.

At American, a five-year agreement on jet crew makeup was not scheduled for reopening until 1963 but both union and management were reported discussing an early settlement.

TWO WINNERS of scholarships awarded by the Building Service Employes are shown with BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan. New York area winners are Alvin Adelman of Brooklyn, who will study engineering at Cooper Union, and Margaret Teresa McHugh of Long Island City, who will major in science at St. Joseph's College for Women. Eight other awards were made in union areas.

NLRB Hearing Upholds Reinstatement Order

Dallas—A trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board has ruled in favor of the Packinghouse Workers in a strike involving a precedent-setting federal court injunction against DuBois Chemicals, Inc.

Examiner Sidney Lindner found that management of the cleaning materials firm committed an unfair labor practice last September when it laid off seven production employes who came to work wearing union buttons, and then fired eight other workers when they walked out in protest and set up a picket line.

A Texas state court halted the pickets with an injunction Sept. 27, but picketing was resumed Oct. 5 and continued until Dec. 18 when U.S. District Judge Sarah T. Hughes ordered management to offer immediate reinstatement to all strikers while the NLRB processed an unfair labor practice charge filed by the union. This put the strikers back to work months sooner than if they had been forced to await final NLRB action.

The evidence, Judge Hughes ruled in issuing her precedent-establishing order, gave reasonable cause to believe that the company had violated the labor law. The examiner now has ruled that management violated four sections of the National Labor Relations Act and recommended that the board direct it to comply fully with the judge's ruling.

Lindner recommended that the NLRB order management to stop refusing to recognize or bargain collectively with UPWA Local 398 and to give back pay, with interest at 6 percent, to the seven workers it laid off Sept. 22, 1961, claiming "business was falling off."

The examiner reported that the plant's production workers called UPWA Business Agent Steve Mauser, arranged for a meeting with him the night of Sept. 21, 1961, and signed union cards; agreed to wear union buttons to work the next day, and if anyone was fired, to walk out in protest.

Lindner said management "laid off" those who wore union buttons as of 11 a.m., and then handed discharge notices to all production workers on the picket line at the plant Sept. 25, retroactive to Sept. 22.

Carey Sees Union Growth In Schools

Denver—Delegates to the National Education Association's 100th annual convention here were told that there will be "more and more unionism" in the schools and the NEA will be "cutting its own throat" if it continues to fight the trend.

Pres. James B. Carey of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers said teachers are learning "slowly and painfully" what newspapermen learned years ago, that so-called "professionalism" is "too often used as a substitute for economic dignity."

Carey's address followed a proposal by NEA Exec. Sec. William G. Carr that school boards enter into "professional negotiations" with "professional organizations" as an alternative to collective bargaining.

'No Accident'

Carey told the delegates, representing 800,000 NEA members, that the victory of the AFL-CIO-affiliated American Federation of Teachers in the recent collective bargaining election among 40,000 New York City school teachers was "no accident or temporary phenomenon." He added:

"Teachers are welcoming unionism as a wave of the future. The NEA should, too, or find that it has been left behind as history marches past."

Carey declared also that big business firms "are still using the crudest of strong-arm methods and intimidation to force teachers into conformity with their thinking, or into silence."

He charged that a teacher in a Syracuse, N. Y., suburb had been "fired" because his students, on a visit to a General Electric plant, had "asked questions which GE officials considered embarrassing."

Carey warned that "the predicament of teachers today—without unionism—is not only economic; it is a predicament also of integrity."

Bookbinders Set Goal as 35-Hour Week

Seattle—A standard 35-hour workweek throughout the industry was adopted as a top goal as the Bookbinders ended their 32nd biennial convention here.

The 237 delegates also approved a new course of apprenticeship for young bookbinders to cope with the impact of the increasing mechanization of the craft.

Union Pres. Joseph Denny announced to the delegates he would retire when his four-year term expired in December. Denny said he had reached the age of 65, an age he said he believes proper for retirement both for his own sake and to make way for younger leadership.

John Connolly of Boston, the Bookbinders' first vice president, is expected to succeed Denny. Connolly is unopposed in the referendum to be conducted in the fall.

Denny told the delegates the union has three goals: achieving a standard 35-hour workweek, maintaining wage levels in line with required skills and protection of the organization's jurisdiction.

In the discussion of the 35-hour week, the delegates were informed some 90 percent of the union's members now work less than 40 hours; contracts range from 35 to 38 hours.

The delegates also approved a resolution supporting the Anderson-King bill, which would expand the social security system to provide health care for the aged.

'R-T-W' Held No Block To Hiring Hall Demand

A union's proposal for an exclusive non-discriminatory hiring hall arrangement is a proper subject for collective bargaining in spite of a contrary state court decision under the Texas "right to work" law, a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has ruled.

Examiner C. W. Whittemore upheld the right of Local 18 of the Laborers to bargain on the subject and concluded that two employer associations in Dallas committed an unfair labor practice when they refused during negotiations last October to bargain on the union's hiring hall request.

There is no merit, Whittemore found, to the claim of the employer associations and the Texas attorney general that the NLRB has no jurisdiction in the case because a state court ruled that a hiring hall referral system is prohibited by the state "R-T-W" law.

The associations are Houston chapter, Associated General Contractors of America, Inc., and the Construction Employers Association of Texas. Whittemore recommended that the board direct them to bargain in good faith with the Laborers "on all matters concerning wages, hours and conditions of employment, including a non-discriminatory referral system and, if an understanding is reached, embody it in a signed agreement."

Employer Claim Rejected

The examiner rejected the employers' argument that Congress did not intend to permit the National Labor Relations Act to "undermine" the Texas state law and a ruling of the Harris County District Court. He overruled also the claim that the union's argument was moot because it waived its proposal for a hiring hall and signed a contract without such a provision.

Under the circumstances of the present case, a union hiring hall arrangement is a mandatory subject for bargaining, Whittemore ruled, since the union was the exclusive bargaining agent and proposed a non-discriminatory arrangement.

In reaching his conclusions, Whittemore quoted Supreme Court Justices John M. Harlan and Potter Stewart on the legality of union hiring halls, and from analyses of the 1959 amendments of the labor law by then Sen. John F. Kennedy and Sen. Everett M. Dirksen, Republican minority leader.

Facts on Joblessness

THE NATION'S unemployment situation has reached a critical stage. There has been no real change in the rate of unemployment in the past four months after all the seasonal factors affecting jobs are taken into consideration.

The indications are that for the rest of the year the rate will remain at about 5.5 percent or move somewhat higher unless there is strong and direct government action to stimulate the lagging recovery from the 1960-61 recession.

The critical nature of current unemployment has not been clearly presented to the public. The Labor Dept.'s monthly reports on jobs and joblessness—especially the June report—are somewhat misleading and do not deal with the basic problem of the failure of the total labor force to meet growth expectations.

The June report, for example, declares that "seasonal influences dominated the job situation between May and June," and leaves the distinct impression that the "2 million teenagers entering the labor market at the end of the school year" were responsible for the increase in the jobless rate from 5.4 to 5.5 percent.

The reason for this increase is more fully understood by examining figures not contained in the official release but available from the department. The seasonally adjusted unemployment rates for men between the ages of 14 and 19 dropped from 14.4 percent in May to 13.3 percent in June.

The rate of unemployment for men 20 and over, however, rose from 4.4 percent in May to 4.7 percent in June.

The impression, therefore, that teenagers searching for jobs forced up the unemployment rate or were accountable for the failure of the job outlook to improve, does not jibe with the figures.

★ ★ ★

IN ANOTHER area—the failure of the labor force to grow—the department reported that the total labor force expanded seasonally from May to June by 2.1 million persons. However, this expansion is below the seasonally expected labor force growth of 2.3 million, so that the total labor force expanded less than seasonally from May to June.

Since the beginning of 1962 the failure of the labor force to meet projected growth totals has tended to understate the seriousness of unemployment. Over a 12-month period, the monthly reports tend to show that about one million persons who were expected to enter the labor force and actively seek work have not showed up.

The general analysis is that in face of thin or non-existent job opportunities, these persons are not actively seeking employment.

Precise and complete figures and comparisons are vital if the nation is to fully understand the impact of unemployment on the economy and as an indicator of the economy's failure to achieve a meaningful growth rate.

At a point 16 months after the low-point of the 1960-61 recession the economy is lagging badly behind the recovery rates of the previous postwar recessions. Unemployment, which dropped from 26 to 55 percent in the 16-month period after previous recession lows, has dropped only 21 percent from the low of the 1960-61 slump. Employment has picked up only 1.8 percent in the 16 months of the current recovery compared to rates ranging from 3.5 to 6.5 percent in previous periods.

The need is obviously for a number of stimulants to the economy, led by an immediate, emergency tax cut concentrated in the low and middle-income brackets. But the necessity for such action cannot be properly understood if the basic figures and comparisons do not cleanly etch the nature of the unemployment problem.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, July 14, 1962 No. 28

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Outflow Alarming:

'Right-to-Work' South Losing Skilled Workers to Other States

The following is excerpted from the July 1962 American Federationist article entitled "The South: Stagnation or Progress?"

A POSSIBLE SIDE EFFECT of the "right-to-work" laws has been the continued, wholesale migration of skilled workers from the South to non-"right-to-work" states in search of higher wages, greater security and better working conditions.

In the past decade the outward flow of workers from southern states has reached proportions that might well alarm the southern governors and all in this region who are concerned about its future industrial development.

Reporting this movement, much of it from the southern states, in a paper, "Migration of the Nation's Population—Its Size, Nature and Causes," Commissioner Ewan Clague of the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, stated: "During a single year, more than 10 million persons move. . . . The search for better employment opportunities is a major force behind this migration."

Since 1950, the "right-to-work" state of Arkansas, with a population of less than 2 million, lost 420,000 of its citizens through migration to other states seeking higher wages and greater opportunities for advancement (Bureau of Census). As a result, Arkansas lost two seats in Congress.

Detailing the annual migration, the Dept. o Labor official continued:

"Five million of these persons moved to a different state. . . . The largest outflow was from the predominantly agricultural South. More than a million persons moved from the southern states to states in other regions. . . .

"It is fair to say that job-changing was the most important influence affecting this movement, particularly the shifts from one state to another."

What the Southern Governors' Conference described as its "shotgun" approach to bagging new industries has misfired in other notable aspects.

Two years ago, citizens of Wrightsville, Ga., raised $100,000 to build a 40,000-square-foot plant on the outskirts of town as an industry lure. The red-brick factory is still empty.

In Baldwyn, Miss., $230,000 of county general obligation bonds were sold to erect a plant for lease to a New York pleasure boat manufacturer. The manufacturer changed his mind and decided not to open the plant. The citizens of the Mississippi county now face a sharp increase in property rates to cover bond payments on the empty plant.

William Hackett of the Mississippi State Agricultural & Industrial Board was quoted by The Wall Street Journal as stating that competition among southern communities for any kind of new industry has become so fierce that inducement such as free sites, municipal plant financing and tax exemptions no longer are sufficient.

"The current trend," the official was quoted as saying, "is toward such extras as paying a company's moving expenses, training its workforce free of charge and offering outright cash gifts to pad a weak company's working capital."

Many strongly-financed companies want no part of this special inducement bait.

"When we go into a town, we want to pay our fair share of the tax burden and we don't want to be obligated to any particular interest group," E. D. Dodd, vice president of Owens-Illinois Glass Co., told the Journal. "A town that offers tax concessions or giveaways is merely robbing Peter to pay Paul and we know that sooner or later we'll be Peter."

IT IS PERTINENT TO SUGGEST to the Southern Governors' Conference that an examination by them of labor-management relations of major U.S. industries which they seek to attract to the South will show that in virtually every instance management recognizes the collective bargaining process and deals with the workforce through responsible unions.

If the southern governors are to be successful in their quest for the type of high-wage industry that will bring desirable employment to the southern worker and prosperity to the entire region, is it not time for them to make a basic reorientation of their anti-labor philosophy? Is it not time for southern leaders to give heed to the need for wiping their statute books clean of "right-to-work" laws, whose purpose has been to perpetuate the low-wage structures they now publicly deplore?

In its new "rifle approach," the South might well demonstrate it is willing to meet both management and labor on the collective bargaining terms that, for more than a quarter-century, have been accepted public policy—the fair terms on which responsible industry meets responsible organized labor in our flourishing industrial states.

Morgan Says:

Faulkner's Writing Illuminated Man's Burdens and Endurance

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

AFTER WILLIAM FAULKNER regretted the White House invitation to the dinner Pres. and Mrs. Kennedy gave for the hemisphere's Nobel Prize winners last spring, somebody asked him why he had been unable to attend. "Well," the great southern novelist reputedly replied, "it's a long way to go just for a meal."

Morgan

Although his mystic genius touch for describing human turmoil moved men in far places and although he knew something intimately of the world himself, Faulkner did not need to travel beyond the confines of his imaginary Yoknapatawpha County in his native Mississippi to establish his fame.

Indeed that is where it came from and it is from there that it will endure, "to illuminate the restless searching of all men" as Pres. Kennedy gracefully put it in eulogizing Faulkner who died of a heart attack at the age of 64. His search done, the President added, he now rests, "his place secure among the great creators of this age."

No doubt controversy long will rage over what it was exactly that Faulkner created. He often wrote obtusely. But the starkness of his characters, the depth and colors of his moods, the true deftness of his vernacular and the richness of his writing all add up to unforgettable artistry. As a callow undergraduate I read "Light in August" in 1932 but rather than reading I seemed to be undergoing an experience. Even though its details escape me now, the intimate feel of it is still there.

My colleague, George Watson, a southerner himself and a student of the master's work, wrote me a memo which sums him up far better than I can.

"Faulkner," Watson said, "transformed the public's literary image of the South from the veranda-sitting, julep-sipping gentry listening to the gentle rhythm of darkies happily strumming banjoes down on the levee to the brooding, dark and ultimately tragic fact of southern life. This was not done in an accusatory way. Indeed the South was for Faulkner a microcosm of America. But, in religious terms, the South was indelibly tainted with an original sin—the Negro's bondage, and that was and is the central, inescapable fact that persisted to plague the South.

"This sense of tragedy, of impending doom," Watson went on, "is what the brilliant young Negro writer James Baldwin says is desperately lacking in America to counterbalance our glib optimism and sense of life's possibilities."

.. AS I RIFFLED THROUGH the pages of "Light in August" this passage leaped out at me:

"The mild red road goes on beneath the slanting and peaceful afternoon, mounting a hill. 'Well, I can bear a hill,' he thinks. 'I can bear a hill, a man can. . . . It seems like a man can just about bear anything. He can even bear what he never done. He can even bear the thinking how some things is just more than he can bear. He can even bear it that if he could just give down and cry, he wouldn't do it. He can even bear it to not look back, even when he knows that looking back or not looking back won't do him any good.'"

As if he were still tugging on that thought, Faulkner told the cadets at West Point not long ago that as a writer he tried to show a man "in all his phases, his conditions, his base attitudes and spirit—that he goes on, he continues, he has outlived the dinosaur, he has outlived the atom bomb, and I'm convinced in time he can even outlive the wheel. There is something that makes him endure . . ."

Faulkner was obviously moved to deep respect by the Negro's capacity to endure and recently he established a foundation to provide literature scholarships, principally for Negro students in the Deep South. But in a "Letter to the North" in Life Magazine in 1956, though he spoke of the "incontrovertible immorality of discrimination by race," and his being drawn also to the Negro's side by "the simple human instinct to champion the underdog," he declared he was just as strongly against compulsory integration as compulsory segregation and he begged northerners to pause in the "forced" enforcement of civil rights.

The bitterly ironical fact was, of course, that the force of violence came from the racists, prominently including some of Faulkner's fellow Mississipians. But, for Mississippi's sake, and the country's, it is appropriate to point out that her richest legacy will not come from the Senator Eastlands or even her bevy of Miss America beauty queens but from the Nobel-and-Pulitzer-prize-winning works of the shy little squire of the farm north of Oxford on Pusscuss Creek, who was the third American literary great to die in one brief year—Hemingway, Thurber and now William Faulkner.

Washington Reports:

Congress Urged to Approve Youth Job Opportunities Bill

CURRENT HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT among young people makes the Youth Employment Opportunities Bill, now before the House, a "prime need," Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.), a veteran of the Civilian Conservation Corps, on which the new proposal is modeled, declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program.

Training young people would get under the program would employ them in conservation and community projects that would qualify them for other employment later, Rep. John P. Saylor (R-Pa.) said on the same program.

The bill would authorize employment of 16,000 young men between the ages of 16 and 22, in national forests and parks, and in state parks and other state projects, with the states, in the latter case, sharing the cost with the federal government. The bill would also help young men and women get "on-the-job training" in community projects such as hospitals and libraries.

"We are not an area looking for handouts," Saylor asserted of the Johnstown, Pa., area. "We want work, with 24 percent of the employable force now jobless. And this bill will see that things that need to be done can be done."

Blatnik, who was in the CCC from the fall of 1935 to 1937, declared: "This was a tremendous experience. I worked my way through college at that time. My father had been unemployed for almost three years. It was the first job most of the young men had and there was just something about it, first of all, physically. We worked in a really rugged but healthy outdoor area in northeastern Minnesota in the Great Superior National Forest, right on the Canadian border. It wasn't easy. It was a vigorous and invigorating type of work.

"WITH THE physical build-up comes a good, psychological and mental attitude. You would be surprised how these young men would change. They came in physically pale, sort of anemic, their mental attitude indifferent. They hadn't had a chance to work. Only six months later, and if they stayed as long as a year, what a difference! Tall, lean, brawn and tan, mentally positive. They had confidence in themselves and greater respect for themselves."

With 800,000 young people jobless, according to Blatnik, "this would be a modest bill."

Saylor answered the charge that the act would set up "a kind of military organization," by pointing out that "the organization will be under the direction and control of the secretary of labor." He declared that the bill "will conserve not only our natural resources, but our youth."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SEN. BARRY GOLDWATER of Arizona is obviously judging events correctly when he interprets creation of a National Republican Citizens Committee as an attempt on the part of its originators to make sure that Republican policy decisions and the choice of a Republican presidential nominee in 1964 are not left solely in control of conservative GOP members of Congress. Goldwater says that New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller is as upset about the group's formation as he himself.

Still, at the 1960 convention, both Rockefeller and Goldwater appeared before the executive group of the Platform Committee for public presentation of their recommendations. Rockefeller won the governorship in 1958 with a smashing victory over a Democratic incumbent, Averell Harriman, and he demonstrated that he knew how to cut down New York City's normal Democratic pluralities—at least when he himself was the GOP nominee for office. But he was greeted by the platform writers with a chill that made some observers wonder whether he would get out without being booed. Goldwater on the other hand was the hero of the occasion and departed the room with ovations.

Rockefeller had another unpleasant experience when even after getting Richard M. Nixon to agree to certain concessions on the GOP declaration of party principles, a two-day battle raged inside the Resolutions Committee before either Nixon or the governor could be sure the agreement would not come unstuck.

* * *

THE HISTORIC PATTERN of Republican Party operations for more than a quarter of a century has shown that congressional leaders are dominant in between presidential years but that the money men, the bankers, international businessmen and publishers, assert control over the selection of the presidential nominee.

It is clear that this group would under no circumstances accept Sen. Goldwater himself as the party's presidential nominee, any more than it was ever willing to accept the late Sen. Robert A. Taft. So it is moving to create the possibility of alternatives. It is moving, presumably, to make sure that the entire machinery of the 1964 nominating convention is not left in the hands of national committee members and state organizations who are pro-Goldwater and who now consider even Nixon as too liberal for comfort.

The official GOP congressional leaders, Sen. Dirksen of Illinois and Rep. Halleck of Indiana, say they do not agree with Goldwater's attitude on the National Republican Citizens Committee. But it would be astonishing if rank-and-file Republicans in Congress did not privately agree most fervently. As the Arizona Senator said, "Anyone who thinks that [an influential citizens' fund-raising group] doesn't have designs on the formulation of policy or the selection of candidates is politically naive."

* * *

DURING THE EISENHOWER YEARS, the Democratic leaders of Congress were highly resentful of the creation of a party Advisory Council, separate from other groups, by the late Paul M. Butler, chairman of the Democratic National Committee. They refused to join its membership and they made it plain that they thought policy formulation should be made solely by the elected members of Congress. Nevertheless the Advisory Council continued to function and it played a part in asserting a far more liberal policy than the congressional leaders found acceptable..

Goldwater says that in advance of a GOP rally on former Pres. Eisenhower's Gettysburg farm, neither he as chairman of the GOP Senatorial Campaign Committee nor his House counterpart, Rep. Bob Wilson of California, had been consulted about creation of a "citizens" group. He also says he was assured by Chairman William E. Miller of the Republican National Committee that no such organization was planned. [Miller, it turns out, was not himself informed.] The group was announced from Gettysburg, with Eisenhower's blessings and Nixon's. In other words, an intra-party battle has broken into the spotlight, and the battle will continue to rage.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ACT to provide jobs in conservation and community projects should be passed by Congress without delay, Rep. John P. Saylor (R-Pa.), left, and Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.) agreed in interviews on the AFL-CIO public service radio program Washington Reports to the People.

Union Votes Slated at 11 N.Y. Hospitals

New York—The Honest Ballot Association will conduct secret ballot elections at 11 voluntary hospitals starting July 17 to determine whether non-professional employes want to be represented by the Drug & Hospital Employes Local 1199 of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union.

That announcement was made as union members continued picketing at two hospitals, which have refused to recognize or bargain with Local 1199, and as the New York City Central Labor Council asked all affiliated unions to support the strikers in their "fight for a better life and basic union conditions"

The strike started May 23 at Beth-El Hospital, Brooklyn, and a few days later at Manhattan Eye, Ear & Throat Hospital. All efforts by the union and civic groups to settle the dispute have failed.

Employes of three other hospitals—Grand Central, Unity and Brooklyn Jewish—will be asked to ballot in the first series of voluntary elections. Eight more elections will be conducted the following week.

If a majority votes for Local 1199, the union will ask for bargaining rights with management of that hospital and will strike if necessary to gain recognition, Pres. Leon Davis said. If the union loses at any hospital it will accept the workers' decision, he said.

Hospital managements have refused to participate in the election but the Honest Ballot Association nevertheless agreed to supervise the balloting

Two other civic groups have intervened to aid hospital strikers. The Committee for Justice to Hospital Workers, headed by Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Porters and Joseph Monseratt of the Puerto Rico Labor Dept. office here, urged Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) to intervene. The Brooklyn Congress of Racial Equality condemned Beth-El Hospital for refusing to negotiate.

SEC.-TREAS. WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, right, is shown accepting for the AFL-CIO a duplicate of the 9 millionth typewriter produced by the Underwood Corp. Making the presentation in behalf of Dr. Ugo Galassi, president of Underwood, is Dr. Sergio Pizzoni-Ardemani. The presentation was made as a mark of the continuing mutually beneficial cooperation between management and labor.

BSEIU Local Launches New Drive in Hospitals

New York—A campaign to organize non-medical employes of voluntary hospitals here has been announced by Pres. Peter Ottley of the Hotel & Allied Service Employes, Local 144 of the Building Service Employes.

The union will attempt to win wages and other benefits comparable to those in Local 144's contract with 35 private hospitals covering almost 5,000 workers. Its campaign will intensify labor's drive to aid workers in "surgical sweatshops," Ottley said.

Ottley was named recently by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) as a member of the state's Apprentice Training Advisory Committee. He said he will ask the governor to support legislation putting voluntary institutions under the State Labor Act and to convene a special session of the Legislature for that purpose.

The BSEIU has an estimated 75,000 hospital workers as members. Thomas Donahue, assistant to union Pres. David Sullivan, predicted that the entry of Local 144 into voluntary hospitals here will be "welcomed by everyone except those administrators and trustees who prefer not to treat their employes as first class citizens." Sullivan is attending the Berlin conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Donahue said the union's hospital organization activities date back to 1937, in San Francisco, where all 43 voluntary hospitals are now under BSEIU contract. Other key cities are Minneapolis-St. Paul, with 18 hospitals under contract; Los Angeles, 6, and Portland, Ore., 9. The union also has contracts, Donahue said, with hospitals in Buffalo, Flint, Mich., New York and Washington, D. C.

Donahue and Ottley said Local 144 intends to "end low wages, restore dignity to the hospital workers, who are largely Negro and Puerto Rican, and wipe out the unfair subsidization of hospitals by underpayments to employes."

U. S. Mediator Pushes End to 10-Month Strike

Jamestown, N. Y.—The Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service has entered this area's longest labor dispute—the nearly 10-month-old walkout at the Jamestown Sterling Corp.

Commissioner William H. Buch of the Buffalo office of the FMCS brought representatives of the firm and striking local 45 of the Furniture Workers together July 10 for the first time in more than three months.

Buch called the meeting "mainly exploratory." While there was no indication of any progress toward settlement of the bitter dispute, both sides agreed to meet again at the call of the mediator.

Entry of the federal service into the strike came five months after the bow-out of the New York State Mediation Board, which had used some of its biggest guns in a vain effort to make peace.

The strike by about 160 employes at the furniture plant began Oct. 3, 1961, after company and union failed to reach agreement on an initial collective bargaining agreement. An estimated 60 workers later returned to work and picket line incidents and arrests followed.

Meanwhile, state mediators were attempting to resolve the dispute. Their efforts resulted, last Feb. 16, in the convening of a special panel in nearby Buffalo to hear information from both sides and make recommendations.

The panel, headed by Albany Law School Dean Andrew V. Clements, met with the union representatives but the company boycotted the session, stating it would have no part of a "railroaded" settlement.

Local 45 voted in favor of the panel's recommendations, which included wage increases, a union shop and dues checkoff. But beyond that, nothing ever came of them.

Several bargaining sessions were arranged by the parties themselves later but no significant progress was made.

GOP Picks Bottum For South Dakota Race

Pierre, S. D.—Lt. Gov. Joe Bottum has been selected as the Republican candidate in the Senate race this fall against Food for Peace Dir. George McGovern. Gov. Archie M. Gubbrud (R) immediately appointed Bottum to serve the unexpired term of the late Sen. Francis Case (R), and he has been sworn in.

McGovern, a former Democratic congressman, was narrowly defeated in 1960 by Sen. Karl E. Mundt in a race for the state's other Senate seat.

Bottum won the nod over five others on the 20th ballot at the special convention of the Republican State Central Committee.

Work Stoppages Above Year Ago

Work stoppages in May were at a slightly higher level than in May of 1961 or 1960 but well below the average of the immediate postwar years, the Labor Dept. has reported.

A report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics said 625 May work stoppages idled 240,000 workers for .26 percent of all working time as against .16 percent for last May, .23 percent for May of 1960 and .68 for the May 1947-1949 average.

Time lost in the first five months of 1962 was greater than in the corresponding period of 1961 but below comparable levels of 1960, 1959, and the 1947-1949 average, BLS reported.

Struck Line Appeals:

Southern Airways Fights CAB Order

Southern Airways has carried to federal court an effort to override a Civil Aeronautics Board order directing the airline to offer reinstatement with full seniority to its striking pilots and to bargain in good faith with their union.

The CAB order, confirming a tentative decision announced earlier, warned the airline bluntly that failure to resume good faith bargaining could result in revocation of its government operating certificate.

Attorneys for the airline asked the U.S. District Court in New Orleans to annul the order. The airline claimed the board erred in finding that Southern had violated the Federal Aviation Act by failing to "exert every reasonable effort" under the Railway Labor Act to settle the dispute.

In a counter-move, the Pilots asked the U.S. District Court in Washington, D. C., to strengthen the CAB's order by requiring that all strikebreakers hired by Southern since the June 5, 1960 strike be dismissed to make room for the returning pilots.

The CAB had said only that replacements hired since July 12, 1960, when agreement was reached on economic issues, should be dismissed if necessary.

The CAB majority—Chairman Alan S. Boyd, Vice Chairman Robert T. Murphy and G. Joseph Minetti—voted to reverse an examiner's ruling which upheld Southern's position. Board members Chan Gurney and Whitney Gillilland entered a sharp dissent, charging that the majority had taken the position that the union's responsibility for the impasse "is to be completely ignored while the company may be pilloried as the hapless victim."

The CAB directed Southern to resume negotiations within 30 days and to seek to reach a settlement within the following framework:

- An economic package based on an earlier agreement reached through the efforts of the National Mediation Board.
- Southern would be permitted to retain replacement pilots hired during the first stage of the strike, but returning strikers would be entitled to displace later replacements.
- Striking employes retain full seniority and other rights, with Southern dropping its demand that returning pilots begin as new employes.
- Any disciplinary action by Southern Airways shall be subject to statutory grievance procedure under the Railway Labor Act.

During the two-year dispute, none of the 138 original strikers has crossed the picket line to return to work.

2 Unions Set Deadline for Air-Space Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

The federal government buys about 90 percent of the industry's products. The Wall Street Journal has reported that in the current fiscal year the government plans to spend $17.3 billion with the industry—an increase of $2 billion over last year's spending.

Strike authorization has been voted by members of the two unions employed at missile bases, test sites and plants manufacturing aircraft and components—North American, Lockheed, Douglas, General Dynamics, (Convair), Aerojet General, Ryan and others.

The urgency of the joint union warning was emphasized by the Machinist, which said in a July 12 editorial:

'Situation Serious'

"Let there be no mistake: the situation is serious. Management negotiators in these great corporations have wrapped themselves in the flag and, in effect, are daring union members to strike.

"If management in the aerospace industry is unwilling to face up to its responsibilities to its employes in these negotiations, then management must accept responsibility for the strike on July 23."

At a conference in Washington last February, delegates from union locals in the U.S. and Canada agreed to move together on the bargaining front and not to let management "pick off" one plant or one local with a substandard contract.

The two unions agreed to ask for contracts providing more job security, more equitable wages, modernized insurance programs and a union shop in all plants, with restrictions on subcontracting and other devices to divert work outside the union shop.

Every company proposal to date, the unions said, has completely ignored the essential program proposed by the IAM and UAW. Two firms have offered pay hikes of 2.3 percent now, 2.5 percent more after a year. Both were rejected as "totally inadequate."

Rail Operating Unions Ask New Negotiations

(Continued from Page 1)

men—charged that the carriers previously "went through the formalities of bargaining" without engaging in good faith efforts to settle the dispute over the conference table.

In a letter to the mediation board rejecting arbitration, the union spokesmen said the interval of direct bargaining and mediation had "not fully explored" all areas in dispute "and for that reason we believe the proffer of arbitration is premature." They said the unions had less than seven hours to present their position before the carriers walked out.

The unions have warned that an effort by management to change work rules would touch off a strike. A showdown could be averted temporarily by appointment by the President of an emergency board to make recommendations in the dispute. Such a board would have 30 days to report and the status quo would be maintained for 30 days thereafter while bargaining is resumed.

Meanwhile three of the unions moved to take their case to the public with a newspaper advertising campaign. A joint ad of the Locomotive Firemen, Trainmen and Engineers, headed "What's Really Wrong With the Railroads" appeared in 23 newspapers, including the New York Times.

It charged that "financiers have taken over" control of the railroads under a philosophy of "let the public and the employes be damned."

AFL-CIO Analysis:

Tax Loopholes Send U. S. Jobs Overseas

Jobs as well as tax dollars are escaping overseas through loopholes in U.S. tax laws, according to an AFL-CIO Dept. of Research analysis in the July issue of the American Federationist.

The article, a Labor's Economic Review feature of the magazine, points out that most private funds invested abroad go to industrialized, prosperous nations and not to the "capital-starved, less-developed countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America."

During the past decade—"while capital investment at home was insufficient to maintain an adequate rise in employment"—American corporations nearly tripled their investments abroad.

While the United States was in its most recent recession, for example, American investments abroad increased by more than $5 billion a year.

A major reason for this outflow of capital, the article points out, is that U.S. tax laws do not require American companies to pay taxes on overseas profits until the money is returned to the United States.

This, of course, encourages firms to reinvest their earnings abroad.

"Rather than expand production in the United States for shipment to world markets, it pays to meet the needs of overseas markets by producing more and more overseas," the article adds.

The analysis points out that the chain reaction doesn't stop there, noting:

"This kind of tax loophole even provides an incentive to produce abroad and then ship the product home."

In addition to encouraging overseas investments and the exporting of jobs, present tax laws also enable American citizens to avoid paying all or most of their income tax by acquiring foreign residency or merely living abroad for 17 out of 18 months.

Still another loophole is the foreign "tax haven" device. Even though most industrialized nations in Europe have lower corporation profits tax rates than the United States, a growing number of American firms have established paper subsidiaries in nations which have little or no taxes.

This is the industrial counterpart of the "runaway flag" operation in shipping, by which large fleets are chartered by small non-maritime nations to escape U.S. tax, safety and labor laws.

Closing of tax loopholes through ending preferential treatment of income earned overseas would mean millions of dollars in added revenue for the Treasury, the AFL-CIO analysis notes.

But "even more important will be the end of tax-stimulated overinvestment in countries already highly industrialized, and the increased probability that more American dollars will be used to create jobs and economic growth at home," it adds.

THE VETERAN TREASURER of Local 113, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, John Welsh, was honored at a dinner in Philadelphia marking 27 years in his union post and the completion of seven terms as a Democratic member of the Pennsylvania General Assembly. Welsh, a candidate for re-election to the legislature, is shown seated as IUE Pres. James B. Carey joins in paying tribute to him.

Hope Rising For Action on Cut in Taxes

(Continued from Page 1)

32 percent, Kennedy said. A Treasury Dept. survey disclosed that the new guidelines also were 15 percent shorter than those in actual use by 1,100 large corporations which hold two-thirds of all depreciable assets in manufacturing.

Treasury Sec. Dillon estimated the potential increase in annual depreciation charges by the 12 million corporate and non-corporate businesses would total $4.7 billion in the first year, but that the actual first year increase would be closer to $3.4 billion which would cut business tax liabilities by $1.5 billion.

The AFL-CIO, a number of other organizations, senators and governors have called for a tax cut now to stimulate the economy, with the emphasis on the lower brackets. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce has called for an across-the-board immediate tax cut affecting both individual and corporate rates.

The tax cut, Ruttenberg said, should be concentrated where it will do the most good among the 80 percent of taxpayers who pay taxes in the first individual income tax bracket. Pres. Kennedy and others have recommended an across-the-board tax decrease.

Ruttenberg declared "corporations do not need a tax cut now; high income individuals do not need it."

'To Stimulate Economy'

The AFL-CIO economist warned that "a tax cut designed to stimulate the economy must not be confused with efforts and attempts on the part of the Administration to gain the confidence of business . . . the tax cut ought to be granted now because it is essential to develop economic activity and not . . . to further instill confidence in business."

Ruttenberg declared that the House-passed tax reform bill now before the Senate Finance Committee should be enacted but that the tax investment credit portion of the bill is "unwise." The AFL-CIO is supporting, he pointed out, the tax on withholding of dividend and interest income and taxation of income earned overseas.

There is a very clear distinction between an immediate tax cut and tax reform next year where the across-the-board rates on individual income taxes "will be reduced in accordance with the amount of revenue that is derived from closing tax loopholes," he said.

Deck Officers Seek Automation Controls

Cleveland—Delegates to the 55th biennial convention of the Masters, Mates & Pilots have been called upon to develop a program to protect deck officers from the adverse effects of automation.

"We must develop a program for automation that looks upon the people we represent as human beings in the center of the automation picture," Pres. Charles M. Crooks told the delegates in his State of the Union report at the convention here.

At least six areas must be covered to protect maritime labor from the adverse effects of automation, he said. These include:

- "Retraining as part of the capital cost of installing new devices, which should include financial support of training institutions plus support of personnel undergoing training.
- "Manpower cuts through attrition only, where possible.
- "Liberalized pensions and early retirement.
- "Severance pay.
- "Training for skills needed in industries related to automation.
- "The fruits of automation must be shared with those remaining in the industry."

"The priority of human consideration must be set as a prime condition of cooperation by the union in studies of automation and must be provided for prior to setting them up," Crooks declared.

The convention, which began July 9, was scheduled to hear an address by William Penrose, a former West Coast local member presently with the National Academy of Sciences, whose subject will be shipboard mechanization and manpower.

Recently the union tentatively accepted a proposal by Bethlehem Steel Co. that would permit the automation of American-flag ore ships in the Calmar Steamship Co. and Ore Navigation Co.

Bethlehem proposed that for every licensed deck officer displaced by the effects of automation, two deck officers would be placed aboard the companies' foreign-flag vessels under the identical provisions of its collective bargaining agreements with MM&P.

The deck officers' president also called for the formation of a national structure to protect the union's independent status among other sea unions.

At the opening session delegates heard expressions of firm support of MM&P's goals and were tendered a warm fraternal welcome.

Fred Neubauer, Regional director of Steelworkers Districts 5000 and 7000, located here, referred briefly to the historical spirit of cooperation between the Masters, Mates & Pilots and the Great Lakes seafaring steelmen, while Patrick O'Malley, president of the Cleveland AFL-CIO, welcomed delegates to the Ohio hub.

O'Malley is a regional director and vice president of District 2 of the Auto Workers here, representing about 200,000 UAW members.

Both were warmly received by delegates of MM&P's more than 40 locals and branches.

MINNESOTA CONVENTION

The Minnesota State AFL-CIO will hold its convention Sept. 24-26 at Rochester, Minn., Sec.-Treas. Neil C. Sherburne has announced. The date was changed from the originally-scheduled Sept. 17-19 to avoid conflict with conventions of several affiliates. The convention listing carried in the June 23 issue of The AFL-CIO News should be corrected accordingly.

Guild Told World Watches Health Battle

Buffalo—The U.S. State Dept. is watching the national debate over health care for the aged "with as much interest as any doctor," Carl T. Rowan, deputy assistant secretary of state for public affairs, told the Newspaper Guild convention here.

"We are doing so," he said, "because what our leaders say and what Congress and our major organizations do about this and similar social legislation goes to the very heart of one of our most important tasks—the job of helping the world to understand what we as a people are all about."

As a reporter in Minneapolis, Rowan was a Guild member before joining the Kennedy Administration.

In his new role as "poacher turned game warden," he told the 225 delegates, he had noted that most of the headlines go to summit meetings, Geneva conferences and other dramatic confrontations. But these, he said, are only "the tiny visible part" of relations between nations, which have grown so vastly complicated that they embrace "the actions and attitudes of all our citizens and professions."

"No wealthy nation in human history ever made a nobler effort to prove its generosity, its humanitarian concern for the welfare of others, than has the United States," Rowan declared, "yet the idea of a nation of greedy people clinging stubbornly to the status quo lives on and on in many lands."

This is so, he continued, because improvements in worldwide communications have made each citizen his own "voice of America."

Reflection of Nation

"The congressman on the Senate floor or an American Medical Association official in Madison Square Garden is as much a reflection of this country's attitudes and aspirations as any broadcast we can put out through official channels. No Asian, African or Latin American is going to believe that we intend to do for them what we are unwilling to do for our own people," Rowan said.

"When our leaders see 'socialism' and even 'communism' in every effort at social reform, whether it be medicare for our aged, better schooling for our youngsters, or voting rights for Negro citizens, then this foreigner is going to receive with more than a little doubt our claims that we intend to wage a war against poverty, illiteracy and social injustice on his behalf."

In his keynote address to the 29th Guild convention, ANG Pres. Arthur Rosenstock attacked the spread of monopoly in the newspaper industry and urged the union to press its bid for corrective legislation.

While the industry is in sound economic health, Rosenstock observed, this should not stop anyone's ears to "the death rattle of great segments of the press through merger, monopoly and peculiar amalgams." The convention, in a subsequent resolution, called for new regulations to govern proposed mergers of so-called "failing properties."

These would include court-directed appraisals to determine the fair market value of such properties and would require the publisher to accept any bid meeting the property valuation and assuring continued publication.

Guild Exec. Vice Pres. William J. Farson urged the delegates to give real meaning to the ANG's drive to achieve its wage goal of at least $200 a week for journeymen in key classifications. He outlined proposals for a new collective bargaining department for the union to improve coordination among locals and for an increase of 50 cents a month in per capita payments to the international, 40 cents of which would go into the defense fund.

"Recently we have seen how publishers in Minneapolis and Milwaukee, fortified by their 'defense' fund (strike insurance) have been able to sit back and wait in the hope that the striking unions will soften up and collapse", Farson observed.

"If this strategy is to be countered, we must be prepared to meet it with a fully adequate fund of our own."

Chemical Workers End Borax Strike

Los Angeles — The Chemical Workers have reached an agreement with U.S. Borax Co. after a seven-week strike at suburban Wilmington and have removed the firm's 20 Mule Team products from its unfair list.

In the settlement, U.S. Borax waived its demand for a "management" clause recommended in a U.S. Chamber of Commerce handbook on model arbitration clauses, union Vice Pres. Jack T. Swift reported.

The new two-year contract provides a 3 percent annual wage increase, an additional company payment of $2.11 a week for hospital and medical service, severance benefits and protection for employes in plant consolidations and on contracting-out of work.

ICFTU Delegation Hailed:

Unions Seen Key To Free Algeria

By Arnold Beichman

Algiers—Algeria is a country of 10 million people which won a war for independence after seven and a half years of bitter fighting. This new North African land has tremendous strategic importance for the free world.

While political battles rage between Algerian leaders who are "in" and those who are "out"—in Algiers, Tunis, Rabat, Cairo, Geneva and Paris—the overriding question is who, how and what is going to be done to make Algeria a going concern once more.

For the free labor movement an important bulwark for the rundown national economy must be the Algerian trade unions. By helping the General Union of Algerian Workers (UGTA) get into business again after six years of persecution by French colonialism the country can move forward. The immediate problem is vast unemployment in the cities.

Leaders at the ICFTU Seventh World Congress in Berlin made it the first order of business to send a mission of its executive board members for a two-day visit to Algeria and to report back with recommendations. Headed by Ahmad Thili, secretary of the Tunisian labor movement, the mission included representatives from Asia, Africa, North and South America, Europe and the Caribbean area.

Enthusiastically Received

The mission's secretary is Irving Brown, now the ICFTU spokesman at the United Nations, who is a personal friend of many Algerian government and union officials. Six years ago the French colonial administration barred Brown from entering Algeria as a member of the ICFTU delegation to examine charges of repression of trade union rights of Algerians. Brown last week was enthusiastically received, as were other members of the ICFTU delegation everywhere they went.

Meetings with trade union officials led to assurances from ICFTU spokesmen that they would recommend a program of large-scale assistance to UGTA.

Simple needs like typewriters, mimeograph machines, public address equipment and automobiles are certain to be supplied but the real long-term need is training and education in the problems of trade unionism, since it was difficult during the war years to do much more than to train Algerian workers how to shoot a rifle and clean a machine gun.

Underlying the meetings with UGTA leaders was the constant refrain of gratitude for what free trade unionism had done over the past decade to help the Algerian people. Abdennour Ali-Yahia, UGTA leader, recalled how the ICFTU had asked its affiliates to back the Algerian people's cause in the United Nations and the Intl. Labor Organization and had given large financial help. Other UGTA officials referred to the effective pressure brought by labor movements from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries against France.

Premier Praises Aid

Meetings with Premier Ben Khedda of the Algerian Provincial Government and other political leaders evoked the same expression of gratitude to the ICFTU and its affiliates. Said Ben Khedda to the ICFTU delegation:

"The victory of the Algerian people is a victory for all workers in the world and all democratic forces and if we received aid from all democratic countries it was because our cause was just, because it was based on social justice and respect for man. I am certain that the international solidarity which helped us in the past will continue to do so. That is why we are overjoyed that the ICFTU is helping us. In the first instance we count on our own people but we also count above all on international solidarity and especially on the ICFTU and its millions of members to help us in our reconstruction."

Economic Goals Stressed

Brown stressed that political independence could be "an empty slogan unless economic independence is achieved and directed at raising standards for Algerian workers and peasants."

"The most important service the ICFTU can render to the Algerian labor movement," said Brown, "is to bring technical assistance to UGTA as rapidly as possible. There is a vacuum now in Algeria, a socio-economic vacuum which is going to be filled and the question is who is going to do it—the forces of the free and democratic trade unionism or the undemocratic elements who see in Algeria a prize worth catching."

The city itself is recovering slowly from the effects of the Secret Army Organization (OAS) provocations of recent months. Debris is strewn all over the city.

FREE WORLD LABOR LEADERS are shown at the 7th World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Left to right: AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Pres. Walter Sickert of the Berlin district of the West German Federation of Labor (DGB), ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu, West Berlin's Mayor Willy Brandt and ICFTU Pres. Arne Geijer.

Meany Calls on ICFTU to Support Steps to Strengthen United Nations

(Continued from Page 1)

Nations and elsewhere for the right of self-determination and independence for colonial peoples in Europe as well as Africa and Asia."

The future of the United Nations will depend on the attitude and actions of new member UN states which "have on the whole displayed a high degree of maturity and responsibility," Meany declared. He said it was largely to the credit of new UN members that the Soviet "troika" plan was rejected, the Chinese Communists barred from the UN, the problems of Hungary and Tibet given UN consideration, and the UN police force sent to the embattled Congo.

Because of such developments, Meany argued, the UN will survive as a world organization "advancing the objectives of its charter." Meany termed the UN irreplaceable as a forum to discuss the burning issues of our time, "to secure confrontation between ideals of liberty and democracy and the totalitarian ideology of fascism, communism, falangism, terrorism or with any other reactionary conceptions."

"We consider the UN a unique moral force which no country—no matter how powerful it may be—can indefinitely ignore and snub without harming itself. The UN provides the best available channel for conciliation of disputes and mediation of conflicts. For these reasons we of free labor are determined to do all in our power to help save the UN."

End 'Double Standard'

To strengthen the UN Meany recommended an end "to the application of double standards in regard to such principles as the maintenance of peace and the right of self-determination" no matter if the violators of such principles were Western or Communist nations or members of the Afro-Asian bloc.

"Colonialism should be regarded and denounced as an evil in Europe as well as in Africa and Asia. Self-determination should be considered an inalienable right of all people regardless of the color of their skin and the geographical location of their homeland," he said.

In other recommendations for strengthening the UN he called for:

- A 17-nation committee set up by the UN and assigned to recommend steps for ending colonialism. It should also submit proposals to help captive European nations to regain their national independence.
- The ICFTU should call on the UN to survey the condition of political prisoners and to propose measures to alleviate their plight. Such considerations should lead to the adoption of a "UN charter of the political prisoner."
- In view of the continuing flight of starving refugees from Communist China and Angola, the UN should take up as a humanitarian problem greater aid to these refugees.
- The UN peace machinery should be strengthened through the establishment of permanent machinery for holding democratic plebiscites in arbitrarily divided areas which threaten world peace.

Reuther Lashes 'Monument'

AFL-CIO Vice-Pres. Walter P. Reuther told ICFTU congress delegates "this is the first time in the history of the world where liberators have erected a wall to keep people whom they have liberated from escaping." Reuther was referring to the "wall of shame" which he characterized as "a monument to the total moral bankruptcy of the Communist system."

It is not the freedom of Berliners, said Reuther, that is being threatened here "but the freedom of all people of the world because we have learned through the tragic lessons of history that both peace and freedom are indivisible values, and you make them secure only as you make them universal."

Decrying the nuclear arms race, Reuther said that the Soviet Union bears "full moral responsibility for violation of the nuclear test ban." Because the Soviet Union refuses to agree to a system of international control and inspection under the UN, he said, the world is unable to get a test ban.

Reuther called upon the highly industrial nations to commit greater resources to help developing nations. He argued that the ICFTU must devote more funds in the field of organization and education in these new countries "because democracy will not be possible in the developing nations in the absence of strong militant trade union organizations."

'Not Going to Wait'

"The people in Asia, Africa and Latin America are not going to wait. We must help them make a hundred years of economic and social progress in the next 10 years. What the free world must do is to challenge the Communists to a positive economic and social contest in the world as to which social system can best meet the needs of the human family."

A spokesman for the Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development (OECD) praised Meany for his recent statement on foreign trade "as an act of courageous and farsighted statesmanship."

Gosta Rehn, director of OECD Manpower and Social Affairs, was referring to a recent Paris meeting of the OECD Trade Union Advisory Committee where Meany warned that imports of developing countries would necessarily create difficulties for the workers in the more advanced countries, but that the way to overcome these difficulties was not by waging war against imports but by the revision of legislation and internal economic machinery of the country affected.

7-14-62

Meany Lays Wreath At Berlin Wall Site

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in West Berlin for the world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, made the following remarks in laying a wreath at the sidewalk borderline between West Berlin and East Berlin, where 87-year-old Ida Sieckmann died in 1961 in an attempt to jump to freedom:

"I lay this wreath here today in memory of Ida Sieckmann and of all the Berliners, both East and West, who have lost their lives in an attempt to maintain their freedom.

"I lay this wreath on behalf of the millions of American trade unionists whom I represent and also, I am sure, on behalf of free trade unionists all over the world. This should serve, this monument, as a reminder to those who still have freedom that, the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. It should also serve as a reminder to those who might be in doubt as to where freedom lies that this is an example of the savagery of international communism visited on a people of a fair city—a people whose only desire is to work and live in peace and freedom.

"In memory of Ida Sieckmann and of all the Germans, and of all the Berliners who have fought for freedom . . . and as an inspiration for those who continue to fight . . . I proudly lay this wreath on behalf of the American labor movement."

Algerian Unions Pledged U. S. Labor's Full Support

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany pledged "unstinting American labor solidarity and support" to the General Union of Algerian Workers (UGTA) in its "indispensable role as a vital force for building a united, prosperous, democratic Algeria."

Meany wired the union congratulations, and "through you the Algerian workers and the entire nation on the occasion of their glorious achievement of national independence."

Algeria's heroic struggle, said Meany, will "hasten the triumph of those nations in Africa, Eastern Europe and elsewhere still fighting for self-determination."

The AFL-CIO is confident, he added, that "zealously exercising its democratic rights as a free trade union movement, UGTA will meet its new responsibilities as honorably and effectively as it discharged its duties throughout the historic struggle for national independence."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, July 21, 1962 | No. 29

Senate Health Care Defeat Shapes Issue for Elections

Low-Wage Tax Cuts Urged Now

Los Angeles—A tax cut for lower income groups is needed now, not next year, "to spur the American economy — to push money into the spending stream," the AFL-CIO's chief economist declared here.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, told the annual convention of the Federation of Professional and Business Women's Clubs that proposed tax cuts for business and higher income groups are unnecessary either to "placate" business or for the economy.

"The purpose of a tax cut is to spur the American economy—to push money into the spending stream," he declared.

"The low and middle-income groups can be counted on to spend the money from a tax cut. Spending is an urgent need in a sluggish economy, where demand is not using the ability of the national capacity to produce."

Ruttenberg observed that people generally are no longer talking about whether a tax cut is needed but rather what kind of tax cut and when. But, he asserted, "talk will not move America forward. Action will."

Recovery Lags

Ruttenberg said the nation has been talking for 16 months about recovery from recession.

"Administration spokesmen," he continued, "have now come to the sad realization that the recovery is not strong enough to bring unemployment down this year.

"After 16 months of recovery, unemployment in June stood at 5.5 percent of the labor force, a dis-

(Continued on Page 4)

Sanctions Lifted From Bookbinders

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has removed sanctions imposed against the Intl. Brotherhood of Bookbinders under Article XXI of the federation's constitution and has restored full rights to the union following its agreement to comply with an impartial umpire's decision and with the provisions of Article XXI relating to internal disputes.

The case is the first to be carried to completion, from the imposition of sanctions to their removal, under the new internal disputes plan adopted by the AFL-CIO convention last December.

Meany acted to remove the sanc-

(Continued on Page 9)

75TH ANNIVERSARY convention of the Maintenance of Way Employes heard Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks, left, warn of the threat of government ownership raised by the trend toward mergers in the railroad industry. Here Harrison is welcomed by Pres. Harold C. Crotty, center, and Sec.-Treas. Frank L. Noakes of the Maintenance of Way Employes. (Story, Page 9).

Breakthrough at Douglas:

Aerospace Pact Nets Pay, Security Gains

Los Angeles—Agreement on new contracts with the Douglas Aircraft Co., averaging 25 cents an hour in wage gains over three years and providing improved job and union security, was viewed by negotiators for the Auto Workers and Machinists here as a possible pattern-setter for the huge aerospace industry.

Joint bargaining teams for the two unions continued contract talks with five other major aircraft and missile producers as some 22,000 Douglas employes prepared to vote on the tentative settlement.

Ratification votes were set for Sunday, July 22, at Douglas plants in Santa Monica and Torrance, Calif., where the workers are represented by the IAM, and at Long Beach, Calif., Tulsa, Okla., and Charlotte, N.C., where the UAW has bargaining rights. Workers at test sites and missile bases are to vote July 24.

Federal Mediation Dir. William Simkin, who took part in the uninterrupted 48-hour bargaining session which led to the Douglas accord, said the mediation service was intensifying its efforts to bring about agreements between the unions and other companies.

The UAW and the IAM have set walkouts for Monday, July 23, unless new contract terms are reached with Ryan, North American, Lockheed, Aerojet-General and the Convair Division of General Dynamics. The five firms employ more than 100,000 on the West Coast. All told, about 400,000 workers are affected by the current round of negotiations.

A stumbling block in the path of further settlements was the reported opposition of other aerospace firms to a key element in the Douglas agreement—the agency shop. That provision would require employes who refuse to join the union representing them to pay the equivalent

(Continued on Page 2)

Kennedy, Meany Appeal to Voters

By John M. Barry

Social security health care for the aged shaped up as a prime issue in the November elections as the Senate by a 52-to-48 vote killed the Anderson-Javits compromise bill and Pres. Kennedy promptly called on the people to elect a Congress that will "pass this bill in 1963."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany issued a parallel appeal to the voters, declaring that the federation "does not intend to give up this fight" for legislation "imperative in America."

Meany said the Senate had dealt "a bitter blow to countless American families—not only the aged who need health care but to the vast number of younger people who need help in supporting older relatives."

"During the congressional campaigns this fall, we believe it incumbent upon every candidate for both houses to stand up and tell the American people how he will vote on this issue in the next Congress," Meany declared.

"This will be a No. 1 issue in the 88th Congress and the voters can insure its passage as they mark their ballots in November."

Appearing before television cameras an hour after the vote, Kennedy pointed out that a shift of two votes would have led to passage of the labor-supported bill. He grimly labeled defeat of the measure a "most serious defeat for the American people," and declared:

"We have to decide, the United States, in 1962, in November, in the congressional elections, whether we want to stand still or whether we want to support this kind of legislation for the benefit of the people."

The President pledged to re-

(Continued on Page 12)

Post Office Employes Vote Union

By David L. Perlman

The nation's postal workers have voted overwhelmingly for union representation in the biggest collective bargaining election ever held in the United States.

First returns announced by the Post Office Dept.—representing results from the 63 largest post offices which accounted for 163,-300 of the 373,000 ballots cast throughout the nation—showed both the Letter Carriers and the Postal Clerks headed for exclusive national recognition.

AFL-CIO affiliates, including the Mail Handlers, Motor Vehicle Employes, Special Delivery Messengers and the Government Employes, in addition to the two big postal unions, won a total of 69 percent of the big city vote. Unaffiliated unions had 30 percent, and only 1 percent of the ballots were marked "no union."

The 99 percent vote for union representation was termed "very significant" by Assistant Postmaster Gen. Richard J. Murphy.

(Continued on Page 11)

'Fruitful' ICFTU Congress Closes Sessions in Shadow of Berlin Wall

Berlin—The 7th Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions adjourned its meeting here after sessions generally considered "sound and constructive."

"It was a fruitful meeting," said AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who headed the federation's delegation, "and out of the decisions made there will come solid trade union progress."

"But even more important was the fact that this Congress met in the shadow of the 'Wall of Shame'," the federation president declared. "Only yards away from where the representatives of free labor met as free men, countless workers are held in bondage by the biggest slaveholding regime in the world's history."

"Every delegate who attended the sessions in Free Berlin always will remember that wall, and none can ever relax while their fellow workers are enslaved behind it," Meany said.

In eight days of sessions marked by smooth progress and an absence of fireworks that were commented on in a closing speech by ICFTU General Sec. Omer Becu, more than 300 delegates moved on many fronts to defend the cause of freedom and to reaffirm policies to promote social and economic progress.

Warning on Spain

In a major policy declaration, the Congress warned that any attempt to bring Fascist Spain into the European Economic Community (the Common Market) would meet free international labor's fierce opposition.

So-called internal changes and reforms recently announced by Franco were merely an indication that his is a dying regime, said ICFTU Pres. Arne Geijer, which "could not last out the year" without the continued support of western governments.

A resolution declared opposition "to the presence, admission or association of Franco Spain in economic, cultural and other institutions of the free world."

The Congress also lashed at Communist Cuba as "a dictatorship no less brutal and inhuman than that

(Continued on Page 10)

SEALING AGREEMENTS with a multiple handshake are principals in joint bargaining by the Machinists and Auto Workers with the Douglas Aircraft Co. The new three-year contract, subject to ratification by members, was the first major settlement in the current round of negotiations in the aerospace industry. From the left are: IAM Vice Pres. Ernest R. White; UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, director of the union's Aerospace Dept.; William Simkin, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service; James L. Mayer, director of industrial relations at Douglas; Arthur Viatt, regional director of the Mediation Service, and J. Curtis Counts, assistant director of industrial relations and chief negotiator for the company.

Aerospace Unions Win Wage, Security Gains in Douglas Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

of union dues as an agency fee. It represents a compromise of the bargaining unit's demand for a union shop requiring all employes to be union members, a joint statement by the company and the UAW-IAM negotiators said.

The agency shop will go into effect at the company's Charlotte plant if North Carolina's so-called "right-to-work" law is changed to permit its operation, the statement said.

Since the agency shop has been challenged in the courts, Douglas agreed that if it is found to be illegal an election will be held in 18 months, and the union shop will be written into the contract for each unit where two-thirds of the employes vote for it.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg called the Douglas settlement "a welcome one." He said it was reached voluntarily through free collective bargaining "and is non-inflationary, taking into account the interests of the public as well as those of the company and workers."

"It is now incumbent on the two unions and the other companies in this important defense industry to intensify their bargaining so as to reach agreement quickly, thus assuring uninterrupted production," Goldberg said.

Earlier, in a television interview, the secretary had declared the nation could not "tolerate" a strike in aerospace and that he "would not hesitate" to seek additional legislation from Congress if Taft-Hartley Act procedures proved insufficient to prevent a walkout.

If ratified, the Douglas agreement would run to July 15, 1965, and would provide, in addition to the agency shop:

- General wage increases of 5 to 8 cents hourly retroactive to July 2; 6 to 8 cents effective next July 1; and 6 to 9 cents effective July 1, 1964.
- Additional increases of 4 to 8 cents hourly over two years for employes at the Charlotte plant, whose average earnings are below those of other Douglas workers.
- Continuance of the cost-of-living escalator clause.
- Payment by the company of 2 cents an hour per employe toward the $7.25 monthly cost of dependents' health insurance coverage, now borne solely by the employes.
- Extension of the definition of dependents covered by the insurance plan to include unmarried children up to the age of 23.
- Earmarking of 1 cent an hour of the next cost-of-living increase to establish a fund for payment of up to half of any future increase in health insurance premiums, with the remainder to be borne by the company.
- Payment of 2 cents an hour by the company to establish a fund for a future supplemental unemployment benefit program on which negotiations must begin within 30 months.
- Continuance of present terminal layoff and savings programs.

IBEW Local to Build In Florida for Retirees

Kearny, N. J.—A New Jersey local of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers will build one of the nation's largest retirement housing projects in Clearwater, Fla., with 800 moderate-cost, furnished apartments.

The $12.5 million FHA-insured project will consist of five nine-story buildings on a 25-acre site in "a campus-like atmosphere," IBEW Local 1470 Pres. Frank Hourtal announced.

Hourtal said the local, which represents 15,000 Western Electric Corp. employes in New Jersey, voted unanimous approval of the non-profit enterprise, and the international union has pledged financial backing.

First priority in occupancy will be given to retired members of the local, with second preference to Western Electric employes in other areas who are members of the IBEW. Any unfilled units will be open to residents of the Clearwater area.

Construction is expected to start in September. Hourtal said the union has obtained site approval and a certificate of feasibility from the Federal Housing Administration and all interim financing has been arranged.

The air-conditioned furnished units, all with kitchens, will rent for $30 monthly per room. The project will include such features as non-slip floors, wide corridors with recessed handrails and special bathroom facilities. There will be recreational and hobby facilities and a modern clinic with a resident physician in attendance.

"One Step Further"

In announcing the project, Hourtal said:

"Organized labor has provided well for its members during their working years. We have gained wages and working conditions, job security and welfare and pension programs. In great measure, labor is responsible for the increased longevity of its members and so now we must go one step further—we must assist our people in their days beyond union membership."

AFM Signs Pact on TV Music Tracks

Hollywood, Calif.—Foreign scoring of television music sound tracks is prohibited in a two-year contract concluded by the Musicians and major members of the Alliance of Television Film Producers.

AFM Pres. Herman Kenin hailed the agreement as a "substantial advance" for musicians in their battle against the use of cut-rate foreign-made sound track as background music on domestically filmed TV programs.

The contract provides a transition period of seven months ending next Mar. 1 for programs produced by Bellmar Enterprises, Bing Crosby Productions, Calvada Productions, Desilu Productions, Inc., Four Star Television, T & L Productions, Mayberry Enterprises. Other conditions are the same as those in contracts between the union and the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Kenin said.

Senate Reapportionment Ordered:

Michigan High Court Knocks Out Districts

Detroit—Michigan's Supreme Court has ordered reapportionment of the state senate on the basis of population as the result of a suit by State AFL-CIO Pres. August Scholle, who charged that "frozen" senatorial districts violated the constitutional rights of the state's urban majority.

The court set an Aug. 20 deadline for reapportionment. If the legislature fails to act, the court ruled, all senators must be elected at-large on a statewide ballot in the November election.

Scholle, who had filed his suit more than two years ago, hailed the 4-3 decision as "a restoration of equality at the ballot box."

The decision was the latest of a series of state reapportionment actions which have followed the U.S. Supreme Court's historic decision last spring upholding the right of city dwellers to challenge on constitutional grounds denial of fair representation in state legislatures.

The Michigan court two years ago had turned down Scholle's suit on the basis of then-prevailing judicial opinion that apportionment was a "political thicket" in which courts might not tread. Scholle appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court which, shortly after its ruling in the Tennessee case, indicated the Michigan court should hear Scholle's suit on its merits.

Although the state was technically a defendant in the case, Michigan Atty. Gen. Frank Kelly joined Theodore Sachs, attorney for Scholle and the State AFL-CIO, in urging the court to invalidate the present apportionment of the senate. He said his position—a reversal of the stand the state took in the original hearing—was based on the "revolution of the last 90 days" since the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling.

Fought by GOP Trio

The suit was opposed by three Republican state senators, whose attorney told the court that the present apportionment of the senate was designed "to safeguard the people against the excesses of the majority."

Scholle's action successfully challenged an apportionment frozen into the state constitution by a 1952 statewide referendum. Previously, the state law had contained an unenforced provision requiring reapportionment after each decennial census. On the same ballot was a labor-backed plan, which failed to pass, to reapportion the senate on a population basis for the first time since 1925.

Opponents of redistricting are expected to appeal the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court, and to seek a stay in the Michigan order until the high court reconvenes next fall.

Anticipating a possible ruling on reapportionment, the Michigan legislature recessed at the end of June, instead of adjourning. Before the decision was handed down, several Republican members of the legislature had threatened to bring impeachment action against the state supreme court justices in order to block redistricting.

Gov. John B. Swainson (D) termed the threat "a most appalling show of arrogance" and a "John Birch Society approach."

Under the court's ruling, the scheduled Aug. 7 primary election for the state senate is cancelled. If the legislature fails to redistrict, there will be a special primary in September to choose 32 at-large senatorial candidates.

Goldberg Names Panel In Seafarers' Dispute

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has named Samuel I. Rosenman, New York attorney and arbitrator, to head a three-member public board to inquire into a dispute which has resulted in picketing of some Canadian-operated ships by the Seafarers. The other members are David L. Cole and James J. Healy, both veteran arbitrators.

Picketing by the SIU was discontinued under an agreement worked out with the help of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Louisiana Restricts Strikebreaker Hiring

Baton Rouge, La.—Louisiana became the eighth state to restrict the use of professional strikebreakers as Gov. Jimmie H. Davis (D) signed a labor-backed bill which had passed both houses of the legislature by substantial margins. The bill, which was sent to the governor's desk shortly before the legislature adjourned, was similar to a measure which Davis had vetoed two years ago.

As passed 68-6 by the House and 32-4 by the Senate, the bill prohibits third parties to a labor dispute from supplying or offering to supply replacements for striking or locked-out employes. The maximum penalty for violation is one year in prison and a $1,000 fine.

Anti-strikebreaker laws are now on the statute books of Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Washington and Michigan. Unions in the printing trades and newspaper fields, where several agencies specialize in furnishing non-union workers to break strikes, have spearheaded the drive for state and city laws.

Meanwhile in New York City, Acting Mayor Paul R. Screvane signed a bill unanimously passed by the City Council and declared that the anti-strikebreaker law "serves the best interests not only of labor and management but of the city as a whole."

Answering criticism of the new law, Screvane said the city administration of Mayor Robert F. Wagner considers the measure necessary "to guarantee a healthy climate of free collective bargaining."

Other cities which have similar laws include Wilmington, Del.; Newark, Morristown and Dunellen, N. J.; Rochester, N. Y., and Manchester, N. H.

'R-T-W' Bills Killed In Louisiana Votes

Baton Rouge, La.—Supporters of so-called "right-to-work" laws failed to get to first base during the recent session of the Louisiana legislature.

Both a bill banning union shop agreements and a proposed constitutional amendment to the same effect were crushed in House committee by identical 13-3 votes.

Louisiana experimented with a "right-to-work" law in 1954. Two years later, the legislature repealed it.

Managements Stage Walkout:

Unions Rally to Save Jobs As Railroads Order Layoffs

Railroad management has served formal notice that it will put into effect drastic changes in work rules and abolish the jobs of thousands of locomotive firemen on Aug. 16.

The unilateral action was announced by the railroads after management negotiators had stalked out of a bargaining session with the five operating unions and spurned a union plea to resume direct negotiations.

Chief executives of the five unions involved—the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors—scheduled an emergency meeting July 20 in Cleveland to map a response. All unions have already armed their negotiatiors with strike authorization votes.

In a joint statement, the unions accused the companies of "following a course of no negotiations so that a crisis would develop." They said the work rules changes, based on recommendations made by a Presidential Railroad Commission, would result in "unsafe and inefficient railroads."

The showdown date would be postponed if Pres. Kennedy names an emergency board to make recommendations in the dispute. Under the Railway Labor Act, the board would have 30 days to report and then both parties would be obligated to maintain the status quo for an additional 30 days of negotiations.

Meanwhile, in other rail developments:

- The second of a series of advertisements rebutting the railroads' charges of "featherbedding" by unions appeared in 23 leading newspapers throughout the nation. Captioned "200,000 Scapegoats," the ad asked:

"Is this 'featherbedding' when government statistics show an increase of 103.4 percent in worker productivity; 62 workers killed and 10,410 injured in one of the country's most hazardous industries . . . irregular hours and work days . . ." The ads are sponsored by the Trainmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Locomotive Firemen.

- A long-standing dispute between the Switchmen and western railroads was settled with a 5 percent retroactive wage increase and other benefits. Union members will receive a 2.5 percent raise retroactive to July 1, 1960 and an additional 2.5 percent retroactive to Mar. 1, 1961.

The Switchmen, after having turned down by membership vote a "pattern" settlement agreed on two years ago by other rail unions, had been blocked by a court injunction from striking to enforce wage claims based on eliminating "craft inequities." A recent Supreme Court decision led to the voiding of the injunction and renewed bargaining brought about the wage agreement.

- In testimony before the Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee, Economist Leon Keyserling backed a bill by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) to declare a moratorium on rail mergers until 1964. Keyserling, who did a study of mergers for the Railway Labor Executives' Association early this year, warned that pending rail mergers would do "irreparable" harm to the nation's economy.

Potash Strikers United; One Firm Blocks Peace

Carlsbad, N. M.—A new chapter in trade union solidarity is being written here by 2,800 potash workers—members of four unions and employed by six companies—in a strike now seven weeks old.

The workers have won the key issue which led to the strike. The companies, which bargain through a joint industry committee, have withdrawn their demand for a sweeping "management rights" clause, lifted almost verbatim out of a U.S. Chamber of Commerce handbook. They have also withdrawn demands for drastic limitations on arbitration of grievances, another CofC goal.

But the strike continues, primarily because one company—Intl. Minerals & Chemical—has imported more than 300 out-of-state strikebreakers and now says it has jobs only for those of its 700 striking employes who haven't yet been "replaced."

The four striking unions—the Stone Workers, Machinists, Operating Engineers, and Boilermakers—have vowed that not a single union member will go back to work until every striker goes back. Members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, although not on strike, have scrupulously respected the picket lines.

Despite the harsh memory of a losing 1949 struggle involving another union, Carlsbad is not a divided city, except for the wall of resentment erected around the unwanted strikebreakers.

Carlsbad is virtually a one-industry town, and potash—aside from the tourist attraction of the famed Carlsbad caverns—is the industry.

Town Backs Strikers

The community, including most of the local businessmen, supports the strikers and their unions. One hundred and forty-two local business firms have contributed money, services, food and supplies in support of the strike.

Groups of businessmen have taken out full-page advertisements in the local newspaper to make statements such as these:

"Usually businessmen are expected to support management during any dispute with labor unions. The present potash strike is different. We are convinced that the potash workers were forced to walk off their jobs as the only means of protecting their present working conditions . . .

"We want the community and the potash companies to know that we support the strikers . . . We know them as important members of our community—active in our churches, our civic organizations and our fund drives. They are our neighbors and our friends."

One local car dealer, reflecting a widely-held community view that absentee-dictated corporation decisions forced the strike, had Carlsbad chuckling by running a daily advertisement reading simply: "Poole, Go Home."

The ad referred to Rufus Poole, an Albuquerque attorney who is chairman of the joint industry bargaining committee.

While the morale of the strikers is high, they know they are in a desperate fight for their jobs and for their unions. Although five of the companies—U.S. Borax & Chemical, National Potash, Duval Sulphur & Potash, Potash Corp. of America and Southwest Potash—have not attempted to reopen, the threat is ever-present. Industry advertisements have carried periodic listings of the number of jobs "lost" as a result of the strike.

IMC Blocks Settlement

The unions, which bargain jointly, have taken the position that the refusal by IMC to reinstate all its strikers precludes agreement on other issues with the industry committee. Employes of Southwest Potash, where no "management rights" problem existed, joined the strike when the company joined the industry committee for joint bargaining on still-unresolved economic issues.

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. is coordinating the joint union committee, and Carlin Allen, administrative assistant to IUD Organizational Dir. Nicholas Zonarich, serves as chairman of the Potash Joint Bargaining Committee.

Only token picket lines have been set up. As one union spokesman put it: "We don't need picket lines to keep our own people out."

New Unionists Buy Bread for Strikers

Carlsbad, N. Mex.—The 20 employes of the Holsum Baking Co. here have been union members for only a year—since their shop was organized by the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers—but they responded like lifelong trade unionists to the strike by Carlsbad's 2,800 potash workers.

The bakers, members of ABC Local 356, headquartered in El Paso, Tex., voluntarily assessed themselves $2 a week for the duration of the strike.

The money is used to buy bread and other bakery products for distribution to the strikers.

Clayman Calls For Tax Cuts To Spur Jobs

The new Treasury Dept. schedules allowing faster tax write-offs of production equipment obligate business to help create more jobs, commented Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Clayman added, however, that greater investment incentives alone are not enough and that wage and salary earners should be "next in line" for tax cuts, thus boosting consumer demand to absorb the increased output of modernized plants.

"A more stepped-up pace of automation, because of added incentives to modernize, may by itself create greater unemployment," he warned, noting that almost every key industry already is operating below full capacity.

Retail sales figures show that the nation already is producing "significantly more than its people are able to purchase," Clayman said, concluding:

"The biggest need of industry is more and better customers. . . . Added business incentives are meaningless unless they create more jobs and more real income for more people."

PICKET LINE charging Drug Fair chain in Washington, D. C., area with discrimination against Negroes in employment and promotion was joined by Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, shown in foreground. He termed the "unfair employment practices" of Drug Fair "repugnant to the American ideal of equal opportunity for all."

Peace Formula Settles N.Y. Hospital Strikes

New York—An eight-week strike of nonprofessional workers at two voluntary hospitals has ended as a result of a settlement worked out by the leaders of the City Central Labor Council with Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R).

Workers who had been on strike since May 23 at Beth-El Hospital, Brooklyn, and since mid-June at the Manhattan Eye, Ear & Throat Hospital have ratified an agreement based on Rockefeller's assurance that legislation will be sponsored to grant collective bargaining rights to hospital workers under the state labor law.

On the eve of voluntary elections among workers which might have spread the strike to 11 other hospitals, Central Labor Council officials headed by Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., met with the governor and worked out a settlement formula.

Under the agreement, subject to ratification by striking members of Drug & Hospital Local 1199, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, these steps would be taken:

- The strikers would return to work at Beth-El and the Manhattan hospital without discrimination.
- The Permanent Administrative Committee of the hospitals, from which City Labor Council representatives withdrew during the strike, will issue a wage review covering all hospitals, with any adjustments retroactive to July, 1960 for the two struck hospitals and to July 1, 1962, for others.
- The Republican Administration will seek enactment of bargaining rights legislation in the coming session of the General Assembly.

The Central Labor Council intervened previously when Local 1199 struck several hospitals and worked out a settlement. This year the council stepped in again when efforts by the city and other mediators failed to win recognition for the workers by hospital trustees.

Local Pres. Leon Davis is under a six-month jail sentence for contempt of court in leading a picket line, but Beth-El officials who brought the latest charge have not moved that the sentence be carried out.

Davis said the settlement formula was in the best interests of hospital patients, the public and the workers. It means, he said, that hospital workers are "on the road to achievement of effective union representation and collective bargaining."

The settlement formula was agreed to as Acting Mayor Paul Screvane called on the governor to summon a special session of the legislature to extend the protection of the labor law to such workers.

NLRB Order Appealed by Stereotypers

Portland, Ore. — The National Labor Relations Board has reversed three of the four rulings made by a trial examiner in the Stereotypers strike against the Oregonian and Journal here.

The three-member board panel agreed with Examiner Martin S. Bennett only in his finding that it was illegal to insist that stereotype foremen must be union members. It rejected his rulings that the union struck to enforce a "closed shop" or made other illegal demands.

Both Sides Appeal

The union has appealed the one adverse board ruling to the Appellate Court in the District of Columbia, calling a 4-4 Supreme Court decision in a similar case "not a binding precedent." Publisher S. I. Newhouse, who bought the Journal after the strike started Nov. 10, 1959 and publishes the two papers in the Oregonian plant, has taken an appeal of the ruling to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.

The NLRB majority decision was signed by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown. Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented from the majority's reversal of the examiner's findings on the closed shop issue and on the union's demands that all employes who respected Stereotyper picket lines be rehired and that union contracts have the same expiration date.

The majority reversed Bennett on these issues, it said, because he "did not sufficiently consider" the causes of the strike. It also ruled that the union's demand for bargaining on the number of members to man machinery was "clearly an entirely proper subject" of concern.

Convention Date Set By Transport Service

The Transport Service Employes has set Aug. 13 to 15 as the date of its biennial convention, to be held in the Morrison Hotel, Chicago.

AN AUDIENCE of 14,000 listens at the Michigan state fair as Eduard Werner conducts the Detroit Symphony Orchestra in a summer concert made possible by the Musicians Trust Fund and other sponsors. Werner retired recently as president of the Musicians in Detroit. In his earlier years he directed orchestras in Detroit's leading theaters.

Ruttenberg Sees Tax Cut Now Needed To Speed Up Recovery

(Continued from Page 1)

graceful record in a rich nation. Unemployment, instead of dropping the rest of this year, will at best stay where it is."

Terming recovery of jobs since 1960-61 the worst of any recovery from the four post-World War II recessions, Ruttenberg declared tax reduction "is already overdue."

The "obvious" facts, he said, are: a slowed recovery; industry operation 10 to 15 percent below capacity; retail sales down in June; installment credit expansion slowing down; steel operations down to half capacity from 80 percent in March.

The AFL-CIO economist said the recent talk of tax cuts too often has been misdirected into the political area, with the question raised of whether Pres. Kennedy will prove he is not "anti-business."

"America needs a tax cut now for economic reasons," Ruttenberg declared. "It does not need a tax cut to prove that the President is not anti-business. The nation cannot afford a tax cut to appease some supposed slights to business from a President whose record has been one that business should support, not oppose."

Ruttenberg said the argument against a corporate tax cut is simple and obvious: business has invested nearly $150 billion in plant and equipment over the past five years, nearly all of it raised from depreciation allowances and retained earnings; capacity is underutilized; a tax cut for corporations will not stimulate the economy.

Business, Ruttenberg added, "will expand on the basis of potential markets as business always has."

Tax cuts for upper-income groups proposed by some would not make economic sense either, he added. He pointed out the proposal to cut the current 20-to-91 percent tax range down to 15-to-65 percent may sound "fair." But it means, he noted, a saving of $250 for the person with a taxable income of $5,000 and a saving of $130,000 for the person with a taxable income of $500,000.

The upper-income person with 100 times more income than the $5,000 worker would thus receive more than 500 times the saving, he added.

America cannot afford the luxury of talk without action, or action based on "silly talk" of some businessmen that the President must prove his mettle by proposing the wrong kind of tax cut at the wrong time for the wrong group.

Labor's call for tax cuts now does not mean the nation does not need to act in other areas to meet its needs, Ruttenberg said.

But, he emphasized, "only a tax cut concentrated in the first individual income tax bracket will reach those Americans who will spend it. It is not only reasonable but necessary to have such a tax cut now—not next year."

10 New Films Available To AFL-CIO Affiliates

Ten new films have been added to the AFL-CIO Film Library since publication of the last film catalogue and are now available for rental to affiliates, the federation's Dept. of Education has announced.

Discussion guides also are available in most cases.

The films should be booked through the Dept. of Education a month in advance if possible and with alternate dates specified.

One film listed in a previous catalogue, Injustice on Trial, has been withdrawn from circulation.

New Films Described

The supplementary listing includes:

Songs of the Labor Movement, a television interview with Labor Minstrel Joe Glazer, who sings and describes many of the songs born out of American labor struggles; 30 minutes; rental $3.

Let's Arbitrate, produced by the American Arbitration Association for use in training local union officers and stewards; 18 minutes; rental $3.

Land of Promise, an AFL-CIO movie on the history of the labor movement revised to include a statement on labor's goals by Pres. George Meany; 28 minutes; rental $3.

The Awesome Servant, an ABC-TV documentary on the evolution and impact of automation; 55 minutes; available only to summer schools at a service charge of $7.50.

Freedom Ride, a documentary account of the Freedom Riders' trips into the South drawing attention to the persistence of segregation in interstate travel despite Supreme Court decisions outlawing the practice; 18 minutes; rental $3.

The Harvester, the story of hardship and misery that marks the lives of migratory workers on corporation farms in California; 19 minutes; rental $3.

The Peace Corps in Tanganyika, an NBC-TV documentary that follows the first group of 35 Peace Corps volunteers through their training period to their assignment in East Africa; 55 minutes; rental $3.

Aid to Nigeria

Nigeria Among Friends, an intimate look at the newly independent country of Nigeria and the aid being supplied by the German Trade Union Federation and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions; 28 minutes; rental $3.

Union With a Heart, featuring Brewery Workers across the continent who tell what their union has meant to them as it celebrates its 75th anniversary; 18 minutes, rental $3.

Blueprint for Brotherhood, the story of the growth and accomplishments of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers as told by a dedicated business agent on the eve of his retirement; 28 minutes; rental $3.

Strike Settled At Alcoa Plant In Cressona

St. Louis—The Aluminum Workers have settled a strike of some 1,000 members at an Alcoa plant in Cressona, Pa., and plant bargainers have joined talks here on new labor-management agreements.

The strike ended with an agreement over press crew rotation, and members returned to work, AWIU Pres. Eddie Stahl said.

National negotiations are going forward here on new pacts covering about 20,000 workers in plants of the Aluminum Co. of America and the Reynolds Metals Co. Job and income security have been major union objectives since negotiations began in May.

AWIU agreements with the two firms have a July 31 expiration date. Auto Worker representatives resumed negotiations on July 16 for about 5,000 workers. The Steelworkers have reached agreement with five firms employing another 25,000 workers.

Growth Rate Drops:

Job Report Mirrors Economic Slowdown

By Robert B. Cooney

A slowdown in economic recovery has been underscored by the Labor Dept.'s detailed job report for June.

The report showed a year-long failure of the labor force to grow according to expectations; a less-than-usual increase in the factory workweek; an upswing in the jobless rate for family breadwinners, and a job decrease in steel as output fell.

In a separate report the Commerce Dept. issued revised figures showing the nation produced less in 1961 than had been estimated earlier. The 1961 gross national product was revised downward by $2.6 billion to a total of $519 billion; the growth rate over 1960 was put at about 2 percent.

A summary job report of the Labor Dept. earlier in the month put the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment at 5.5 percent in June, edged up from May's 5.4 percent. It was the first upturn in over a year.

The summary report cited seasonal influences as dominating the job picture in June, with 2 million teenagers entering the labor market and pushing up both the job and jobless totals.

The failure of the labor force to grow at the estimated pace was analyzed in the detailed job report, which noted that the June figures completed the second quarter of 1962 and reflected a labor force growth of only 600,000 above a year earlier.

Slow Growth Continues

"This is the fourth consecutive quarter in which the over-the-year growth in the labor force has been comparatively small," the report noted.

The general belief is that people who need or want work are not actively seeking it because they have found jobs were not generally available.

The Labor Dept., which is studying the problem, has tended to agree with this view. The detailed job report on labor force participation rates by age and sex points out, however, that other still unknown reasons may be involved.

"Labor force growth appears to be slowing down for reasons which are not entirely clear," says the report.

"The second quarter 1962 increase of 600,000 over the year was about 400,000 short of what might have been expected on the basis of past trends. Most of the difference was among women 25 to 54 years of age, who have accounted for such a large part of our expanding work force since World War II. Young people, on the other hand, joined the work force in about the expected numbers over the year.

"Shortage of job opportunities could not be the full explanation of the slowdown in growth. Over the year, the labor force participation of women 55 to 64 years of age has risen sharply as it has in all recent years. There is no evidence that jobs are available for them but not for younger women."

The average workweek in manufacturing reached 40.6 hours in June, the report said, "less than the usual increase for this time of year." This included "an unusually large amount" of overtime—2.9 hours.

Adult Men's Rate Up

The report said that, while teenagers had better success than in past years in finding work, the jobless rate for adult men jumped from 4.4 percent to 4.7 percent—the same rate this group had last January.

The longterm unemployed—those out of work 15 weeks or longer—declined seasonally by 250,000 to 1 million. Of this total, 600,000 have been jobless 6 months or longer and about half of this group has been jobless more than 9 months.

The June total of 1 million longterm jobless compares to totals of 508,000 in June 1957, before the 1958 recession, and 816,000 in June 1960, before the 1961 recession.

Kennedy Intervenes in Atom Plant Stalemate

Intervention by Pres. Kennedy, in response to an appeal by the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept., has forestalled a walkout at the Rocky Flats, Colo., plant of the Atomic Energy Commission, operated for the AEC by the Dow Chemical Co.

The Denver Metal Trades Council, which represents the 1,500 workers in 14 unions at the plant, immediately accepted the President's request to continue working until Aug. 1 and to resume negotiations with the company in Washington under the auspices of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

The President also offered the services of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg in the effort to reach a settlement.

Kennedy's action followed a telegram from B. A. Gritta, acting president and secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept., informing him that Dow had refused to accept the recommendations of a presidential panel as the basis for settlement of a new contract.

The panel had recommended increases of 2.13 percent the first year and 2.5 percent the second year.

In contrast to the company's position, Gritta noted, the Metal Trades bargaining committee had expressed willingness to negotiate a settlement on the basis of these recommendations and to urge its acceptance by the membership.

Dow, however, countered by offering less than an earlier company proposal which the workers had rejected by an overwhelming vote, he charged.

The dispute arose last May when the unions were unsuccessful in negotiating a renewal contract with Dow covering production and maintenance workers at the Rocky Flats plant. The old agreement was extended at the request of federal mediators, and the presidential panel took jurisdiction on May 22. The panel held hearings June 3-4 and issued its recommendations June 15.

Gritta's appeal to the President declared:

"It would appear to us that the government has as yet done nothing to bring its operating contractor around to accepting the panel's recommendations and thus averting a strike at this installation at 7 a. m. on Monday, July 16, after expiration of the panel's 30-day status quo period. . . .

"Immediate intervention on your part appears to hold only solution."

Seattle World's Fair Has a Union Label

One symbol of the Seattle World's Fair is the Space Needle, the 600-foot spire shown at left, framed by the towering arches of the U.S. Science Exhibit. Below, the same Space Needle is shown in the construction stage.

A second symbol is the union label—actually dozens of labels, representing every union whose members helped create a 74-acre wonderland within a short monorail ride from the heart of Seattle.

On Apr. 26, 1961—one year to the day before the fair opened—the King County Labor Council and the Seattle Building & Construction Trades Council made a firm no-strike pledge covering all work on the fair.

With the exposition in the final half of its six-month run, Fair Pres. Joseph E. Gandy reported to the World's Fair steering committee that the pledge has been "honored to the letter." When the history of the Seattle World's Fair is written, he declared, organized labor's role "should be one of the highlight chapters."

SEATTLE UNION leaders served on key committees to help plan and promote the fair. Pres. Harry L. Carr, left, and Exec. Sec. Chet Ramage of the King County Labor Council "worked overtime to help make the fair a reality," exposition officials declared.

U.S. SCIENCE EXHIBIT, six interconnected buildings clustered around a landscaped reflecting pool, is one of the highlights of the Century 21 Exposition. The exhibit includes the Spacearium where, through the use of a new film projecting technique, spectators whisk 2 billion light years in a simulated flight.

AERIAL VIEW of the Seattle World's Fair shows part of the complex of attractions, ranging from exhibits as new as tomorrow to the cotton candy and beautiful girls without which no fair would be complete. Top names in entertainment, both light and serious, have been booked for appearances at the fair or in downtown Seattle.

IT TOOK THE SKILLS of thousands of workers to construct a world's fair from the ground up. These union men, working together in a race against time, beat a tight deadline. When the fair closes, on Oct. 21, they will help convert major permanent exhibits and buildings into a lasting civic center.

An Issue for the People

THE RECOURSE OF THE PEOPLE against political leaders in this country is to call them to account at the polls. This is how the battle for social security financing of health care for the aged must now be waged.

Republican leaders whose iron grip on their troops helped defeat the Anderson-Javits bill in the Senate say they welcome the battle. This decision, of course, they had made in advance. But it will not do for them to offer spurious excuses for the almost solid phalanx of GOP votes they lined up to kill the bill.

The reasons for expanding the social security system to include hospital costs are precisely the reasons that led to establishment of the basic system in 1935. Human beings face certain natural and inevitable hazards of life, primarily those of death, old age and illness.

To protect individuals adequately against the brutal impact of such misfortunes a system of social insurance is required. For a quarter of a century we have deemed it prudent and proper to maintain such a system protecting our citizens in their retirement years and protecting the widows and children of breadwinners who have died prematurely.

★ ★ ★

THE GREAT GAP in our present social security system is in the area of sickness in old age, when sickness is likely to be frequent and protracted. Incomes are reduced and the cost of illness is high and climbing higher. The financial impact is murderous—either on the retired workers or their children, and sometimes on both.

The heaviest part of the cost is the expense of hospital and nursing-home care. The Anderson-Javits bill, modified from the original Anderson-King bill, was designed to meet the need that is evident.

It is no credit to moderately liberal southern Democrats that they joined Republicans to create a narrow majority against the bill. It is no credit to moderately liberal northern Republicans that they followed the siren song of their Senate leader Sen. Dirksen of Illinois, and Sen. Goldwater of Arizona to make defeat of the Anderson-Javits proposal a party-loyalty issue.

The American Medical Association conjured up a collection of misrepresentations, distortions and scare phrases to spearhead the lobby fight against the bill. This is the same AMA whose attacks on the British National Health Service have been described by the British Medical Journal—official organ of physicians in the United Kingdom—as "vulgar, cheap and nonsense."

It is the same AMA that led the British to express "dismay" at the "probably inherent weakness of American medical services if such a vast effort [against the carefully-restricted Anderson-King bill] has to be spent on misrepresenting" how a true national health service works.

★ ★ ★

THE 52 SENATORS who killed the Anderson-Javits proposal probably acknowledge privately that in the long run their "victory" was transitory and bootless.

What was needed was passage of the Anderson-Javits bill in the Senate to lay the foundation for further action next year. Approval was forestalled by the parliamentary tactic of a motion to table the proposal, although even earnest enemies conceded the plan would pass if the issue could be brought to the floor for a vote on the merits.

Let us meet the challenge the AMA and the 52 senators offered and take the fight where they forced it—to the election booths.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, July 21, 1962 No. 29

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Symposium Analyzes Americans:

Obsession With Happy Ending Called Flaw in U.S. World View

AMERICANS ARE ADDICTED to the status quo, and they are having trouble understanding the revolutionary world around them, according to a number of prominent educators, journalists, church and professional leaders quoted in a pamphlet issued by the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions.

One contributor to the symposium, entitled The American Character, declares that Americans are "obsessed with happy endings," and that the nation's leadership plays up to this obsession; but "there isn't any happy ending to any of the present situations." Others claim that the average American shirks his political responsibilities, has allowed his educational system to deteriorate, lacks understanding of foreigners, and is hopelessly cut off from his own Negro fellow-citizens.

William O. Douglas, associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, comments on the failure of Americans to kindle greater interest in democracy abroad.

"There is a danger in thinking that American ideas of liberty, justice and equality necessarily go along with the export of American goods," he says. "There is nothing ideological about a jeep, tractor, or cement plant. The man who can read the instruction book that goes with it can also read the Communist Manifesto. Democratic ideas don't necessarily follow American goods."

Douglas says one way to start generating real interest in and support for democracy in other parts of the world is for Americans to increase their own study of foreign languages. "I am very much disturbed that in 56 percent of American high schools there is not a single foreign language offered, at a time when we should be turning into the great linguists of the world."

A former public relations counsel to several U.S. corporations, and now the director of the center's study of the corporation, W. H. Ferry, declares that "there isn't any happy ending to any of the present situations because most of the endings will call for vast changes in the status quo, and Americans simply don't want to change the status quo."

Irving Kristol, a New York writer and editor, says: "I don't think the mass media are bad because of the American character. I think the mass media are bad because the political authorities have not seen to it that they are better. I resent the decline of our educational system, and I think this is bad, again, because the political authorities have not taken adequate action."

"I too believe our problems are political," says Dr. Leonard J. Duhl, director of the professional services branch of the National Institute of Mental Health. "I am tired of seeing so many issues being put on the shoulders of us psychiatrists. There are psychiatrists who have accepted this burden. They have, for example, accepted delinquency as a mental health problem, whereas it is basically a social problem.

"Delinquency has to be dealt with socially at all levels—urban renewal, job opportunities, education, and many other things that have nothing to do with psychology at all."

Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman of Washington's Temple Sinai does not agree that government is to blame. "Government is looked upon as a thing apart from the individual citizen and his character. I say no. I have to face the fact that if the American educational system has failed, I have failed. If our civil rights system is failing, then I as a citizen have failed. We all must bear a part of the guilt."

MICHAEL HARRINGTON, JOURNALIST, says that one of the mistakes frequently made in discussing the American character is to assume that it is essentially the product of affluence. He points out that between 32 and 50 million people in the U.S. are living in poverty and have a very different character structure from that of middle-class Americans.

Another journalist, William Worthy, declares that "it isn't just people abroad we don't understand." Americans tend to leave out of their considerations the very different character of the Negro citizen.

Worthy claims that the Negro press, for example, "was never terrified of Joe McCarthy," and he predicts that if the John Birch Society were to get out of control, "virtually every major group in this country except the Negro community would cower again."

"It seems to me there has been a corrosive effect on white America's mental health as a result of evading the problem of race discrimination for three hundred years. What does this say about the present state of American mental health, and what bearing do this deep-seated guilt and this deep-seated fear have on the American character?" he continued.

Arthur Gilbert, staff consultant to the National Conference of Christians and Jews, declares: "I get the feeling sometimes, when we criticize American failure, that we are really and more importantly describing the inadequacy of man, the shortcomings of the human being, and that this inadequacy would exist whether America existed or not."

Morgan Says:

Knowledge and Understanding Needed for Telstar's Success

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

TELSTAR IS STILL UP THERE and more of its talents will be shown to both Europe and America. Breathtakingly unbelievable as it is, the reality of Telstar will not magically set the world to communicating more intelligently with itself. What this astounding beach-ball-size satellite has done is to make it possible to see and hear the people of the whole planet from a picture window. But there is no assurance, once the novelty of the looking and the listening wears off, that problems will be better understood. The gadget will relay growls and goodwill with impartiality, ricochet falsehood as handily as fact and in some respects will make life even more complicated.

Morgan

When a reporter asked Dean Rusk whether Telstar would help him solve some foreign policy problems, the Secretary of State hailed it as a "remarkable achievement" but then quickly added: "I don't want to sound old-fashioned but I am not always sure that the speeding up of communications helps us too much in the foreign policy business, particularly if it simply speeds up the pace of events. However, we will have to adjust to that because that is inevitable."

And so we will. But in the adjusting we can, if we will, learn a useful lot—not just about science but about each other. The scope of this new device was boldly outlined to a Senate communications subcommittee last spring by Edward R. Murrow, probably the foremost electronic journalist of our time, who is now director of the U.S. Information Agency.

"The excitement of satellite television," Murrow said, "is the infinite increase it gives to the range of television. . . . It means the medium will no longer be restricted only to a line-of-sight signal from tower to horizon. It will mean television instantaneous and simultaneous from mountain to desert, from river to ocean, from one seacoast to the other . . . and then relayed across the ocean by orbiting satellite. It will be the new communication . . . dramatizing a glimpse of our future across the dimension of geography and through the dimension of time."

Already a first-class hassle is on over how we are going to get these glimpses, via government facilities, private enterprise or a combination of both. As of now the cards of circumstance are stacked in favor of the combination, though with such enterprises as the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., which developed Telstar, reaping enormous advantages therefrom. But the legislation providing for a bizarre public-private corporation to run the satellite relay system, already passed by the House, is being blocked in the Senate. That dogged anti-monopolist, Sen. Kefauver, and others maintain that such a concept of ownership would really cheat the taxpayer who put up the lion's share of the money in the first place for satellite research.

If a truly equitable public-private operation could be laid out here, however, it might provide an appropriate and valuable compromise, because it is obvious that government and business have got to cooperate more closely in more phases of this new channel of communication than they ever have in the past.

There are a number of reasons for this and the stake of Ed Murrow's agency may be foremost among them. As he told the senators in April, "we think the national interest demands" that USIA use this new system in doing its job of explaining administration policy and helping to tell "America's story to the world." "Suffice," he added, "to reflect upon the impact around the world of simultaneous live television coverage of the Glenn orbital shot . . ." But as things stand, USIA couldn't begin to afford the cost of even a modest part of such satellite broadcasting.

THERE IS THE BUSINESS of selecting what programs to beam abroad and how to program and pay for originations from foreign countries. If these items were left to pulsate on the profit motive alone the results could be disastrous, not only to education and culture but to the conduct of foreign policy. By the same token, rigid government control would be unthinkable. Hence the urgent necessity, as New York Times radio-TV editor Jack Gould indicated in a report, of pursuing "the delicate task of harmonizing governmental and private interests in the field of global video."

Telstar and the improved magic eyes that will follow it in the sky will give us instant viewing of the world around us and they will also give the world instant views of us. Some of these looks may be lobbed back and forth across the Iron Curtain, though satellite channels can be jammed too. We were first up with this terrible wonderful new toy and from Berlin to Bangkok our prestige has risen with the achievement. But prestige is a macaroon that can be consumed in one bite. What we must shoot for with Telstar is more knowledge and understanding, beamed both ways. If we miss, we'll be going back to smoke signals.

Washington Reports:

Humphrey Urges Tax Cut Now To Add Spark to U.S. Economy

SEN. HUBERT HUMPHREY (D-Minn.), Senate majority whip, called on the Administration to ask for an immediate tax cut to give the "economy the spark and drive it needs, to absorb the unemployed, and permit full utilization of our industrial plant."

Humphrey made his tax cut bid in an interview, along with the minority whip, Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"All this uncertainty (about the pending tax-revision bill and a demand for an immediate tax cut) lends itself to a drag on the economy," Humphrey argued. "People don't make long-range plans and the economy bogs down. Indecision is costly."

Kuchel, one of the five Republicans who co-sponsored the revised Anderson-King bill for health insurance for the aged, said he had taken the step because "we have a situation where hospital costs are a tragic hazard for the elderly citizen in America."

"Since 1946, the consumer price index in America has risen 65 percent," he said. "Medical care has increased 82 percent.

"Hospital room rates have risen 203 percent and hospital insurance premiums 294 percent."

HUMPHREY SAID the Administration has been talking about a tax cut next year, effective Jan. 1, 1963. He reported that he has been urging the President and his advisers to seek the legislation without further delay, even if it were not to be effective until the first of the year.

"The revenue situation of the government would then be the same, but the public, the businessman, the consumer, the worker, the merchant would understand what his tax liability was going to be," said the majority whip. "And I think if you make a substantial cut, particularly in the individual income tax, with deductions for each dependent increased $100 or $200, or if you were able to reduce two or three percentage points on individual income taxes plus, let us say, $2 to $3 billion in the corporate tax, we'd put this economy into high gear."

Kuchel, interviewed before the Senate killed the health care measure, declared that some doctors in his state say that the program would make members of the medical profession "wards, stooges or agents of the government."

"I vigorously deny that; I suggest they haven't even read the bill. Our bill provides for hospital insurance and home care insurance; it has nothing to do with the payment of doctor bills. It is merely a modest first step to provide a portion of the costs of hospital insurance to those over 65," Kuchel declared.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A CLOSE SENATE ROLLCALL vote on a major issue such as the Anderson-Javits health care bill is one of the capital's most fascinating theatrical offerings, and things are not always as they seem on the surface.

It may be taken for granted, for example, that a majority of the Senate is in favor of the bill rather than against it—although a one-vote majority voted to kill it by the parliamentary device of tabling. The decision to table technically was 52-48—but veteran Sen. Hayden of Arizona delayed until the end, and cast his vote to sidetrack the measure only after he knew it would not be decisive. He would have voted against tabling otherwise, and a 50-to-50 tie vote would have cleared the way for a rollcall on the merits of the bill—and it would have been approved.

Then there is The Curious Case of Sen. Randolph of West Virginia, who co-sponsored the bill originally and in the end voted to kill it. His explanation, somewhat implausible, is that he knew the bill would not get through the House this year and he feared that to attach the Anderson-Javits plan would endanger final action on other sections of a social security bill paying benefits to 12,500 West Virginia families.

Randolph's anxiety was not shared by the other senator from West Virginia, Sen. Robert C. Byrd, or by Gov. William W. Barron, both also Democrats, although presumably they are not unconcerned about the plight of needy West Virginians if funds for assistance programs should vanish.

Randolph is, in fact, an experienced legislator, and it would be astounding if he did not know that in an election year Congress would not actually let a needed assistance program die. The House, of course, might have refused to accept the Anderson-Javits proposal, but it could have been dropped in conference committee, and the precedent of Senate approval would have been on the record.

* * *

THERE ARE OTHER ODDITIES. In 1959 and again in 1961, after Republican election setbacks, Senate GOP moderate liberals allowed that they were dissatisfied with the standpat image their party presented and suggested some changes should be made. They rolled up 14 votes in a challenge to the Old Guard leadership. But on the Anderson-Javits bill only five Republicans—all co-sponsors—voted against their floor leader, Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois.

Where was Aiken of Vermont, who said in disgust in 1958 that one reason the GOP lost elections was that then Pres. Eisenhower didn't know the difference between wasteful spending and a needed federal program to promote economic recovery? He voted with Dirksen. So did the rest of his surviving liberal colleagues from the 1959 "revolt."

* * *

THERE IS THE MATTER of the 17 southern Democrats—17 of a total of 21—who voted to table, although several of them would normally approve of expanding the social security system. The explanation here is that it was made to seem a civil rights issue rather than a social security issue.

Sen. Russell of Georgia, long acknowledged captain of the southern filibusters, warned that the Senate would get in deep trouble if it voted an amendment to a major bill without the benefit of committee hearings and a careful report outlining the pros and cons. (He didn't stress the fact that Sen. Anderson, the sponsor, long ago had requested hearings before the Finance Committee and had been turned down.)

Russell was serving a reminder to his colleagues that the southern minority maintains its blockading power against civil rights legislation by meticulous attention to the Senate rules and precedents, by total skill at maneuvering within the rules and precedents. He was persuasive, apparently. It is another example of the price the country and the South itself pay for the preoccupation of the little band of otherwise admirable and highly skilled tacticians with beating a dead-horse issue.

CONGRESS SHOULD IMMEDIATELY PASS A TAX CUT bill to give the economy a needed shot in the arm, restore economic health and reduce unemployment, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), Senate majority whip (left), declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. On the same program, the minority whip, Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) called the health care for the aged bill "a constructive service to the American people."

How to Buy:

Read the Label: 'New' Mixes May Be Just the Old Standbys

By Sidney Margolius

HAVE YOU NOTICED the current TV commercials for several branded household cleaners, boasting they have added powerful new cleaning ingredients—which in several cases have turned out to be ammonia and chlorine bleach?

The irony is that these are inexpensive old standbys, and we don't need to pay a high price for expensive branded compounds to get their advantage. Plain old kerosene is another ingredient sometimes used in today's liquid cleaners to give them dirt-chasing power. In another case, a manufacturer of steel-wool pads is proclaiming that he has added detergent to his pads. Well, so can we.

In a time when the latest miracle drug promoted for excess acidity often turns out to be basically bicarbonate of soda, many families can save money over and over simply by reading the lists of ingredients on various household products.

For example, many packaged wall and paint cleaners have as a basic ingredient TSP (trisodium phosphate), a chemical long used as a cleanser and water softener, and sold by some paint and hardware stores at low prices by the pound.

Similarly, many expensive toiletries are being promoted as containing "lanolin." Alert consumers long have realized that many expensive creams and lotions are based on lanolin and glycerine, which can be bought inexpensively in drug stores, without the perfume, under their own names.

Another group of products which command a high price in relation to the value of their ingredients are brand-name porcelain cleaners and scouring powders. These usally have as their base whiting, a soft, non-scratching powder, plus a little detergent or trisodium phosphate. Whiting is sold by paint stores for a fraction of the price of the branded products. Many liquid glass cleaners are simply a little alcohol and a lot of water, colored with a blue dye. You can buy a bottle of the cheapest isopropyl alcohol at a drug store, dilute one part alcohol with four parts of water, and give it any brand name you want.

THE MULTIPLICATION and duplication of various types of cleaning and laundry aids has led manufacturers increasingly to seek merchandising advantages by adding another commonplace ingredient or a different kind of package. The "modern" mild dry bleaches now being promoted are the familiar old sodium perborate powder under various brand names and in new forms such as beads and pre-measured packets. The price under different names varies as much as 50 percent.

In many other products you can avoid unnecessarily high prices if you read the ingredients. For example, if you buy garden supplies later this summer to renovate your lawn, notice that the package has a legally-required seed label telling you what you are getting (amount of pure seed, varieties, etc.). Fertilizers and lawn foods state on the package the percentages of nitrogen, phosphate, etc. This enables you to see what each brand offers at its price, and avoid the high prices charged for fertilizers under clever-sounding, easy-to-say brand names.

One of the most revealing examples of varying prices for the same ingredients under different names is a weed killer sold by nurseries at one price, while the company packages the same product under a different name to sell in supermarkets for about 10 percent less.

In buying processed foods, it has become especially important to read the ingredients to know what you are getting. For food products for which no identity has been set, the label must list the ingredients in order of relative amount. The first on the list is the largest single ingredient, the second is next largest, and so on.

This is a valuable rule. But often shoppers do not look beyond the picture of the food on the package, surveys have found. As this department has been warning, people who buy without checking the ingredients may be paying heavily for some cheap ingredients, for example, as much as a dollar a pound for such fillers as rice, bread crumbs, even water.

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

Decline of the Temper Tantrum Not Necessarily a Good Thing

By Jane Goodsell

HAVE YOU NOTICED that people don't get mad any more? I don't mean irritated or peeved or cross. I mean really, really mad. You hardly ever see anybody fly into a fist-waving, table-pounding, tooth-gnashing, purple-faced fury.

I'm not so sure the decline of the temper tantrum is a good thing. There's a lot to be said in favor of the towering rage provided that (a) it is justified by the situation and (b) it is put on by somebody who knows how to raise a row in the grand, classic manner without using four-letter words or punching somebody in the jaw.

I witnessed a truly memorable display of bad temper only the other day. I was waiting for a friend in a hotel lobby when a small, mild-looking, sandy-haired man walked up to the desk and announced that he had a reservation. The clerk, who was sorting mail, drawled that he had no record of such a reservation and there were no rooms available. He muttered "Sorry," turned his back on the mild-looking gentleman and returned to his mail-sorting.

It was a familiar scene—up to this point. I watched, expecting the sandy-haired man to do what most people would do in this situation—to shuffle off, shrugging his shoulders and muttering under his breath.

But he didn't. Instead, he turned a violent shade of purple, began pounding on the counter, demanded in a loud voice to see the manager and threatened to sue the hotel. I watched, in rapt fascination, to see what would happen next.

Within three minutes the gentleman was being ushered to the elevator, accompanied by a brace of bellboys and followed at a deferential distance by the room clerk who was fluttering his hands and saying that he hoped the room would be satisfactory.

The point is, this little man got results. And I think there's a lesson in this for all of us timid, submissive 20th Century types who think there's something shameful about losing our tempers and making a scene.

Why shouldn't we make a fuss, stamp our feet and bellow with rage when the situation calls for it? We've become so brainwashed by pussyfooting advice to keep calm and adjust to situations that it no longer occurs to us that sometimes situations can be changed.

If we order veal cutlets and the waiter brings us baked ham, we sigh and dig into the ham. If, after a 30-minute wait in line, we find ourselves faced with a "Sorry, Next Window" sign, we shrug and move obediently to the next window.

In these situations a mild rebuke, delivered in a reasonable tone of voice, produces no results. At best, you get a grudging apology like "Sorry, but there's nothing we can do about it."

A well-executed temper tantrum usually convinces people that something can be done about it after all.

AWARD OF MERIT of New York State Union Label & Service Trades Dept. for 1962 recently was given Michael J. Mongovan (center), for more than 56 years business representative of Rochester Local 25, Theatrical Stage Employes, at a dinner during the department convention in Rochester. At left is Samuel J. Talarico, president of the department; at right, Richard F. Walsh, president of IATSE and the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Unions Give Many Scholarship Grants

June high school graduates and college students are benefiting from a growing number of scholarships and grants given by AFL-CIO affiliates to encourage young people to pursue higher studies.

Recent awards, by union, include:

Pulp-Sulphite presented $500 John P. Burke scholarships, named in honor of Pres.-Sec. John P. Burke, to John H. Thompson of the University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, N. B., for the college senior award; and to Robert R. Keberlein, of the University of Wisconsin, for the college junior award.

Steelworkers Dist. 31 presented scholarships worth $4,000 each to Anthony P. Manzara, who is graduating from Chicago's Weber High School and will enter Loyola (Chicago) University; and to Melvin J. Lobdell, who is graduating from Campion Jesuit High School, Prairie du Chien, Wis., and will enter Holy Cross University.

Manzara is a son of Tito P. Manzara, a veteran member of USWA Local 1422 employed by the Inland Steel Container Corp., Chicago. Lobdell's father is Melvin O. Lobdell, a member of USWA Local 1014 who works as a machinist at the Gary, Ind., works of U.S. Steel.

The Seafarers' 1962 scholarships, worth $6,000 each and covering four full years of study, were awarded one member of the union and four children of members. Winners were Gerald Dwyer of Clark Mills, N. Y., an SIU member since 1947 who has completed two years at Syracuse University; Sharron Kay Berry, daughter of Reuben Berry, Columbia, N. C.; Karen Anne Hilyer, daughter of Vincent Hilyer, Bergenfield, N. J.; Arthur Robert Rudnicki, son of Arthur Rudnicki, Franklinton, La., and Ralph Stanley Tindall, son of Ralph W. Tindall, Tampa, Fla.

The Building Service Employes announced first winners in a new program of 10 annual grants to supplement scholarships awarded by its local unions and joint councils.

Nine students, chosen from 700 applicants by a committee of educators, won scholarships worth $2,000 each. A tenth winner will be selected in August from among Canadian applicants. All the students are children of union members.

The BSEIU winners are Alvin Adelman of Brooklyn, whose mother, Mary, is in Local 733; Barbara Jean Kinney of Upper Darby, Pa., whose father, Henry, is in Local 69; Margaret McHugh of Long Island City, whose mother, Catherine, is in Local 32-J; John Puzak of Pittsburgh, whose mother, Doris, is in Local 357.

Also Verge Michael Hoffman of Taylor, Mich., whose father, Verge, is in Local 26-M; Elizabeth Ann Hoornaert of Chicago, whose father, Albert, is in Local 1; Janet Dale Teresko of Calumet City, Ill., whose father, Alexander, is in Local 46; Gary Seiji Morishima of Seattle, whose father, Saburo, is in Local 6, and John Chialeen Ling of San Francisco, whose mother, Margaret, is in Local 250.

Knit Goods Workers' Local 190 of the Ladies' Garment Workers awarded five $2,400 scholarships to children of members in the Philadelphia area.

Four grants came from a scholarship fund created in 1956 and supported by 10 cents from the monthly dues of each of some 7,500 members. The fifth grant came from the Martin Saligman Foundation in honor of the late founder of the firm of Queen Casuals, Inc.

The Local 190 winners are Gundula Ullrich, William Milles, Mark Carynmyk, Linda Cheskis and William A. Iuliucci.

Philadelphia Joint Board of the Clothing Workers announced $10,000 in scholarships for 10 children of members, awarded by the Charles Weinstein Scholarship Foundation in memory of the late board manager. Winners are Edward L. Chairman, Anthony J. DePaul, Barry Gross, Francis X. Guerrieri, Robert S. Kaminsky, Jay L. Levenson, Salvatore Pizzo, Loretta A. Pollini, Sylvia O. Rose and Stanley F. Taraila.

Iron Workers Local 40, New York City, presented its second annual James V. Cole scholarship award to Russell G. LeCount, son of a member. Cole is treasurer of the international union, formerly was Local 40 business agent. The award is at the rate of $1,000 a year for four years.

The California AFL-CIO will give $500 college scholarship awards to seven high school seniors chosen by judges from a field of 518 candidates—Barbara Rhyne of Inglewood; Jayne M. Knoche, Fallbrook; Joseph W. Powers, Los Angeles; Marcia B. Kump, Riverside; Bruce Henschel, Alameda; Virginia Ann Ramset, Monterey; and Melvin E. Page, Merced. The winners also will get an expense-free trip to the state AFL-CIO convention Aug. 20 in Long Beach.

At Maintenance of Way Convention:

Action Urged on Job Security, Shorter Railroad Workweek

Cincinnati—Methods of halting railroad mergers, increased job security for members, and the possibility of a shorter workweek were among the major topics discussed at the 75th anniversary convention of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes.

The diamond jubilee celebration (the organization's 34th regular convention) was attended by some 800 delegates here.

Pres. Harold C. Crotty, who was re-elected by delegates, in a review of the history of the brotherhood, pointed out that the workers were "never given a break" by management until the government took over during World War I.

Outlining his program for the future, he warned against listening to ultra-conservative politicians who call for a "return to the good old days." He urged instead that the union go forward with the following goals in mind:

- Stepped-up opposition to the wave of railroad mergers.
- Joint action with other rail unions to obtain a shorter workweek with no reduction in pay.
- Vigorous opposition to enactment of so-called "right-to-work" laws.
- Vigilance by brotherhood officers to see that work belonging to members is not "farmed out" and that railroads contemplating installation of automated equipment consult with the brotherhood first so that members may be protected against serious hardships.

On the question of automation, Crotty said that the principal benefit he will strive for is job security. He said he hopes it could be obtained under the free enterprise system, but if this is found to be impossible, he favors some sort of government subsidy or control.

In addition he called for:

- Improvement in health and welfare plans.
- Correction of unsafe and unsanitary working conditions.
- Support for rail management in its fight for equality of treatment with other forms of transportation.

A warning against the threat of mergers was also sounded by George M. Harrison, AFL-CIO vice president and president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks.

Mergers No Cure-All

He said that mergers are no cure for the ills of the railroads, ills which are "traceable to the failure of the men who run the industry to meet the changing needs of this nation."

"Instead of giving the public what it wanted," Harrison said, "the railroads have offered more undesirable and less attractive service. They have failed to utilize the full railroad plant and participate in the economic growth and increased volume of transport services needed by the nation."

He said the railroads have waged a campaign to make everyone believe they are poverty-stricken, but that they have, "with one exception during the past 10 years, done a gross annual business of $9.5 to $10 billion," about 10 percent of which has gone to the owners.

Harrison forecast government ownership if rich railroads were allowed to merge and the poorer ones left to die on the vine. The poorer roads will go under government ownership almost immediately, he predicted, while the bigger roads will be milked dry by huge financial monopolists, then left for the government.

He called also for an across-the-board tax cut to stimulate recovery, saying that there is nothing wrong with the railroads which could not be remedied by a general over-all recovery of our national economy.

Other speakers included A. E. Lyon, labor member of the Railroad Retirement Board, who said that his board is sending out about 840,000 checks monthly, totaling $85 million to former rail workers. He said about 75,000 former Maintenance of Way members received about $83 million in benefits for 1960, the last year for which he has complete figures.

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg spoke to delegates by telephone from Washington, telling them that the railroads of the country are one of its great assets. He said there is no need for recurrent periods of recovery and recession if labor, government, and management cooperate to create a higher growth rate and continued economic expansion.

Delegates voted down a proposal to limit candidates for grand lodge offices to members under 65 years. They also approved a committee report on disputes with other unions on job jurisdiction. The committee said it was sure the methods adopted by the last AFL-CIO convention would help in ironing out the few such disputes.

Other officers elected to serve until the next convention, in Montreal in 1966, are: Sec.-Treas. Frank L. Noakes; Vice Presidents (Canada) J. A. Huneault and C. Smith; Vice Presidents (U.S.A.) Thomas W. McGuire, J. P. Wilson, J. H. Hadley, George Hudson and S. E. Fleming.

Al Grospiron Named to Fill OCAW Post

Denver—Al Grospiron, 46, of Texas City, Tex., has been named secretary-treasurer of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers by a unanimous vote of the OCAW executive board.

Grospiron, a member of the executive board representing OCAW Dist. 4, fills the vacancy created by the death of T. M. McCormick on June 22 and will serve until the union's next general election in August 1963.

The new international officer has been full-time secretary-treasurer of the OCAW's Texas City Local 4-449 since 1951 and before that held other local offices, including the presidency. He joined the OCAW in 1942 and in that year helped organize the American Oil refinery in Texas City.

Threats Void Election In Raid by Teamsters

Threats against leaders of a Machinists' local have led the National Labor Relations Board to set aside a representation election among some 950 employes of the Gabriel Co., Cleveland auto parts manufacturer, in which the unaffiliated Teamsters received a narrow majority of the vote.

Upholding the recommendations of Hearing Officer Thomas N. Kessel, the NLRB unanimously ordered a new election among the employes—the third since the Teamsters attempted to raid IAM Local 233, which has been bargaining agent for Gabriel employes for 40 years.

The hearing officer found that five IAM officials had been subjected to "fearful" threats by anonymous and persistent telephone calls. Linking the calls to Teamster adherents, Kessel said they revealed "a systematic plan to inhibit IAM officials from asserting their leadership" in the election campaign.

The board further found that Teamster adherents had directly threatened reprisals against IAM committeemen, tampered with the machinery and work of IAM supporters, and recklessly operated a towmotor "in such a manner as to endanger the lives of IAM officials and to harass them in the performance of their official duties."

When Local 293 of the Teamsters launched its raid at the Gabriel plant by filing a petition Mar. 24, 1961, the IAM local won a majority of the votes in the resulting NLRB election. The Board set aside the results on the ground that the IAM had distributed marked sample ballots prior to the vote.

Last Vote Voided

In the second election, last Sept. 19 the employes cast 480 votes for the Teamsters and 419 for the IAM. Objections filed by the IAM charged threats and harassment and that election has now been voided.

The board ordered the third election to be conducted no later than Aug. 13.

Ship Owners, NMU Agree On Arbitration

New York—The National Maritime Union and operators of 570 deep-sea vessels have agreed to an arbitration plan designed to produce high-speed settlement of labor-management disputes.

Parties to the arbitration agreement chose Theodore W. Kheel of this city as permanent arbiter and expressed the hope that all segments of the maritime industry would follow their lead toward "swift and effective action" in disputes.

Kheel's appointment was announced by NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, Pres. Ralph E. Casey of the American Merchant Marine Institute, and Edward Silver, counsel for the Tanker Service Committee. Curran represents 42,500 seamen. Casey is spokesman for 34 firms operating 375 deep-sea vessels and Silver, 35 companies operating 195 tankers.

The agreement making Kheel the permanent disputes arbiter provides that he will begin hearings within 24 hours of receiving a complaint from any of the parties and will announce a decision within three hours of the conclusion of the hearings.

Union and management spokesmen said in a joint statement that the agreement represents a "significant advance."

Kheel called his assignment "unprecedented" and said the agreement "demonstrates not only by words but by deeds" the answer of the NMU and the two employer groups to Pres. Kennedy's challenge calling for voluntary efforts to preserve the national interest.

A RANK-AND-FILE Newspaper Guild member when he was a reporter in Minneapolis, Carl T. Rowan, center, is welcomed by ANG Pres. Arthur Rosenstock, right, and Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson as a distinguished guest of the Guild's 29th convention. Rowan, now deputy assistant secretary of state for public affairs, addressed the convention banquet.

ANG Drives for $200, Beefs Up Defense Fund

Buffalo—A stepped-up drive to achieve a weekly pay floor of $200 for all key jobs in its jurisdiction was set in motion by the Newspaper Guild at its 29th annual convention here.

In frank recognition that employer resistance to the campaign confronts the union "with longer strikes as well as more strikes," the delegates voted overwhelmingly to increase per capita payments to the ANG by 50 cents a month, with most of the boost earmarked for the international defense fund.

The convention found that conditions which led to the formation of the Guild nearly 30 years ago still exist.

"Pay still comes too little and too late," the 225 delegates declared, observing that wages in Guild jurisdiction have risen more slowly since 1946 than in other industries except those which are largely non-union and low-paying.

The convention action will raise the general fund per capita from $1.30 a month to $1.40, effective Aug. 1, and the defense fund apportionment from 50 cents to 90 cents, effective Sept. 1, bringing the total to $2.30 a month.

The convention also called on ANG locals and district councils to press the drive for legislative curbs on professional strikebreaking and against so-called "right-to-work" laws and other anti-labor legislation.

Adopting a report on political action, the delegates urged an accelerated pace in COPE dollar collections and voter registration drives and called on Guild members to offer their special skills to COPE and other political programs.

Easton Named to Board

Delegates from the ANG's 5th region—New York City—named Edward Easton to the regional vice presidency left vacant by the death of James B. Egan last February.

Among other major actions, the convention:

- Endorsed the Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the aged under the social security system, and called on the doctors of the Canadian province of Saskatchewan to end their "shameful and inhuman" withdrawal of services and accept "the clearly expressed will of the people" evident in the province's new medicare act.
- Supported the efforts of Negroes to win equal status through "freedom rides," "sit-ins" and other non-violent means and condemned the "continued harassment" by Georgia state officials of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., a leader of the movement.
- Applauded the broad civil rights program adopted by the AFL-CIO at its last convention and pledged ANG cooperation in helping to carry it out.
- Urged intensified efforts to include non-discrimination clauses in Guild contracts and to eliminate inequities in salaries of women wherever they exist.
- Offered a friendly hand to the citizens and working press of new nations in Africa and Asia "in the everlasting faith that freedom of expression will spread" and endorsed labor's Solidarity Stamp campaign to aid the free trade union movement in Algeria.

Sanctions Lifted from Bookbinders

(Continued from Page 1)

tions, in accordance with the constitution, after Bookbinders Local 119 withdrew its efforts to supplant Local 107 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers at Card Processing, Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Bookbinders Pres. Joseph Denny notified Meany of the withdrawal and Pres. John P. Burke of the Pulp-Sulphite Workers consented to removal of the sanctions. Meany then wired Denny that sanctions would be removed and full rights restored upon receipt of the written statement required by Section 16 of Article XXI that the union intends to comply henceforth with the provisions of the article.

Denny responded with the required statement.

The case arose when Impartial Umpire David L. Cole found that the Bookbinders had violated the AFL-CIO No-Raiding Agreement in seeking to represent Card Processing workers already covered by a contract of the Pulp-Sulphite Workers.

Following a complaint from the Pulp-Sulphite union, a subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council found that the Bookbinders had refused to comply with Cole's ruling, and the sanctions were imposed effective last Feb. 12.

The only union now remaining in non-compliance and subject to sanctions is the Journeymen Stonecutters.

ICFTU Concludes 'Fruitful' Congress

OMER BECU of Belgium opens the 7th World Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in West Berlin. Becu is general secretary of the 54 million-member free world labor body.

Progress Marks 8-Day Session Held in Shadow of Berlin Wall of the Batista regime, [which] threatens the peace of the whole American continent." The ICFTU called upon the "entire free trade union movement" to denounce "the state of terror and persecution reigning in Cuba, and to give full support to the efforts of the Cuban free trade unionists—those working underground in Cuba as well as those in exile—to establish freedom and democracy in their country."

(Continued from Page 1)

Another resolution appealed to the United Nations General Assembly to urge member governments "to apply economic sanctions against South Africa unless the government ceases its Apartheid (race segregation) policy and rescinds measures implementing it."

Delegates were particularly aroused over adoption by the South African government of a so-called anti-sabotage law which "in effect establishes in South Africa a system of police and judicial terror designed to suppress all opposition." This law imposes penalties including capital punishment against anyone interfering with "law and order," and includes as punishable offenses the aim of "bringing about any social or economic change in the republic."

An example of the peaceful conference atmosphere was the full agreement between union delegates from Holland and Indonesia on a resolution on the contentious issue of New Guinea. The countries have been virtually on the verge of war over this piece of undeveloped real estate in the South Pacific. Negotiations are finally underway with the United States acting as mediator.

Economic Policy Outlined

ICFTU economic policy was embodied in major documents on problems of developing countries, on automation and on the need for full employment policies in industrialized countries.

A resolution urging industrial nations to increase the flow of social and economic aid to former colonial possessions also emphasized the need for developing countries to adopt plans for balanced economic development and diversification of their economies. It stressed the important role of free trade unions in the process of development and the need for consultation in the formulation of development plans.

The congress pointed out to the developing countries, many of which have introduced "austerity" regimes to hasten industrialization, that "social progress in the form of better living conditions must be part of economic development."

A broad policy on automation laid down by the delegates declared:

- Technological progress is financed by the whole population and therefore its fruits "must not redound solely to the benefit of employers but must be equitably distributed."
- Higher wages, shorter working hours, longer paid holidays and expanded social benefits are essential to minimize the adverse effects on workers of technological changes.
- Improvements should result in lower prices to consumers, "yet all too often business firms have raised rather than lowered their prices in the wake of technological improvements which have actually resulted in cost reductions."
- The growing tendency toward economic concentration due to technological changes must be combatted by "effective anti-monopoly measures."
- Governments in consultation with trade unions must develop programs to ensure that automation will contribute to full employment.
- Adequate severance pay and increased unemployment benefits for displaced workers must be secured.

The growing trade problems involving industrial and developing countries, said another ICFTU policy statement, can be met along these lines:

- International agreements should "raise and stabilize" prices of primary commodities produced in developing countries.
- Industrial countries should adopt policies for sustained economic growth and full employment to expand import levels from developing countries.
- In developing countries, on the other hand, economic growth must be reflected in rising labor wages and standards so that "exploitation of labor should be removed as a factor in international trade."

The perennial issue of financing ICFTU activities revolved around the question of whether increased income should come from raising affiliation fees, as recommended by the West German Federation of Labor, or through other methods. The incoming executive board was empowered to take "appropriate action."

A sharp attack was launched on the British government for continued hostility to the ICFTU-affiliated Aden Trades Union Congress, with 15,000 members.

The colonial government in Aden enacted an industrial relations ordinance in 1960 which banned strikes, repressed the right to organize and bargain collectively, and led to imprisonment, deportation and exile of trade unionists for violations.

The ICFTU called for creation of a British parliamentary commission to visit Aden and investigate violations of civil liberties and "consider the right of self-determination" for the people "under the supervision of the United Nations."

Geijer, Becu Win ICFTU Re-election

Berlin—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions named Arne Geijer, head of the Swedish labor movement, to his third term as ICFTU president and re-elected Omer Becu as general secretary.

Re-elected as vice presidents were AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther from the United States, Robert Bothereau of France, Eiler Jensen of Denmark, M. A. Khatib of Pakistan, Willi Richter of Germany, Ahmed Tlili of Tunis and George Woodcock of Great Britain. Newly elected as a vice president was Fidel Velasquez of Mexico.

THE SEVENTH WORLD CONGRESS of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions is called to order for a plenary session, above, in Berlin. Congress speakers included AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt, ICFTU Pres. Arne Geijer and ICFTU General Sec. Omer Becu, along with District Pres. Walter Sickert of the West German Federation of Labor (DGB).

Canadian Labor Curbs Seen Driving 'Wedge'

Halifax, N. S.—An "ever-deepening wedge" is being driven between labor and management by curbs imposed in recent Canadian labor legislation, a fact-finding commission headed by Judge A. H. McKinnon of Antigonish, a former Nova Scotia labor minister, said in a report filed with the provincial Legislative Assembly.

Continuation of this trend, McKinnon said, "could very well mean an ever-widening rift between the parties and not a remote possibility of a renewal of the class struggle which besmirched the record of the last century."

The report urged Nova Scotian labor and management representatives to make an intensive study of the "mature" relations between Swedish workers and their employers with a view to adapting them to this province.

The alternative, it went on, would be more and more restrictive legislation, designed to meet every passing demand and crisis, until "the conduct of labor-management relations is straitjacketed in a code of laws" that would create two "warring factions" held at bay by state policing.

McKinnon did not cite specific examples of the type of restrictive labor legislation to which he referred, but there have been instances in recent years in Newfoundland, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia.

He made interim proposals for changes in the Nova Scotia Trade Union Act designed to foster improved relations.

These included a speedup in certification procedures; enforcement of arbitration awards in the courts; the granting of successor rights to unions when firms change ownership; and the granting of bargaining rights, with compulsory arbitration, to employes of crown corporations, government boards and commissions, and local police departments.

However, he proposed abolition of present compulsory conciliation boards—long a union goal—and was sharply critical of existing conciliation procedures. He rejected employer demands that unions be considered legal entities, claiming that any need to consider such a step has been made unnecessary by recent court decisions.

Beirne Urges 2 More Years Of Free School

Ithaca, N. Y.—Free, compulsory education should extend through the junior college level, Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne declared in an address here.

Beirne told the New York State School of Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell University that extension of the public school system "would take a large number of young people out of the job market, and it would fit them better for jobs they should be filling when they graduate."

He called for legislation to extend the "normal" range of school attendance from 12 years, as at present, to 14 years. Beirne added:

"In these days of new technologies, the simple fact of high school graduation carries but little weight. We have upgraded our standard of living but we have not elevated the standards of our public school system to the same degree."

UAW Presidents Study in Europe

Berlin—The presidents of 35 locals of the Auto Workers were welcomed to Berlin by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther upon their arrival to undertake a study mission of the operation of trade unions and social programs in Germany, Sweden, France and England.

Reuther was already in Berlin to attend the 7th world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which the UAW delegation observed.

He said the project is an initial undertaking of a greatly intensified education program for UAW members in international, social and economic problems. The costs are shared equally by the participants, their local unions and the international. The study mission was scheduled for 21 days.

Screen Actors Back SEG Drive in Hawaii

Los Angeles—The board of directors of the Screen Actors Guild has voted unanimously to support a Screen Extras Guild campaign to organize motion picture extra players in the Hawaiian Islands.

SEG is currently signing as members, Hawaiian performers who have worked as film extras during the last year, and will shortly open negotiations with the producers for a contract.

On New Hanford Plan:

Public Power Foes Win Vote in House

The House has turned down a new proposal to use waste steam from a nuclear reactor being constructed at Hanford, Wash., to generate needed electric power for the Northwest at no cost—and a probable profit—to the federal government.

Although the proposal had been supported both by the Administration and the bipartisan congressional delegation from the states affected, the House voted 232-163 to deny the Atomic Energy Commission authority to permit a group of local public utilities to finance and construct the generating plant.

Equal Distribution

The power would have been distributed equally to public and private companies through the Bonneville Power Administration.

The vote was almost identical to the 235-164 margin by which the House last year refused to appropriate $95 million to permit the government to construct the power facility. Supporters had hoped that eliminating federal financing—a chief argument used against the measure in 1961—would pave the way for approval.

In other major developments:

● The Senate voted a compromise $75 million to get the manpower retraining program—originally scheduled to get under way July 1—off to a belated start. The Senate Appropriations Committee had slashed the Administration's $100 million fund request in half. Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) led a fight for restoration of the full amount, which led to the $75 million compromise.

Firm Stand Pledged

Senate conferees pledged to seek to avoid further cuts in training funds when the appropriations bill for the Labor Dept. and the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare goes to conference with the House.

● The Senate Finance Committee put off for several days scheduled hearings on the trade expansion bill in order to continue work on the House-passed tax revision bill. In a series of tentative votes, the tax bill was being changed almost beyond resemblance to either the bill passed by the House or the original Administration proposal.

Deleted or drastically weakened by the committee were proposals for taxation of U.S. corporations overseas which have been considered by labor as key features of the tax bill. Earlier the committee had knocked out another provision strongly supported by the AFL-CIO, for a withholding tax on dividend and interest income.

The committee, by an 8-6 vote, weakened a House provision to limit tax deductions for entertaining customers—a section which the AFL-CIO had said was already too weak. Under the Senate version, the only limit on tax-deductible expense accounts is that they be in line with what might be spent by "a prudent man."

The fate of the tax bill remained uncertain, with a final committee vote tentatively set for July 27 and a possibility that the Senate will hold off action until Pres. Kennedy decides whether to seek a tax cut this year.

● A "truce" between the House and Senate Appropriations Committees appeared to have broken the deadlock over "prerogatives" which has blocked action on virtually all appropriations bills this year. The senators agreed to bow, for this session at least, to House demands that chairmanship of conference committees be shared by the two bodies instead of going automatically to the Senate.

● Pres. Kennedy won a major victory in the foreign policy field when House-Senate conferees agreed to delete rigid restrictions contained in differing versions of foreign aid authorization bills.

Deleted were a flat Senate ban on assistance to Communist nations, even when the President decided such aid would serve U.S. interests, a House prohibition against U.S. purchases of United Nations bonds or contributions to special funds until all other UN members had paid all back dues and assessments, and a Senate limitation on aid to India. The agreement must still receive final approval of both houses.

Celebrezze Named to H-E-W Post

Anthony J. Celebrezze, five times elected mayor of Cleveland, has been named by Pres. Kennedy as Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, succeeding former Sec. Abraham A. Ribicoff, who resigned to run for the Senate in Connecticut.

Confirmation by the Senate was expected promptly. The departure of Ribicoff, widely anticipated for several months, marks the first change in the Kennedy cabinet.

Widely respected in Cleveland as a political leader who "gets things done," Celebrezze moves into a cabinet post with major responsibility to fight effectively for two of the President's key projects—heavily increased federal assistance to the entire educational system and expansion of the social security system to include health care for the aged.

ANTHONY J. CELEBREZZE

In both areas the President has been frustrated in his first Congress by operation of the conservative coalition of northern Republicans and southern Democrats. Aid for both elementary school systems and colleges has been further dedelayed by controversy involving the nature of assistance to church schools.

Celebrezze, son of an Italian mother and father who migrated to the United States, worked his way through college after working from childhood to help support the family. His father was a railroad track worker.

He and Mrs. Celebrezze have three children, two daughters and a son, the latter a midshipman at the Naval Academy.

PROBLEMS INVOLVING UNIONS under the new Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act were discussed at a conference in the AFL-CIO building attended by representatives of 16 union organizations and the Labor Dept. Shown presiding at one session is Richard E. Shoemaker, right, assistant to Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security. Facing him at left, standing, is Kenneth Oldham, Rubber Workers.

Postal Unions Win Firm Backing In Biggest Representation Election

(Continued from Page 1)

The Letter Carriers scored a sweeping victory in the 63 offices which had been tallied as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

They received 93 percent of the 50,758 votes cast by city letter carriers and won exclusive recognition in 62 cities. The NALC also won a majority of votes cast in Washington, D. C., but were unable to obtain exclusive recognition under the election rules because the total vote cast fell below 60 percent of those eligible.

The Postal Clerks won 54 percent of the votes cast in its bargaining unit and exclusive recognition in 50 of the cities.

The unaffiliated National Postal Union, made up largely of a group of big city locals which split off from the Postal Clerks in 1958, tallied 24 percent of the vote and won recognition in nine cities, including New York, Los Angeles and Philadelphia. Neither union won a majority in four cities.

Approximately 13 percent of the clerks' ballots were cast for the National Alliance of Postal Employes, a long-established Negro association, with 5 percent for the Letter Carriers and the remainder for other groups.

The Mail Handlers won 44 percent of the ballots cast in its craft and exclusive recognition in 25 cities. Four cities were won by the Alliance, three by the National Postal Union and one by the Letter Carriers.

The Motor Vehicle Employes, with 56 percent of the vote, won recognition in 38 cities, to three for the Alliance and one for the Postal Clerks.

The Special Delivery Messengers, with 60 percent of the votes, took 38 cities to 17 for the Letter Carriers, who had 31 percent of the vote. Among custodial groups, the unaffiliated Post Office Maintenance Employes led with 37 percent of the votes and exclusive recognition in 23 cities. The Postal Clerks won two cities, the Government Employes and the Letter Carriers one each, while other unaffiliated unions won six.

The unaffiliated Rural Letter Carriers' Association is expected to win recognition in its bargaining unit as returns come in from the smaller communities. Only a handful of rural carriers are employed in big city post offices.

In cities where no union won a majority in its craft, a lesser degree of recognition is accorded unions which received at least 10 percent of the vote. This so-called "formal recognition" obligates management to "consult" with the union, but not to negotiate a written agreement. In addition, the Post Office Dept. said it will continue to "consult" with all national organizations, but will negotiate only with unions which have a majority.

Contract Talks Slated

Postal officials said preliminary contract talks will get under way in August, with full-scale negotiations starting about Sept. 15. Under an agreement reached with all unions, talks at the regional and local levels will not begin until a national agreement is reached.

While many items bargained for in private industry will continue to be set by Congress, including pay and retirement benefits, the negotiations will cover such matters as promotion policies, job and shift assignments, grievance procedures, seniority rights, production standards, overtime work, safety, and vacation scheduling.

Supplementary agreements reached with the department's 15 regional offices and with local postmasters may not contradict terms of national agreements, even if different unions are involved.

All voting was by mail during the last two weeks of June. Ballots were counted in the presence of union observers in 15 regional offices of the Post Office Dept.

Of the 470,000 employes eligible to vote, 78.8 percent returned valid ballots, the department announced.

Ribicoff Wins Nomination For Senate

Hartford, Conn. — Abraham A. Ribicoff, former governor and recently resigned Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, won nomination as Democratic candidate for the Senate in the party's state convention here.

Ribicoff defeated Rep. Frank Kowalski, a two-term Democratic congressman-at-large, by a wide margin for the party's nomination to face Rep. Horace Seely-Brown, Jr., (R) in the election. Kowalski failed to get the minimum 20 percent of the vote required to challenge Ribicoff in a primary election.

Kowalski was offered support for renomination for congressman at large by Ribicoff and State Democratic Chairman John M. Bailey but declined to run unless all three other candidates would withdraw. The nomination went to Bernard Grabowski.

Gov. John N. Dempsey, former lieutenant governor who succeeded Ribicoff when the latter entered the Kennedy cabinet, was renominated for another term.

Ribicoff and Seely-Brown will battle for the Senate seat being vacated by Republican Sen. Prescott Bush, who is retiring. Dempsey will run against John Alsop, a first-time candidate of the Republicans.

N. J. Voting At Low Point In Newark

Newark, N. J.—Fewer eligibles are registered to vote in Newark than in any other city in New Jersey—and fewer of those who are registered actually vote, according to a statewide study of voting habits by the New Jersey AFL-CIO.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Vincent J. Murphy said the survey showed that of Newark's 262,578 citizens 21 years or older, only 152,089, or 57 percent, are registered. Last November, he added, but 37 percent of the registered went to the polls.

The study also covered eight other cities—Atlantic City, Camden, Elizabeth, Jersey City, Paterson, Passaic, Perth Amboy and Trenton. In first place was Perth Amboy with 80 percent of the eligible population registered and 61 percent of the registered actually voting.

The best showing among the state's 21 counties was made by Cape May with about 92 percent registered—29,646 out of a total of 32,091 eligible, and 65 percent voting.

Burlington County had the poorest registration record, Murphy said the study showed. With 132,890 eligible voters, only 91,475, or 68 percent, had qualified to vote. Fewer than 65,000, or 56 percent, went to the polls on the last election day.

Senate Vote Shapes Health Care Issue

Kennedy, Meany Call on Public To Return Favorable Congress

(Continued from Page 1)

new the fight for the health care program in January, telling the public that "with your support in November, this will pass in 1963."

The Senate vote occurred on a motion to table—and thus kill—an amendment introduced by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. Mex.) and co-sponsored by 20 other Democratic and five Republican senators, attaching the health insurance plan as a rider to the House-passed public welfare bill.

Only the five Republican co-sponsors broke from GOP ranks to join 43 Democrats in opposing the tabling motion. Twenty-one Democrats—chiefly from the Southern bloc—teamed with 31 Republicans to kill the amendment.

Anderson-King Revised

The proposal would have provided basic benefits of 90 days hospitalization and up to 180 days of nursing home care financed under the social security system, as proposed in the original measure co-authored by Anderson and Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.).

Modifications worked out by Anderson and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) would have "blanketed in" retired persons not covered by social security or railroad retirement, permitted assignment of much of the administrative work to private health insurance organizations such as Blue Cross and allowed beneficiaries the option of keeping privately insured plans giving at least the statutory benefits.

Key to the defeat of the proposal was Sen. Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.), who only a few weeks earlier had co-sponsored the Anderson-Javits amendment.

"If Randolph had voted with us I think we would have got Hayden," said Anderson, referring to Sen. Carl Hayden (D-Ariz.). "But since we lost Randolph, we lost Hayden, too." (A tie vote would have beaten the tabling motion.)

Randolph's Explanation

If the motion to table had failed, Anderson was confident the amendment would attract additional votes from senators who opposed the procedure used in appending it to a House-passed measure without clearance by the Senate Finance Committee.

Randolph said in explanation of his vote that he feared the health care rider would have endangered passage of the entire welfare bill and that this would have tragic consequences for some 12,500 West Virginia families benefitting from aid to dependent children of the unemployed. West Virginia Democratic leaders, including county chairmen and Gov. William W. Barron (D), "tried everything we could," one leader stated, to persuade Randolph to support the bill.

Following the rollcall on the health care amendment, the Senate passed the welfare bill by voice vote. This measure, aimed at encouraging rehabilitation of families on relief, extends the program of aid to dependent children, which expired June 30, and increases federal grants for other state welfare programs. House and Senate conferees quickly agreed on a $300 million compromise reconciling differences between the two versions of the measure.

Anderson said he was "not going to abandon" the health care fight and predicted that the issue would mean the difference between victory and defeat for some House and Senate members this fall.

Javits, too, said he would "try again next year," observing that congressional members would have to "account for their votes" to the public.

Democratic party and congressional leaders joined in predicting that the vote would be a key election issue.

At a "school" for party candidates, House Speaker John W. McCormack (Mass.) said the Senate vote against health care had "made it a real, living, dynamic issue."

'Send More Democrats'

House Democratic Leader Carl Albert (Okla.) said the defeat "should teach us the lesson of a vote" and that the way to get more progressive legislation was to "send us 10 to 20 more Democrats." He said most GOP members of Congress were following a policy of "complete obstructionism."

Democratic National Chairman John M. Bailey accused New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) and former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon of standing "mute" during the debate over the health care amendment "that was supposed to be acceptable to liberal Republicans."

Calling the Senate score "Rockefeller Republicans 5—Goldwater Republicans 31," Bailey declared the "myth that the Republican Party has a strong liberal wing was completely debunked."

The American Medical Association, chief opponent of the social security method of financing health care for the aged, said the Senate vote was "in the public interest."

Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Ia.), GOP policy chairman, said the vote "won't hurt Republicans at all as a party" but would hurt "some of the President's henchmen who voted with him."

"This certainly demonstrated that this is another major Administration policy that has been repudiated with the help of his own party," Hickenlooper declared. "I think the public has been substantially awakened to the fallacies of this proposal."

President Kennedy's Statement on Health Care

Following is the text of Pres. Kennedy's statement on the defeat in the Senate of his health care proposals:

The Medical Care for the Aged bill was defeated in the United States Senate. A switch of two votes in the Senate would have provided, I believe, for its passage.

I believe this is a most serious defeat for every American family, for the 17 million Americans who are over 65, whose means of support, whose livelihood is certainly lessened over what it was in their working days, who are more inclined to be ill, who will more likely be in hospitals, who are less able to pay their bills.

I think they have suffered a serious setback today. But this issue is not confined to them. All those Americans who have parents, who are liable to be ill, and who have children to educate at the same time, mothers and fathers in their 30s and 40s.

I believe they have suffered a serious setback. In 1960, with Sen. Anderson, I introduced the medical care for the aged. A change of four votes in the Senate in 1960 would have provided for its passage. This year we came closer.

I think the American people are going to make a decision in November as to whether they want this bill, and similar bills, to be passed, or whether they want it to be defeated. Nearly all the Republicans and a handful of Democrats joined with them to give us today's setback.

The election in 1960 was very close. It has meant that nearly every vote in the House and Senate is close. Some we win by one or two votes; others we lose. We have to decide, the United States, in 1962, in November, in the Congressional elections, whether we want to stand still or whether we want to support this kind of legislation for the benefit of the people.

You are going to have a chance to make that judgment. I hope that we will return in November a Congress that will support a program like medical care for the aged, a program which has been fought by the American Medical Association and successfully defeated. This bill will be introduced in January, 1963. I hope it will pass. With your support in November, this will pass in 1963.

Rollcall Vote in Senate On Health Bill Motion

Following is the Senate roll call vote on a motion by Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.) to table, and thus kill, the Anderson-Javits welfare bill amendment to provide health insurance for the aged under the social security system:

FOR KILLING THE AMENDMENT

Democrats—21

Byrd (Va.)	Holland (Fla.)	Robertson (Va.)
Eastland (Miss.)	Jordan (N. C.)	Russell (Ga.)
Ellender (La.)	Kerr (Okla.)	Smathers (Fla.)
Ervin N. C.)	Long (La.)	Sparkman (Ala.)
Fulbright (Ark.)	McClellan (Ark.)	Stennis (Miss.)
Hayden (Ariz.)	Monroney (Okla.)	Talmadge (Ga.)
Hill (Ala.)	Randolph (W. Va.)	Thurmond (S. C.)

Republicans—31

Aiken (Vt.)	Curtis (Neb.)	Pearson (Kan.)
Allott (Colo.)	Dirksen (Ill.)	Prouty (Vt.)
Beall (Md.)	Dworshak (Idaho)	Saltonstall (Mass.)
Bennett (Utah)	Fong (Hawaii)	Scott (Pa.)
Boggs (Del.)	Goldwater (Ariz.)	Smith (Me.)
Bottum (S. D.)	Hickenlooper (Iowa)	Tower (Tex.)
Bush (Conn.)	Hruska (Neb.)	Wiley (Wis.)
Butler (Md.)	Miller (Iowa)	Williams (Del.)
Capehart (Ind.)	Morton (Ky.)	Young (N. D.)
Carlson (Kan.)	Mundt (S. D.)
Cotton (N. H.)	Murphy (N. H.)

AGAINST KILLING THE AMENDMENT

Democrats—43

Anderson (N. M.)	Hart (Mich.)	Metcalf (Mont.)
Bartlett (Alaska)	Hartke (Ind.)	Morse (Ore.)
Bible (Nev.)	Hickey (Wyo.)	Moss (Utah)
Burdick (N. D.)	Humphrey (Minn.)	Muskie (Me.)
Byrd (W. Va.)	Jackson (Wash.)	Neuberger (Ore.)
Cannon (Nev.)	Johnston (S. C.)	Pastore (R. I.)
Carroll (Colo.)	Kefauver (Tenn.)	Pell (R. I.)
Chavez (N. M.)	Lausche (Ohio)	Proxmire (Wis.)
Church (Idaho)	Long (Hawaii)	Smith (Mass.)
Clark (Pa.)	Long (Mo.)	Symington (Mo.)
Dodd (Conn.)	Magnuson (Wash.)	Williams (N. J.)
Douglas (Ill.)	Mansfield (Mont.)	Yarborough (Tex.)
Engle (Calif.)	McCarthy (Minn.)	Young (Ohio)
Gore (Tenn.)	McGee (Wyo.)
Gruening (Alaska)	McNamara (Mich.)

Republicans—5

Case (N. J.)	Javits (N. Y.)	Kuchel (Calif.)
Cooper (Ky.)	Keating (N.Y.)

Eagles to Present Award to McDonald

Pittsburgh—The Fraternal Order of Eagles will present its Green-Murray award for "outstanding leadership and statesmanship" to Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers at the FOE's annual convention here Aug. 3.

The award, a bronze plaque, memorializes the late William Green, president of the former AFL, and the late Philip Murray, president of the former CIO. Both were active Eagles in their lifetimes.

McDonald, an AFL-CIO vice president, succeeded Murray as USWA president in 1953.

Unions Spur Labor Day Safety Drive

The trade union movement will again spearhead a national drive to prevent the Labor Day weekend from being marred by accidental deaths and injuries.

Last year's campaign resulted in a safety record for the amount of travel which took place during the three-day holiday. But there were still 386 traffic deaths and 83 swimming and boating accidents.

Such tragedies, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared, "have no place in the celebration of labor's national holiday." He called on "every AFL-CIO affiliate" to "do its utmost" to make the 1962 Labor Day weekend safe.

AFL-CIO Vice-Pres. Joseph A. Beirne is chairman of the steering committee for the annual campaign, which is sponsored by the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council. Cooperating groups include the AFL-CIO's Occupational Health & Safety Committee, leading unions and ladies' auxiliaries.

Citations Planned

Participation of unions and union officials in the drive will be acknowledged by certificates of recognition from the National Safety Council.

Local unions may request free packets of safety campaign material and ideas from the labor department of the National Safety Council, 425 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 11, Ill.

The Labor Day packet contains a list of suggested activities, a poster, drafts of a safety talk and a news release and other safety promotion aids.

7-21-62

CWA Aides Get Taste of Liberal Arts

New Brunswick, N. J.—Nine members and trainees of the Communications Workers staff have completed an 11-week training program designed by the Rutgers Institute of Management & Labor Relations to provide a taste of liberal education for union leaders.

The program was the first portion of a six-month experiment aimed at giving the CWA staffers a long look at accepted ideas and to reinforce or revise them in an atmosphere of critical or constructive thinking.

Five Rutgers departments cooperated in teaching and in giving the students a battery of psychological and reading tests on such books as "The Hairy Ape," the plays of Ibsen, "Issues of the Sixties" and "The Human Meaning of Social Sciences."

The curriculum included trips to the New York theater, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Hayden Planetarium and the United Nations. Classroom subjects included history, effective communications, reading improvement, political science, psychology, sociology, anthropology, library service, labor arbitration, economics, labor law, art and music.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, July 28, 1962 | No. 30

Trade Bill 'Basic' in Fight For Freedom, Meany Says

40-Hours Bill Goes ToKennedy

The Senate has passed unanimously and sent to the President a labor-backed bill requiring the payment of overtime rates on all government-assisted construction after 8 hours in any day and after 40 hours in a week.

Passage of the Administration-supported bill plugs gaps in both the Davis-Bacon prevailing wage laws and in a series of so-called "eight-hour" laws which date back to 1892.

Under these laws, government contractors were able to work employes seven days a week—up to 56 hours—at straight-time rates. This gave the non-union contractor a significant advantage over union firms which paid standard overtime rates. While some construction work was covered in last year's amendments to the Wage-Hour Act, the limit on hours would not have fully applied until 1965.

The bill also significantly broadened the coverage of the hours law by applying it to federally-assisted construction projects in addition to direct government construction.

While the Senate acted on the hours bill, the House passed—with weakening amendments—an equal pay for women measure.

Labor had strongly supported a federal ban on a "double standard" of pay for men and women, and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler had urged approval of a bill by Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N.Y.) which would prohibit lower pay on the basis of sex for persons doing "comparable" work. The Zelenko bill also would have prohibited employers from cutting the pay of higher-paid men workers in order to equalize wages.

Amendments Weaken Bill

A coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats drastically weakened the measure by adopting a business groups' proposal substituting the phrase "equal work" for "comparable work." Supporters of the original bill pointed out that this might make it possible for an employer to evade the law on the basis of insignificant differences in the work performed.

The coalition also succeeded in knocking out the bar against wage-cutting. The bill then was passed and sent to the Senate with only a few scattered votes in opposition.

The day before the House acted on the bill, Pres. Kennedy issued an executive order barring discrimination against wom-

(Continued on Page 8)

AFL-CIO Unions Top Postal Vote

By David L. Perlman

Complete returns from the first nationwide collective bargaining election ever held among federal employes have underscored a massive victory for AFL-CIO postal unions, which won exclusive rights to bargain nationally for 417,000 out of a possible 495,000 workers.

The nationwide mail ballot was the largest union representation election ever held in the United States.

Four affiliates—the Letter Carriers, Postal Clerks, Motor Vehicle Employes and Special Delivery Messengers—won national recognition by polling a majority of votes cast in their bargaining units. A fifth AFL-CIO union, the Mail Handlers, won the most votes in its unit but fell short of a majority.

Final though unofficial tallies announced by the Post Office Dept. showed a total of 382,260 votes cast—a 77 percent return of the ballots mailed to postal employes in 35,000 communities.

Carriers Lead Vote

For national and regional representation, the two categories in which the count has been completed, the Post Office announced these results:

- The Letter Carriers won bargaining rights for the nation's 164,200 city carriers. The NALC polled 121,552 of the 131,045 ballots cast by carriers and also won exclusive recognition in all 15 geographical regions of the Post Office

(Continued on Page 7)

APPRENTICESHIP STAMP design is unveiled by Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day, left, and Sen. Frank Church (D), in whose home state of Idaho nationwide impetus for the stamp was first generated more than four years ago. The 4-cent commemorative of the 25th anniversary of the National Apprenticeship Act will be issued in Washington Aug. 31 as a climax to National Apprenticeship Month. (See story, Page 7)

Meany Seeks 'Quarantine'

Coup in Peru Seen Blow to Freedom

The military coup d'etat in Peru is a "serious blow to the cause of democracy" and an "inherent danger to the trade union movement" of that country, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared.

In a telegram to Pres. Kennedy, Meany said that the AFL-CIO "unreservedly supports" the United States decision to break diplomatic relations with Peru and to cancel all Alliance for Progress projects under way and scheduled for that country.

Warning of "danger to the very lives of the Peruvian democratic trade union leaders," the federation president urged Kennedy to move through the Organization of American States to "quarantine" Peru "while it remains in the grip of military dictatorship."

"The workers of Peru who are our brothers deserve and shall have the unstinting support of the American labor movement," he added. He expressed confidence that free labor throughout the world will work "to the end that their freedom shall be guaranteed, their democratic rights restored and their constitutional government reinstated."

The army junta struck in the dead of night to depose the government in an effort to override the June 10 Peruvian elections, in which the highest number of votes for the presidency was won by Popular Revolutionary Party Candidate Victor Raul Haya de la Torre.

President Arrested

Raising a charge of fraud, the army had vainly attempted to pressure Pres. Manuel Prado y Ugarteche to declare the election void. Prado, a conservative, and the National Election Board refused to yield. The junta's answer was to ring the presidential palace with

(Continued on Page 6)

Adjustment Aid Called 'Essential'

The Kennedy Administration's trade expansion bill is a "basic weapon . . . we cannot do without" in the worldwide "struggle to preserve human freedom," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared as the Senate Finance Committee moved into apparently lengthy hearings on the House-passed measure.

Meany stressed anew, however, that labor's support of the bill is conditioned on inclusion of the trade adjustment features proposed by the Administration. These would extend various forms of federal aid to workers, industries and communities adversely affected by a rise in imports.

Noting that adjustment assistance is still considered a "controversial" question in Congress, the federation president said:

"This causes us the greatest concern. In our opinion there is no question whatever that adjustment assistance is essential to the success of trade expansion. And as we have said many times before, it is indispensable to our support of the program as a whole."

The bill would give the President broad powers to cut or eliminate tariffs in negotiation with other trading nations. It is aimed particularly at meeting competition from the booming European Common Market and preserving the six-nation area as a major market for U.S. goods.

Meany said labor endorsed the bill's objective of increasing the volume of America's foreign trade because expanded trade "will

(Continued on Page 8)

Arkansas Sets $1.50 Assessment For Broad State Labor Program

Little Rock, Ark.—A 16-point legislative "program of progress" to be financed by a per capita assessment of $1.50 a year was adopted overwhelmingly by a special convention of the Arkansas State AFL-CIO.

Designed to raise nearly $350,000 in the 1960s for political education and public relations on behalf of the state's union workers, the program was hailed by State AFL-CIO Pres. George Ellison and Sec.-Treas. J. Bill Becker as possibly the "most important single step" ever taken by the state federation.

The special convention's action made Arkansas the sixth state labor body in the South to levy an assessment earmarked for a comprehensive, long-range state political and legislative program. The first, in Louisiana, was credited with a large role in winning repeal of the state's so-called "right-to-work" law—the only one in the South to be erased from the statute books so far.

Similar programs also have been set in motion in Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and—earlier this year—South Carolina.

Deputy Dir. Al Barkan of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education cautioned the 214 delegates from all parts of Arkansas that the program would not achieve all their objectives overnight. But with persistent effort, he said, gains would come over a period of time.

Strong support for the program also was voiced by other speakers, including COPE Area Dir. Daniel A. Powell, Pres. Steve A. Para of the Tennessee State AFL-CIO and Pres. Claude Ramsay of the Mississippi state federation.

High on the priority list under the new program is a poll tax registration drive aimed at sharply increasing the proportion of union members, relatives and friends who are qualified to vote—now estimated at about 30 percent of the potential of 283,000. Minimum objectives are to raise the qualified labor vote to between 40 and 50 percent by the 1964 primary and to 60 to 70 percent by 1956.

Among the legislative goals are:

- Repeal of Arkansas' so-called

(Continued on Page 2)

Saskatchewan Doctors End 23-Day Revolt

Saskatoon, Sask.—Saskatchewan's doctors have ended a 23-day revolt against the province's comprehensive program of prepaid medical care after winning some concessions from the government but without forcing the complete suspension of the plan they had originally demanded.

The rebellion, which since July 1 had left the province's 900,000 residents with only minimal medical services and had drawn wide condemnation, was settled in negotiations between Premier Woodrow S. Lloyd and Dr. H. D. Dalgleish, president of the Saskatchewan College of Physicians & Surgeons.

The Canadian Labor Congress branded the physicians' tactics a "mutiny" which constituted "open

(Continued on Page 7)

LAKE UNITY IS WHAT the Tobacco Workers call the 118-acre recreation area Local 176 has bought for the use of members and guests near Durham, N. C. Pictured on dedication day are some of the hundreds of those who attended. Principal speakers included AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Carey E. Haigler, Pres. W. M. Barbee of the North Carolina State AFL-CIO, Pres. T. W. Overcash of Local 176, TWIU Sec.-Treas. R. J. Petree, and other labor, civic and management officials, the latter from Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. The union has set aside 25 acres for Boy Scout use and may reserve another area for Girl Scouts.

Arbiter Makes Award to ILG:

Runaway Firm Told To Pay $108,000

New York—A runaway garment firm, Judy Bond, Inc., has been hit by an arbitrator's order to pay $108,762.14 in damages flowing from contract violations and by a National Labor Relations Board complaint charging unfair labor practices at the company's Brewton, Ala., plant.

In awarding the damages, George J. Mintzer, impartial arbiter for the blouse industry, sustained charges brought by the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers that Judy Bond had breached the union's collective agreement with blouse industry employers.

NLRB Regional Dir. John F. LeBus in New Orleans issued the board complaint against Judy Bond's Brewton Fashions division and against the United Garment Workers. The complaint charges that company officials and the UGWA coerced plant workers into joining the UGWA and intimidated them against joining the ILGWU, and that the contract between the firm and the UGWA therefore was illegal.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its April meeting, gave the ILGWU clearance to proceed with an organizing drive at the Brewton plant despite the existence of the UGWA contract. In the first application of the justification section of the new internal disputes plan, the council found that the UGWA had signed a three-year agreement with Judy Bond in the face of a request from the ILGWU not to do so because of the latter's strike against the firm.

Mintzer's award ordered Judy Bond to pay:

- Damages of $61,000 for work channeled to non-union production, "a serious violation" of the firm's obligation under the contract to make all of its products in union shops.
- Obligated contributions of $22,460.82 to the industry health and welfare fund, based on the non-union production.
- Overtime and underpayments totaling $25,301.32 to shipping clerks required to work a 40-hour week rather than the 35-hour week set forth in the contract.

In addition, Mintzer ordered the firm to make available to the union for inspection its records for the last quarter of 1961. New charges against the company will be brought if further violations are uncovered for that period, the ILGWU said.

The arbiter ruled that "while the contract is in force, a member of the association does not relieve himself of liability by resigning from the association."

Judy Bond broke away from the manufacturers' association last December, closed its New York operations, obtained a plant in Brewton and moved all production south.

At the time, the ILGWU and the employers were completing negotiations on a renewal of their agreement.

ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky said the union was confident that additional NLRB charges it has filed against the company would be sustained. These accuse Judy Bond of refusal to bargain by its untimely withdrawal from the employer's association, failure to notify the ILGWU or bargain with it over its intention to move its production, and attempting to avoid ILGWU contract conditions and standards.

Meanwhile, the union is continuing its strike activities at Judy Bond's Birmingham, Ala., warehouse and its organizing drive at the Brewton plant.

Arkansas Labor Votes Funds for Progress

(Continued from Page 1)

"right-to-work" law to permit "freedom of contract between employers and employes."

- Increases and improvements in workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation.
- Extension of the deadline for poll tax collections to 30 days before primary and general elections to encourage greater voter participation.
- Enactment of a "little Davis-Bacon" law to assure payment of prevailing wages on public construction work.
- Improvements in the public school system, including higher teachers' salaries and reorganization of school districts.
- Legislation to outlaw professional strikebreakers and their agencies in the state.
- Revision of state tax laws to reduce the burden on low and middle income groups and require corporations and utilities to pay their fair share.
- A statewide minimum wage of at least $1 an hour and a ceiling on the workweek for workers not covered by federal standards.
- A constitutional amendment to require secret ballots in all elections.
- Repeal of such state anti-labor laws as the so-called "anti-violence act" and the railroad anti-picketing law.

Trade Group Pact Won by Cap Workers

New York—A citywide work stoppage of cap makers in 130 shops brought quick results here for Hatters Local 2 in the form of new contracts with improved wages and working conditions.

Two of the three manufacturers' groups that deal with Local 2 signed general two-year agreements within a day after 2,000 workers left their shops for a mass meeting at Cooper Union. The third was expected to sign shortly.

The general stoppage was scheduled to continue until individual shops have agreed to new terms. The union's goals include a provision that all workers shall join the union after the first six weeks of employment; wage increases, new minimums for lower-paid workers, call-in pay and other improvements.

The stoppage was the second in recent years. It was voted at a citywide rally July 19 after repeated meetings between the union and employers' groups failed to bring a settlement. The manufacturers' groups are the Empire State Cloth Hat & Cap Manufacturers Association, the National Headwear Manufacturers Association, Inc., and the Uniform Manufacturers Exchange, Inc.

Vested Rights Limited In Runaway Plant Case

Detroit—A U.S. Court of Appeals has overturned a lower court ruling holding that employes of a "runaway" Detroit plant had a vested right to jobs at the plant's new location in Tennessee.

The three-judge 6th Circuit Court in Cincinnati ruled unanimously that contract language negotiated by Auto Workers Local 80 with the Gemmer Mfg. division of the Ross Gear & Tool Co., Inc., gave no seniority and recall rights to employes in company plants located outside the city limits of Detroit.

In the contract the company recognized the union as "the exclusive representative of its employes in its plant or plants . . . located within the city limits of Detroit for the purpose of collective bargaining . . . on wages, hours and conditions of employment."

This language was "plain" and "unambiguous," the court said, and Gemmer employes acquired no seniority rights at the Tennessee plant under the 1958 union-company agreement.

Gemmer employes were laid off last fall when the gear plant was moved to a new building in Lebanon, Tenn., subsidized by that city. Five UAW members sued as individuals, acting for themselves and other employes. Their suit cited a 1961 decision by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in another "runaway plant" case involving the Glidden Co., which had closed its Durkee Famous Foods plant at Elmhurst, N. Y., and opened a new plant in Bethlehem, Pa.

The Glidden ruling was that employes at the Durkee Foods plant had vested rights, such as seniority, that continued in existence even after the plant was moved. The 6th Circuit said the Glidden ruling did not apply to Gemmer because the contract language was different—no specific geographical limitation was spelled out between Glidden and the union.

The judges added that it was not until May 9, 1961, following the decision in the Glidden case, that the union changed a request for transfer rights to a claim that such rights were legal under Glidden. This was a "new and different construction," the court said in reversing the lower court.

Woodworkers Ratify Coast Pact in Canada

Vancouver, B. C.—A master agreement giving approximately 25,000 members of the Woodworkers on Canada's West Coast wage increases of 8 cents an hour retroactive to June 15, with another 8 cents next year, has been ratified by the union's Policy Committee.

The new pact sets the minimum rate for common labor at $2 an hour this year and $2.08 cents effective June 15, 1963. Employes with 20 years or more of service received a fourth week of paid vacation, medical coverage was improved, and the check-off clause was strengthened.

H. McCartney, USWA Aide, Dies at 46

Pittsburgh—Howard McCartney, 46, Steelworkers public relations director, died July 26 at Mercy Hospital following a heart attack the previous day.

With the exception of four years of World War II service with the Army, McCartney had been active in the labor movement for his entire adult life. He joined the Steelworkers Organizing Committee, the forerunner of the USWA, at its inception in 1936. Before that he had worked with the Mine Workers Dist. 5 office in Pittsburgh.

He was managing editor of Steel Labor until his appointment in 1959 as director of public relations for USWA and formerly was a vice president of the Intl. Labor Press Association.

Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald expressed "deep grief" over the loss of "a lifelong friend and fellow worker."

Survivors include his wife, Alma, and his three daughters.

NLRB Cites Oil Firm In Gas Station Firings

Detroit—A gasoline station operator who fired four workers for joining a union was an employe of an oil company, not an "independent contractor," and the oil company is responsible for unfair labor practices, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

In a 3-2 decision the board ordered the Site Oil Co. of Missouri and Michigan to bargain collectively if and when operations are resumed at a Site station on West Eight-Mile Road here. The station was damaged by fire recently. The board also ordered the company to reinstate the four fired employes and make them whole for lost earnings.

Three board members upheld the findings of Trial Examiner Louis Libbin—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown. Members Boyd Leedom and Philip Ray Rodgers dissented on the ground that the "total picture" of the station operations reflects an "independent contractor" relationship. In addition, they said, the decision would have an "unsettling effect" on many long-established relationships in the industry.

The majority found that under the "right of control" test required by the law, Site was the actual employer. It owned the station and equipment which it leased subject to termination on 30 days' notice, with Site holding the right to cancel on 24 hours' notice if the station was operated contrary to terms of the lease.

Other lease provisions required that the station be open 24 hours a day, that attendants wear Site uniforms, and that the lessee refrain from selling any other oil company's products without written approval of Site. The board majority said it was satisfied that Site reserved for itself extensive control over daily operations of the station, first run by a company supervisor and then by Baron Herman as lessee.

The examiner had cited 16 service rules which Site had posted at the station.

Living Costs Reach New Peak in June

Living costs reached a record high level in June, largely because of sharp increases in fresh fruit prices, the Labor Dept.'s monthly report showed.

The Consumer Price Index at 105.3 was up one-tenth of 1 percent from the May figure—and 1.2 percent above June 1961. The June index means it now takes $10.53 to buy the same goods and services that cost $10 in the base period of 1957-59.

A companion report issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed net spendable earnings of factory workers up slightly to a new high for June. After-tax take-home pay averaged $85.91 for a worker with three dependents and $78.24 for a worker with no dependents.

NLRB Charges Filed:

Aerospace Unions Postpone Scheduled Strike for 60 Days

Los Angeles—Negotiations on contracts affecting more than 100,000 aerospace industry workers were resumed here as two unions acceded to the request of Pres. Kennedy to postpone their scheduled strike for 60 days.

Members of the Machinists and the Auto Workers, who had set July 23 as their strike deadline, voted to give holdout missile and plane makers more time to reach an acceptable agreement.

Joint bargaining teams for the two unions returned to the bargaining table as Kennedy, acting at the request of the Federal Mediation Service, appointed a three-man review board to hear the issues and make recommendations in the dispute within 60 days.

Sharply critical of the refusal of other major firms to reach a comparable agreement, the IAM and UAW filed unfair labor practice charges against three—Lockheed, Convair and North American—on the ground that they insist on negotiating separate agreements at each plant though they meet jointly to plan strategy.

It is an open secret in southern California, union spokesmen said in a statement, that "these companies are involved in a conspiracy to thwart free collective bargaining and to deny workers their rights" under the law.

The charges, filed here with the regional Labor Relations Board, charge the companies with violating specified sections of the National Labor Relations Act.

The board named by Kennedy consists of George W. Taylor of the Wharton School of Finance & Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania, Charles C. Killingsworth of Michigan State University, and Ralph T. Seward of Washington, labor relations consultant. The latter two are permanent umpires under the contract between the Steelworkers and Bethlehem Steel.

The request for a strike postponement was approved by the IAM at plants of the Lockheed Aircraft Co. and the Convair Div. of the General Dynamics Corp., and by UAW locals at North American Aviation, Inc., and the Ryan Aeronautics Co., San Diego.

IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes said the unions are "deeply disappointed" by the refusal of aerospace manufacturers thus far to give their employes what other firms have given, but that work will continue without interruption.

The chief difficulty, he said, is the "pathologic hostility" of some companies to organized labor. Equal treatment with employes in comparable industries "remains our basic goal," said Hayes.

UAW Rejects Two Offers

At membership meetings the UAW locals rejected contract offers by North American and Ryan which were similar to terms proposed July 16 by Douglas Aircraft but did not contain an agency-shop clause.

UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock said he regretted the President had been forced to intervene because labor relations in the world's "most modern industry" are "controlled by men of primitive class struggle mentality," whose resistance to policies long accepted by most American industries has "precipitated a breakdown" in collective bargaining.

Normal economic pressures are not at work on aerospace management and consequently, Woodcock said, "their representatives sit immobile . . . serene and smug in the knowledge that . . . their profits" and other income will "continue to be subsidized by the taxpayer."

The agency shop, or some stronger form of union security, has been a chief objective of the IAM and the UAW in negotiations this year for contracts covering some 400,000 industry workers. The agency shop offered by Douglas represents a compromise of the demand for a union shop requiring all employes to be union members. It requires that non-members employed at Douglas pay the equivalent of union dues as a service fee.

Douglas Workers Vote

Some 22,000 Douglas workers are balloting on the proposed new three-year contract.

The new Douglas contract, if ratified, would run to July 15, 1965, and would provide general wage increases of 17 to 25 cents, additional increases of 4 to 8 cents hourly at the Charlotte, N. C., plant, the agency shop, and other benefits.

Runaway Loses Appeal From Order to Return

St. Louis—An arbiter's finding and a court order directing a runaway firm to return to St. Louis have been upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

The 8th Circuit Court refused to disturb a district court order of last year against the Selb & Blades Mfg. Co., which laid off employes in 1960 and moved its machinery and work to new plants in Arkansas and Colorado.

The latest ruling means that the company must:

- Restore the jobs here of 167 laid-off members.
- Give them back pay of about $190,000, with interest from Jan. 11, 1962.

The appeals court cited a long list of U.S. Supreme Court decisions upholding the lower court ruling against the airplane parts manufacturer. The facts were as follows:

The company negotiated a two-year contract with IAM Dist. 9 with a clause providing it would not subcontract work customarily performed by members of the bargaining unit so long as equipment and personnel were available in St. Louis. It further provided that, if subcontracting should prove necessary, every effort would be made to give the work to an IAM shop.

The contract went into effect July 1, 1960. A few months later management decided, against union protests, to move the work to new plants it had established at Rector and Walnut Ridge, Ark., and in the Denver area. A series of layoffs followed here.

The union charged the company with the contract violation and an impartial arbiter ordered Selb & Blades to rehire 167 workers and pay them back wages. When the employer refused to comply the case was taken to court where U.S. District Judge George A. Moore upheld the arbiter.

Employes at the runaway plants in Arkansas later joined the IAM and now are members of Lodge 1568 in Walnut Ridge and Lodge 1920 in Rector.

Hikes End Strike At Plastics Firm

Detroit—Members of Auto Workers Local 155 at the Detroit Plastic Molding Co., ended a seven-week strike after winning wage increases, the first paid holidays and vacations they have had, night shift premiums of 5 to 10 cents an hour, seniority rights and grievance procedure.

The one-year pact, first since employes of the Roseville, Mich., plant voted for the UAW, provides wage hikes of 8 cents an hour for 100 workers earning less than $1.50 an hour and 5 cents for 50 to 60 workers earning more than $1.50.

The union expressed its thanks to "the people of Roseville who recognized the justice of our claims," the mayor and city council majority "who refused to be stampeded into unwise action."

Pollak Takes USIA Post In Japan

Harry H. Pollak, staff representative in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, has been named labor adviser to the U.S. Information Agency in Japan.

He will direct the new union-to-union exchange program under which about 80 Japanese union leaders will come to the U.S. this fiscal year under the sponsorship of AFL-CIO unions, and leaders of the counterpart U.S. unions will go to Japan. He is serving on leave of absence from the federation.

Pollak, born in Passaic, N.J., was graduated from Rutgers University as a member of Phi Beta Kappa and received a master's degree in international relations from the University of Chicago. He joined the Dept. for Intl. Affairs of the former CIO in 1951 and has represented both the CIO and the AFL-CIO in many important projects in this country and in many other parts of the world. In April 1961, Pres. George Meany named him AFL-CIO liaison to the Peace Corps, where he has served since.

A World War II bomber crew veteran who was shot down over Germany after 30 combat missions and who received the Distinguished Flying Cross, he has lectured widely to labor, university and community bodies on international labor problems. A member of the Newspaper Guild, he has been editor of the English edition of ORIT's Facts and Figures and assistant editor of the ORIT Inter-American Labor Bulletin.

HARRY H. POLLAK

Trend to Rail Mergers Branded National Peril

The growing trend towards railroad mergers "endangers national security and threatens the public interest," the AFL-CIO has warned.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said the AFL-CIO is "in full agreement" with the position taken by the Railway Labor Executives' Association for legislation which would block action on pending railroad mergers until 1964.

The federation's views were expressed in a letter to Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), sponsor of the bill and chairman of the Anti-Trust subcommittee which approved the measure the next day, with four Democrats voting for the bill and the three subcommittee Republicans opposed.

The Kefauver bill would suspend temporarily the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve mergers which reduce competition until Congress can make a thorough study of the problem. Biemiller wrote:

"We believe Congress should have full opportunity to study the inadequacies of the present law and of ICC procedures. We believe such a study by Congress should result in new legislation which will permit railroad mergers only under conditions which will adequately protect the public interest."

Engineers, PAA Agree To Settlement Formula

The Flight Engineers have agreed to cancel a strike notice against Pan American World Airways, and the union and management accepted a proposal by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg for settling their dispute over wages, working conditions and crew complement.

It was the second agreement, subject to membership approval, on a method of settling disputes between three major airlines and the engineers over the status of FEIA members in the crews of jet airliners.

Trans World Airlines and the FEIA had agreed June 21 to accept Goldberg's proposal for settling their differences.

Eastern Air Lines, whose engineers have been on strike since June 23, turned down the peace proposal on two occasions but agreed, at AFL-CIO News press time, to meet with Goldberg. Goldberg also was meeting with the FEIA and the Air Line Pilots.

The engineers had accepted the Goldberg formula for disposition of the dispute and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urged Eastern management to do the same, saying "It is a sound proposal and, in the public interest, I urge Eastern Air Lines to agree also without further delay."

Goldberg said the proposals accepted by Pan American, Trans World and the Flight Engineers committee were the same as the one made to Eastern and its chapter of the FEIA. In it he recommended:

- That the parties agree to final and binding arbitration of all unresolved economic and work-rule issues. If the parties cannot agree on an arbitrator he shall be selected by them from a panel nominated by the American Arbitration Association.
- That the parties reach agreement on the crew complement issue subject to the concurrence of the Airline Pilots to the extent the latter's interests are involved.

Goldberg also proposed and the parties agreed that on the crew complement issue — the makeup of jet plane crews—the negotiators will have the assistance of the secretary and under-secretary of labor, National Mediation Board member Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., Dr. Nathan P. Feinsinger and Federal Mediator G. S. McSwan.

Any crew complement issue not resolved is to be finally settled by such procedures as these named persons shall prescribe.

Eastern Air Lines at one time indicated willingness to accept Goldberg's formula for completing negotiations but later refused and resumed token service—two flights a day between New York and Miami.

Union Support Keeps AWIU Strike Going

Sheffield, Ala.—Aluminum Workers in the ninth month of a strike against the Union Aluminum Co. here will be able to hold out longer thanks to the support of the AFL-CIO and its unions, said Pres. Donald R. Smith of AWIU Local 265.

Expressing thanks to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for financial backing and support given by the federation's Executive Council, Smith said 150 pickets are taking their turns on the picket line, 24 hours a day, even those who have found other work.

The 300 men who walked out for a first contract last Nov. 16 are down to 275 but no production work has been attempted in the closed plant by the owners, William S. King and Elton Darby. The strikers have heard reports, Smith said, that the plant may be sold.

At a negotiating session last month, the union restated its claim for modest contract terms, with wage rates above the former level of $1.15 to $1.33 an hour. The owners declined, saying they have recently failed to win new business in competitive bidding on jobs.

Said Smith: "We're still holding firm, still hoping for a break."

Some of the strikers have worked for King since 1945, when he started making aluminum windows in an old warehouse. At that time he told union representatives he would be "glad to work out a contract" as soon as his business was established. Later he fought all union efforts and fired union supporters in an AWIU organizing drive.

AWIU Pres. Eddie R. Stahl said the union has received many contributions from AFL-CIO affiliates.

Stage Employes Set Convention for Sept. 10

The Theatrical Stage Employes have scheduled their convention for the Convention Center at Las Vegas, Nev., opening Sept. 10 and running through Sept. 14.

The Need Is Now

THE HEARINGS OF the House Ways & Means Committee may decide finally whether Congress will pass a tax cut bill this year, thus providing the increased purchasing power needed to give new life to a sluggish economy.

The government's published statistics have shown a pronounced slippage in the pace of recovery from the low point of the 1960-61 recession. The Gross National Product has not increased at the rate hoped for. The unemployment figure of 5.5 percent is intolerably high for a generally affluent nation to consider acceptable. And joblessness is understated rather than overstated in this percentage, because the work force has not increased as it normally would.

The remedy for this situation is to increase purchasing power, to add to the capacity of the people to buy the goods and services the business system can turn out.

In the last two Eisenhower recessions, a tax reduction policy was rejected. The result was that in neither case was there anything that could be called complete recovery.

A properly designed reduction in taxes, specifically for low-income and middle-income families, can have a powerful effect in making the history of this recovery a different one. It would inject literally billions of dollars into the spending stream, dollars that would be immediately and continuously spent for food and clothing, for housing and services.

A sweeping reform of the tax system is scheduled for consideration next year. But the need for correcting accumulated and complex inequities should not interfere with a temporary reduction of taxes in the low-income brackets now—not six or eight months from now.

The Ways & Means Committee hearings, under Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), provide the opportunity for a realistic examination of the facts. They offer a chance to move swiftly and decisively to spur the economy forward again.

Victory in the Post Office

THE NATION'S POSTAL WORKERS have won the final round in their fight for full union recognition.

It is a fight that goes back before the turn of the century, and for years was as bitter as any struggle of industrial workers to organize.

A New York City postmaster fired 150 letter carriers whom spies had identified as the most active members of the Knights of Labor. The president of the Chicago clerk's union was dismissed on charges that he "sought through the American Federation of Labor to influence legislation for post office clerks." A "gag order" prohibited postal employes from even writing their congressmen. At this moment organized labor led the successful campaign for the Lloyd-LaFollette Act of 1912, which prohibited dismissal or demotion because of union membership and guaranteed the right of petition.

Still it was a long road between mere permissive union membership and recognition and bargaining comparable to that guaranteed by the Wagner Act to workers in private industry. That road has now been traveled.

Under an executive order issued by Pres. Kennedy, unions representing a majority of workers in any branch of the government are entitled to exclusive recognition and the right to negotiate written agreements covering matters not requiring congressional action.

In overwhelming numbers, postal workers have voted for union representation—and for the AFL-CIO unions which have effectively fought their battles over the years.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery, Harry C. Bates, Wm. C. Doherty, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, L. S. Buckmaster*, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, July 28, 1962 No. 30

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Should Be 'Heartily Ashamed':

British Doctors Hit AMA Attack On Health Plan as 'Nonsense'

The following editorial from the British Medical Journal, organ of the British Medical Society, is a direct reply to the "vulgarity and cheapness" of attacks on Great Britain's National Health Service by the American Medical Association.

THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION is not without critics in its own country, and we may be confident that a great many doctors in the U.S.A. deplore, as we do, the vulgarity and cheapness of its past and present attacks on the National Health Service.

We have watched with some dismay the mushroom growth of the AMA's public relations activities and the colossal sums spent by it to defeat what our American colleagues call "socialized medicine." The dismay is at the probably inherent weakness of American medical services if such a vast effort has to be expended on misrepresentation of what is happening in Britain.

Three years ago, when AMA News published some nonsense about the NHS, we suggested that if the American Medical Association wanted "to be well prepared to deal with governmental plans for introducing compulsory health insurance into the U.S.A. they would be wiser . . . to find out how far American medicine falls behind in its services to the great American public." But the AMA still prefers to distract attention from the weaknesses of American medicine by hammering away at Britain's NHS.

An AMA leaflet entitled "A Case Against Socialized Medicine" is one of its propaganda efforts against the King-Anderson bill for the medical care of the aged. It consists of some 20 or so quotations from different sources, two of them from the BMJ and three cartoons, of which by now, we hope, the AMA is heartily ashamed.

We do not recall that those who favored the introduction of the NHS buttressed their case by distorted propaganda against such abuses as American doctors themselves have admitted—fee-splitting, over-charging, unnecessary operations, sending patients to "physician-owned drug stores," and so forth. We would not suggest that such abuses, and other disquieting aspects of what is in the U.S.A. called the "doctor business," call for such a violent corrective as "socialized medicine"—a term whose exact meaning no one has yet defined.

THE AMA SHOULD, however, in the interests of American medicine—and especially in the interests of the American patient—understand that they have a lot to learn from Britain and Europe about methods of providing medical services—from our successes as well as our failures.

"If the AMA have any regard for the truth," says The Times [of London] "they should put the record straight: the American people should know that far from being a failure the British service can be counted a qualified success."

The AMA, too, should not be led astray by a British characteristic—the capacity for self-criticism. Some of the most trenchant criticism of the NHS was embodied in the concluding part of the BMA Presidential Address given by Sir Arthur Porritt at Torquay in 1960. The report of his committee should be out this autumn. The BMJ too, has been outspoken—though maybe not outspoken enough—in its criticism of the NHS, for it is only exact diagnosis of illness or defect that can point the way to effective treatment.

The AMA mistakes such criticism as a total condemnation of the NHS—and the adulators of the NHS in Britain mistake such criticism as a weakening of it. Both are wrong.

The AMA will, we hope, take what we say as the expression of a journal which has many friends and readers in a great country which has made great contributions to the art and science of medicine. It is a country, too, which, in the Veterans Administration, has an advanced form of socialized medicine. So let it measure itself against itself.

"Oh, no, you aren't keeping us from a thing."

Morgan Says:

Kennedy Needs Another Telstar To Communicate with Congress

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

MAYBE PRES. KENNEDY needs another Telstar to help him communicate with Congress. At his news conference, which for the first time in history was transmitted by instantaneous TV to Europe, the President noted that the communication satellite had to be high enough so images could move long distances in both directions. He has been moving messages to Capitol Hill all during this last session of the 87th Congress and results so far indicate that he has failed to register a substantial impact. His television projection to the Old World was a breeze compared to the manner in which he has been getting through to the legislators.

Morgan

Significantly enough, the President gave every indication not only that he was fully aware of this frustrating situation but that he intended to do something about it between now and November. Some of his friendlier critics have complained that he has been too nice, that he has been trying to be all things to all men with inauspicious results and that therefore he must fight more agressively and openly for his program. The White House had already indicated that he would take an active part in the fall campaign but there seemed to be more of a cutting edge to his own remarks on politics.

Asked to comment on the 10-point drop in his popularity that Dr. Gallup had found in the Middle West, Mr. Kennedy answered the question aggressively by predicting that his stock would "probably drop some more," indicating, presumably, that he was more interested in his program than his personal popularity and was going to do battle for it. He would not say that he intended to take reprisals against Democrats who did not support him, emphasizing instead that he would back those who did.

If the President does take the issues to the country vigorously, as Harry Truman did with such unexpected results in 1948, it will indeed be a departure from the Kennedy stance toward Congress so far. His patient, respect-for-his-elders approach simply has not paid off on the Hill. Furthermore it was not characteristic of the aggressive image he had built up during the 1960 campaign or, for that matter, of his resolute stand against Khrushchev's threats.

Still it remains to be seen whether the President can reverse the odds now against him, especially in the House. His troubles stem in part from that election of 1960 when 21 Democratic congressmen lost their seats to Republicans while John F. Kennedy was winning the presidency by one of the narrowest margins in history. The President himself noted that only twice since the Civil War has a party controlling the White House increased its strength in Congress in mid-term elections. (The first instance was in 1902 and the second during the Roosevelt New Deal in 1934.)

In early spring there was bold talk of the possibility of significant Democratic gains in both houses, but that was before the White House collision with Big Steel, the ensuing bitter dialogue with business, the frightening crack in the stock market and fears of another recession. The President seemed almost wistful when he mentioned that five seats in the House could make all the difference between failure and success of his program, and he wasn't at all sure that they could be won.

THE GREAT IMPONDERABLE in this picture, of course, is the electorate itself. If the reactions the Gallup pollsters found in the Midwest could be projected as typical of the nation at large, the New Frontier would be in dire straits for sure but the Midwest is not necessarily typical of the rest of the country. Or is it? The Republican strategy seems to indicate that if it isn't, it can be made to be.

Of course the Republican hierarchy itself doesn't speak with one voice—as witness Sen. Goldwater's angry growls of disapproval over the recent action at Gen. Eisenhower's farm, to establish an All-Republican Conference and a National Republican Citizens Committee. The precise functions of these bodies are not yet clear but obviously the senator from Arizona thought they posed a threat to classic GOP conservatism—which hasn't succeeded in dominating the party nationally since the days of Herbert Hoover.

One thing is sure. Neither party contributes to the welfare of the country simply by opposing. New measures, new methods must be proposed to deal with our multiplying problems. Science is outrunning politics as the exciting shots of live TV from Europe proved on American screens. But there are factions in both parties who insist that 19th century government is good enough for the age that Telstar shines upon. They are tragically and completely wrong.

Washington Reports:

Discrimination Against Women Seen Even in Tax Rulings

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN in employment opportunities and wages, in the military, in property rights, in taxation and in other ways are being studied by the President's Commission on the Status of Women, two congressional commission members reported in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Sen. Maurine Neuberger (D-Ore.), chairman of the commission's Committee on Social Insurance and Taxation, pointed out that a businessman can charge off golf club dues if he can show he uses the club to sell clients, while a woman who has to work cannot charge off household help or the cost of putting her children in day care centers.

Sen. George D. Aiken (R-Vt.) pointed out that discrimination extends to the Armed Forces. "There can be but one colonel in the Women's Army Corps, the commander," he noted. "At the expiration of her term, she's downgraded to lieutenant colonel. On the other hand, men officers are often promoted just before they retire."

Aiken said the Armed Services, whose attention was called to this situation, promised to make changes, but "if they don't do something before we get around to our final report, I would be in favor of taking stronger measures."

MRS. NEUBERGER SAID that women friends who have children in college have gone back to work, some as school teachers, to pay the cost of the youngsters' education, but that hiring a housekeeper and sometimes a governess for the smaller children—without the costs being deductible—often fails to make the net return worth while.

"There is probably greater discrimination against women employes in the federal government than anywhere else," Aiken asserted. "That's traditional. It didn't start with the present Administration, but I would like to see the present Administration do something about it."

In the government's three top grades, the policy grades, he said, there are only 18 or 19 women among some 1,500 appointees.

Mrs. Neuberger said that Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., had promised to "take a look at this situation," and has begun "to make some changes in it." She said no legislation may be necessary for the commission to get results in this and other fields.

Meanwhile, Pres. Kennedy had himself taken action. The President issued an executive order overruling a 1934 opinion of the attorney general and directing that federal appointments and promotions be made "without regard to sex except in unusual situations."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

JUST WHAT FORM of state legislative reapportionment will finally be shown acceptable to the United States Supreme Court under the constitution remains uncertain at present. It seems scarcely possible, however, that the pattern of state legislative change will not have some effect on the makeup of the U.S. House of Representatives—and the need for a change is almost continually made evident.

Rigid control of state legislatures by a rural and small town minority has led to gerrymandering of the districts in the U.S. House, so that a rural minority is also in control there. The desires and needs of the great majority in urban and suburban areas are diluted by under-representation. And it is this fact, added to the seniority rules, that makes possible the domination of the House by a conservative Republican-southern Democratic coalition.

The coalition's leaders are fond of saying that the committee system and seniority system cannot block passage of any bill a majority of the House genuinely desires to pass.

This is true only to a limited degree—for the Rules Committee, for example, can enforce delays that tend to take the steam out of a drive for legislation and compel compromises. It can gauge the timing of votes so that the coalition is at the peak of its strength. And the coalition has more votes than the rural minority is entitled to in a house supposed to be based on population.

* * *

STATE AND FEDERAL courts have issued decisions in regard to state reapportionment that differ widely from each other.

In Maryland an appellate court has ruled that the state senate can remain based largely on mere geographical area rather than bear a reasonable relationship to population. In Michigan the state supreme court has declared that a state senate based on geography alone is unconstitutional.

In other states the court rulings have been less sweeping, and all of them are subject to appeal.

The undoubted fact, however, is that things are happening since the landmark decision of the U.S. Supreme Court declaring that in Tennessee a federal court had authority to consider an attack on an unfairly apportioned state legislature, and to grant relief.

As the cases spread from state to state, judicial decrees are being framed to meet the Supreme Court's decision that citizens are entitled to equal protection of the laws in the voting booths. And as the binding precedents are set, the way will be open for a test in the courts of whether a rural gerrymander of the districts of the U.S. House is not itself subject to attack as a denial of equal protection of the laws.

* * *

WHAT THIS COULD MEAN is shown in the record of legislation this year.

The health care bill failed in the Senate to a considerable degree because the program had been refused committee approval for a House rollcall test. The Administration's farm bill lost by only two votes. Other measures have been blocked by one or two votes in committee or narrow margins on rollcalls.

It was perfectly clear immediately after the 1960 election that the loss of 21 northern Democratic House seats to northern Republicans, mostly from rural areas in the Midwest, would strengthen the conservative coalition in the 87th Congress.

It is equally clear that the coalition derives a good deal of its strength from the fact that city voters—who make up nearly 70 percent of our people—are denied equitable representation in the House. The court tests now going on should contribute to restoring equity, and to building a more responsive government.

TAX, MINIMUM WAGE and other special laws may be needed to end some cases of discrimination against women, Sen. George D. Aiken (R-Vt.), left, and Sen. Maurine Neuberger (D-Ore.), both members of the President's Commission on the Status of Women, asserted in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

House Told Labor Backs Purchase of UN Bonds

Soviet efforts "to sap the power and paralyze the effectiveness" of the United Nations have been cited by the AFL-CIO in a letter urging House approval of a Senate-passed bill authorizing purchase of up to $100 million of UN bonds.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said labor "enthusiastically endorses" the bond purchase bill in order to preserve the UN "as an effective working body."

He wrote Chairman Thomas E. Morgan (D-Pa.) of the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the AFL-CIO considers a strong UN "imperative" to protect and extend "fundamental human rights." He urged the committee, which has been holding hearings on the measure, to report the bill "and to lead the House in passing it with an overwhelming majority."

Meany Sees Peru Coup As Danger to Unionism

(Continued from Page 1)

tanks and place Prado under arrest.

Denuniciation of the military's seizure of power was added by spokesmen for international free labor.

Arturo Jauregui, general secretary of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), repudiated the junta's attempt "to destroy the constitutional regime and nullify the results of the free elections" won by democratic candidates.

The effect of the seizure of power, he warned, would be to open the gate to "the unholy alliance of the Communists and ultra-conservatives" and destroy all hopes of the Peruvian people for political freedom and economic justice.

Jauregui, at present visiting the United States, is a Peruvian citizen.

A statement by Wallace J. Legge, inter-American representative of the Postal Telegraph and Telephone Intl., a trade secretariat representing free trade unions in 23 nations, charged the army junta with a clear "threat to the free democratic trade union movement."

Newsmen Protest

If the junta expects freedom of communication with the outside world, Legge said, "it must respect the freedom of association" for workers guaranteed under conventions of the Intl. Labor Organization.

The Inter-American Federation of Working Newspapermen's Organizations protested the junta's interference with press freedom and its arrest of journalists.

Steel Union, Indiana U. Launch Labor College

Pittsburgh—The first "labor college" with full academic standing in the United States will be launched at Indiana University in September 1963 under a joint program announced by the Steelworkers and the university.

The residential labor education program at the Bloomington campus will be limited at first to one semester of study with credit toward a degree program but the ultimate goal is to offer an entirely new degree in trade union affairs.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald hailed the project as a "giant step forward in the development of trade union education" in this country.

The plan was drawn up by Dir. James Robb of USWA Dist. 30; Emery F. Bacon, head of the union's education department, and trustees of Dist. 30's education fund. The district has allocated $10,000 from the fund to help launch the project and has offered additional funds. The university has agreed to help provide professional instruction.

Four basic aims of the program are to provide opportunities for union executive development, improve the quality of union leadership, encourage individual self-development and insure advancement opportunities for able men.

For the first two years, participation will be limited chiefly to Steelworkers selected by the district office.

A "core course" of trade union studies will cover 13 hours a week, four of which will be in the humanities. Another five hours will be devoted to tutorial study under the individual guidance of a faculty member in any field offered by the university.

The Indiana project is the latest in a series of educational programs sponsored by the union almost since its founding. Currently, some 75,000 USWA members a year take non-credit residential and extension courses.

Stove Union Votes Boost In Per Capita

St. Louis—Delegates to the Stove Mounters 32nd convention voted an increase of 50 cents in monthly dues, established a building fund for the union's international headquarters here and re-elected Pres. James M. Roberts, Sec.-Treas. Edward W. Kaiser and all other officers.

In other major actions, the convention called for repeal of the Landrum-Griffin Act, supported the Kennedy Administration's proposal for social security health insurance for the aged, urged improvement in other social security benefits, and endorsed an intensified education program to promote the union label.

The 130 delegates and guests heard Commissioner John L. Holcombe of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports praise the "great bulk of organized labor" for its cooperation with the bureau. Holcombe lauded the AFL-CIO for supporting higher appropriations to finance the bureau's technical assistance to unions.

Other convention speakers included Richard T. Leonard, assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; C. H. Heasley of the Treasury Dept.'s Savings Bonds Div.; and A. E. Johnson of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

From Latin America, Caribbean:

Meany Welcomes Trainees To First Development Class

Labor in the United States recognizes that it cannot mantain a high wage economy "isolated" from conditions of workers in the rest of the world, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told 43 young trade union leaders from Latin America and the Caribbean islands, members of the first class at the new American Institute for Free Labor Development.

Meany, welcoming the group on its visit to AFL-CIO headquarters, said the "only condition" placed on the training they are receiving through the institute is that they use their knowledge and skills "to advance the interests of the workers" in their home countries.

The AFL-CIO, he emphasized, has no desire to "impose" its own structure of trade union organization on other nations which may have different problems and different economies. U.S. labor, he declared, asks only that unions in developing nations be "the property of the workers" and not "owned" by any company, government or "small political group."

Two spokesmen for the trainees—one from the Spanish-speaking goup and the other from the English-speaking section—responded to Meany's welcome with expressions of pride in having been selected for the training program and determination to share their training with their fellow workers on their return.

Meany told the group that U.S. labor's support of free trade unionism in other countries is based both on the "humanitarian" concept of the "fraternal brotherhood of workers all over the world" and the "selfish" realization that union-won conditions are threatened everywhere when workers "anywhere in the world are not free to organize."

He said the free trade union movement offers the best way of building "dynamic economies" in Latin America and the Caribbean area. Only unions, he emphasized, can create needed mass purchasing power.

"We don't believe workers get better wages because an employer decides it would be good," he commented.

In presenting the trainees to Meany, AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi predicted that members of the class will "deeply influence the future of the labor movement" in the western hemisphere.

Romualdi is executive director of the institute, which combines a three-month training program in the U.S. with a nine-month "internship" during which participants are able to devote their full time to trade union work in their home countries.

Also taking part in the program was AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, secretary-treasurer of the institute, which is a joint project of the AFL-CIO and a group of U.S. business and civic leaders. J. Peter Grace, president of W. R. Grace & Co., is president and chairman of the 24-member board of trustees. Meany is vice chairman.

Potters Convention Hits at 'Work' Laws

San Francisco—The Operative Potters took a slap at so-called "right-to-work" laws at their 68th annual convention here by unanimously canceling their previous vote to hold the next international gathering in Nevada, one of the handful of right-to-work states.

In a rush of late session business, the delegates had chosen Las Vegas as the 1963 convention city. Apprised on the next day that Nevada has a "work" law, hampering unions' activities to improve wages and conditions, the 196 delegates voted unanimously to place the choice of next year's convention city in the hands of the international executive board, with the proviso that no "right-to-work" area be picked.

In other action, the Potters urged intensified support for COPE and for major AFL-CIO legislative aims, and upheld the union's program of consolidating strength at the local level to meet the problems of ceramic industry workers. Action for labor-supported legislation plus backing of voting registration and COPE contribution campaigns was taken in acceptance of the report of Pres. E. L. Wheatley.

Wheatley reaffirmed the union's opposition to Pres. Kennedy's proposal to broaden the tariff-cutting powers of the executive branch of government. He said there is already serious competition by foreign ceramic products, with accompanying substantial reduction in employment in the domestic industry.

The AFL-CIO convention last December strongly endorsed the Kennedy program for broadening exports and imports by negotiated lower tariffs.

A major floor discussion centered on a proposed constitutional amendment to remove the executive board's authority to consolidate local unions of fewer than 100 members. The amendment failed to receive the necessary two-thirds vote.

Guest speakers included Executive Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts of the California State AFL-CIO, Sec. George W. Johns of the San Francisco Labor Council, and Bricklayers Pres. John J. Murphy. All stressed the vital importance of labor political action.

California, where labor is supporting the re-election campaign of liberal Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D) against the challenge of defeated Republican-Presidential Candidate Richard M. Nixon, is a major 1962 political battleground, Pitts and Johns told the convention.

Murphy noted the recent defeat of Kennedy's compromise health care bill in the Senate and contrasted organized medicine's furious letter-writing campaign against the bill with indications that too many working people failed to take the time to write Congress in support of it.

Wayne Scott Named Woodworkers' Editor

Portland, Ore.—Wayne A. Scott, a member of the staff of the Portland Reporter, has been appointed editor of the Intl. Woodworker, semi-monthly official publication of the Woodworkers.

Scott succeeds Phil Frost in the editor's chair. He had been on the staff of the Portland Reporter since that newspaper was established in February 1960 during the strike of several unions against the Oregonian and the Oregon Journal.

YOUNG TRADE UNION LEADERS from the Caribbean area and Latin America, attending the first training course of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, are welcomed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany during a visit to the AFL-CIO headquarters. Seated next to Meany is AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, secretary-treasurer of the institute's board of trustees. Standing, right, is AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi, executive director of the institute.

Courts Goad Legislatures:

City-Dwellers Gain In Redistricting

The nation's city-dwellers, almost without exception denied proportionate representation in state legislatures, have won a new series of victories stemming from the U.S. Supreme Court's decision last April on legislative reapportionment.

In fast-moving developments:

● Florida Gov. Farris Bryant (D) called a special session of the legislature for Aug. 1 after a three-judge federal panel ruled that the present apportionment was unfair to urban areas and unconstitutional.

The court, calling for action by Aug. 13, noted that Florida's five most populous counties average one representative in the House for each 106,000 people, while the five least populous counties have one representative for each 3,266 persons. It said a similar disparity exists in the State Senate.

If the state fails to act "with that dispatch which the urgency of the matter requires," the court said, then "reapportionment by judicial decree would be required."

● A federal court in Alabama rejected as inadequate two reapportionment measures recently enacted by the legislature which would not take effect until 1966. As an interim step, the court ordered key provisions of the plan to go into effect immediately but retained jurisdiction until the new legislature to be elected in November has had "an opportunity to provide for a true reapportionment." Under the interim plan, Jefferson County—the state's largest—will have 17 House members instead of seven, and Mobile County's delegation will be raised from three to eight.

● The Rhode Island Supreme Court ruled that a proposed constitutional amendment to increase the size of the House from 100 to 125 members would not meet the legislature's obligation to reapportion the House on the basis of the 1960 census. Gov. John A. Notte, Jr. (D) promptly called the legislature into special session.

● A federal court in Georgia ordered the legislature to reapportion before January or have the court do it. The decision, expected to bring a special session, declared that "unless at least one house of the Georgia legislature is reconstituted according to population by January 1963, no legally constituted legislature of the State of Georgia can thereafter be in existence."

Two other developments indicated that the U.S. Supreme Court will finally settle the dispute over whether one house of a legislature can be apportioned on a basis other than population.

The Maryland Court of Appeals upheld, 4-3, the present rural domination of the Senate, declaring that reapportionment of the House had adequately protected constitutional rights of city-dwellers.

Three Republican state senators in Michigan petitioned for a stay of the order of the Michigan Supreme Court requiring either reapportionment of the Senate by Aug. 20 or the election of all members of the Senate at-large in November. They asked that no action be taken until their appeal has been considered by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The reapportionment situation in Wisconsin remained in a judicial tangle as a federal court master—appointed by a three-judge court to draw up a plan to reapportion both legislative and congressional districts—reported that he did not consider reapportionment necessary. He said, however, that if the judges disagree with his findings, he will submit a plan for immediate reapportionment.

Earlier, after the federal court had ordered the legislature to enact "fair and constitutional" redistricting laws, the Republican-controlled legislature had enacted two bills vetoed by Gov. Gaylord Nelson (D), who called them "a shameful partisan gerrymander."

Nelson said in his veto message that the GOP plan would have given Republican Waukesha County two aditional assemblymen for its 72,000 gain in population since 1950, but would have given no additional seats to normally Democratic Milwaukee County, which had grown 165,000 in population.

TYPICAL OF UNION-SPONSORED summer schools now in full swing throughout the nation is this discussion group on the West Virginia University campus, part of a week-long institute sponsored by the State AFL-CIO. Stanley Hostler, head of the university's Labor Education Service, is shown leading a session on the importance of social legislation to the labor movement.

Labor's Role In ARA Aired At Institute

Morgantown, W. Va.—A one-week Summer Labor Institute, held at West Virginia University here under the sponsorship of the State AFL-CIO, launched a new four-year education program keyed to the theme of Labor and the Community.

Forty-four students, representing 21 local unions and labor councils, attended courses dealing with community relations, social legislation, politics and the structure of the labor movement.

Instructors included Gus Tyler, education director of the Ladies' Garment Workers; Otto Pragan of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education; Herbert Levine, chairman of Rutgers University's labor program, and Stanley Hostler, director of labor education at the host West Virginia University.

A special feature of the program was a discussion of the state's economy and labor's role in helping to implement the Area Redevelopment Act. Participants in the discussion included State AFL-CIO Pres. Miles Stanley, Frank Fernbach of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research and experts from the university and the Area Redevelopment Administration.

A rotating series of courses is planned for the four-summer series, with special recognition accorded to students who complete all four programs.

Affiliates of AFL-CIO Triumph in Postal Vote

(Continued from Page 1)

Dept. In addition, the union won bargaining rights for special delivery messengers in three regions and polled a number of votes in ballots cast by employes in other crafts.

● The Postal Clerks won exclusive national recognition for 240,500 clerks and majorities in 14 of the 15 regions. The UFPOC received 119,663 of the 183,508 ballots cast in its unit. In the New York region, it shares a lesser degree of recognition—known as "formal" recognition—with the unaffiliated National Postal Union.

● The Motor Vehicle Employes won the right to represent the 8,900 workers in its craft, polling 3,555 out of 5,730 votes cast and winning 13 regions.

● The Special Delivery Messengers won national recognition for a unit of 4,000, tallying 1,731 of 3,090 votes and carrying 11 regions.

The only craft where no single union won a nationwide majority was among mail handlers, where the AFL-CIO affiliate led with 8,217 out of 18,906 votes cast and won exclusive recognition in four regions.

Two unaffiliated organizations, both long established in their fields, won national bargaining rights. They were the Rural Letter Carriers, which also gained regional rights in a unit of 29,000, and the Post Office Maintenance Employes, which won national rights for 17,000 workers and carried 11 regions.

Although the count of ballots marked "no union" had not been completed as the AFL-CIO News went to press, a Post Office spokesman described the number as "negligible." An earlier complete tabulation of returns from big city post offices showed only a 1 percent "no union" vote.

Letter Carriers Pres. William C. Doherty said he was "delighted at the landslide vote" his union had received and "deeply impressed by the confidence in us" by letter carriers and other postal workers who voted for the NALC. He praised Pres. Kennedy, "whose executive order [on union recognition] made the whole thing possible," and the Post Office Dept. for its conduct of the election.

Hallbeck Sees 'New Era'

Pres. E. C. Hallbeck of the Postal Clerks hailed the election as "opening a new era of collective bargaining" and demonstrating "very emphatically" that postal workers favor unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO.

Still to be tabulated are local collective bargaining determinations for individual post offices. The rules of the unique election make it possible for one union to bargain nationally for all workers in its unit on working conditions and rules, another union to represent workers in whatever matters are determined by regional negotiations, and a third to hold limited local rights. In most cases, however, workers will be represented by the same union.

National negotiations will be completed before lower-level talks are begun, and nothing negotiated at a lower level can contradict terms of national agreements.

A further series of elections will be held early this fall for headquarters employes and workers in mail equipment shops.

Terry Hails Morgan Talk On Dental Ills

Edward P. Morgan's recent warning, on one of his AFL-CIO-sponsored ABC radio programs, that "the United States is fast becoming a nation of dental cripples," won special commendation from Dr. Luther Terry, surgeon general of the United States.

Morgan stressed "frightening" statistics about the condition of dental health and focused attention on fluoridation of water supplies as a partial solution. He said there were 700 million cavities in the country and 300 million teeth that needed to be pulled.

"The way you presented the problem and the means of control was clear, concise and very much to the point," Terry wrote Morgan.

Saskatchewan Doctors End 23-Day Rebellion

(Continued from Page 1)

and brazen defiance of constituted authority."

Lord Taylor, one of the architects of the British National Health Service who had come here as an adviser to the government, helped mediate the dispute and announced the settlement.

Lloyd agreed to call a special session of the provincial legislature to enact agreed-upon amendments to the Medical Care Insurance Act.

While exact details of the amendments were not announced, major changes grant the doctors the right to practice outside the plan and specify that patients may choose their own doctors. The latter provision already had been granted by government order, but the doctors insisted that it be written into the legislation.

Both choices are allowed under the British National Health Service, upon which the Saskatchewan plan is modeled.

If a patient chooses a doctor who insists on payment of a fee, the patient would be reimbursed by the government Medical Care Commission.

Another key modification would allow non-profit private health insurance plans to take part, serving as collection and payment agencies.

The changes were designed to meet objections of the doctors that the Medical Care Insurance Act, as drawn, would have made the government their sole source of income and that they would thus become "servants of the state and not servants of the patients."

The provincial medical care plan is financed by premiums of $12 a year for individuals and $24 a year for families, plus a part of sales taxes and a small portion of income taxes. Total payment each year will range from $40 for a family with income of $3,000 to $100 for a family with income of $7,000 annually.

For the past five years, Canada has had government-sponsored hospitalization insurance on a national basis.

Gorman Named to Israeli Tourist Board

New York—Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the Meat Cutters has been elected to the board of directors of the Israel Tourist Industry Development Corp. (TIDC), the company's U.S. representative, the Amibec Corp., has announced.

A spokesman said Gorman was named to the board "in recognition of past assistance and interest by him and the U.S. labor movement" in Israel. TIDC is a government-sponsored agency set up to stimulate Israeli enterprises catering to tourists.

Stamp Marks Birthdate Of Apprenticeship Act

A U.S. commemorative stamp marking the 25th anniversary of the National Apprenticeship Act will be issued Aug. 31, with first-day ceremonies in Washington, D. C.

The issuance also will climax National Apprenticeship Month, designated for August by Pres. Kennedy, who cited the need for broadening the versatility and increasing the competence of skilled craftsmen "as America moves deeper into the challenging era of the space age and the expanding economy that will accompany it."

Under the Apprenticeship Act, the Labor Dept. joined organized labor and management in sponsoring training programs that have since converted millions of young workers into skilled journeymen in 375 crafts.

The 4-cent, horizontal stamp, in black on buff, depicts a gnarled hand offering a micrometer to an outstretched young hand, symbolizing the transfer of skills and the precision training of many crafts.

By using the micrometer as the focal point of the design, Artist Robert Geissman unknowingly paid tribute to a former machinist who first proposed the stamp—Warren I. Cassidy, Idaho state supervisor for the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.

Collectors desiring first-day cancellations may send addressed envelopes, with remittance to cover the cost of stamps to be affixed, to the Postmaster, Washington, D. C., no later than Aug. 31. An enclosure of medium weight should be placed in each envelope and the flap either turned in or sealed. Each envelope must be marked, in pencil, in the upper right corner indicating the number of stamps to be affixed (singles, pairs, blocks, etc.).

The outside envelope to the postmaster should be clearly marked "First Day Apprenticeship Stamp." Orders for first-day covers must not include requests for uncanceled stamps.

Labor Views Supported:

Hikes for Low-Paid U.S. Workers Backed

Top-ranking members of the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee voiced strong agreement with an AFL-CIO statement urging substantial pay raises for lower-paid federal employes as hearings concluded on salary legislation.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller pointed out that the 14 percent increase backed by affiliated postal and federal employe unions would "give a boost to our sagging economy by raising the purchasing power of low and middle-income families."

He urged the committee "to consider not only the justice of a federal pay raise, but also the good effect such a pay raise will have on our national economy."

Committee Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D-S.C.) commended Biemiller for an "excellent" statement, noted that "the ordinary working man" spends virtually every cent he makes, and said he agrees more with the views expressed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany on the need for substantial raises for all grades of federal workers than with the Administration position that the greatest percentage increases should go to higher-paid groups.

Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) noted that "economic necessity" will "force" low-paid workers to spend their added income "at the grocery store, at the drug store, at the appliance store." He added:

"As that money turns over, it will create jobs and employment at many different levels . . . and would certainly stimulate business, trade and employment."

Biemiller declared that the AFL-CIO supports large salary increases for the higher grades of government in order "to recruit and retain high-caliber personnel for top level scientific, professional and management positions."

He emphasized, however, that "the lower-paid postal workers and the lower-grade classified workers have an equal right to fair treatment." For the average federal worker, Biemiller said, "the pay raises proposed by the Administration would be too little and too late."

As the Senate committee completed its public hearings on pay legislation and a House-passed bill to raise postage rates, the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee continued to work on a pay bill in closed session.

Under consideration were a number of proposed compromises between the original Administration proposal for staggered increases beginning next January and bills providing a greater immediate pay raise.

40-Hours Bill Passed, Sent to White House

(Continued from Page 1)

en in the federal civil service, both in appointment to government jobs and in promotions.

In other congressional developments:

- The House Rules Committee took up a $900 million public works bill which had been bottled up for nearly two months, but defered final action on the labor-backed bill for at least 10 days. House leaders had hoped to be able to bring the measure—regarded as a major stimulant to the economy—to an early vote.

Last May, the Senate passed a $750 million public works bill which contained authority for an additional $750 million to be appropriated the following year if unemployment rises. The House committee bill provides no standby authority, but authorizes a larger amount for immediate spending on needed, job-creating projects.

- The Administration won a first-round victory as Congress sent to the White House a $4.7 billion foreign aid authorization bill, but there were signs of a harder fight over actual appropriation of money. Rep. Otto E. Passman (D-La.), chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee that will handle the spending bill, has called for a $2 billion slash.

On the authorization bill, House-Senate conferees eliminated a series of restrictive amendments opposed by the Administration. Dropped from the bill on final passage were a House restriction on purchase of United Nations bonds; a Senate ban on aid, other than surplus food, to Poland and Yugoslavia, and a Senate limit on aid to India. The conference report was adopted 56-27 by the Senate and 221-162 by the House.

- The House Ways & Means Committee has launched closed-door "exploratory hearings" on a tax cut. The committee plans to question top Administration officials and representatives of business, labor and farm groups. The attitude of Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), who has been cool towards a tax cut this year, is expected to have a major bearing on whether Pres. Kennedy decides to recommend an immediate cut in taxes.

Hearings 'Useful'

It was Mills who proposed the exploratory hearings, which Pres. Kennedy said at a news conference would be "useful." The President said he wanted to see the economic reports for July before deciding whether to ask for a tax cut.

- Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) told newsmen after a White House meeting that Congress will stay on the job "as long as necessary to pass as much of the President's program as possible."

- A House Banking subcommittee unanimously approved a labor-backed bill, sponsored by Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.), to expand government housing assistance to elderly persons through low-interest loans and mortgage insurance.

- The House Post Office & Civil Service Committee was reported in near-agreement on a pay bill for government employes which would provide a higher raise over a shorter period than the Administration had proposed for postal and lower-grade classified workers.

Sen. Dworshak Dies; In Congress 24 Years

Sen. Henry C. Dworshak, conservative Idaho Republican and a veteran of 24 years in House and Senate, died July 23 at the age of 67. His death temporarily reduces the Senate GOP ranks to 35, although Idaho Gov. Robert E. Smylie (R) is expected to name a Republican to succeed him.

Dworshak's death means that Idaho voters will elect two senators in November. Sen. Frank Church (D) is running for re-election and both parties are scheduled to name candidates to fill out the four remaining years of Dworshak's term.

TRADE EXPANSION BILL will aid the cause of world freedom and help stimulate U.S. economic growth if its adjustment safeguards are retained, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the Senate Finance Committee in urging approval of the House-passed measure. Meany was accompanied by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, left, and Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg.

Meany Tells Senate Trade Bill Is 'Basic' in Fight for Freedom

(Continued from Page 1)

strengthen the unity of the free world and promote the cause of democracy" in developing countries and "will stimulate the economic growth of the United States—if the safeguards provided by the bill are retained."

His recent trip to Europe, Meany said, had made his "sense of urgency" about the bill "infinitely greater."

'. . . Tangible Barrier'

"I have been to Berlin," he said. "I have seen that 'Wall of Shame'—a wall that is not merely a symbol, but a real and tangible barrier to men who aspire to freedom.

"I am more convinced than ever that the salvation of the free world depends upon the continuation and expansion of our trade with Western Europe and with the other democracies. We must forge by free choice the economic unity the Communists impose by edict. We can do it, and—unlike the Communists—still preserve the autonomy, the independence, of each participating partner."

While the trade bill will prove beneficial to union members in this country—"if, as we believe, trade expansion will mean job expansion"—labor's support of the bill is based not on "any narrow hope of gain," but on a "reasoned, dispassionate analysis of the national interest," Meany declared.

He pointed out that adequate tariff arrangements with the Common Market are desirable in the hope of expanding our exports there and essential to hold on to the market we now have.

"Unless this country is able to negotiate favorable terms when the Common Market is fully achieved, we will lose much or all of our present export trade in that area," he said. "Almost a third of all American exports go to western Europe; and that involves a third of the 3 million American jobs that depend on exports. So the immediate issue is not 10 million television sets, some day, but 1 million jobs in the very near future."

With trade expansion will come a corresponding rise in imports, Meany acknowledged, and this will mean loss of jobs for some American workers and the contraction or collapse of some business enterprises, even though trade itself may create a far greater number of jobs elsewhere and open up many more business opportunities.

Safeguards Against Loss

"The workers, the businessmen and the communities that suffer from these losses cannot reasonably be expected to endure them, quietly and cheerfully, on the grounds that they are advancing the greatest good of the greatest number," he declared. "And it is not in the national interest that they should do so. Unemployment and loss of business are no less damaging just because they stem from a worthy undertaking."

The trade adjustment features of the bill, he observed, will soften the impact of increased imports and help the government meet its responsibilities to those affected by the national policy.

"Trade adjustment is a positive approach to the domestic problems created by foreign trade," he said. "It can make it possible for the United States to meet the vital need for trade expansion, and at the same time insure the domestic economy against crippling damage."

The special adjustment allowances proposed in the bill would give workers made jobless by a rise in imports 65 percent of average wages for up to 52 weeks, with an additional 13 weeks for those over age 60. Workers taking retraining under the measure would receive up to 78 weeks of benefits.

In addition, businesses hard-pressed by import competition would be eligible for tax relief, guaranteed loans and technical assistance in adjusting to the change. If adjustment assistance alone is not enough, the President would have the power to invoke "extraordinary relief" in the form of higher tariffs or other import restrictions—in effect, the old "escape clause" mechanism in a new form.

Many Witnesses Scheduled

The Finance Committee, headed by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), has listed well over 100 witnesses on trade—a schedule which may extend the hearings for a month or more.

Meany confined his personal testimony to a summary of the AFL-CIO position and filed with the committee a comprehensive technical analysis of the bill.

Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald also filed a statement supporting the measure and analyzing the effect of employment costs on steel exports and imports.

On balance, McDonald said, steel from the United States "is—or, at the discretion of our producers, can be—competitive with that of foreign countries."

The USWA president said he had a special interest in the adjustment features of the measure because they were in line with suggestions he had made nearly 10 years ago as a member of the Randall Commission.

Fake Ad Solicitors Hit in New Jersey

Newark—Sec.-Treas. Charles H. Marciante of the New Jersey State AFL-CIO has warned businessmen of the state to be on guard against "phony solicitors" using the AFL-CIO's name and threatening "labor trouble" in seeking advertisements in non-existent publications.

Official publications of the federation carry no advertising and no one is authorized to solicit ads in the name of the State AFL-CIO, Marciante emphasized. Anyone who does so, he said, should be reported immediately to the police. He said that the state federation is compiling evidence for prosecution of a ring of such solicitors operating in the state.

SEG, Paramount Agree in Hawaii

Kauai, Hawaii—The Screen Extras Guild and Paramount Pictures have reached agreement on a contract providing substantial wage increases for motion picture extra players employed in the islands.

Effective July 21, the basic minimum rate is $24.26 for an eight-hour day with overtime paid in two-hour units. A novel contract feature is a "preference of employment" clause for experienced extras registered with Paramount's casting agency under which separate job preference will be given registrants on each Hawaiian Island.

Present for negotiations were SEG Pres. Jeffrey Sayre, Executive Sec. H. O'Neil Shanks and Robert W. Gilbert, counsel.

7-28-62

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, August 4, 1962 | No. 31

Jobless Rate 5.3% for July; Meany Urges Tax Cut Now

TEN TRAPPIST MONKS at the Abbey of Our Lady of Guadalupe near Lafayette, Ore., are shown as they took the obligation as members of Millmen's Local 1120, a unit of the Carpenters, from Business Rep. Peter Beach (left). The monks are skillled cabinetmakers who turn out church furniture which in the future will carry the union label. (See story, Page 3.)

Says Spark Needed for Recovery

New York—The nation needs the economic "shot in the arm" of an immediate tax cut in the lower brackets to forestall a new recession, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in an interview on the CBS television program, At the Source.

He noted that the "upward trend" of recovery has been progressively shorter after each postwar recession and that the pickup from the 1960-61 slump is no exception.

"It's quite obvious that we're running to the end of this upward trend," Meany observed. "This looks as if it will die by October of this year, or November, and then we're liable to go into another recession."

To combat a new downturn, the AFL-CIO has advocated a tax cut that will add to purchasing power and thus stimulate consumption, the AFL-CIO president observed.

He recalled that the federation had proposed an across-the-board forgiveness of $10 a week for 10 weeks in each individual's withholding taxes whenever unemployment remains high, an approach that would pump an estimated $5 billion into the spending stream over the period.

Goes into Economy

"The lower bracket people spend whatever they get," he said. "If they get an extra $100 over a period of 10 weeks, that money will go into the economy."

Alternative approaches that labor has supported, he noted, include either an increase in the $600 personal exemption or a reduction

(Continued on Page 8)

Slight Dip From June Reported

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's rate of unemployment declined to 5.3 percent in July from June's 5.5 percent, the Labor Dept. has announced.

This is the lowest jobless rate since mid-1960, when the economy began its slide into the 1960-61 recession. It represents only a slight change, however, from the rate of the past five months.

The department's summary job report for July reported unemployment decreased by 450,000 to 4 million while employment remained about the same at 69.6 million.

The total labor force, which includes the armed services, totaled 76.4 million in July. This was about 500,000 above the July 1961 total.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, questioned on the failure of the labor force to grow at an expected rate of 1 to 1.2 million over the year, said "we should not rush to the conclusion" that the full reason is a lack of job opportunities.

He said the Labor Dept. is "searching for explanations" of why the work force has failed to grow at previously anticipated rates. He said a combination of clues includes earlier retirement of older workers, longer schooling for younger workers and, more recently, reduced job-holding by women 25 to 54 years of age.

Long-Term Idle Drop

The July job summary—a detailed report is due August 10—showed a decline of 100,000 in the number of long-term unemployed

(Continued on Page 8)

Alcoa, Reynolds Settle:

Aluminum Union Wins 1-Day Strike

By Eugene A. Kelly

St. Louis—A one-day strike of 16,000 Aluminum Workers for contract protection against loss of jobs because of automation brought a prompt settlement by the Aluminum Co. of America and the Reynolds Metals Co.

The two firms, the nation's largest producers of aluminum, agreed to new two-year pacts containing what the union called "satisfactory" language on job security and work rules. Both contracts may be reopened after one year.

When protracted negotiations failed to produce an agreement before the contract deadline, the union called a nationwide walkout of its members—approximately 9,000 at 10 Alcoa plants, another 7,000 at 12 Reynolds plants.

The contracts provide a savings pension plan which the AWIU said is unique in the industry. It specifies that any "spillover" from the supplemental unemployment benefits fund shall go into a vested fund from which an employe may draw savings credited to him at retirement, death or other employment severance.

In addition to standard vacations, members covered by AWIU contracts may get additional vacation time based on seniority and financed by a company payment of 3 cents an hour.

The agreements are subject to ratification in local union meetings following reports from negotiators headed by union Pres. Eddie Stahl. Also to be settled are terms of local agreements.

While the Alcoa and Reynolds agreements were being concluded, two other unions called a strike at the Reynolds sheet and plate mill in McCook, Ill. The walkout over local grievances idled 3,000 workers, including members of the Steelworkers and other unions.

The Aluminum Workers, in contract talks which began in May, sought job and income security in an industry where production and profits remained at near-record levels while operating with 10 percent fewer workers. Stahl said the union has lost 5,000 members in the last three years, mainly because of jobs lost to automation.

COPE Handbook Tells How to Win

The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education has issued a revised and updated edition of "How to Win," the basic COPE handbook on political action and campaign organization.

Containing about 250 pages, the handbook has major sections on registration, getting out the vote, planning meetings and rallies, selection of candidates, organizing local COPEs, conducting COPE dollar drives and analyzing the community for maximum political effectiveness.

Copies are available to union members for $1 each, and to others for $5 each, from COPE, 815 Sixteenth St. N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

Sub Builders Accept Pact, End Walkout

Groton, Conn.—Overwhelming majorities of all crafts in the New London Metal Trades Council have ratified a new 3-year contract settling a strike at the Electric Boat Division of the General Dynamics Corp. here.

Across the country, some 1,500 members of the Denver Metal Trades Council continued to heed a request of Pres. Kennedy to delay a strike and maintain the status quo at the Rocky Flats, Colo., plant of the Atomic Energy Commission. Bargainers for the 14 unions involved and the Dow Chemical Co., which operates the plant for the AEC, continued intensive negotiations toward a new contract.

The Groton vote totaled 4,775 in favor of the settlement to 1,485 against. Ballots were cast by 6,260 of the more than 8,000 employes at the shipyard, where 11 nuclear submarines are under construction.

The agreement was reached with the aid of federal mediators at negotiations in Washington, where the talks had been shifted at the request of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. The walkout began July 19; workers returned to their jobs starting with the third shift July 31.

Among the gains won by the council's bargaining team were:

- Across-the-board hourly wage increases of 7 cents effective July 1, another 7 cents effective next July 1 and 9 cents as of July 1, 1964.
- Improved seniority provisions governing layoffs and rehires.
- Full union shop.
- Improved job security and grievance procedure.
- Payment of vacation pay as a percentage of total earnings, including overtime and shift premiums, with a maximum of 120

(Continued on Page 3)

Strict Drug Controls Urged by Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy has called on Congress for "tougher" new legislation to keep "harmful or worthless drug products" off the market and protect the American people from "even more serious disasters" than the baby-deforming thalidomide.

Kennedy, at his news conference, criticized the Senate Judiciary Committee for drastically weakening a labor-backed bill sponsored by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) after a nearly two-year investigation of the prescription drug industry.

The weakened committee bill, Kennedy declared, "does not go far enough." The President referred approvingly to a minority report by Kefauver and four other Democratic senators urging the full Senate to adopt a series of strengthening amendments to the measure.

Kennedy also urged action on an Administration bill introduced in the House by Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) which parallels a number of the drug safety proposals in the Kefauver bill, but does not deal with the problem of monopoly and high prices.

In Senate testimony last December supporting the Kefauver bill, the AFL-CIO gave strong support to a provision blocking the marketing of new drugs until the Food &

(Continued on Page 3)

CANADIAN RAIL WORKERS present their case for a pay raise and job security protection for 100,000 non-operating employes before a government conciliation board in Montreal. Opening the testimony is Frank H. Hall, standing, vice president of the Railway Clerks and chairman of the joint union negotiating committee.

Rail Unions Ask Writ To Ban Rules Changes

Chicago—Five rail operating unions have asked the U.S. District Court here to enjoin the nation's railroads from unilaterally putting into effect drastic work rules changes.

If management goes ahead with its announced plans to change work rules on Aug. 16, the unions told the court, rail workers will be "forced" to strike. Federal Judge Joseph Perry scheduled a hearing for Aug. 6.

The request for an injunction charged that the threatened changes, based on recommendations made by a Presidential Railroad Commission, would violate the Railway Labor Act in several respects, including compelling arbitration of issues now subject to negotiation.

The union charged also that the railroads had not followed the procedures of the Railway Labor Act in serving notice of the rules changes.

Joining in the request for an injunction were the Locomotive Firemen, Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers and Conductors. They asked the court to issue a temporary restraining order pending a full hearing on the request for a permanent injunction. Named as defendants were the Eastern, Western and Southeastern Carriers' Conference Committees and 120 individual railroads.

The railroads announced their decision to put into effect the proposed work rules changes, including abolition of thousands of jobs, after breaking off negotiations with the unions.

Unless the railroads are restrained from changing the rulebook, the unions said, they will be "forced to resist by asking those they represent . . . to withdraw from the service" of the railroads.

Non-Ops Ask 22 Cents In Canada

Montreal—Spokesmen for 100,000 Canadian rail employes—members of shop crafts and other non-operating unions—asked wage increases averaging 22 cents over two years in testimony before a federal conciliation board here.

Vice Pres. Frank H. Hall of the Railway Clerks, who heads the 15-man joint negotiating committee of the unions, said the wage proposal would achieve and maintain "parity" with wages in durable goods industries.

This is a yardstick which the railroads sought to introduce in 1950 but have since repudiated, he charged.

The unions are also seeking a job security program geared to protecting the employment rights of workers with at least five years of service. A form of supplementary unemployment benefits would be established for workers with less than five years of seniority.

The conciliation board will make recommendations for settlement of the dispute, but its findings will not be binding on either party. The new contract would replace an agreement which expired last December.

NLRB Bars Pickets At Construction Site

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that two building trades unions in Phoenix, Ariz., violated the Taft-Hartley Act's "hot cargo" clause by picketing to halt a contractor's use of non-union subcontractors.

The Landrum-Griffin amendments of 1959 provided that unions and employers may make voluntary agreements that a prime contractor will refrain from engaging non-union subcontractors at a construction site, but, the board held, the employer may not be forced to enter such agreements.

The board's decision was unanimous.

Named in a "cease and desist" order were Carpenters Local 1089 for picketing a store built in Phoenix by the Colson & Stevens Construction Co., Inc., and Laborers Local 383 for picketing two schools built in Scottsdale, Ariz., by the same firm.

The purpose of the picketing, the board said, was to obtain the employer's signature on a master agreement which would have compelled it to cease doing business with three non-union subcontractors.

The legislative history of the Landrum-Griffin Act, the decision noted, showed that Congress did not intend to change the Taft-Hartley prohibition against boycott picketing. It cited a floor speech by then Sen. John F. Kennedy, who said that strikes and picketing to enforce "hot cargo" contracts would continue illegal.

The clause permitting voluntary agreement on non-union subcontractors "is not intended to change the law with respect to the judicial enforcement of these contracts, or with respect to the legality of a strike to obtain such contract," Kennedy said.

Damages Sought In Picket Case

St. Louis—Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board plans an effort for an NLRB order directing a union to pay $200 for a dental plate damaged in a picket line fracas last May 9, and to pay for other losses claimed by non-union men.

Rothman said a complaint will be issued here against Hod Carriers Local 916 asking payment for dental and medical expenses and eight days of time lost from work. The charge was brought by an employer, Owen Langston of Salem, Ark., who hired two work crews of 18 men each to cut a right-of-way for a power line. One crew joined the union, went on strike and tried to get the other crew to join. Langston charged a non-striker was injured in a picket-line fracas near Ellington, Mo., Rothman said.

Religion Seen Tied to Men's Human Needs

Tujunga, Calif.—Top union officials seem to have "a deeper and more sensitive religious feeling" than business leaders, Dr. Kenneth W. Watson, executive director of the Religion & Labor Council of America, said here in commenting on his first year in the post.

"I don't mean just church-going, either," he added. "I refer to the religious feeling that comes with an understanding of current domestic problems and their relation to the individual man."

He observed that harmony between the churches and the labor movement seemed strongest in the Northeast and weakest in the Deep South. This he attributed to what he called the "industrial maturity" New England has attained through decades of dealing with the problems of industrial workers.

Dr. Watson, a journeyman electrician who recently received his 25-year pin in the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, was pastor of the Tujunga Community Methodist Church when he was called to the Religion & Labor Council post in July 1961.

Uncle Sam to Collect:

Price Fix Settlement Costs GE $7 Million

General Electric Co. will pay the federal government $7.47 million in an out-of-court settlement of 11 damage suits arising out of the price-fixing conspiracy in the electrical equipment industry.

GE also said it will offer settlements totaling approximately $40 million more to other customers. Some 1,600 civil anti-trust suits have been filed against GE by public and private utilities and state, local and county governments.

The settlement—by far the largest ever received by the federal government in an anti-trust case—amounts to nearly 11 percent of the price paid by the government between 1956 and 1959 for products covered by the price-fixing cases.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, who termed the arrangement "an equitable settlement," said the Justice Dept. is attempting to negotiate similar agreements with 18 other electric companies it has sued for overcharges resulting from the criminal anti-trust conspiracy.

Cordiner Calls Deal 'Fair'

GE Board Chairman Ralph J. Cordiner, who at one time insisted that purchasers "received fair value" despite the anti-trust violations, described the settlement as "reasonable and fair."

The Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers charged that GE "has been allowed to get off lightly after having persistently bilked the government and American taxpayers of millions of dollars."

The IUE expressed its "firm hope" that GE, "having been forced finally to restore at least part of its ill-gotten gains, will now revise its ethical concepts."

All but $1 million of the federal settlement will be paid to the Tennessee Valley Authority, which purchased the bulk of the electrical equipment involved in the suit.

Mum on Settlement Basis

Neither the government nor GE announced the specific basis for determining the amount of the settlement. An issue to have been resolved in the court cases was whether the federal government, although limited to collecting actual damages under the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, would have collected double damages under another law involving fraud against the government. Private purchasers and state and local governments are entitled to collect triple damages in civil anti-trust suits.

Still undetermined, also, was whether GE will be able to deduct the amount of the settlement from its taxable income as a business expense or whether it would be non-deductible as a penalty arising out of the company's convictions on criminal charges.

GE received the heaviest penalty of the 29 companies sentenced for criminal anti-trust violations in February 1961. The company was fined $437,000 in addition to fines of $54,000 levied against individual GE officials, three of whom also were sent to jail.

Meanwhile in Philadelphia, U.S. District Judge J. Cullen Ganey set an "early September" deadline for GE and the Justice Dept. to agree on a consent settlement of civil anti-trust suits brought by the government as a follow-up to the criminal cases decided last year.

GE has balked at Justice Dept. demands that the order prohibit the company from illegally fixing prices on any of its products, including items not covered by the electrical equipment industry price conspiracy. The government has said that such a sweeping order, which would make the company and its officers subject to contempt of court fines and jail sentences for future violations, is necessary because of the company's long history of anti-trust violations.

Ganey, who sentenced the company and a number of its officials in the 1960-61 case, said that if the Justice Dept. and GE couldn't reach an agreement, he would draw up a settlement himself.

2.5% Increase Negotiated at Atom Project

Albuquerque, N. M. — More than 2,500 atomic workers here have won a 2.5 percent increase under wage reopening provisions of contracts covering office and production workers of the Sandia Corp.

Members of Office Employes Local 251 will receive raises averaging $2.50 a week. For workers represented by the Atomic Projects & Production Workers Metal Trades Council, the increases will average 7.3 cents an hour. The basic terms of the contract have one more year to run.

With both bargaining groups negotiating jointly, agreement was reached before the contract deadline for the first time in 12 years of bargaining history. It was also the first time that a contract had been concluded without the need for calling on the mediation services of the Atomic Energy Commission's labor relations panel.

Meany Urges Affiliates To Back Tourism Drive

Cooperation with the U.S. Travel Service in attracting more tourists to this country from nations in other parts of the world has been urged on all affiliated national and international unions by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

In a letter to union presidents, Meany pointed out that by cutting the current travel deficit of $1 billion a year—the amount spent by American tourists abroad in excess of what foreign visitors spend here—"we would not only be contributing to the easing of the gold outflow problem, but we would be providing needed employment for many of our people in the travel, entertainment, hotel and restaurant industries."

He suggested that through fraternal relationships with unions abroad, U.S. unions extend a "hearty welcome" to foreign workers and participate in the hospitality programs being developed by the Travel Service.

"Let us open our union headquarters, our places of work and even our homes to people who want to see America as it really is," he added.

Church Furniture to Carry Union Label:

Trappist Monks in Oregon Now Members of Carpenters

Lafayette, Ore.—Ten brown-robed monks lined up expectantly in a room at the Trappist Abbey of Our Lady of Guadalupe and watched with interest as a bespectacled layman pulled a modest booklet from his coat pocket.

They raised their hands—the hands of workers—and repeated after him the obligation he read that made them full-fledged dues-paying members of Millmen's Local 1120, a unit of the Carpenters.

For the monks, some of whom had not completed their five-year probationary period before taking final vows, are skilled cabinetmakers who turn out fine quality church furniture—which will carry the union label in the future — in the abbey woodworking shop. And the layman who gave them the obligation was Peter Beach, business representative of the local, who indicated he is now convinced more than ever that the angels are on the side of the unions.

The Trappists are one of the strictest orders in the Catholic Church—in fact, the formal name is the Order of Cistercians of the Strict Observance. The order was founded by Abbott de Rance at LaTrappe, France, in 1664 as an outgrowth of the Cistercians, which had been founded by St. Robert de Malesme at Citeaux, France, in 1098 and had departed over the centuries from its original dedication to literal observance of the strict rule of St. Benedict.

The members, who concentrate on doing penance and praising God, live an austere life. They subsist on bread, fruit and vegetables, using meat only when illness requires it. They sleep on thin mats of straw, rise during the night to pray together in their chapels, and observe the rule of silence.

The abbott lifted the rule of silence for the swearing-in ceremony and the new members asked a lot of questions about their union—how it is run, who makes the rules, where the money goes. Beach said that although they live apart from the world, they were well-informed.

He told them the union's finances are carefully audited at regular intervals and explained the democratic structure of the local and its urging of all members to attend meetings and ask questions.

"Our union stands for more than wages, hours and working conditions," he continued. "We—like every other group—have an obligation to society. We try to fulfill this obligation through our Community Services Committee and through active participation in the annual United Good Neighbors campaign."

"Their craftsmanship is of a quality that would satisfy the most demanding employer," he added, "but, on the serious side, all of them look happy in their chosen life of austerity."

The monks became union members for the simple reason that the monastery wanted to put the union label on its products. It bids on church furniture requirements, from the least to the most expensive.

The idea originated with Peter Bisceglia, a long-time member of Local 1120 who held the contract for installing the products of the monks' devoted skill. He thought the church equipment should carry the union label.

Bisceglia is a direct actionist. Instead of beating around the bush he simply went to the monastery and in effect "organized" the monks.

"From there it was a short step to signing an agreement with the union," Beach said, "for never, without a union contract, did the Trappists take advantage of their unique position to underbid a commercial woodworking shop paying the union scale to its employes.

"In fact, I got the distinct impression that these monks, who have chosen a life of almost stark austerity, understand the purpose of unionism and believe in its goal to improve the lot of working men and women, so that workers can hold their heads high and take their place as responsible members of society."

A WARM WELCOME was extended to Sec. of Labor Norberto Romuldez (left) of the Philippines by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany when the distinguished visitor called at AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington.

ILGWU States Policy On Employe Unions

New York—The three top officers of the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers, in an editorial in Justice, the union's official publication, have explained the ILGWU's position opposing establishment of a union of ILGWU business agents.

The editorial, signed by Pres. David Dubinsky, Sec.-Treas. Louis Stulberg and First Vice Pres. Luigi Antonini, was titled "To Set the Record Straight: Union of Employes—Yes! Faction of Officers—No!"

It stated they were reaffirming a policy, mandated by the ILGWU's convention last May, because newspaper reports stemming from a National Labor Relations Board case had created "a false impression that the ILGWU refuses to deal with unions of its own employes."

The NLRB recently directed the counting of challenged ballots in an election sought among ILGWU staff members by the Federation of Union Representatives. The result was 115 votes for the federation, 113 against.

The Justice editorial, also scheduled to appear as an ILGWU advertisement in three metropolitan newspapers, said in part:

"The ILGWU has signed contracts with unions of its own employes: clerks, typists, stenographers, accountants, maintenance people, nurses, medical technicians, and others. Recognition of a union of office employes goes back more than four decades. To our knowledge, the ILGWU was the first trade union in America to grant recognition to such a union.

"The unions of our employes with which we deal are bona fide unions of bona fide employes. These employes are NOT members of the ILGWU; they are NOT eligible to run for elective union office; they are NOT eligible to be convention delegates and CANNOT influence the election of convention delegations; they do NOT choose the top officers of the union or make its policy. The unions of these employes are collective bargaining agencies, concerned with establishing wage and working standards for employes. Such unions are NOT a 'union within a union' seeking to make policy or seize control of the ILGWU.

"The present controversy concerning the 'union within the union' deals with an entirely different subject. It does not deal with recognizing a union of employes but with recognizing a faction of officers; namely, organizers and business agents. It is true that business agents are on the union payroll, but so is the president of the ILGWU, the secretary-treasurer, and all the other elected and appointed officials."

An offer by the ILGWU executive board a year and a half ago to recognize a union of organizers, but not business agents, was rejected, the editorial stated. It continued:

"The business agents are in a special position within the union to make union policy. They provide the leadership to the worker in the shop. To the rank and filer, the business agent is 'Mr. Union.' He is not only eligible to run for convention delegate and to run for union office, but is also in a specially favorable position to influence choice of convention delegations that elect top union officers and decide basic policy. It is obvious that if these same business agents were granted union recognition by the ILGWU they would be in a position of participating in the choice of the ILGWU officers with whom they would bargain. This is sitting on both sides of the bargaining table."

Local of 189 Members Firm in 8-Week Strike

Keyport, N. J.—A federal labor union of 189 members, solidly united in the eighth week of a strike against the ATCO Ceramics Corp. here, has asked the New Jersey State AFL-CIO and the State Building & Construction Trades Council to place the firm's ceramic tile products on the "do not patronize" list.

Members of FLU 20581 have held firm despite a strikebreaking drive after workers walked out June 9 over contract terms. It was the second strike forced by a new management in three years, union Pres. Richard Dreps declared. Before that there were 22 years of friendly relations, Dreps said.

The new management, headed by one E. Salinger, first tried to impose major changes in working conditions without consulting union officers or members, the union said. It refused any contract improvements until the last week of negotiations, when it also proposed wholesale changes.

After the walkout the firm recruited strikebreakers, got a restraining order in Monmouth County Superior Court, and filed an unfair labor practice complaint against the union. The union got the picket limit raised from 14 to 33, and filed a counter-complaint against the firm with the National Labor Relations Board.

The strikebreakers are chiefly vacationing students and casual labor, according to Samuel R. Isard of the AFL-CIO staff, in the Newark, N. J., district office.

Fourteen months ago the union filed charges with the NLRB against management and a consent agreement was reached, Isard said. The company posted bulletin board notices for 60 days agreeing not to discriminate against union members but broke the agreement afterwards, he asserted.

Local 20581 was organized and won its first contract in 1937. Its last contract expired on the day of the walkout.

GOP in Michigan Wins Delay in Redistricting

Detroit—Republican members of the State Senate have won a reprieve from a Michigan Supreme Court ruling that all senators would have to be elected at-large in November unless the legislature met an Aug. 20 reapportionment deadline.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart granted a stay of the state court order, but made it clear that he was not ruling on the merits of the case. Stewart said he thinks the full U.S. court may want to review the case in its fall session.

The effect of the stay is to permit the election of state senators in November from the present districts, under which 53 percent of the population is represented by only 29 percent of the senators. If the Michigan court's reapportionment order is upheld, it presumably would take effect in the 1964 elections.

The Michigan decision, arising out of a suit brought by State AFL-CIO Pres. August Scholle, raises the "new issue" of whether the equal protection clause of the federal constitution requires apportionment of both houses of a state legislature on the basis of population, Stewart declared.

He said that point had not been decided by the U.S. Supreme Court in the Tennessee case which opened the door for court challenges of legislative apportionment.

Stewart heard the case while on vacation in New Hampshire. Any of the nine justices may grant a stay of a lower court decision until the full court can consider whether to review the case.

Strict Drug Controls Urged by Kennedy

(Continued from Page 1)

Drug Administration has approved them for both safety and efficacy. Under present law, a drug application automatically becomes effective after 60 days unless the FDA acts to block it.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, testifying more than six months before public disclosure of heavy pressure applied by the drug industry in an unsuccessful effort to force approval of thalidomide for sale, singled out for praise the bill's elimination of a time limit for the government to act on a drug application.

Testing Questioned

Biemiller noted that witnesses who testified before the Kefauver subcommittee had raised "a number of questions about the adequacy of testing new drugs, even for safety, before release to the general prescription market."

In their separate report on the Senate committee bill, Kefauver and Democratic Senators John A. Carroll (Colo.), Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.), Philip A. Hart (Mich.) and Edward V. Long (Mo.) served notice that they will introduce a floor amendment eliminating all time limits on government consideration of new drug applications. The committee bill merely raised the time limit from 60 to 180 days.

Kefauver has since announced that he will introduce another amendment which would require drug firms to submit detailed evidence of tests on animals to the government before beginning tests on human beings.

Earlier Kefauver had charged on the Senate floor that Judiciary Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), and Sen. Roman L. Hruska (R-Nebr.) at a "secret meeting" had agreed on committee amendments reducing the bill to "a mere shadow" of the original.

Sub Builders Accept Pact, End Walkout

(Continued from Page 1)

working hours of vacation after 15 years of service.

- An immediate $10 increase in weekly accident and sickness benefits and $5 more effective July 1, 1964.
- Improvement in overtime provisions, including four hours recall pay in place of two.

Earlier two-year settlements reached tentatively by union and company negotiators had been rejected twice by the membership before the strike.

Following the Washington talks, Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), raised charges that a former president of one of the locals, who had been ousted from both union office and membership, had solicited a "payoff" to refrain from obstructing approval of the settlement. The former official denied the charges in an affidavit.

New Chance for Congress

IT SAYS A GOOD DEAL about the standpattism of the coalitionists who too often dominate Congress that prospects for stronger drug control were almost nil until the newspapers began exposing the tragic and terrifying side effects of the drug thalidomide.

President Kennedy sent a message last March recommending major improvements in regulation of the drug industry. The President pointed out specifically that new drugs are placed on the market with no requirement for "advance proof" of their effectiveness or "prompt reporting of adverse reactions" the drugs produce in human beings treated as guinea pigs.

He urged new legislation authorizing the Food & Drug Administration to require drug manufacturers to substantiate claims for the efficacy and safety of powerful new drugs, and to require the industry to label its products so that physicians and the public would be clearly on notice about the danger of harmful side effects.

★ ★ ★

SENATOR KEFAUVER conducted extensive Judiciary subcommittee hearings in regard to the pricing policies, the patent system and the lack of strict controls under which the pharmaceutical industry has operated. The AFL-CIO testified in favor of stronger regulation; so did many consumer groups; so did spokesmen for the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

But Kefauver's subcommittee bill was watered down by the full Senate Judiciary Committee and the measure now pending, as the President said, is punctured with gaps and loopholes. It would not even authorize the Food & Drug Administration to compel the withdrawal from the market of a new drug that has been shown to present an "immediate hazard to public health."

★ ★ ★

BY A FORTUNATE ACCIDENT, thalidomide was not widely prescribed in this country for use by pregnant women. It was distributed only on an experimental basis, with reports on the experience being sent back to the drug houses. When full reports from Germany and Great Britain reached public health, manufacturing and medical circles here, a massive effort was launched to call back all supplies and to warn physicians, nurses and hospitals of the dangerous side effects.

The fact remains that commercial sales would have begun had it not been for the alertness and stubbornness of a Food & Drug physician, Dr. Frances Kelsey, who had read earlier reports from Britain, and who steadfastly resisted pressure to give clearance for the drug.

It can be conceded that no one in the drug industry intends to poison human beings or promote the sale of a drug that deforms or kills unborn babies. The point is that the industry has resisted, with all its power, stricter regulation. It is not now required by law—and it doesn't want to be required by law—to satisfy impartial public health officials that a new drug is both effective and safe, and to report the facts promptly if harmful side effects are discovered.

A bill sponsored by Rep. Harris of Arkansas bears Administration backing, and the President specifically called attention to Kefauver's criticisms of the watered-down Senate Judiciary Committee bill. Congress should not be in such a hurry to quit and go campaigning that it cannot take time for a stronger drug-regulation bill while the thalidomide story is still leaping from the headlines.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, August 4, 1962 No. 31

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

We've Got to Get Moving NOW

Political Turmoil Seethes:

Saskatchewan's Medicare Plan Finally Off to a Belated Start

REGINA, SASK.—With settlement of the physicians' revolt against the new Saskatchewan Medicare program, North America's first universal government-sponsored medical insurance plan is now going into operation.

For $12 a year (or $24 per family), every resident of this prairie province in midwestern Canada has a chance to be completely covered against doctors' bills.

The plan complements both the 15-year-old hospital plan, which picks up the tab for all hospital bills, and the free cancer treatment program which has been in operation for many years.

Yet to come under the prepaid principle are dentists' bills, drugs and optometric bills. It is expected that many of these items will be covered by private plans until the Medicare Act can be extended.

The fact that one battle is over should not be interpreted, however, as a sign that the war is ended.

The plan became a reality only after a 23-day boycott of the Medical Care Insurance Act by most of the province's 900 doctors. The doctors refused, during the three-week period, to give more than emergency treatment to their patients.

Under this pressure the New Democratic Party government of Premier Woodrow Lloyd agreed to a number of modifications in the plan. The amendments do not affect the basic principle of Medicare—universal coverage at low cost—but they do add two new features:

- The private non-profit plans set up by physicians as a deterrent to government-sponsored medical care will have an administrative role in the new scheme.
- The opportunity for doctors to work "outside the plan" has been given new strength.

The latter feature may be counterbalanced by the mushrooming growth of community health centers. The "co-op clinics," organized by local citizens, are designed to give Saskatchewan residents an opportunity to choose doctors who work within the plan, i.e. receive payments directly from the Medical Care Insurance Commission. Patients who go to such doctors will never see a medical bill.

As it now stands, however, a doctor can either bill his patients, who are reimbursed partially by the commission, or bill a recognized private plan which is reimbursed by the commission.

The settlement failed to end doctor opposition to the plan. In coming months the doctors may try to pressure patients into paying the extra $8-$10 a year which private plans will charge for acting as an accounting agency. If the patient doesn't designate a private plan as his agent, he faces the prospect of paying the substantial difference between his bill and the amount he gets from the commission himself.

The only way a patient can avoid paying this extra is to join a private plan or to go to a doctor under contract with the commission. The College of Physicians & Surgeons (medical society) is expected to encourage doctors to stay outside the plan, and private agencies may be the only way for many residents to be assured of complete coverage.

However, the physicians at the end agreed to a clause in the settlement which gives "citizens groups" the right to provide themselves with doctors who are willing to be paid by the commission.

The commission itself can assist community health services associations in finding "direct-payment" doctors. The medical society specifically agreed not to discriminate against these doctors.

The political turmoil growing out of the dispute will focus dramatic attention on the next provincial election, due in 1964.

Old political loyalties have been upset. Some Liberal Party members, shocked at their party's sympathy for the doctors, have moved toward the New Democratic Party. Old Co-Operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF) voters in the cities have been shaken from their CCF base by the doctors' campaign. The government has no help from the big newspapers and other mass media.

"You know, I don't think I'll get married after all."

Morgan Says:

Beneath the Surface, Changes Are Occurring in Mississippi

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

SLOWLY, IMPERCEPTIBLY but undeniably, the state of Mississippi is being forced to face the facts of life. At first glance this might not seem to be so. After all only recently one of the state's rare contributions to civilized politics, Rep. Frank Smith, was beaten by a Dixiecrat. And Mississippi remains outwardly and loudly committed to the dark ages of racism and reaction, refusing emotionally to belong to a union of 50 states, let alone admitting that the United States belongs to the family of nations.

Morgan

But beneath the surface, changes are taking place. They do not come easily and before they are accepted they may produce the pain and shame of violence. After 17 months of litigation, the courts have ordered the University of Mississippi to admit its first Negro undergraduate in the fall. There may be delays, there may be ugliness but desegregation will surely come to Mississippi too just as it has to that proud aristocrat of the Confederacy, the Old Dominion of Virginia.

Another Mississippi moderate, ex-Gov. J. P. Coleman, is going to run again for the governorship in 1963 and it is not likely he would make this choice if the extremist forces of massive resistance were in the ascendancy. One of the reasons they aren't is a woman, though she herself could become a casualty of their death throes.

For 26 years a native Southerner, Hazel Brannon Smith (no relation to the congressman whom she backed), has fought bigotry, backwardness and corruption as a weekly newspaper publisher in rural Mississippi, 60 miles from the state capital, Jackson. But today she is fighting for her life, professionally speaking, and in a very real sense the validity of Mississippi's social evolution, which she has done so much to push, depends in part on her survival.

Eight years ago, on the Fourth of July weekend in 1954, Holmes County Sheriff Richard F. Byrd utterly without provocation shot a Negro. In her weekly Lexington Advertiser Mrs. Smith reported the brutality, followed with an editorial branding Byrd as unfit for office in a land where the laws of America—she wrote—"are for everyone—rich and poor, strong and weak, black and white." Byrd won a $10,000 judgment for libel but in November 1955 the State Supreme Court unanimously reversed the judgment and dismissed the sheriff's suit. He died later, a discredited man.

But the Citizens Council, formed in the wake of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision, vowed vengeance and for six years the Smiths have been the targets of a campaign of intimidation and boycott. First the editor's husband, Walter Dyer Smith, was fired as administrator of the county hospital despite the unanimous pleas of the staff. Then advertisers cancelled and her job printing business dropped off. But Mrs. Smith kept publishing.

THREE YEARS AGO, however, an opposition paper, the Holmes County Herald, suddenly appeared in Lexington, owned, apparently exclusively, by Citizens Council members with State Rep. Wilburn Hooker as the principal stockholder. This year Hooker and others tried to ram a bill through the legislature to deny one of Mrs. Smith's weeklies local government printing contracts, but it was so patently punitive and Mississippi editors rose so strongly to denounce it that it died in committee.

Still the attrition goes on. The Smiths have mortgaged their home and their 500-acre farm to raise money to keep the Lexington paper going but they need more. Last winter Mississippi's Pulitzer-Prize-winning newspaperman, Hodding Carter, wrote in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that if Hazel Brannon Smith should lose her fight, "another light will have gone out in a shadowed state." (Another light did go out just the other day with the death of William Faulkner.)

But Mrs. Smith simply refuses to be extinguished. She is neither a radical nor an idealist. She is not even a crusading integrationist. She describes herself as a practical woman with a stubborn belief that "every citizen is equal under the law" and should be judged on individual merit, or lack of it, not on the color of his skin. Her views on racial issues? "To me," she says, "Negroes are people." Which speaks eloquent and courageous volumes in Mississippi.

Of Holmes County's 27,000 population 75 percent are Negroes. She has the support of many of them even though the racists are now trying to get her readers, white and black, to cancel their subscriptions.

Recently Hazel Brannon Smith received in San Antonio the latest in a long line of distinctions, the Headliner Award of Theta Sigma Phi, women's national journalistic fraternity. What an empty award it would be if the benighted but powerful forces of Holmes County were allowed to triumph over her in the end.

Washington Reports:

United Nations' Bond Purchase Seen Saving Millions for U. S.

UNITED STATES PURCHASE of $100 million in United Nations bonds, as asked by the Administration, will save the U.S. "millions of dollars a year," Rep. Clement J. Zablocki (D-Wis.), member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, asserted in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

A Republican, Rep. Robert R. Barry (N.Y.), also a member of the committee, declared on the same program that congressional approval of the bond issue will both cut U.S. costs for the UN and give the UN the means of "far better and abler management—it will give the UN the money to do its job better."

Barry pointed out that U.S. purchase of the bonds would reduce the U.S. share of the Congo peace-keeping operation, now 47.5 percent, to 32 percent.

Zablocki reported that the previous Administration had arranged with certain countries, including "such Communist nations as Cuba, Albania, Yugoslavia, Poland and Bulgaria, to reduce their regular assessments, in return for support of the UN peace-keeping operations in the Congo."

The arrangement, Zablocki indicated, was unwise. He said:

"Last year, the total amount of our contributions for this purpose was $11.4 million. I was deeply disturbed to learn that this policy was still continuing. So were other members of Congress. However, I have now learned that purchase of the bonds will allow the U.S. to end the existing situation."

BARRY REPORTED that 43 nations have so far bought or pledged to buy $72 million of UN bonds, including $5 million from Japan and $10 million from West Germany, "even though they are not even members of the UN."

Zablocki said that many persons who criticize the Congo operation do not realize that it has kept the Communists out of that country even though they were ready to move into the vacuum at the time it was freed by Belgium.

The main task now, he said, is to get the president of Katanga province [Moise Tshombe] to cooperate with Congo Premier Cyrille Adoula. Most of the wealth of the Congo is in Katanga, he pointed out, and the major industrial enterprise, the Union Miniere, is paying $3 million to $4.5 million a month in royalties to the Tshombe regime instead of to the central government.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THIS IS THE SEASON when tempers in Congress are likely to snap, and members who ordinarily speak to and of each other with exquisite courtesy—at least in public—are known to fling angry epithets and accusations on the sacred floors of the Senate and House. And so it has happened again. Unpleasant words have been uttered and apologies have been felt necessary, and men known for years as advocates of the same philosophy have exchanged bitter charges of betrayal.

The physical sufferings of members are not as severe as they used to be in Washington's muggy summers. The Capitol is air-conditioned and no one can claim that working conditions are tough. Besides, this summer the Atlantic Seaboard has been blessed with a long succession of wonderfully cool and sunny days that should quiet the restless spirit of gentlemen deprived of the chance to go home and start campaigning.

Still, there is something frustrating about this session, particularly, that frays the nerves of members.

There is new Democratic leadership in both the House and Senate, and the members are not quite used to the changes. The President has asked Congress to handle an enormous volume of work, and his requests have often cut squarely across the convictions of powerful committee chairmen who tend to confuse their convictions with laws of the universe.

The strategy of the committee chairmen, under such circumstances, is to proceed most ploddingly with formal hearings, and to mark up the bills with painstaking care, and to display such patience in following the dictates of conscience that the process might be called a filibuster.

This is particularly true of conservative Democratic committee chairmen who remember Mr. Kennedy as a young member of the House and a very junior member of the Senate and cannot quite grasp the idea that he is in the White House.

On many a showdown vote, the conservative coalition operated in the House by Representative Halleck of Indiana and Smith of Virginia can beat the Administration. This dumps the legislative leaders into a mood of frustration.

All in all, it is surprising that tempers have not broken more frequently with more clashes.

* * *

ON THE FILIBUSTER of a small group of liberals against the communications satellite bill, the charge was made that liberals had adopted the tactics they deplored when southern Democrats filibustered a civil rights bill. For the record, Sen. Morse of Oregon has many times made his position most explicitly clear.

He has said on the floor that he thinks the Senate rules should be changed to make a long-continued filibuster impossible. But if the Senate declined to change the rules, he served notice, he would not deprive himself of the advantage the rules specifically grant a stubborn minority.

The rules are for both sides, he said, liberals as well as conservatives, and if he couldn't get them changed he would use them.

* * *

IN DENMARK Gen. Eisenhower said his "worst mistake" in office was in "not working harder" to help elect Richard M. Nixon. This is a switch from his earlier statement that he had done everything he was "asked" to do, and it raises again the curious nature of the relations that existed between the two men in the 10 years they were most closely associated.

In 1955 and 1956, he wounded the young Vice President by suggesting he step down to a Cabinet job to gain experience. He seemed almost aloof during the 1960 presidential campaign. He doesn't seem deeply entangled right now in the California campaign, where Nixon is fighting for political survival.

Not even though he must know the Republican congressional leadership is busy making sure that Nixon doesn't stick his nose into what they consider their own proper business of trying to elect a GOP House.

U.S. PURCHASE OF $100 MILLION in United Nations bonds, congressional approval of which has been asked by the Administration, will cut this country's UN costs and make the UN stronger, said two members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Rep. Clement J. Zablocki (D-Wis.), left, and Rep. Robert R. Barry (R-N. Y.), in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

ARKANSAS STATE AFL-CIO delegates hear the presentation of resolutions and constitutional changes in connection with the "program of progress" adopted by the special convention to build labor's political and legislative strength in the state. At the rostrum is Herb Bingaman of the Auto Workers, chairman of the resolutions committee.

Business Club 'Regrets' Morgan Cancellation

Birmingham, Ala.—The Young Men's Business Club of Birmingham has officially expressed "regret" that the Edward P. Morgan news program, sponsored by the AFL-CIO, was dropped by Radio Station WBRC here, and has taken a skeptical view of the station's stated reason that a conflict with baseball programs caused the cancellation.

The business club's stand was expressed in a resolution adopted with only four dissenting votes. The action followed a talk on the issue by Pres. Barney Weeks of the Alabama State AFL-CIO. The manager of WBRC, James Bailey, was also invited but declined to appear.

In his talk, Weeks acknowledged that WBRC, unknown to the AFL-CIO, had indicated its intention to cancel the Morgan program prior to a demand for cancellation by Mayor Arthur J. Hanes of Birmingham. However, he pointed out, the basic fact remained that newspapers in the area are uniformly conservative and that the "one voice of dissent" available to Birmingham citizens was being silenced.

Hanes announced the cancellation on June 22, three days after a Morgan broadcast referred to segregated facilities in the Birmingham airport. The AFL-CIO subsequently charged that an inadvertent error in Morgan's description, rectified the following night, had been used as a pretext for dropping the program.

"The decision may have been made before Mayor Hanes announced it; but that's a small matter," Weeks said. "The decision was to get rid of Morgan—to silence him in Birmingham.

What's important is that the decision was made; and by misleading and entrapping our people into an irrelevant and honest mistake, the decision may be upheld.

"If that happens, it will be a tragedy. Not for Morgan; he doesn't need us, he has 271 other stations for this program, and his position is assured. Not for the AFL-CIO; we can and do communicate with our own members in our own way. No, the tragedy will be for Birmingham, the tragedy of fear and the spineless conformity that fear creates."

This was also the view of the young businessmen, whose resolution read as follows:

"The Young Men's Business Club of Birmingham, being unalterably opposed to all forms of censorship of the news media through which facts and opinions are disseminated to the people of this area, hereby expresses its regret over the removal from the air by Station WBRC of the news commentaries of Edward P. Morgan, sponsored by the AFL-CIO.

"We are not impressed with the fact that national baseball games are now broadcast at the time formerly used to air this program since the program might have been rebroadcast at another time."

Labor-Industry School Set by Michigan State

East Lansing, Mich.—Trustees of Michigan State University have voted to establish a School of Labor & Industrial Relations to carry on programs of the Labor & Industrial Relations Center.

Establishment of the new academic school as part of the College of Social Science was the university's answer to action by the Republican-controlled legislature to kill the Labor & Industrial Relations Center by banning use of state funds for its operations.

The appropriations bill rider was sponsored by State Sen. Lynn O. Francis, a member of the John Birch Society, who headed an investigating committee which last year accused the center of being "biased" in favor of labor.

Commenting on creation of the new school, MSU Pres. John A. Hannah said the university is "not receding in any manner" from its position that the former Labor & Industrial Relations Center "was well advised and appropriate."

Don Stevens, education director of the State AFL-CIO and an elected member of the university's board of trustees, said advisory committees representing labor and management will make recommendations for programs for the school, including the possibility of on-campus courses, programs and degrees as well as off-campus education activities previously conducted by the center.

Signed by Kennedy:

New Welfare Reform Law Puts Stress on Rehabilitation

The broad welfare reform bill signed into law by Pres. Kennedy is "generally a good program" which for the first time stresses rehabilitation and encourages self-support of the needy, Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security commented.

"It emphasizes prevention of relief needs instead of curing after the fact," Cruikshank observed. He had testified in support of the Administration's welfare proposals during Congressional hearings on the bill, which underwent a series of modifications before final passage.

As enacted, the bill adds about $300 million a year to the federal government's share of state expenditures for welfare.

This is about $100 million more than the President had requested. By spending more now, the government hopes to save later if the bill accomplishes its purpose of helping the able needy get off the relief rolls and into self-supporting employment.

In signing the bill, Kennedy said "it makes possible the most far-reaching revision of our public welfare program since it was enacted in 1935 [and] marks a turning point in this nation's efforts to cope realistically and helpfully with these pressing problems."

Legislative Intent Emphasized

The President added, however, that "it would truly be a miscarriage of justice and a frustration of legislative intent if these new federal funds merely replaced existing state funds, and those for whom the increase was intended were denied the full benefit."

Chief provisions of the new law include:

- An increase from the present 50 percent to 75 percent in the federal share of state payments for preventive or rehabilitative services. This is designed to enable states and communities to increase staffs of qualified case workers, reduce case loads and improve counseling of needy individuals and families.

- A 5-year extension of aid to dependent children of the unemployed, with broadened coverage to include assistance to a second unemployed parent to encourage families to stay together.

- Annual increases to bring federal payments for child welfare services from the present $25 million to $50 million a year starting in 1969. Part of the increase—$5 million in fiscal 1963 and $10 million a year thereafter—is earmarked for establishment of child day care centers to enable able-bodied mothers now on relief to go to work.

- A boost in the federal share of the costs of training welfare personnel from 50 percent to 75 percent.

- An increase of about $4 a month in the federal share of payments to the aged, blind and disabled needy, bringing the maximum to $70 a month per individual. (This provision was added to the Administration program by Congress and accounts for nearly all of the costs in excess of the President's requests.)

- Encouragement of old-age assistance recipients to help contribute to their own support by permitting them to keep up to $30 a month of earnings without deductions from their assistance checks.

- Authority for states to make child-assistance payments in up to 5 percent of such cases to interested relatives or other persons if the parents fail to manage the funds properly.

- Simplification of administration by permitting states to combine the four adult welfare programs—old-age assistance, medical assistance to the aged, aid to the blind and aid to the disabled—and receive a single lump sum payment from the federal government for its share.

- Authority for states to set up community work projects or on-the-job training for unemployed parents or relatives of children receiving ADC grants. Safeguards against misuse of this provision were strengthened by the House Ways & Means Committee after the AFL-CIO urged it to "make more certain that a state could not use these work projects and federal funds to finance normal community functions."

Extension of the aid-to-dependent-children program, which had expired June 30, brought a resumption of federal ADC payments to the 22 states taking part. Nine of these had continued the aid with their own funds beyond June 30 and will be reimbursed by the federal government.

NMU Sailors On Lakes Get Pension Gains

New York—Some 2,800 Great Lakes seamen represented by the National Maritime Union have won parity in pension and welfare benefits with NMU members serving on deep sea vessels. The new agreement was reached with 12 companies operating passenger vessels, freighters, and tankers on the lakes.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran described the pact, which runs to June 15, 1965, as an "historic gain."

Among its major improvements are:

- An increase in the normal monthly retirement benefit from $100 to $125.

- Doubling of dependents' hospitalization benefits to $16 a day for up to 70 days, plus up to $300 for surgery and $320 for incidental hospital expenses.

- Maintenance of parity should deep sea benefits be increased.

- Full pension benefits upon retirement for total permanent disability at any age, rather than after age 65.

- Application of all service—deep sea and lakes—in establishing eligibility for retirement.

The plan provides for normal retirement with full benefits at age 65 after 20 years or more of service and for early retirement with reduced benefits as early as age 60 and after at least 15 years of service.

Railroad Yardmasters Back Pay Raise Drive

Chicago—Delegates to the Railroad Yardmasters convention here voted solid support to their union's drive for a general pay raise, improved medical and life insurance benefits and correction of "wage inequities."

Some 200 delegates from 100 leading railroads attended the union's 28th convention and the concurrent sessions of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

A management spokesman, Gen. Counsel Joseph H. Hays of the Association of Western Railroads, told the delegates that complaints that business "lacks confidence" in Pres. Kennedy don't express the views of the railroads.

"Whatever may be the case as to others," he said, "there are certain important segments of business, including the railroads, whose confidence in the Administration shows an increase instead of a decline."

A. E. Lyon, labor member of the Railroad Retirement Board, told the union that it can be "rightfully proud" of its role in helping to bring about and improve the Railroad Retirement Act. He reported that during the last fiscal year, more than 1.3 million persons received a total of almost $1.25 billion in benefits under it.

Delegates also voted strong endorsement of a legislative and collective bargaining program proposed by Pres. Milton G. Schoch which included improvements in railroad retirement and unemployment insurance programs, protection of craft lines against an "increasing tendency by some railroads to disregard our rights," union shop agreements with all railroads, and strong opposition to so-called "right-to-work" laws.

Schoch, who has headed the union since 1943, was re-elected to a new four-year term and W. A. Snyder, who had been general chairman on the Union Pacific Railroad, was chosen as secretary-treasurer. Snyder succeeds J. S. Meyers, who ran unsuccessfully for the presidency.

Hotel Pact Rejected in Referendum

New York—With only a few dissenting votes out of 22,720 in a citywide referendum, hotel workers have rejected employers' terms for a three-year contract extension and instructed their union's Hotel Trades Council to secure basic contract improvements.

Council Pres. Jay Rubin said the membership vote was a warning to the employers to bargain in good faith.

"It places upon them the responsibility for any change in the good relationship" that has existed for years, he declared.

The council has asked hotel and motor hotel managements for substantial wage increases, extension of the 35-hour week to all workers who get no tips, and payment by employers of their share of the social security tax on a weekly base of no less than $70 for tip-earning workers.

Rubin said the turnout of voters was among the largest in the union's history, with many workers going to the polls during vacation periods and on their days off.

During negotiations which began last March, the Hotel Association of New York City, Inc., offered annual increases over a three-year period of $1 a week for those receiving tips and $1.50, $2 and $2.50 for various categories of non-tip workers.

AFTRA Initiating Talks:

Contract Pay Sought For Telstar Players

New York—The Television & Radio Artists, representing 26,000 performers on the nation's TV and radio stations, have moved to protect the rights of performers who will appear on worldwide programs as a result of Telstar satellite relays.

Donald F. Conaway, executive secretary of AFTRA, announced that the union has taken the first step in initiating discussions with performers' unions in European countries to discuss compensation for performers appearing on international television.

"This action is a result of authorization of the delegates to our 25th annual convention, which met in Miami Beach in July," Conaway said. "We know that Telstar is a great challenge, but we cannot realistically deal with the problems or set an international rate for performers until many problems are settled."

Conaway said he had started the ball rolling by sending a letter to Gen. Sec. Gerald Croasdell of British Actors' Equity, asking him to set up a meeting of the American and European performers' unions. It was his hope, Conaway said, that unions in all 18 countries linked by Eurovision, Europe's TV network, would be represented.

Another action taken by the convention would provide for a reduction in certain transcription fees so as "to stimulate employment in radio" and "encourage broadcasters to be creative in programming." This self-imposed reduction would cut back on fees to performers for repeat broadcasts of non-commercial broadcasts four minutes or less in length.

The convention also authorized setting up committees from AFTRA and the Screen Actors Guild to study rates for syndicated programs so as to eradicate disparities. SAG has jurisdiction over filmed television while AFTRA represents performers appearing on live or tape-recorded television productions.

The convention elected Art Gilmore to his second term as president. Vicki Vola, Arwin Schweig, David Schnabel, Clarence Leisure, Hal Newell, Jack Chase and Travis Johnson were named vice presidents. Jud Conlon was elected recording secretary, and Ray Heatherton was chosen treasurer.

SOME OF THE $10,000 WORTH of free food and household necessities distributed by Local 8-74, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, to striking members at the Kobuta, Pa., plant of the Koppers Co. is being carried away by Charles Emler, at right. Checking him off the list are Dominic Caruso (left) and Financial Sec. Ambrose Stedina of the local. More than 600 members of the local have been on strike for a new contract since May 1.

TWUA Council Urges Cotton Pricing Study

New York—The executive council of the Textile Workers Union of America has called on Pres. Kennedy to name a public committee to reconcile the interests of all parties associated with the growing, conversion and manufacture of cotton.

In a companion measure, the council proposed that the federal government adopt an equalization fee as a first step in correcting the inequality in raw cotton costs by reducing the support price for cotton over the next three years to the world price level. U.S. manufacturers, under the subsidy program to growers, now pay 8.5 cents a pound above the world price.

The council at a meeting here said the public committee it proposed would "assure a solution which would protect the farmer's income, lower the price of cotton, increase the competitiveness of cotton textile producers and reduce the cost of federal protection programs for the taxpayer and the consumer."

The future of the American cotton textile industry, the resolution said, is "basically dependent" upon the restoration of an economic domestic price for raw cotton. A reconciliation of the different interests, it added, is necessary to assure a solution of present difficulties.

At its closing session the council adopted a resolution calling on the AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its coming meeting in Chicago, to start a nationwide campaign for a shorter workweek by law without any cut in weekly pay. With nearly 6.5 million Americans "not sharing in the benefits of full-time employment," the council noted, "TWUA is convinced that the genuine remedy lies in a shorter workweek without any reduction in weekly wages."

In other resolutions the union's council urged the AFL-CIO to discard as a goal the "watered-down" Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the elderly under Social Security and return to the original Forand bill, and called for government reinsurance of private pension plans to protect workers against loss of earned benefits through liquidations, bankruptcies or plant relocations.

IUE Absolved In Suit Over Loss of Job

Jefferson City, Tenn.—A Tennessee jury has absolved the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and its Local 748 here of liability in a $200,000 damage suit brought by a former member who lost his job during a strike.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey, chief witness for the union, said the jury's "not guilty" verdict repudiated the charge that the union had "fraudulently" induced workers at the Jefferson City Cabinet Co., a subsidiary of the Magnavox Co., to strike.

Carey testified that the local had not informed the international of its intention to strike, as is required by the union's constitution, but that the IUE nevertheless gave substantial assistance to the strikers in accordance with its policy.

The suit was brought by Johnny Ray Patterson, a former member of the local executive board who was one of 1,000 strikers sent dismissal notices by the company after they walked out last February in a dispute over unprocessed grievances. The IUE has since obtained a federal court order directing the firm to arbitrate the grievances, but the company has appealed.

At the trial of Patterson's suit in Jefferson County Circuit Court at Dandridge, IUE attorneys maintained that the plaintiff as a union member was in effect suing himself. The "union," they argued, was in fact "the membership."

Ohio Labor Approves Political Education Plan

Columbus—A new political education program, with emphasis on statewide coordination and planning, has been approved by unanimous vote of the Ohio AFL-CIO executive board.

The program provides for the naming of a political education coordinator in each congressional district by representatives of area labor groups and international unions, with responsibility for carrying out activities in the district in cooperation with central bodies, local unions and the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

In approving the program the executive board:

- Urged that all international unions make the services of full-time staff representatives available to the district coordinators.
- Gave the responsibility for direction and coordination of the program to the state headquarters office of the Ohio AFL-CIO.

State Sec.-Treas. Elmer F. Cope announced that Edward W. Bodi, assistant to Regional Dir. Charles Ballard of the Auto Workers in Toledo, has been named to the state AFL-CIO staff to coordinate activities under the new program.

At a meeting following the executive board action, the program won the unanimous approval of key union representatives from around Ohio. Union officials who attended the meeting here included Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers, Sec.-Treas. Ike Gold of the Rubber Workers, UAW Vice Pres. Richard T. Gosser and Vice Pres. Albert Vottero of the Flint Glass Workers.

Speakers at both meetings stressed the point that the success of the new program will depend on the cooperation of every AFL-CIO union.

"This campaign year is a crucial one," said Cope. "The representatives we elect to office this year will determine the fate of progressive legislation next year."

Segal to Attend Education Meet

Ben D. Segal, education director of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, will be the U.S. delegate at the biennial conference of the Intl. Federation of Workers Education Associations at Dusseldorf, Germany, Aug. 22-25.

Segal will represent the American Labor Education Service, the U.S. affiliate. In addition, he will serve as fraternal delegate from the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and from the Intl. Metalworkers Federation.

Segal, who also is president of Teachers Local 189, composed of worker education teachers in U.S. and Canadian unions and universities, will represent the IUE at the annual central committee meeting of the IMF in Oslo, Norway, Aug. 7 to 10. He will go to England for an international student seminar, sponsored by the British and American Friends Service Committees, at which he will be a consultant and lecturer.

Douglas Plans To Run in B. C. For Commons

Ottawa, Ont.—National Leader Thomas C. Douglas of the New Democratic Party will run for Parliament from the Burnaby-Coquitlam riding near Vancouver, B. C.

The seat is being vacated by Ernest Regier, NDP member who was re-elected by more than 9,000 votes in the June 18 general election, to permit Douglas to make a second try for Parliament. Regier was first elected as a member of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation in 1953 and was re-elected in 1957 and 1958. Douglas, who had resigned as premier of Saskatchewan to accept NDP leadership, was defeated when he ran for Parliament in the general election.

Stanley Knowles, formerly executive vice president of the Canadian Labor Congress, and M. J. Coldwell, as spokesman for the NDP, conferred with Prime Minister John Diefenbaker here on the possibility of an early by-election. No announcement was made.

A by-election in the Stormont, Ont., riding which was fiercely contested by Diefenbaker's Conservatives, the Liberals and the Social Credit movement, resulted in a 65-vote victory for Lucien Lamoureaux, one of the Liberal leadership who formerly represented the district.

The election boosted the Liberals strength in Parliament to an even 100 votes, leaving the Conservatives with 116, Social Credit 30 and NDP 19, including the seat vacated by Regier.

BUILDING SERVICE UNION and employer representatives examine a model of the New York World's Fair after joining in giving Fair Pres. Robert Moses a joint "no strike, no lockout" pledge covering both the construction and operation of the fair. BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan was accompanied by top officers of his union's five New York City locals and by representatives of the major contractors servicing the fair at the meeting with Moses. Similar union-management pledges were given earlier by the construction industry and the city and state building trades councils.

Unions Ask Exemption:

Postage Hike Fought For Labor Papers

The proposed doubling of second-class postage rates, if applied to union publications, would "raise havoc" with the primary means of communication within the labor movement, the AFL-CIO has advised the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee.

Such an increase, furthermore, would have "little effect" on the postal deficit, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller testified.

He recalled that the federation's convention last December had registered its "firm objection" to higher postal rates for labor papers and other non-profit publications. The rate revision bill passed by the House last January would exempt such publications from the increase.

A former labor editor himself, Biemiller emphasized that the AFL-CIO was addressing its testimony solely to the effect on labor papers of the proposed second-class hike.

"We would, of course, deplore a postal rate that imposed a crippling burden on commercial newspapers and magazines," he observed, "but we do not feel qualified to suggest where the line should be drawn betwen public service and unwarranted subsidy.

'Clear-Cut Case'

"However, we feel there is a clear-cut case against a rate increase for trade union publications —not to give our journals an advantage over the commercial press, since no competition is involved, but because labor publications are essentially different in purpose, function and financial status."

Biemiller noted that the 500 periodicals published by AFL-CIO affiliates in the United States range from professionally-edited journals with national circulation to mimeographed leaflets distributed at plant gates or in union halls.

All of them, he said, have one characteristic in common: "They bring to the union members who receive them an accounting of union affairs that they could not adequately obtain in any other way."

He reminded the committee that most unions use their papers and magazines as vehicles to carry out legal and constitutional obligations, such as publication of full and regular financial reports to the membership, election notices and other information.

Not in Public Interest

"It is evident, then, that trade union newspapers perform a unique, desirable and necessary function. A postal rate increase that would seriously interfere with that function would not be in the public interest."

Biemiller pointed out that with the exception of area publications, most labor papers carry no advertising and are dependent on union funds for their existence.

He cited a survey by the Intl. Labor Press Association of its member AFL-CIO publications which showed that the typical labor paper now devotes 5 to 6 percent of its total budget to second-class postage.

'Unduly High'

Doubling the rate would mean a cost of better than 10 percent, which "seems unduly high to us," he observed.

The increase would "at best" add only $1.25 million to postal revenues, Biemiller said, but would have a "severe impact" on unions and their publications. More than half the organizations supplying figures to the ILPA had operating deficits in their last fiscal year, he pointed out.

The added burden of a postage rate increase would force some of them to cut back on the frequency of their publication and others to suspend publication altogether, he said, concluding:

"In view of the facts, we feel that an increase in the second-class postage on our publications is not justified . . . would have little effect on the postal deficit, but on the other hand would raise an undesirable obstacle in the path of communications between unions and their members."

Apprentice Bureau Picks Minority Aides

Three industrial training advisers have been named to the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training to work with unions and employers in promoting the acceptance of members of minority groups for apprenticeship training and in jobs requiring skill and knowledge.

They are former AFL-CIO Field Rep. Cicero Scott of Cleveland, a Tuskegee Institute graduate who will work in the bureau's office; Mrs. Amy Terry of New York, a social worker who will work in the New York office, and Charles R. Jaymes of San Francisco, a member of the Typographical Union who will work in the San Francisco office.

EXECUTIVE SESSION inquiry of House Ways & Means Committee into the state of the economy heard AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany present views of organized labor. Shown just before the closed hearing are Meany (second from left) and Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (center) with three AFL-CIO department heads: Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller (left) and Social Security Dir. Nelson Cruikshank and Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg (right).

Economy Needs Tax Cut Now To Avoid New Dip, Meany Says

(Continued from Page 1)

in the 20 percent tax levied on the first taxable-income bracket.

Meany said, in response to questions from CBS Correspondents Bill Leonard, Paul Niven and Roger Mudd that if Congress fails to take action to solve the problem of long-term unemployment before it adjourns, "we will undoubtedly inaugurate a campaign for a shorter workweek."

Replying to a suggestion that a cutback in the workweek standard from 40 hours to 35 would be "inflationary," Meany said a false fear of inflation had led the country into its current economic difficulties.

"I thought the real trouble is that the country has been figuring on inflation and we're in an economic problem because inflation didn't come," he declared.

"I'm not worried about the bugaboo of inflation. We have a high-wage, high-price economy here in this country. This is our record for 60 years, and if we don't have a live economy, we don't have a dynamic economy."

Wrapped up in the unemployment problem, Meany agreed, is the question of automation.

"We have always taken the position that we will accept any progressive change; we have always accepted new machinery; we accept automation," he declared. "But we would like to see automation serve as a boon to mankind, as a blessing of some kind, rather than serve to put people completely out of jobs."

Citing the examples of the auto and steel industries where permanent cutbacks in employment have accompanied sharp rises in production, the AFL-CIO president observed that automation had reached the stage where it should be the concern "of all the people."

He called on businessmen to accept the principle that industry itself, as well as the individual worker and his union, should be properly concerned with "the adverse economic consequences that come from automation."

Later, Meany presented the AFL-CIO's views on the state of the economy at a closed-door hearing of the House Ways & Means Committee.

In other areas, Meany made these points on the television interview:

- "Honest differences of opinion" with the Kennedy Administration over the best methods of fighting the recession indicate no lessening of support for the Administration's programs.
- It is the Labor Dept.'s job to intervene in emergency strike situations, but government "should not come to the bargaining table" except in the role of conciliator.
- Disputes between AFL-CIO affiliates have been reduced "tremendously" since the merger, particularly under the new procedures for handling internal disputes adopted at the federation's convention last December.
- Racketeers in unions and the "constant headlining" of McClellan Senate Committee exposures have cost the labor movement "a good deal of its standing with the American people . . . and frankly we can see the results of this in labor board elections."

"I don't think we get the credit that we should get for the fact we tried to do something about the racketeers," Meany declared. "We kicked them out."

8-4-62

Jobless Rate Drops to 5.3%, Low for Year to a total of 900,000. This is the first time since 1960 that the total of long-term jobless—those out of work 15 weeks or longer—dropped below 1 million.

(Continued from Page 1)

Of the 900,000 long-term unemployed, some 600,000 have been jobless for six months or longer, a total unchanged over the month.

The key jobless rate of 5.3 percent for July, adjusted for seasonal influences, means 53 of every 1,000 persons in the work force are looking for work and cannot find it.

A year ago the jobless rate was 6.9 percent; in July 1960 it was 5.5 percent. The low for July since World War II was 2.7 percent in 1953.

Counted among the employed in July, the report said were 2.7 million non-farm workers on part-time for economic reasons. This was the same total as in June, although a slight decline usually occurs about this time of year.

In breaking down the civilian employment total of 69.6 million, the report showed non-farm jobs rising seasonally by 250,000 to 63.5 million in July or 1.5 million higher than a year ago. Farm employment fell as expected, by about 200,000 to 6.1 million.

Boggs, Long Victorious In Louisiana Primary

A determined drive by self-styled "conservatives" and segregationists was turned back by Louisiana voters when Rep. Hale Boggs, House Democratic whip, won renomination in the Democratic primary and Sen. Earl Long also was renominated easily.

Boggs, who is third-ranking in the Kennedy Administration's House leadership, polled about 64 percent of the vote against three rivals who accused him of being too close to liberal national Democratic policies. Long won renomination by a 4-1 majority over a retired Army lieutenant colonel.

The primary results, Boggs said, represented a "momentous victory over the hate and fear mongers of the John Birch Society" and a defeat of those who "imputed ill" to the President.

In Arkansas, Democratic Gov. Orval E. Faubus won renomination for an unprecedented fifth term by winning more than half the primary votes against five challengers. Nearly complete unofficial returns gave Faubus 204,000 votes against 82,000 for Rep. Dale Alford and 81,000 for former Gov. Sid McMath.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, scored a 2-1 victory over Winston Chandler, a conservative businessman who accused Fulbright of ignoring local problems.

The civil rights issue, which flared into worldwide prominence in 1957 when Faubus used the National Guard to delay court-ordered desegregation of Little Rock's Central High School, played no significant part in the primary this year.

1962 Wage Settlements Held 'Non-Inflationary'

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, in two midyear progress reports on labor issues, described wage gains bargained so far this year as "clearly non-inflationary" and said he was "very gratified at the low level of strike activity."

On wage developments, Goldberg told reporters that major collective bargaining contracts during the first six months of 1962 affected 2 million workers and resulted in an average wage hike of 3.2 percent.

Of all workers affected, more than one-fifth were railroad non-operating employes whose wage rise amounted to an annual rate of less than 3 percent.

Goldberg said about the same proportion were in basic steel, aluminum or related industries, where contracts provided no change in wage scales the first contract year but did increase fringe benefits by amounts estimated at 10 to 11 cents an hour or about 2.5 percent.

He was asked if the wage increase and the fringe benefits taken together as total labor cost violate the Administration's "guideline" that labor and management keep contract improvements down to about the 3 percent rate of productivity gain to prevent inflation. He replied the fringe benefit amount was concentrated in steel and would not materially affect the overall figure.

On strike activity, Goldberg characterized the year and a half of the Kennedy administration as "one of achievement."

Public Works Cleared for House Vote

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, August 11, 1962 | No. 32

NLRB 'Free Speech' Shift Outlaws Employer Threats

Works Bill Okayed For House

A job-creating $900 million public works bill moved a key step toward a House floor vote as the Rules Committee cleared the measure, 8-6, after a two-month holdup.

With an immediate tax cut still strongly opposed in Congress, stepped-up public works spending was pushed as a means of stimulating the economy and denting high unemployment. The House Public Works Committee estimated that the program would create 150,000 new jobs, concentrated in areas of heaviest unemployment.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in a letter to all members of Congress, urged approval of the bill without "crippling amendments."

Top Priority

Labor, he said, gives "top priority to this legislation to attack continued high unemployment and to build urgently needed public works."

A sharp fight over the measure loomed in the House, where Administration leaders have listed it as a "must" bill and House Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck denounced it as "a political slush fund" and a "blank check" for the President. The bill is expected to reach the House floor later this month.

The bill authorizes $300 million for direct federal projects

(Continued on Page 8)

Pay, Reinstatement Ordered for 209

Hartford, Conn.—The National Labor Relations Board has ordered the Jacobs Mfg. Co. to reinstate with lost pay 209 Auto Workers who struck Sept. 16, 1960, and whom the company refused to rehire when the strike was called off June 18, 1961.

UAW Local 379 struck when a new company official tried to rewrite contract provisions in effect for 20 years. A three-man board panel directed management to lay off 150 strikebreakers, if necessary, to find jobs for the strikers; to put any who remain unhired on a preferential hiring list; and to bargain with the UAW on new contract terms.

LATIN AMERICAN AND CARIBBEAN trade union leaders, here as the first group for training under the American Institute for Free Labor Development program, are presented to Pres. Kennedy by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in White House Rose Garden. Kennedy welcomed the group, reminding the students that no country could have a free society today "without a free trade union movement." (See story, Page 7.)

Health Care Foe Beaten In Primary

A leading opponent of the Anderson-King health care bill, Rep. James B. Frazier, Jr., was knocked out of office in the Tennessee Democratic primary by Wilkes T. Thrasher, Jr., on the straightout issue of health care under the social security system.

Another veteran Democratic opponent of the Anderson-King bill, Rep. J. Carlton Loser, trailed Richard Fulton, his opponent, by 143 votes in the 5th District (Nashville) but the final result awaited tabulation of 296 challenged absentee ballots from a single city ward.

Thrasher, who had the backing of senior citizens' groups and labor, beat Frazier by a narrow 271-vote margin in the 3rd District (Chattanooga), and his victory was certified by the election commissioners.

The result was hailed as particularly significant by James M. McDevitt, director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, because of Frazier's membership on the powerful House Ways & Means Committee. Frazier had helped block action on the Anderson-King bill.

McDevitt said Thrasher's triumph was a sign that health care "will be a major issue throughout this campaign." The COPE director praised the effectiveness of

(Continued on Page 8)

NAM vs. Standard & Poor's:

Sligh Issues 'Reply' To Meany on Profits

By John M. Barry

A new economic document released by Charles R. Sligh, Jr., executive vice president of the National Association of Manufacturers, reiterates the NAM argument that "more profits" and fewer "burdens" are needed by industry if the economy is going to underwrite full employment.

The analysis was billed as the NAM's answer to a challenge from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to show how more profits would create more jobs.

In presenting the NAM paper at a news conference, Sligh pointblank rejected the AFL-CIO's position that total cash flow—including depreciation reserves as well as so-called net profits—is the true indicator of a corporation's "worth," not profits alone, and that cash flow has been steadily rising.

Sligh ridiculed this argument as coming from a source "obviously not connected with business" and declared that depreciation has nothing to do with profits, but is "a cost of doing business."

In so saying, he put the NAM squarely in opposition to a leading firm "connected with business," the widely-known investment advisory service, Standard & Poor's Corp., which 10 days earlier had taken full-page newspaper advertisements advising investors to look to cash flow as the "key" to a company's "real earnings."

The Standard & Poor's ad urged investors to be "very careful" in examining earnings reports, not to look merely at reported profits but to determine the cash flow as well.

"Cash flow is another way of

(Continued on Page 8)

Five-Year Precedent Set Aside

By Eugene A. Kelly

A five-year-old precedent under which employers have been given wide latitude in assailing unions verbally, under the so-called "free speech" clause of the Taft-Hartley Act, has been set aside by the National Labor Relations Board.

The effect is to serve notice that employer language which in the context of an organizing campaign involves threats or coercion will no longer be considered protected by the "free speech" provision.

Four members of the board, in a unanimous decision specifically overturning the National Furniture Mfg. Co. rule of Oct. 16, 1957, ordered the NLRB regional director to open and count eight challenged ballots previously impounded after an election among employes at Dal-Tex Optical Co., Inc., Dallas, Tex.

In the event the union—the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers—is not shown to have received a majority of votes cast in the election of last Sept. 22, the election must be set aside, the board ruled, and a new election held.

The Sept. 22 election was the second held at the plant. Previously the NLRB had set aside a first election on the ground that the employer used threats and promises of benefit if the IUE was defeated. The same employer was found guilty, after two later hearings, of discharging and demoting certain employes for giving tes-

(Continued on Page 2)

Operating Unions Set Strike To Save Rules

By David L. Perlman

Two hundred thousand rail operating workers have been alerted by their unions to prepare for a nationwide strike to prevent the elimination of more than 60,000 jobs on Aug. 16 and the scrapping of work and safety rules negotiated over more than half a century of collective bargaining.

"The day the railroads place these (work rules changes) into effect, there will be a strike," Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen told newsmen.

Before the showdown date, however, Pres. Kennedy under the Railway Labor Act can appoint an emergency board and freeze the dispute for at least 60 days.

An unexpected switch in tactics by railroad management in a federal courtroom in Chicago set in motion the latest in a chain of events which began more than three years ago when the railroads launched a massive advertising and publicity campaign in an effort to pin a "featherbedding" label on rail workers.

(Continued on Page 3)

APPRENTICE PAINTERS learning their trade at Washburne Trade School, Chicago, under a program sponsored jointly with the Painters Union and the Painters Joint Apprentice Committee, received concentrated instruction in spray techniques at the DeVilbiss factory branch in that city. Here Tony Stranges, DeVilbiss spray school instructor, demonstrates airless spraying.

Tax Cut Seen Needed:

Economic Slowdown Blamed on Congress

Responsibility for the nation's economic lag rests largely with Congress, not the Kennedy Administration, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a radio-television interview with Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.).

Meany suggested that Congress had failed to implement the programs offered by the Kennedy Administration to stimulate the economy and reduce high unemployment.

"I think the President has made certain proposals that would have an effect on the economy, but I don't think he has secured the cooperation of Congress," the federation president declared on Keating's weekly program, broadcast by 26 New York State stations.

He cited specifically the large-scale public works program proposed by Kennedy and backed by the AFL-CIO, which so far "we have been unable to get through Congress."

Meany said he was not expressing a partisan view or trying to tag either party with responsibility, but declared that with "more cooperation from Congress on the President's plan, I think we'd be in a better position."

He insisted, too, that the economy still needs the "temporary shot in the arm" of a tax cut, despite a slight drop in unemployment figures in July.

"We still have hundreds of thousands of people who are permanently unemployed due to the fact that the industries in which they work no longer provide employment—not this year, next year or any time in the foreseeable future," Meany declared.

Mediation Supported

On the question of increasing federal activities in the field of labor-management relations, he said the government's efforts to mediate and conciliate disputes are "all to the good."

He expressed firm opposition, however, to government intervention "to the point where they might be dictating terms or indicating a proper solution from the viewpoint of the public."

"In other words, this idea that the Administration is charged with asserting the public interest in these things, I don't agree with that," Meany declared.

Nor is compulsory arbitration an acceptable solution even in critical industries, he asserted, adding:

"If a business venture is of such paramount interest to the country as a whole and to all of the people in the country that we are going to deny the workers in that particular venture the right to strike—which all other workers have—then I think we ought to eliminate any idea of private profit. I think these things then should be government-owned and these people should be civil service the same as any other government employes."

Meany reaffirmed labor's support of the Administration's trade expansion bill, but stressed again that such support would be withdrawn if Congress knocks out the adjustment features designed to help workers and businesses adversely affected by a rise in imports.

Cites Facets of Problem

He acknowledged that some unions with "particular problems" have reservations about the bill, but said that over-all the AFL-CIO takes the position that "America has got to trade with the rest of the free world."

"This has a political facet to it entirely apart from the economic facet," Meany observed. "We've got to trade with the Common Market . . . If a particular group is going to be hurt by the competition of foreign trade, it's not going to serve our purpose as the leader of the free world to set up tariff barriers which would bring retaliatory action on the part of our friends . . .

"We've got to minimize the effects of this both on the employe and on the employer and, if necessary, on the community by the different devices that are now in the trade adjustment provisions."

5-Year-Old 'Free Speech' Rule Repudiated in NLRB Decision

(Continued from Page 1)

timony before the board, and then for discharging other employes before the second election.

After the second balloting, the union asserted that the employer made electioneering speeches containing threats and offers of benefits. In its decision the board cited these statements by the employer:

- He demanded openly whether employes wanted to "gamble all these things"—existing benefits—on results of a union victory.
- He said that if required by the law to bargain with the union, he would do so "on a cold-blooded business basis" with the result that employes "may come out with a lot less than you have now."
- He referred to the probability of a strike and said "I will go right along running this business and replace the strikers."

Danger to Workers Cited

Even a cursory reading of the employer's speeches, the board wrote, "demonstrates that they were couched in language calculated to convey to the employes the danger and futility of their designating the union."

They contained a "clear-cut, readily understandable threat" that he would bargain "from scratch" as though no economic benefits had previously been given, and the employes would suffer economic loss and reprisal if they voted for the union, the board held.

Further, it said, employer references to replacement of strikers and loss of their benefits created a fear even greater because they occurred after management engaged in a series of unfair labor practices including, most recently, the discharge of three workers for "acting contrary to the employer's wishes."

Intermingled with the above threats, the NLRB said, were statements in which the employer "clearly conveyed the idea" that naming the union would be futile and the employer "would not sign a contract even if required to engage in bargaining."

When the company spokesman said he would not change his wage policy, he was "announcing a predetermination not to bargain" on wages, the board said. It summed up the legal position as follows:

"Prior cases involving objections to elections have held, although not uniformly, that statements similar to those herein to the effect that the employer would not bargain were merely an expression of the employer's 'legal position' . . .

"We find no logic or sound reason" for such a holding, the board said.

Ruling that such so-called employer "free speech" is conduct interfering with the exercise of a "free and untrammeled choice" in a representation election, the NLRB specifically overruled the National Furniture Mfg. Co. precedent and similar cases stemming from it.

In future cases, the board said, it will set aside an election where it finds that the employer's conduct has resulted in "substantial interference with the election regardless of the form in which the statement was made."

In the Dal-Tex case, the board found the employer's conduct "generated an atmosphere of fear of economic loss and complete hostility to the union which destroyed the laboratory conditions in which the board must hold its elections and prevented the employes' expression of a free choice."

The opinion was signed by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown. Member Boyd Leedom, concurring, said he agreed with the majority that the election should be set aside because the employer, in effect, told his employes that he "would not bargain in good faith." He declined to pass on other issues.

Earlier Decision

In an earlier decision on the employer "speech" issue, the NLRB recently set aside an election held in April at the Clarksville, Tenn., manufacturing division of the Trane Co. The Machinists who lost by six votes charged the company issued false and misleading statements so close to the voting date that the union had no time to rebut them.

McCullough, Fanning and Brown ordered a new election on the ground that where one party indulges in "material misrepresentations on the eve of the election, which it cannot be expected that employes will be able to recognize as such," the permissive bounds of propaganda have been exceeded. Members Leedom and Philip Ray Rodgers dissented.

NLRB Backs Private Street Handbill Ban

Rochester, N. Y.—The National Labor Relations Board, reversing a trial examiner, has ruled that management of a big plant here was within its rights when it barred distribution of union organizing handbills on an access street leading to the plant and its parking lot. The street is company-owned and maintained.

Machinists Dist. 6 had charged the General Dynamics Corp. discriminated illegally by barring IAM handbills on the street while permitting the Rochester Independent Workers, an unaffiliated local which represents company employes, to distribute newspapers at the firm's Telecommunications plant here.

A trial examiner, who found the company enforced its no-distribution rule against the IAM but not against the unaffiliated union, was overruled by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom.

They said the street from which IAM organizers were barred was clearly posted as private property, and never was dedicated as a public street. Besides, they said, the union had distributed handbills to company employes at five other plant entrances every week for about six months beginning Feb. 14, 1961.

In a dissenting opinion NLRB Member Gerald A. Brown said the company interfered with the right of employes to receive information from union representatives who were legally using the access street.

Bookbinders Charge Reynolds Metals Co.

Newark, N. J. — Unfair labor practice charges have been filed with the National Labor Relations Board by Bookbinders Local 62 against the Reynolds Metals Co., Harrison, N. J.

The union said the company had refused to bargain in good faith on a new contract for employes covered by an agreement that expired on Aug. 1 and the subcontracting of the work they had previously done.

Labor Often Hit NLRB On Free Speech Doctrine

Vigorous objections to "rewriting" of the labor law by administrative decision of the National Labor Relations Board during the Eisenhower Administration was recorded by the 1957 and 1959 conventions of the AFL-CIO. The 1957 convention specifically charged an "outrageous arrogation" of authority in interpreting the employer "free speech" rule.

Under the "pretext" of protecting employer free speech, a convention resolution said, the board allowed "anti-union statements of plainly coercive character." Those included:

- A ruling that a declaration that the company might "move the plant" was merely a prophecy, not a threat, and therefore not coercive.
- A ruling that a company statement that the firm would not recognize the union even if it won an election was merely an "expression of the employer's legal position."

"Under cover of a purported concern for 'free speech,' the labor board continues to sanction employer conduct which makes a farce of elections," the resolution said. It charged that employers were given a "free hand to brainwash captive audiences of their employes." It added:

"Employer diatribes against unions as un-Christian, un-American and Communist have the board's practical approval. Anti-Semitic and anti-Negro propaganda is widely used by employers, and here again the board will not set the elections aside.

"The present board manages to overlook the fact that what may be 'free speech' to the employer is coercion to the employe."

The fourth constitutional convention of the AFL-CIO last year pointed out that the Supreme Court had "repeatedly" reversed anti-union decisions of the Eisenhower-era board.

Strikebreakers the Issue:

Fellow Union Members Aid Potash Workers Out 11 Weeks

Carlsbad, N. M.—A strike by 700 potash workers against the Intl. Minerals & Chemical Corp. here moved into its 11th week as the company continued to operate with out-of-state strikebreakers despite a settlement reached with the area's other potash mining and refining firms.

Some 2,200 members of the Stone Workers and the Machinists, who returned to work at the five companies where settlements were reached, were acting on methods of assisting the IMCC strikers. Any aid decided on will be used to help members of all three unions at the struck plant — the Stone Workers, Operating Engineers and Boilermakers.

Meanwhile the four unions, which have bargained jointly, are pressing unfair labor practice charges against the industry bargaining committee before the National Labor Relations Board.

They charged that the companies forced the strike and prolonged it by refusing to bargain on major issues and by naming negotiators who lacked authority to commit their companies.

The unions are pressing the charges in the belief that IMCC workers would be entitled to claim their jobs back from the IMCC strikebreakers, brought into Carlsbad by the company through a nationwide recruiting campaign.

As the five other companies reached agreement on a two-year contract providing a 17-cent package of wage and fringe gains, Intl. Minerals launched in the courts what the joint union committee termed an "all-out effort to destroy organized labor in Carlsbad."

Acting on a contempt charge brought by the company, based on a sweeping injunction issued early in the strike, State Dist. Judge John R. Brand fined Stone Workers Local 177—which represents the bulk of IMCC employes—$10,000, with an additional fine of $1,000 and 30 days in jail for the local's president, Casimir Alexandre.

Eight union members, including four members of the Machinists and one from the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, were sentenced to jail terms of 30 to 90 days. The IBEW has not been on strike, but its members have respected the picket lines of striking unions.

Appeal Stays Sentence

The sentences were stayed pending the union's appeal to the New Mexico Supreme Court.

The temporary injunction, made permanent by the judge at the same time he issued the contempt sentences, restrained the unions and their members from a wide range of actions, including "hindering" or "threatening" strikebreakers. It was based on what New Mexico labor has termed a "union-busting" law passed in 1959. Labor attorneys in the state said the contempt sentences were the first imposed under the legislation.

The chairman of the joint union bargaining committee, Carlin Allen, said the unions were surprised at the "severity" of the sentences "'since there has been no violence on the picket lines and our unions have consistently called upon their members to avoid trouble in the community."

He charged that the company had pressed the charges "in the hope that black headlines and heavy fines would crush the spirit and wipe out the resources of its employes."

Settlement of the strike, with the help of a federal mediator, came as the potash firms agreed to union proposals for a severance pay plan, an industrywide health insurance program and other contract improvements, in addition to a pay increase.

Early Demands Dropped

The companies—U.S. Borax & Chemical, National Potash, Duval Sulphur & Potash, Potash Corp. of America, and Southwest Potash—earlier dropped demands which had led to the strike.

These included a sweeping so-called "management rights" clause, which the unions had said was lifted "almost verbatim" from a U.S. Chamber of Commerce handbook, and a sharp limitation on arbitration of grievances.

THE FIRST FARM WORKER in America to benefit from a union-won pension plan, Emil Schmidt of Franklinville, N. J. (center), accepts his first check from Pres. Leon B. Schachter of Meat Cutters' Local 56. At left is Jack Dickerson, chief steward of the local's farm division at Seabrook Farms, where Schmidt worked for 25 years.

Retiring Farm Worker Gets Milestone Pension

Seabrook, N. J.—Tens of thousands of workers retire every year with union-won pensions, but 66-year-old Emil Schmidt represented a milestone when he retired recently.

Schmidt was the first American farm worker to benefit from a union-negotiated pension. After 25 years of work at Seabrook Farms, he retired on a pension negotiated by Meat Cutters' Local 56.

Moved with emotion, Schmidt told a labor-management dinner honoring him and 34 cannery workers, also retiring, that he never expected field workers to receive pensions. He will receive $2 a month for every year of service or $50, plus social security benefits, under the non-contributory plan.

Schmidt, a native of Poland, started working at Seabrook in 1936. He was one of the earliest members of the union when Seabrook was finally organized.

The efforts to organize farm workers in New Jersey during the 1930s were repulsed by violence and vigilantism.

Seabrook, organized by Local 56 in 1941, is the only factory farm in the United States under a union shop contract. Local 56 bargains for 1,000 full-time farm and cannery workers and 2,000 additional seasonal workers.

Farm workers generally are only partially covered by the social security system. They were covered for the first time in 1955 but only if they met certain income tests; an amendment in 1956 knocked out some 250,000 workers, the Labor Dept. estimated, by raising the income test to $150 a year from a single employer from the earlier $100 and by requiring time-payment accounting when much farm work is on the piece-rate system.

Rail Work Rules Strike Set by Operating Unions

(Continued from Page 1)

Management, after breaking off direct negotiations with the five operating unions, announced last month that the railroads would unilaterally put into effect recommendations made by a presidential commission early this year. The unions had rejected the proposals as mere "sugar-coating" of the original management proposals.

The operating unions—Locomotive Firemen, Trainmen, Switchmen, Conductors, and Locomotive Engineers — sought a federal injunction to block the railroads from carrying out their threat. They argued that the railroads had not followed the procedures of the Railway Labor Act in serving notice of the changes and that a number of the proposed changes directly violated existing law.

As hearings got under way on the injunction request, the railroads suddenly substituted the terms of the original work rules demands of 1959. The court ruled that the union injunction suit should be dismissed because the issues raised by the unions no longer applied. A new union injunction request was pending as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

Despite general expectation of appointment of an emergency board that would block a strike, the five unions set up stand-by procedures for the movement of milk, hospital and troop trains, and goods involved in missile and other defense programs.

Although railroad demands for elimination of the jobs of firemen-helpers have been the most publicized feature of the long dispute, the proposed work rules changes would affect all crafts, either through elimination of jobs or through major changes in mileage-hour rates of pay and the lengthening of distances between crew changes.

Railroad communities throughout the nation have joined with the unions in protesting that the changes would transform them into "ghost towns."

Also on the bargaining table, for more than two years, have been union counter-proposals involving overtime and shift pay and other conditions of employment long standard in other industries.

Pension Suits Filed by Retired Duluth Busmen

Duluth, Minn.—Retired members of the Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes here have sued two bus companies for supplementary pension benefits bargained away by the unaffiliated Teamsters after a narrow raiding victory.

Oscar Rolla, former president of the Duluth Transit Employes Local 1128, and other retired workers also seek restoration of a hospital and medical plan and $500 group life insurance.

The pension and insurance benefits, they charge, were discontinued by the Duluth-Superior Transit Co. and the Duluth-Superior Bus Co. in recent negotiations with the Teamsters, who had edged out the Transit Employes local by a six-vote margin.

Although the pension benefits were modest—paying up to $50 a month in all—Rolla said discontinuance of the supplementary plan would reduce benefits to many retired employes by more than half that amount.

"I am astounded that the Teamsters would agree to such a proposal," Rolla declared. "I cannot believe that they are so weak they have to punish retired employes to get benefits for those still working."

Because of severe unemployment in the Duluth area, the drivers had agreed to compulsory retirement at age 65 to make room for younger employes, Rolla recalled. But they did so, he added, in the belief that the pension plan negotiated by Local 1128 would continue for life.

John M. Elliott, international president of the Motor Coach Employes, said the union had beaten back a series of attempted raids by the Teamsters and that the Duluth-Superior loss stood out as an exception. He described the subsequent barter of the retired workers' benefits as a "real tragedy."

"All of this should be a warning to trade unionists to beware of Teamster promises," Elliott declared.

Oil Workers To Ask 6.5% In Bargaining

Denver—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, preparing to start negotiations on almost 700 contracts in the oil industry, has reported that more than 75 percent of its oil units have voted to ratify a program recommended by the union's national bargaining committee.

The program calls for wage increases of 6.5 percent, with a floor of 17 cents an hour for any individual worker, either in wages or fringe benefits.

Since the last wage change was in December 1960, the union said, its 6.5 percent goal would not be inflationary under the general guidelines for non-inflationary settlements proposed by the Kennedy Administration.

Major Jobless Areas Drop from 51 to 48

The number of major job areas with substantial unemployment dropped to 48 in July, lowest total since pre-recession July 1960, the Labor Dept. has announced.

In June there were 51 areas with 6 percent or over jobless.

The monthly survey of the nation's 150 major labor market areas showed improvement in four areas since June. Over-all, the recent pace of advance was "somewhat more moderate than earlier in the year," the report said.

The three areas removed from the substantial unemployment list were Muskegon-Muskegon Heights, Mich., Utica-Rome, N. Y., and Spokane, Wash. A fourth area—Norfolk-Portsmouth, Va.—improved from the "moderate" range of 3 to 5.9 percent jobless to the 1.5 to 2.9 percent jobless group.

July's total of 48 areas with unemployment of 6 percent or over compared to 88 such areas in July a year ago and to 37 in July 1960. The low reached between the 1958 and 1961 recessions was 31 in January 1960; the all-time high was 101 in March and April of last year.

The number of smaller areas with substantial unemployment fell to 190 in July from June's 198, the report added. This list totaled 230 in July a year ago and 116 in July 1960.

A list applying the factor of duration as well as level of unemployment showed 19 "major" centers, 104 "smaller" areas and 394 "very small" areas experiencing "substantial and persistent unemployment."

The Labor Dept. also said reports from employers on hiring expectations suggested continued "moderate overall" job gains to mid-September in about 80 percent of the 150 major areas. These expected gains are centered mainly in seasonally-affected non-manufacturing activities and non-durable goods manufacturing industries.

Simkin Appoints Schlossberg Aide

Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service has appointed Stephen I. Schlossberg, Washington lawyer, as his special assistant.

Schlossberg has been a partner in the law firm of Van Arkel & Kaiser and has done extensive work in labor-management relations and labor law. He will continue to serve as adjunct professor of law at Georgetown University.

His predecessor, Dr. Wayne E. Howard, will resume his post as assistant professor of industry at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance & Commerce.

An Equity Restored

THE NATIONAL LABOR Relations Board has restored a sense of equity and justice to the administration of the nation's basic industrial relations law by its significant decision on the relationship between an employer's threats and coercive language and "free speech."

The board's decision grows out of a long history of union organizing efforts going back to before passage of the National Labor Relations Act in the 1930s. Prior to the passage of the NLRA, an employer could arbitrarily fire any worker he suspected of union activity. The worker had no recourse, no legal rights to protect his desire to join or to help organize a union.

The labor act provided specifically that a worker could not be discharged for engaging in union activity, legally protecting workers' rights to organize and to join unions. Employers then shifted tactics and dismissed workers suspected of union activity for any number of spurious reasons. Unions filed unfair labor practice charges and as the NLRB sifted through these, more and more employers were caught out in union-busting tactics.

The employers, bent on bitter-end resistance to unions, then attempted a new strategy. They raised the issue of "free speech," contending that they were not allowed under the NLRA properly to state their case to their workers in opposition to unionization. This led eventually to a change, written into the Taft-Hartley amendments to the act, giving recognition to the "free speech" claim.

A few years later under the Eisenhower Administration, the NLRB began to extend the "free speech" doctrine to a number of cases where an employer openly threatened workers with loss of jobs and economic benefits if they voted pro-union in an NLRB election.

It was this precedent that the present NLRB overturned in its decision in the Dal-Tex Optical Co. case. The effect is to curb the latitude given employers in their attacks on unions under former board decisions. Employer language, which in the context of an organizing campaign involves threats or coercion, will no longer be protected by the "free speech" provision of the law, the board said.

The "free speech" decision is the latest in a number of rulings that have overturned precedents set in former years,

This restoration of justice under the law is a long stride forward toward a better climate for labor-management relations.

The Education of Sligh

INDICATIVE of the archaic economic thinking that pervades the National Association of Manufacturers is the contention of its executive vice president, Charles R. Sligh, Jr., that depreciation allowances are a "cost of doing business" and have nothing to do with profits.

To those directly concerned with investment problems, Sligh's approach to understanding profits is so much hogwash. Standard & Poor's Corp., a topflight and widely recognized investment advisory service, recently told the public bluntly in full page newspaper ads that cash flow is the "key" to a company's real earnings.

Cash flow is the amount of a company's net profits plus its depreciation reserves. Standard & Poor's advertisment commented that "cash flow is another way of saying cash earnings." It urged investors to be careful in looking at earning reports to determine the cash flow as well as the reported profits.

The NAM's Sligh could well profit from a refresher course in modern economics. Better yet, he could subscribe to Standard & Poor's and help the firm's cash flow.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, August 11, 1962 No. 32

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'That's Enough of That, Buddy'

Egyptian Labor Anti-Communist:

Seeds of Free Trade Unionism Sprout Weakly Under Nasser

By Arnold Beichman

CAIRO—Pres. Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt was helped to power in March 1954 as a result of a series of strikes by several big Egyptian unions.

That, plus the indispensable support of military leaders in the Revolutionary Command Council, gave him victory and total control of Egypt's 27 million people. But for Egypt's labor movement, the reward was restraints imposed by the regime. There are no strikes in Egypt today and collective bargaining in the recognized sense of the word is non-existent.

Yet one cannot say that the Egyptian labor movement is absolutely controlled by the government or that Egypt is a totalitarian country like the Soviet Union. Within discernible limits, there was a form of collective bargaining with government the ultimate arbiter between employer and union. However, since Nasser nationalized most industry and commerce a year ago in the name of "Arab socialism," whatever collective bargaining there once might have been is now minimal.

The seeds of free trade unionism sprout, however weakly, in this unfertile soil because the union leaders are not government-created puppets though they swear by Nasser. They were union officials before the 1952 revolution toppled King Farouk from his British-braced throne.

Whether they can survive in the years ahead is the question. So far they have declined to go along with a government "suggestion" that unions extend their present functions to include policing the workers. There is still a measure of vagueness as to what this "suggestion" entails.

The question of survival arises also from Egypt's economic crisis, the country's overriding problem. Despite its military panoply, its "Arab socialism," and the supposedly magnetic quality of "Nasserism" in the rest of the Arab world, Egypt is inching along the road to economic stability.

One big reason is geography. Only 4 percent of Egypt's 386,000 square miles (Texas and New Mexico combined) is habitable — the narrow, squiggly Nile Valley and delta. The rest is desert relieved by a scattering of oases.

A second reason is the population explosion which in a decade could mean a 25 percent increase to 34 million people. Egypt's birth-rate is one of the highest in the world. Cultivatable land is limited and each year there are 600,000 new mouths to feed while the death rate declines. Industrialization is and will continue to be predictably insufficient to meet the growing job demand.

BY AND LARGE, union membership is strongly encouraged by the government which has legalized the check-off of dues. The total membership in the 65 unions which constitute the Egyptian Confederation of Labor (ECL) is 1.25 million, a five-fold increase since the revolution.

The largest union is the Textile Workers, while the best organized and probably the nearest to a "free" organization is the Oil Workers headed by Anwar Salama, who also is president of the ECL. Salama's union is a long-time affiliate of the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers (IFPW) headed by Pres. O. A. Knight of the AFL-CIO Oil Workers. Salama will be making his fourth trip to the U.S. next month.

Communist infiltration, a problem some years ago in the Egyptian labor movement, largest and most effectively organized in the Arab world, is minimal. Even though the Soviet Union is supplying Nasser with virtually all his armaments and even though "positive neutralism" demands visits to Iron Curtain countries, Egyptian labor leaders are anti-Communist.

If anything, there is a great and friendly interest in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions (not that there is any prospect of affiliation) even though, technically, the ECL is part of the anti-ICFTU All-African Trade Union Federation. An ICFTU representative accepted an invitation to the 10th anniversary independence celebrations in Cairo last month as did a representative of the Communist World Federation of Trade Unions. It was quite apparent that the ICFTU delegate was the more warmly received.

The U.S. has made a large political commitment to Nasser on the assumption that, despite all the threats and armaments display, Egypt has no intention of starting a war either against Israel or any of the Arab countries whose rulers, particularly those in Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Iraq, dislike Nasser intensely.

There is apprehension, however, that despite a minimum wage, a 42-hour week decree, social welfare provisions and worker representation on company boards of directors, the economic crisis will force Nasser to impose even greater controls on Egyptian labor than already exist.

Morgan Says:

Protection from New Drugs—An Issue of Health vs. Profits

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

THE BLOOD-CURDLING FACT is that if it had not been for the alertness and tenacity of a doctor in the U.S. Food & Drug Administration, the tragedy of the tranquilizer thalidomide might have been as serious in this country as it has been in Europe.

Morgan

Under existing law, once the required experimental data on a new drug are in and registered as favorable, if the FDA does not approve it within 60 days the manufacturer may go ahead and sell it to the public anyway. But the FDA's Dr. Frances Kelsey, to whom Pres. Kennedy paid deserved tribute, resorted to a series of technicalities to delay that deadline because she was suspicious of thalidomide's side effects. In the interim evidence emerged in Europe associating the drug with an epidemic of malformed births and it was kept off the market.

A revealing sidelight to this situation is given in a minority report to the drug industry regulation legislation reported out by the Senate Judiciary Committee after Chairman James Eastland of Mississippi, and others, had gutted it of major reforms. Between Sept. 12, 1960, the report said, when the William S. Merrell Co. first applied for approval of thalidomide, and Nov. 30, 1961, when the firm advised FDA of the birth abnormalities, Merrell contacted FDA's Bureau of Medicine 50 times "in an effort to get this drug on the American market and a number of the efforts . . . . were very vigorous." Ironically enough, the company's proposed labeling stressed the value of the drug in combating nausea in pregnancy.

It is painfully clear, as the President has just recognized, that additional legislation is needed to protect the public in the area of drugs and medicines. The FDA has been desperately undermanned for years and now Congress appears to be preparing—belatedly—to go along with a Kennedy regime request for a 25 percent increase in staff. Since there is no guarantee that the public will always have a Dr. Kelsey on its side, Sen. Kefauver's proposal that the FDA not be held to a strict time limit in approving new drugs seems reasonable.

In answer to a question, the President said regulations should be "tougher" and indicated he would like to reverse present procedure under which a pharmaceutical house may arrange with doctors for the experimental or investigational use of a new drug without federal clearance. It was precisely from such experiments that the few reported tragedies with thalidomide in this country have arisen.

AN ADDITIONAL IRONY developed at Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey's committee hearings on thalidomide—the fact that German doctors had reported some side effects to this drug as early as the summer of 1960 but apparently this knowledge was not imparted to the U.S. manufacturer until more than a year later.

In addition to specific measures covering specific weaknesses it appears that a broader approach to the whole business of guarding the public interest in the drug field is necessary. In his special message to Congress on Mar. 14 recommending measures to protect the consumer, Kennedy said "it is time to give American men, women and children the same protection we have been giving hogs, sheep and cattle since 1913, under an act forbidding the marketing of worthless serums and other drugs for the treatment of these animals."

Kefauver's original bill was aimed not only at strengthening safety factors but at bringing down the high price of new drugs. This produced a great hue and cry from the industry which also strenuously objected to a requirement that all drug manufacturers be registered by the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare. On the Senate floor in June, Eastland denounced this as "dealing in socialism." This and other provisions in the bill were watered down.

Undoubtedly the Kefauver version was not a perfect bill; it may have contained inequities tending to discourage research—though this is debatable. But its basic objective was the protection of the public, not just additional regulation of the pharmaceutical industry for regulation's sake. The emphasis of the alterations engineered by Eastland was on protecting the industry. Who, one might ask, needs protection the most?

Industry research has yielded great benefits. Ninety percent of the prescription drugs sold today were unknown 20 years ago. All advances, the President observed, require some risk. But it does not seem unfair to suggest that company profits share this risk with the public's health.

Washington Reports:

'Inexpensive, Humane Program' Seen Aiding Migrant Workers

THE CONDITIONS UNDER which many migrant farm workers live are a health hazard to the consuming public as well as the workers themselves, Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N. J.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"The lack of sanitation can reflect itself in the product picked," Williams declared.

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.) joined Williams in backing proposed reform legislation, pointing out that Pres. Theodore Roosevelt's Country Life Commission urged migrant labor reform as far back as 1908.

He added: "We are still just talking about the situation. Everybody remembers the Grapes of Wrath, but nobody has worried enough about what's going on in so many parts of the nation."

Williams, sponsor of 11 bills to correct abuses of migrant labor, is hopeful of action on some of them in the present Congress.

"FOR THE FIRST TIME, legislation is moving," he said. "For the first time, Executive Dept. programs are taking shape. There is a pilot program for better housing down in Texas under Administrator Robert C. Weaver of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. This year, we got migrant youngsters specifically included in a vaccination program.

"The bills that have passed the Senate are moving in the House. Four of them have been reported out of the Education Committee there. A fifth, we believe, will be reported. I think the child care program will be re-enacted by the Senate and we are working hard in the House, too, to get that accepted.

"I think the door has been opened—the door of opportunity for migrant farm families — an inexpensive, most needed humane program."

Keating, co-sponsor of a bill to require registration of crew leaders of migrant workers, said there have been "hundreds of cases of abuses."

"The workers were not paid a just wage or were hired under false pretense," he said. "Nowhere in the country is there a group more susceptible to the wiles of the unscrupulous than the migrant laborer, because of his chronic economic plight and in almost all cases, his lack of education."

One of his bills, Williams explained, would provide grants to local school districts for inclusion of the children of migrant workers in their programs. Williams also reported that girls at Douglass College in New Jersey are helping provide classes and recreation for children of migrant workers when they reach New Jersey, and said he hoped the idea would spread.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

REPORTS FROM THE TIGHT Tennessee 5th District Democratic primary revealed that challenged absentee ballots—ballots supposedly requested and cast validly by the persons in whose names they were voted—were concentrated in a single ward, the 2nd Ward in Nashville.

The Nashville Tennessean bluntly charged that fraud was employed in an effort to keep incumbent Democratic Rep. J. Carlton Loser in office. On the basis of all other returns from the district, Loser lost by a 143-vote margin to Richard Fulton. These were the facts behind the fraud charge:

In a typical Nashville ward casting a total of around 2,000 votes, the normal request was for about 75 absentee ballots by citizens who expected to be away on election day and were concerned enough to exercise their franchise.

In the 2nd Ward, however, a total of only about 1,200 votes were cast and the number of absentee ballots requested validly was an alleged 310—a wholly disproportionate number.

In the 2nd Ward, moreover, Fulton beat Loser on the voting machines by a 619-590 margin. Any sharp deviation from this pattern in the absentee ballots raises a presupposition of irregularities.

The fixing of election results by fake absentee ballots is one of the oldest tricks in the armory of the professional politician who prefers to steal an election rather than lose on honest returns. It is notoriously employed by county "courthouse rings" in small towns in the Midwest, in certain congressional districts scattered around the country. It requires merely that local experts know who is away from home, file spurious requests in the names of the absentees for ballots, and then stuff the boxes to the extent deemed necessary to avoid defeat.

The courthouse rings practicing this ancient fraud are frequently loud in denunciation of the big pluralities run up by liberal candidates in the cities, which they piously call "corrupt."

* * *

THE TENNESSEE DEMOCRATIC primary results shook the complacency of those who claimed the health care issue was losing political appeal.

Rep. James B. Frazier, Jr., a seven-term veteran from Chattanooga, made his campaign directly on the importance of his rank on the key House Ways & Means Committee.

In Chattanooga it backfired because a hard-campaigning candidate, Wilkes T. Thrasher, made the case that Frazier had used his Ways & Means Committee post to block House action on the Anderson-King bill. The voters threw Frazier out.

The Fulton-Loser race was up in the air nearly a week after the election, with the challenged absentee ballots possibly deciding the issue unless the fraud charge could be made to stick under inadequately enforced state election laws. But social security health care was the major issue in Nashville, too—and Loser, who beat Fulton easily two years ago, learned that the issue was potent.

* * *

IN TWO BIG STATES the process of solidifying Republican strength for the November elections has been substantially advanced.

George Romney, who is being built up as a latter-day Wendell Willkie by some GOP hopefuls, got a firm grip on Michigan's party machinery as he rolled up a respectable primary vote total in his uncontested drive for nomination for governor. Old-line Republican officeholders who tangled with Romney were defeated.

This says little, of course, about what will happen in November, when Democratic incumbent Gov. John B. Swainson will be Romney's opponent. Michigan Republicans always think, in advance of an election, that they have liberal Democrats on the run.

A few days earlier, former Vice Pres. Nixon got a show of unity and militancy from California Republicans in support of his campaign for governor. His onetime mentor who deserted him briefly, Murray Chotiner, has pledged renewed support. Others who fought Nixon in the Republican primary have made obeisances. It will be a hard fight all the way with Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown.

MIGRATORY FARM WORKERS—"America's forgotten people"—will be aided by congressional legislation this year, Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N. J.), left, and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.), predicted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Teamster Raid Charge Heard In CWA Trial

James R. Hoffa, president of the unaffiliated Teamsters, pledged a $500,000 war chest for a raid on the Communications Workers' Western Electric installation unit, according to testimony at a CWA trial of the suspended national director of the unit.

The suspended official, Kenneth Silvers, and 21 local officers and members were charged with constitutional violations in attempting to lead 17,000 Western Electric equipment installers out of the CWA and into the Teamsters union, which was expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

On the opening day of the trial, the first ever held by the union, Silvers issued a declaration that he had resigned from the CWA. He was tried in absentia when he did not appear before the trial board, composed of three CWA local members appointed by the union's 1961 convention.

Nine of the local officials named in the charges appeared. If found guilty, they are subject to fine, suspension or expulsion, with the right of appeal to the CWA executive board and then to the union's convention.

One witness, Frank Wescott, president of New Jersey Local 1090, testified that Silvers during national Western Electric negotiations last February offered him a job in the Teamsters in exchange for the membership list of his local.

Wescott also testified that Silvers said he was getting $25,000 a year from the Teamsters and that the Teamsters were giving him $500,000 for the drive.

Other testimony centered on a meeting with Teamsters Vice Pres. Harold J. Gibbons at a Chicago hotel shortly after the CWA's convention in 1962. Silvers and other defendants allegedly attended the meeting.

GRASS ROOTS TRAINING in trade unionism is being taken by Liaquat Ali Khan, standing, from Pakistan by way of Manchester University, England, in the Harrisburg, Pa., office of Retail Clerks Local 1436. His mentor is Ernest Kornfeld (seated), veteran business manager of the local.

Clerks' Local Trains Pakistani in Unionism

Harrisburg, Pa.—A dark-haired 25-year-old Pakistani, son of one of the founders of the Moslem League, is learning about the structure, administration and operations of a trade union as an employe of Retail Clerks Local 1436 here.

His name is Liaquat Ali Khan and he is taking his training during eight weeks of his vacation from Manchester University, in England, where he is a senior. He was brought to Harrisburg by the union through Cornell University in cooperation with the Intl. Economics Students Association of Great Britain.

Under the guidance of Ernest Kornfeld, business manager of the local with a long background in the labor movement, he is doing everything that a union official would be called on to do—administration, organizing, negotiating, aiding in settling grievances, attending state and local government agency hearings.

"So far as we know," said Kornfeld, "this is the only case in America where a foreign student is being trained on the job by a local union.

"We felt this would accomplish more good than merely conducting tours for foreign students of unionism. It was our idea to help labor in Pakistan by giving on-the-job training.

"Khan is a regular employe of the union, an addition to the staff."

At the conclusion of his training period here, Khan will return to his studies in England and upon their completion will go back to Pakistan, where he will help organize unions made up of the thousands of citizens who are leaving the farms for factory and office jobs.

Khan said wages in Pakistan have "improved tremendously" and in some industries are regulated by minimum wage laws as in the United States. Unions have the right to strike in many situations, he said, but "there is a labor commissioner who appoints a panel to arbitrate—impose a settlement—in serious labor disputes."

The youth's father, Dr. Omar Khan, was a noted physician in Jabalpur, India. The Moslem League he helped found spurred the formation of Pakistan and its split from India, and furnished its first government.

"My father was well known for treating penniless patients, an uncommon practice among doctors in India," he said. "His humanitarianism inspired me to do similarly—to try to help my people."

'Past Due,' Convention Told:

ITU Chief Pushes Merger Movement

Cincinnati—The movement toward merger of the two largest unions in the printing and publishing industry appeared to be picking up momentum as the Typographical Union's 104th annual convention got under way here.

ITU Pres. Elmer Brown told a press conference that "the tremendous technological evolution which during the last 25 years has almost literally turned the graphic arts and related industries upside down, has made it strongly apparent that the separation of our crafts was a serious mistake."

He referred to the fact that in the 1890's and early 1900's the five international unions which today constitute the Allied Printing Trades Association left the ITU on friendly terms to form their own organizations.

"In this age of automation, photo-composition, offset printing and all the other facets of producing the printed word, overlapping jurisdiction, with its duplication of effort in organization and in collective bargaining, is plaguing all of our crafts," Brown said.

He said the ITU is pledged to seek a merger of the printing trades unions, and that the time is "past due" for such action.

Adding impetus to the merger discussions was Pres. Anthony J. De Andrade of the Printing Pressmen, who told the convention that his organization means business and that he is ready to sit down with officers of the ITU as long as necessary to formulate merger proposals for presentation in referendums to the memberships of both unions.

Brown distributed a pamphlet titled "Unite for the Future," urging a merger of the allied printing trades and related unions and setting forth a proposed program on how it can be done. De Andrade termed the proposals "sound" and said they formed "a practical basis" for organic merger.

In his annual report to the convention Brown called on the delegates to implement the nationwide drive for the enactment of citizens' job protection laws at state and city levels to help eliminate industry hiring of professional strikebreakers. During the past two and one-half years, eight states and seven cities have enacted such legislation, he reported.

He asked that the delegates consider raising the present floor of the union's strike benefit fund from $500,000 to a more realistic figure that will enable payment of constitutional strike-and-lockout benefits to larger local unions if several were in trouble at the same time.

Meany Asks Argentine To Fight Anti-Semitism

The AFL-CIO has called upon the Argentine government to take "the most vigorous steps" to prevent the spread of anti-Semitic terrorism.

The rise of "Nazi-type outrages," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wrote the Argentine ambassador to the United States, Dr. Roberto T. Alemann, constitutes "far more than isolated criminal incidents" perpetrated "by Nazis who fled to the Argentine in order to escape justice long overdue in Germany."

Meany told the ambassador that the AFL-CIO views the spread of anti-Semitic violence in Argentina with "great concern."

"These outbursts constitute a very grave threat to the freedom and well-being of the entire Argentine nation," he said.

"The record of Hitler and other totalitarian movements in all countries shows that brutal anti-Semitic attacks and assaults against minority groups always constitute an initial and integral phase of the campaign by anti-democratic organizations to destroy the rights and liberties of the whole people."

As free trade unionists, Meany continued, "we are deeply distressed by these inhuman attacks" regardless of where they occur.

"Attacks against human rights and democracy are mortal blows against the very foundation of free trade unions everywhere," he went on.

"We of the AFL-CIO, therefore, strongly urge the Argentine democratic authorities to preserve the good name of their country and the freedom of their people by promptly taking the most vigorous steps for preventing the recurrence of anti-Semitic violence.

"We appeal to the free trade unions and the other democratic forces of our great sister-republic to take the lead in rallying the Argentinian people for the necessary measures to uproot every vestige of anti-Semitism as a manifestation of neo-Nazism.

"Its false dogmas are perniciously alien to the aspirations and interests of the Argentinian people.

"Its inhuman deeds are a grave danger to the progress of Argentina as a healthy and prosperous democracy, cooperating with the other freedom-loving nations of the New World for the peace, freedom and well-being of all the peoples of the Americas."

Technical Engineers Push Organizing Drive

New York—Delegates to the Technical Engineers' 35th convention here voted a major organizing drive and unanimously recommended to the membership a per capita increase to help finance it.

The raise—from $1.25 to $1.35 in per capita, with 50 cents earmarked for organizing—will be submitted to referendum this fall.

AFTE Pres. Russell M. Stephens was re-elected without opposition to a sixth two-year term, and all incumbent executive council members were re-elected.

The sudden death of Sec.-Treas. Edward J. Coughlin two days after the convention left a key vacancy which will be filled by the executive council. Coughlin's duties included directing organizing activities.

Delegates voted to write into their union's constitution—also subject to referendum—a strong nondiscrimination policy, barring any type of segregation or discrimination on the basis of race, creed or color. The action, Stephens said, was intended to reinforce the AFTE's "long-standing policy."

The convention also backed a policy of full cooperation with the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. after hearing Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis report on the department's activities and thank the AFTE and its locals for their cooperation in the annual Union-Industries Show and other projects.

Delegates, representing engineers, architects and draftsmen in both private industry and the government service, also voted strong support for a legislative program for federal employes, including enactment of an immediate pay raise.

Urging that salary adjustments be put into effect immediately—rather than over the four-year period proposed by the Kennedy Administration — Stephens told the convention that inadequate pay has made it difficult for the government to retain and recruit engineers and technicians.

"The federal employe, if he is to remain with government, cannot continue to be years behind private industry with respect to his salary," Stephens declared.

Kheel to Arbitrate Deep-Sea Pacts

New York—Theodore W. Kheel has been named to mediate a 14-month-old contract dispute between the National Maritime Union and a group of tanker operators.

Kheel, who was recently appointed permanent arbitrator under the NMU's deep-sea contracts, scheduled a meeting of union representatives and the Tanker Labor Service Committee to attempt resolution of issues left over from 1961 negotiations.

Among the remaining issues were tank-cleaning rates, time off in port for crews of fast-turnaround vessels, performance of seamen's work by licensed officers, and adequate supplies of fresh provisions.

Residential Institutes Draw 28 Unionists

The second phase of a two-year experimental program embodying a new approach to labor education is being undertaken this summer by the National Institute of Labor Education with 10-week residential institutes at Cornell University and the University of Michigan Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations.

Trade Program Endorsed By Labor, Management

The President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy has endorsed the Administration's trade expansion bill, now before the Senate.

The committee, representing labor, management and government, unanimously declared that the best way to meet the growing challenge of foreign trade competition is "to provide the President with the necessary flexible authority to bargain reciprocally and effectively for the retention and expansion of U.S. markets abroad."

A full report on America's competitive position may be ready for release at the committee's next meeting, scheduled for September, Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges said. Hodges has just assumed chairmanship of the group under a system of annual rotation with Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

Greets First Class:

Free Labor Institute Hailed by Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy urged 43 young labor leaders from Latin America and the Caribbean area to apply the trade union techniques they are studying here to better the lives of their union members and spur the social progress of their countries.

"Those of us who believe in freedom put the greatest hope in you; a strong trade union movement is essential to the maintenance of freedom," the President told the first class being conducted by the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

Speaking to the group in the White House Rose Garden, Kennedy congratulated the AFL-CIO and American business for initiating and supporting the institute and expressed the hope that continuing exchanges between U.S. labor and that of other countries would lead to "a great union of free trade unions in this hemisphere expanding throughout so much of the undeveloped world."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany introduced the class to the President and to Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, with the prediction that the institute and its work would help to advance the Alliance for Progress.

Following the formal presentation, the President mingled with the group in the garden, greeting each class member individually.

Basic Principles Cited

In his welcome, he noted that while not all of U.S. labor's experience was appropriate for other countries, certain basic principles could be transferred.

"You cannot maintain a free society today, in my opinion, unless you have a free trade union movement," Kennedy declared, "and the trade union movement is effective not only because it is a means of securing a fair share of national productivity for the men and women who labor but it is also the means of supporting a broad program of social progress."

He cited the AFL-CIO's support of minimum wage laws and health care for the aged as examples of labor's concern for the welfare of all people.

"Because the labor movement in this country has looked beyond its immediate responsibilities to its members and to its responsibilities to society as a whole, I think it has fulfilled a great role in our country," the President said. "I hope that you will fill the same role."

Goldberg told the class that the success of the institute program depended to a great extent on their work following graduation.

Responding for the group of young labor leaders, Eric Lloyd Harris of Jamaica read a letter from the class expressing appreciation for the invitation to the White House and gratification for the establishment of the institute.

"Although we are students from the islands scattered in the Caribbean and several countries in Central and South America," the letter said, "we have already developed a common bond and understanding with each other which will enable us to work much closer together for the advancement of democratic trade unions in our countries."

The response concluded with the hope that the institute would "blossom into a great university for defense of freedom and humanity."

PRESIDENTIAL PLANE brought the official U.S. delegates to Jamaica's independence celebration, Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson and William C. Doherty, right, AFL-CIO vice president and president of the Letter Carriers. Accompanying them were Mrs. Johnson, left, and Margaret Frances Doherty, daughter of the AFL-CIO official.

Brewers Win Assured Pay In Canada

Toronto, Ont.—Some 3,100 members of the Brewery Workers won a guaranteed wage plan, full company-paid medical and hospital coverage for pensioners, and wage increases partly retroactive to Jan. 1 in a settlement with five major breweries that beat a strike deadline by a matter of hours.

Thomas Rusch, international director of organization, assisted in the settlement. Covered are employes of Canadian Breweries, Labatt's, Molson's, Breweries Warehousing and Canadian Brewery Transport.

The guaranteed wage plan yields $55 a week for married employes in the first year of the three-year contract, $56 the second and $57 the third, with single persons receiving $10 less. The benefit is in addition to any unemployment compensation to which the worker may be entitled and will be paid even if he is not eligible for jobless insurance.

In addition to health insurance coverage for pensioners, the union won for working members an increase in sick pay from $45 to $60 a week.

The wage increases average 30 cents an hour over the three years and range from 22 to 31 cents with the first installment retroactive. Mechanics get the 31 cents, while drivers get an increase of 10 cents per 100 miles in road allowance.

Doherty, Romualdi Help Jamaica Mark Liberty

Kingston, Jamaica—AFL-CIO Vice Pres. William C. Doherty and Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi carried the congratulations of the United States government and the AFL-CIO to the Western Hemisphere's newest nation as Jamaica celebrated its independence.

Doherty and Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson were the two official U.S. delegates as this island of 1.6 million people ended 307 years as a British possession and became an independent member of the Commonwealth.

Romualdi participated in the independence celebration as an invited guest of the Jamaican government and as personal representative of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who had visited Jamaica to meet key political and labor leaders earlier this year.

Both spoke, along with Johnson, at a series of rallies, special ceremonies and meetings climaxed by the lowering of the Union Jack and the dramatic raising of Jamaica's new gold, green and black flag.

Wire service accounts of the independence ceremonies reported that Doherty was enthusiastically cheered when he linked Jamaica's multi-racial development and its slogan of "out of many—one people" to the history and principles of the U.S. trade union movement and the unity of workers regardless of nationality or color.

Romualdi, bringing greetings from Meany, told Jamaicans that the AFL-CIO is firmly committed to a policy that the new nation should be permitted the same unrestricted immigration policy which the United States presently accords to all free Western Hemisphere nations.

He said Jamaica's policy of sharing premium prices for sugar with the workers in the sugar fields fully justified the U.S. policy of paying a "fair price" for sugar. And he told the gatherings that the AFL-CIO will continue to work for improved conditions for farm workers, including those brought in from Jamaica and other West Indies islands.

In addition to the public ceremonies, both Doherty and Romualdi held a number of meetings with union and political leaders.

Peru's Labor Officials Praise U. S. Policies

Peru's democratic labor leaders have credited the "prompt, forceful intervention" of Pres. Kennedy, supported by the AFL-CIO and the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), with forestalling possible reprisals against trade unionists following the recent military coup in that country.

Serafino Romualdi, AFL-CIO Inter-American representative who has just returned from Peru, reported union leaders there are convinced that had it not been for Kennedy's firm stand, the junta which seized control of the country following the recent elections "might have been tempted to engage in repressive measures."

Because the leaders of the coup quickly issued pledges to guarantee political and trade union freedom, however, the Confederation of Peruvian Workers (CTP) now feels that representative government can be re-established through another round of elections next June, provided democratic forces on the American continents keep up a watchful pressure, Romualdi reported.

He cited a telegram to ORIT from CTP Sec.-Gen. Arturo Sabroso Montoya thanking the free labor movement for its solidarity and stating:

"The situation is moderating, political headquarters have been returned, free circulation of newspapers is assured, and most important, the military junta offered guarantees to the trade unions."

Romualdi, with ORIT Assistant Sec.-Gen. Morris Paladino, had undertaken a mission to Peru to determine what assistance could be given the CTP, which appeared to be in danger as a result of its call for a general strike a few days after the junta took over.

While there, Romualdi conferred with trade unionists, government and political leaders, and officials of the U.S. government and U.S. corporations doing business in Peru.

The general strike failed, Romualdi reported, when some CTP affiliates withheld support for various reasons and a number of other unions, led largely by Communists, pledged their support to the junta in an effort to sabotage the general strike, capture control of the labor movement and displace the APRA Party, to which the CTP was closely tied.

He added, however, that the junta, after using the Communists and the anti-APRA unions to help defeat the strike, then squashed their attempt to assault and capture the headquarters of the CTP and its affiliates.

So far, Romualdi said, the junta has lived up to its guarantees and "by the time I left Lima, there was no doubt that the Communists were not going to get its support for their plan to take over the CTP."

"Whether the junta acted for fear of unfavorable international repercussions or under pressure by anti-Communist forces in its midst, or out of genuine anti-Communist conviction, only time will tell," he observed.

E. J. Coughlin Of AFTE Dead at 64

New York—Sec.-Treas. Edward J. Coughlin of the Technical Engineers died here Aug. 5 of a heart attack two days after he had won re-election at his union's convention. He was 64.

AFL-CIO Pres. Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler wired their "deep regret" at the labor movement's loss of "the leadership and wise counsel" of Coughlin.

A graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology with a degree in architectural engineering, Coughlin had been president of AFTE Local 105 in Boston before his election as international vice president of AFTE in 1951.

He came to AFTE headquarters in 1953 as assistant to Pres. Russell M. Stephens. When the union established a separate office of secretary-treasurer at its 1960 convention, Coughlin was elected to the new post.

Coughlin is survived by his wife, Mildred, a son and a daughter.

Pseudo 'Labor' Paper Brings ILPA Warning

The Intl. Labor Press Association has issued a broadscale warning that the Trade Union News, New York "sucker" sheet, has embarked on a nationwide Labor Day campaign to exploit unions in an advertising sales campaign.

The ILPA, the trade body of editors of publications of unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO, warned that the Trade Union News is a private commercial operation that has no connection with the legitimate labor movement.

"The people who operate it are in many cases former employes of the Trade Union Courier, which was successfully prosecuted by the Federal Trade Commission for falsely posing as a labor paper, misrepresentation in other respects, etc.," the ILPA Reporter said in its August issue.

"Any employer who takes an ad in this publication, thinking he is buying space in a labor journal, is a sucker. Any union officer who so much as gives this outfit the time of day is damaging the good name of the labor movement."

The ILPA reproduced a form letter, soliciting ads and editorial contributions, sent to Pres. Arthur Rosenstock of the Newspaper Guild. Similar letters have been sent to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and Pres. Gordon Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The form letter "congratulates" Rosenstock for having been chosen "by unanimous vote of our executive board" as the man who "has done the most for Labor, for your Craft, in your area of Washington, D. C." The "Washington, D. C.," was typed. ANG headquarters are in Washington, but Rosenstock's home and job are in New York.

The form letter asked Rosenstock to be a "guest writer" in its Labor Day issue. After claiming that the publication reaches "approximately 12,000 Unions throughout the U.S.A. and Canada, and is known as the Nations Leading Labor Newspaper," the form letter concludes:

"P.S. A greeting on Labor Day from your Union would also enhance it position in the Labor Movement. Space rates enclosed. Less 25%."

Measure a 'Must':

Works Bill Cleared For Vote in House

(Continued from Page 1)

which have been previously authorized by Congress and $600 million for matching federal grants for local and state public works — with a provision that states and municipalities must increase their own public works budgets in order to obtain the federal grants. This, the House committee said, would double the amount of consumer purchasing power pumped into the economy.

Projects would be earmarked for areas of heavy unemployment, with one-third of the spending channeled into depressed rural areas.

A Senate bill, passed in May by a 44-32 vote, authorized an immediate $750 million public works spending program and provided an additional $750 million in stand-by authorization to be used after June 30, 1963, if unemployment should rise 1 percent within nine months.

The original Administration request was for a $600 million immediate program, with $2 billion in stand-by authority available if economic indicators warned of a new recession. The stand-by request, however, ran into strong congressional opposition and the principle was retained in the Senate bill by only a one-vote margin.

In other developments, amid growing talk of adjournment by mid-September:

● After a meeting of Democratic congressional leaders with Pres. Kennedy, Assistant Senate Majority Leader Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) said pending bills on the Administration's priority list included trade expansion, tax revision, farm legislation, foreign aid appropriations, communications satellite, drug control, UN bond purchase, mass transit, youth employment, mass immunization, postal rates and government pay, in addition to the public works measure.

Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) said the schedule was "highly optimistic and unrealistic."

● The House Ways & Means Committee prepared to wind up a closed-door inquiry into the condition of the economy amid indications that its key members had not modified their opposition to an immediate tax cut.

Still pending in the Ways & Means Committee is an Administration bill, strongly backed by the AFL-CIO, to revive and extend for another year extension of temporary unemployment benefits for persons who have exhausted their state benefits and are still unemployed.

● The Senate passed and sent to the President a bill to provide irrigation of the Arkansas River valley of eastern Colorado by diverting water from the Fryingpan River of western Colorado. The $170 million Fryingpan-Arkansas project had been on the congressional agenda for a decade and had passed the Senate in three previous congresses.

● The House Post Office & Civil Service Committee voted 18-3 approval of a labor-backed, two-stage pay raise for government workers which provided larger and quicker increases for lower-paid employes than the Administration sought. Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day warned that he would recommend a veto if the bill goes through in present form.

● The House Foreign Affairs Committee approved a compromise bill to authorize the United States to purchase United Nations bonds up to the amount actually purchased by other nations, with a provision that the bond money could not be used to reduce the UN debts of other member nations. A bond purchase bill has already passed the Senate.

● The Senate Judiciary Committee took a new look at the watered-down drug control bill it had previously approved in the wake of public concern over the baby-deforming thalidomide and made several improvements requested by Pres. Kennedy. Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) and other members of the Anti-Trust subcommittee that had recommended a much stronger bill have said they will offer additional strengthening amendments on the Senate floor.

LABOR DAY MOVIE for television, "Land of Promise," has been updated for this year, with new narration by Ralph Bellamy, distinguished actor who is president of Actors' Equity. Shown above is AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany preparing for his role under the watchful eye of technicians and camera crew. Check your local listings on Labor Day for the showing in your area.

Sligh's 'Reply' to Meany Bucks Standard & Poor's on Cash Flow saying cash earnings," the ad said. "Cash flow consists of depreciation plus net earnings."

(Continued from Page 1)

The ad cited U.S. Commerce Dept. data showing that while net corporate profits had risen from $20.5 billion in 1948 to $23.3 billion in 1961, depreciation allowances over the same period went up from $6.2 billion to $24 billion, with a resulting rise in total cash earnings from $26.7 billion in 1948 to $47.3 billion last year.

Standard & Poor's went on to draw examples showing how a company, through the tax benefits flowing from accelerated depreciation, could actually increase its total cash earnings even while its books showed a drop in net profits.

The NAM paper grew out of a challenge issued by Meany at the White House Conference on Economic Affairs last May.

The AFL-CIO president called on Sligh to make the NAM's position "crystal clear" on how "additional profits will be used to make jobs."

NAM Challenged

"I challenge the NAM to tell us how much profit they need—business needs—and how this profit is going to be translated into jobs," not into "fatter salaries for some of the high executives," not through stock option plans "into this business of legalized larceny that is practiced by some of these companies," Meany said.

The AFL-CIO told reporters that Sligh's memorandum "was not at all responsive" to Meany's questions and that the federation president would answer Sligh in detail. Meany's answer will be released in Chicago during the meeting there of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, scheduled to open Aug. 13.

At his news conference, Sligh repeated his views expressed at the White House Conference, asserting that "it is business activity undertaken in the expectation of profit which creates jobs" and arguing that "increasing labor costs" and high taxes had put industry in a "profit squeeze" that destroys incentive for business expansion.

The NAM analysis argued that "the most effective way to expand employment opportunities is to create and maintain a climate which will encourage the profit-seeking activities of individuals and business managers."

NAM Position Restated

Proposals for creating such a climate and harnessing "the full power of the profit motive" consisted of positions long held by the NAM:

● Cut tax rates—a whole lot in the upper brackets and by a small percentage for low income groups.

● Eliminate government regulation of business beyond preventing "fraud, coercion or monopoly abuse." Sligh said it was "wrong" for the National Labor Relations Board to reverse rulings "that have stood for many years."

● Ban industrywide collective bargaining.

● Halt "the drain on the Treasury" through "frugal spending practices" by the government.

Sligh argued that wage costs had outpaced productivity gains over the past 15 years, thereby cutting into profits and gradually reducing them as a percentage of total national production.

The NAM statement dismissed the AFL-CIO's view that through cash flow industry had more than enough capital for its replacement and expansion needs. This position, the statement said, "overlooks the fact that even the corporation with heavy 'cash flow' from depreciation allowances may be in a poor profit position."

The analysis argued further that not all corporations had good cash flow positions and that cash flow was not always used to expand production facilities.

"Only when there is a greater prospect of profitability and capital enhancement through investment in equipment and economic expansion will it (cash flow) be devoted to these purposes," it said.

Unused Plant 'Antiquated'

Asked if the great amount of unused production capacity in the country did not indicate the need to stimulate consumer demand through greater purchasing power, Sligh replied that much of the unused capacity was "antiquated" and would have been replaced long ago but for the lack of adequate profits and depreciation allowances.

How, then, he was asked, did he explain the continuing rise in cash flow?

Sligh said he "had to go back to his earlier" declaration that industry is caught in a "profit squeeze."

8-11-62

Tennessee Primary Voters Reject House Opponent of Health Care Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

labor in both the Nashville and Chattanooga districts as evidence of "what can be done if people work at it and fight the battle on the issues."

Fulton's supporters in the Nashville district charged that an attempt was being made to rob him of victory over Loser by gross fraud in regard to absentee ballots.

Pointing out that the number of absentee ballots returned in the 2nd Ward was "extraordinarily high" in proportion to the total vote, State AFL-CIO Treas. Charles M. Houk said that Fulton had beaten Loser 619 to 590 on the ward's voting machines. Reversal of this trend in allegedly valid absentee ballots would be suspicious on its face, he observed.

Houk said that health care was "the single issue" in the Fulton-Loser battle. Labor worked hard in both Chattanooga and Nashville districts, he said, with direct mail and telephone reminders to all union members on registration and actual voting.

Local doctors, backed by a heavy influx of contributions from the American Medical Association's national political arm, did their best to save Frazier and Loser, observers said. Physicians enclosed anti-Anderson-King literature in their bills, members reported, and many doctors were active at the polls on election day.

In other state primaries, Democratic Gov. John B. Swainson of Michigan was renominated without opposition and will face Republican George Romney, automobile manufacturer, in November.

Romney's total vote of nearly 450,000 outstripped Swainson's by nearly 130,000, and Republican officials interpreted this as a good omen for the election. Romney backers defeated two conservative GOP state senators and one veteran conservative in the House in the Republican primary. Incumbent members of Congress in both Democratic and Republican primaries won renomination.

In Missouri, conservatives failed in attempts to oust Rep. Richard H. Ichord in the Democratic primary and Rep. Thomas B. Curtis in the Republican contest. Sen. Edward V. Long was renominated by Democrats and will face Republican Crosby Kemper, an insurance executive.

Rep. Walter McVey was locked in a close fight with challenger Joe Skubitz for Republican nomination in Kansas. Other incumbents won nomination without trouble.

Hancock Agents Get $6.25 Package

Six thousand agents of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. will receive a wage and fringe benefit package valued at $6.25 a week under a new two-year contract negotiated by the Insurance Workers.

The nationwide contract increases the special expense allowance of Hancock agents, improves the hospitalization and medical insurance provided, and enables agents to continue to receive renewal commissions for up to four

The post-retirement commissions, in addition to the regular pension, will substantially increase the income of retirees, according to IWIU Sec.-Treas. William A. Gillen.

Another new contract feature, Gillen said, provides for the payment of renewal commissions for monthly debit ordinary policies.

Council Presses Campaign Against Job Lag, Recession

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Saturday, August 18, 1962 | No. 33

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL MEMBERS, shown here at Chicago meeting, set stage for major AFL-CIO campaign to spread employment through a shorter workweek. The council called for both legislation and collective bargaining to bring about a 35-hour week.

Council Warns of 'Stagnation':

Two-Front Drive Launched In Fight for Shorter Workweek

Chicago—American labor has launched a massive two-front drive for a shorter workweek to spread employment and pull the nation out of "economic stagnation."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council voted to mobilize the federation's resources for a campaign to amend the federal Wage-Hour Act to require employers to pay double time after 35 hours a week. The purpose of the heavy penalty pay, the council emphasized, is to "discourage evasion" of the share-the-work purpose of the legislation.

In a parallel move, AFL-CIO affiliates will make a "greatly intensified" effort to negotiate a reduction in hours without a cut in take-home pay at the bargaining table.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will head a special Executive Council committee, backed up by a task force of specialists, to press the drive to enlist congressional and public support for a reduced workweek. Named to the council committee were Vice Presidents George M. Harrison, O. A. Knight, Lee W. Minton and Jacob S. Potofsky.

The task force, which will include economists, legislative representatives, public relations specialists and other experts, will also be "instantly available to all affiliated unions" to assist in collective bargaining.

"Fifty-seven months of intolerable unemployment make this campaign mandatory," the council said.

American workers "have been patient" through recurrent recessions and the AFL-CIO has supported and "still supports" other steps to spur employment, the statement continued.

"But these other steps have not been taken . . . the economy is again faltering," the council emphasized. "Hanging over the horizon, as ominous as an atomic cloud, is the automation yet to come—the substitution of electronic machines for human effort, which is barely at the threshold of its development."

Labor does not contend, the Executive Council made clear, that a 40-hour workweek is "an undue burden." The AFL-CIO "would welcome a full 40 hours of employment for every worker who wants a job."

"But we are completely convinced by the record of the past

(Continued on Page 5)

Federal Court Balks Firings by Railroads

By David L. Perlman

Chicago—Rail operating unions won a major victory here as the U.S. Court of Appeals refused to dissolve a lower court's order banning railroads from going ahead with plans to fire tens of thousands of workers and scrap long-established work rules.

The court said it would hear arguments on the merits at a later date—but meanwhile the temporary restraining order will remain in effect. The decision came just 12 hours before the work rule changes were to have become effective. Earlier, union spokesmen had said there would be a nationwide strike on the day the railroads scrapped the rules book.

The restraining order which the railroads sought vainly to dissolve was issued by U.S. Dist. Judge Joseph S. Perry, who earlier had turned down a request by the unions for an injunction against the rules changes. However Perry, emphasizing that some 65,000 jobs which the carriers want to abolish are involved, stayed the railroads from acting until a higher court could rule on the unions' appeal from his decision.

In reply to the railroads' complaints that the delay would cost them money, the judge declared:

"When I must decide between the losses of jobs to men and the loss of money to the railroads, I must decide in favor of the jobs and men."

The unions — the Locomotive

(Continued on Page 11)

Spurs Legislative, Political Program

By Saul Miller

Chicago—High and persistent unemployment and the possible threat of a fifth postwar recession were pinpointed as the major targets of a legislative, economic and political program at the summer meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council here.

To lead the campaign the council shaped a new weapon—a two-level drive for a shorter workweek without reduction in take-home pay on both the legislative and collective bargaining fronts. (Story this page.)

Teamed up with the campaign to reduce hours will be a continuing drive to secure passage of the AFL-CIO's legislative program to ease unemployment and revive the lagging economy and an intensified registration and get-out-the-vote program to help elect liberal and progressive candidates in November.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany stressed at press conferences that the 35-hour workweek campaign is designed specifically to cure the problem of chronic unemployment in face of failure of Congress to act on a wide range of remedial measures.

He said he hoped Pres. Kennedy was correct in his analysis of the economy, holding that a quick tax cut is not needed, but he indicated the AFL-CIO did not share the President's optimism on the economic outlook nor the Administration's views that now is not the time to press for a shorter workweek.

The federation president commented that a reading of economic indicators, especially the persistent high rate of unemployment, pointed to the possibility of an economic downturn this winter.

He made the point that if the President's programs as presented to Congress had been enacted the economic situation would be "much less depressing at the present time."

Registration Drive Stressed

The council strongly reaffirmed its intensive registration drive approved earlier this year and heard reports indicating progress in many areas but that more work must be done to offset historical off-year apathy that in the past has worked against the election of liberal candidates.

Particular attention will be paid now to registration in Pennsylvania, Ohio and California where deadlines on qualifying voters are nearing.

The council's statement triggering the campaign for a 35-hour workweek topped a series of actions in which the federation:

- Reaffirmed its belief that an immediate tax cut is needed to bolster the economy and regretted Kennedy's decision to wait until next year. (Story page 2.)
- Called for extension of temporary unemployment compensation until Apr. 1, 1963, to aid nearly a million workers who will have exhausted their jobless benefits, and provide a "much needed stimulus" to the economy. The present TUC act expired six weeks ago and no new claims have been permitted since Apr. 1. Since that time 560,000 persons have exhausted their benefits and it is estimated that between now and Apr. 1, 1963, the figure will be approximately 950,000.
- Urged quick House passage of the pending public works bill as a measure to help stimulate purchasing power.
- Called for restoration of key sections in the House-passed tax measure that have been killed in the Senate Finance Committee or defeat of the bill.
- Asked government ownership with private operation of the communications satellite program. (Story page 3.)

(Continued on Page 3)

Council Backs Kennedy On U. S. Role in Berlin

Chicago—There can be "no just or peaceful settlement of any phase of the German problem" so long as the zones of Berlin are divided by the Soviet "Wall of Shame," the AFL-CIO Executive Council has warned.

Terming construction of the wall the "most serious act of Communist aggression" since the Soviets crushed the Hungarian revolt in 1956, the council said in an anniversary statement that existence of the barrier brings home the acuteness of "the worldwide threat to human dignity, freedom and peace."

The statement, approved by the council here, praised efforts of the Kennedy Administration to "end or at least to ease" tensions arising from the Soviet push in Berlin, but pointed out that in 10 months of negotiations the Kremlin's only interest has been to exploit the Soviet objective "of squeezing the western democracies out."

The council applauded Pres. Kennedy's "unequivocal pledge" to maintain the "military presence" of Allied forces in Berlin, with free access for forces and the German civilian population.

Kennedy also was backed in his "determination and preparation" to support the freedom of West Ber-

(Continued on Page 2)

VICE PRES. A. PHILIP RANDOLPH makes a point during AFL-CIO Executive Council session. Shown also are Vice Presidents Joseph Curran and O. A. Knight, right.

Needed 'to Bolster the Economy':

Council Reaffirms Position On Need for Tax Relief Now

Chicago—The AFL-CIO has reaffirmed its belief that a temporary tax cut "is needed now to bolster the economy" and expressed its "regret" that Pres. Kennedy has chosen to wait until 1963.

The Executive Council, in a series of economic statements, said it hoped the President is right in his analysis that the nation is not entering a recession, adding that if the economy does not respond as he expects "we will urge" him to call Congress back into special session "to take immediate steps" to prevent a recession.

While differing with the President's analysis, the council stressed that "we appreciate the problems confronting him" and that "we understand his reasoning."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told reporters the federation was "disappointed" that the President put off the tax cut and that the AFL-CIO does not think the situation is as optimistic as he painted it.

"We hope he's right," he added.

Meany commented in reply to a query that in terms of electing a Congress that will produce legislation to strengthen the economy, the President's tax cut speech doesn't change the political situation. If the Kennedy program as presented to Congress had been enacted, he said, the situation would be "much less depressing than at the present time."

The council statement declared the economic recovery that "commenced so hopefully only 18 months ago has lost most of its steam." Not only is a tax cut needed now, it said, but "it will be needed even more a few months from now."

In other statements, the council:

● Termed the tax bill currently before the Senate Finance Committee a "shocking document" that jettisons the "most constructive efforts" of the House Ways & Means Committee and the House itself. Unless the Senate committee bill is amended in the Senate to restore the House-approved withholding of taxes on dividends and interest, adequate steps to end the "tax-induced export of American capital and American jobs" and reasonable restraints on "expense-account racketeering," the council declared, "we regretfully see no other alternative at present than to urge the Senate to defeat the bill."

● Called on the House for quick passage of the public works bill reported out by the House Rules Committee to provide a lift to the sagging economy. It termed the bill "a modest but constructive step."

● Predicted in an analysis of the present state of the economy that the "number of jobless will rise toward 6 percent or more this winter" and urged—in addition to an immediate tax cut, passage of the public works bill and a decent tax measure—a temporary extension of unemployment compensation for the long-term unemployed, passage of a youth employment opportunities bill and federal aid to higher education.

The council urged the Federal Reserve Board to "take steps to reverse the upward drift of long-term interest rates in order to encourage the expansion of economic activities."

In its statement on an immediate tax cut, the council dealt also with overall structural tax reform scheduled by the Administration for 1963, endorsing the President's program for across-the-board tax cuts for all brackets and plugging of accumulated loopholes.

Permanent reform, the council stressed, "must be of a kind that makes our tax system more equitable, helps stimulate economic growth and yet involves no greater revenue loss than the nation can reasonably afford. There must be no rate reduction without tax reform. . ."

'Unremitting' Effort Urged for Health Care

Chicago—The labor movement has set out to prove that public sentiment overwhelmingly favors health care for the aged through social security by an "unremitting" effort to elect congressional candidates who support the program.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council called on "all affiliated organizations at every level" to secure "unequivocal commitments" and to exert every effort to insure the election of candidates supporting the legislation.

The Senate vote that killed the health care bill did not remove the problem of 17 million elderly Americans without adequate protection against the high costs of illness, the council declared.

Though the defeat was a "deep disappointment," it said, there has been progress since 1957 when labor first launched the drive to extend social security protection into the area of medical costs. While there was slim support then for the program, today "there are few who deny that some sort of action is needed." If the issue is clearly drawn in November, the council added, "we have no doubt . . . the American people will give overwhelming endorsement to the social security approach."

It warned that there are two major barriers:

● The fog of confusion generated by opponents of the program who have attacked it as "radical" and "socialized medicine" and as "inadequate." Explaining the truth about the social security proposal is a "primary need," the council declared.

● Lavish advertising campaigns attempting to manufacture public opinion against the program and create doubt in the minds of legislators who favor it. The federation's job is to prove that public sentiment is truly and overwhelmingly behind the measure, said the council.

The Senate on July 17 killed any prospects for the legislation in 1962 by a 52 to 48 vote when it tabled the Anderson-Javits amendments to a new public welfare bill. The House Ways & Means Committee has bottled up similar legislation, preventing it from going to a vote on the House floor.

Pres. Kennedy, after the Senate vote, termed health care for the aged the No. 1 domestic issue in the November elections and pledged to campaign throughout the country on the program.

Labor Backs Kennedy On U. S. Role in Berlin

(Continued from Page 1)

lin's people and their ties with the West German Republic.

There should be no further UN consideration, it declared, until the Kremlin allows the carrying out of the inquiry.

The "heating-up" of the Berlin issue, the council said, might well be designed "to hide the many serious economic difficulties" besetting the Soviet dictatorship.

It urged Kennedy to "take all necessary measures" to cement the unity of the western powers in the North American Treaty Organization and to meet the new Soviet threat with determination and defense forces "adequately equipped with the most modern nuclear and conventional weapons."

The council expressed the "warmest greetings" of American labor to the people of West Berlin and pledged full support in maintaining their freedom and well-being.

Allies' Responsibility

It is now clear, the council declared, that "no fruitful purpose can be served by negotiating over Berlin as an isolated question, separated from the German problem as a whole."

The responsibility of the Allies, the statement continued, is to "insist that the USSR abide by" the Potsdam agreement and the Geneva agreement of 1955, to the effect "that the settlement of the German question and the reunification of Germany by means of free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security."

"Free elections should be held throughout Germany," the council said, "to establish an all-German government with which a peace treaty could then be signed."

The statement warned that the Soviet Union's maneuvers to protect "its very shaky East German satellite" involved basically an effort to "wipe out all Four Power authority" on Germany, and might include a future proposal for United Nations "consideration" of the question.

The UN has had standing for 11 years, the council pointed out, a resolution for a commission to visit East Germany and East Berlin "for the purpose of examining the feasibility of holding free elections throughout Germany."

Meany Says Berlin Wall Symbolizes 'Total Bankruptcy' of Red System

The Soviet-dictated wall in Berlin—an "ugly monument to the total bankruptcy" of the Communist system—"can never end the magnetic pull and attraction of freedom," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message over the Columbia Broadcasting System's national radio network Aug. 13, first anniversary of the wall's existence.

Meany, responding to a pledge by West Berlin's Mayor Willy Brandt that the people of his city "will never resign" themselves to "wrong and injustice," declared that "the wall must come down" before there can be a just and peaceful settlement of the problems of divided Germany.

The AFL-CIO president spoke as part of a national observance of the anniversary on all radio networks. The program began at noon with the tolling of the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia in response to Berlin's Freedom Bell and included messages that evening from Meany, Atty.-Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former military governor of the U. S. Zone in Germany and more recently Pres. Kennedy's personal representative in Berlin.

Brandt stressed the "grief of divided families" during the year and the "mourning for the dead who died on the Wall of Shame." Berlin's people had learned from "bitter experience," he said, that "the struggle for peace on the basis of freedom and right is indivisible."

Said Kennedy in a message over the American Broadcasting Co. network: "The world recognizes the desperate meaning" of the wall's existence—the "first wall in the history of mankind" that a political system has had to build "to keep its own people in." Between West Berlin and Americans, he declared, "there is a common devotion to freedom and a common courage to maintain it."

Clay, who commanded U.S. forces in Germany when former Pres. Truman broke the Soviet Berlin blockade with the airlift, pointed out that the Communists had "miscalculated" when they hoped the wall would "create panic" and leave West Berlin "an empty shell."

Speaking over the National Broadcasting Co. and Mutual networks, Clay said: "The people of West Berlin renewed their determination to keep their citadel of freedom behind the Iron Curtain . . . The countries of western Europe came closer together to join with us to defend the city. We know that as long as West Berlin remains free so will freedom survive in Europe."

Refugees in Palestine Get 'Food for Peace'

The U.S. Food for Peace program will provide 95,000 tons of floor to help feed 1 million Palestine refugees in Jordan, the Gaza Strip, Lebanon and Syria. The program will be administered by the United Nations Relief & Works Agency (UNRWA).

Use of surplus products, under the Food for Peace program, has enabled the United States to reduce its cash contribution to the UNRWA.

Affiliates Set Record In Election Victories

Chicago — AFL-CIO unions won bargaining rights for more workers in the 12 months ending June 30, 1962, than in any of the past seven years, Dir. of Organization John W. Livingston told the Executive Council.

Based on preliminary figures available as of Aug. 9, AFL-CIO affiliates also won more elections than at any time since the merger of the AFL and CIO, and its election percentage was the highest in the past three years.

Livingston reported AFL-CIO unions participated in 4,934 elections and won 2,692 involving bargaining rights for 186,439 workers.

Investigation Ordered into Hotel Pact

Chicago—The AFL-CIO Executive Council has instructed Federation Pres. George Meany to investigate an agreement between the Hotel & Restaurant Workers and the Teamsters in Puerto Rico to determine if it is in violation of AFL-CIO policies.

The council action came on a case brought before it under the internal disputes plan in which the Seafarers asked permission to organize hotel workers on the island because of the agreement signed by Hotel Workers' Pres. Ed S. Miller and Teamsters' Pres. James R. Hoffa dealing with the operation of a Hotel Workers local and joint organizing campaigns.

The council voted to lay aside the case temporarily and instructed Meany to investigate the "alliance." He told reporters that on the face of it, the agreement is "in contravention of the policies of the AFL-CIO." He will report back to the next council meeting.

The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements and violations of the federation's ethical practices codes. Agreements by AFL-CIO affiliates with the Teamsters on the national level are barred by federation policy.

Sees Recession Threat:

Council Spurs Drive To Combat Job Lag

(Continued from Page 1)

● Called on all unions to launch a drive to assure wide popular support at the polls in November for health care for the aged through social security. (Story page 2.)

● Urged passage of a pay bill for postal and classified federal workers that would offer more money to lower grades than the Administration bill. (Story page 5.)

In the international field, the council marked one year of the Berlin "Wall of Shame," declaring that the anniversary brings home the "brutal nature of communism" and the Soviet threat to world peace. It commended the U.S. government for its position and repeated its belief that the solution in Berlin is tied to the entire German problem. (Story page 1.)

On internal matters the council:

● Heard a report on the successful operations of the federation's seven-month-old internal disputes plan, with only 10 cases of violation of the federation's constitution found in 100 cases filed under the plan. (Story page 3.)

● Instructed Meany to investigate an "alliance" between the Hotel & Restaurant Workers and the Teamsters in Puerto Rico to determine whether the agreement is in violation of AFL-CIO policies. (Story page 2.)

● Laid aside without discussion until the next meeting of the Executive Council the questions of filling an existing vacancy on the council and appointments to the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

● Accused a special House Labor subcommittee, headed by Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.), of "political blackmail" and a "vendetta" against the Ladies' Garment Workers, and pledged full support for the ILGWU in resisting a smear "in the guise of a congressional investigation." (Story and text of council statement, page 4.)

● Voted $100,000 a year for the American Institute for Free Labor Development set up to train Latin American and Caribbean trade union leaders. (Story page 4.)

● Heard a report by Dir. of Organization John W. Livingston that in the 12 months ended last June 30 AFL-CIO unions won bargaining rights for more workers than in any comparable period for seven years. (Story page 2.)

● Approved requests from the Stove Mounters and the Auto Workers for name changes without affecting the jurisdiction of the unions. The stove union will now be known as the Stove, Furnace and Allied Appliance Workers of North America. The UAW has replaced the word "aircraft" in its name with the word "Aerospace."

● Set the next meeting of the Executive Council to start Nov. 12 in Washington, D. C., and scheduled a meeting of the AFL-CIO General Board for Nov. 14.

REPORTERS COVERING Executive Council meeting in Chicago question AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at news conference following a session of the council.

U. S. Ownership, Private Operation Urged for Space Communications

Chicago—The space communications bill that has been the subject of intensive Senate debate for the past few weeks would write into law a "mistaken national policy" and should be defeated unless drastically amended, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

The council called for a bill that would provide government ownership and control of the communications satellite program, "but with private operation," to achieve the needed flexibility and assure maximum progress in this vital field.

It urged also that the National Aeronautics & Space Administration contract with private companies to operate the program under cost plus fixed fee arrangements in the public interest, similar to the operation of programs by the Atomic Energy Commission. This policy would be of particular benefit to labor, the council said, "in maintaining its established collective bargaining arrangement with management in the communications industry."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communication Workers, who has supported the Administration-backed bill setting up a private corporation to operate the space communications program, was recorded in opposition to the council statement.

The Senate on Aug. 14 voted to limit debate on the bill by invoking its cloture rule for the first time in more than 35 years. The vote was 63-27, three more than the necessary two-thirds of those present and voting.

Liberal Democrats Split

The sharp debate over whether the government should retain control of the worldwide satellite communications system split the ranks of liberal Democrats.

Senate Democratic leaders, supporting the Administration bill setting up a private corporation, needed almost solid Republican support to limit debate. Twenty-nine Democrats and 34 Republicans voted for cloture, while 25 Democrats and two Republicans opposed the motion.

Under the Administration bill, up to 50 percent of the stock in the new corporation could be purchased by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which owns the Telstar satellite. The balance of the stock would be available for public purchase. The 15-member board of directors would include six representatives of AT&T and any other private firms involved, six elected by private stockholders and three members appointed by the President.

The council statement noted that the government has invested almost $25 billion in over-all rocket and space programs, making it "impossible at this time to consider turning over the program to private business."

"About $500 million has gone into the space communications satellite programs," it said.

"Future programs will find the government the largest user, the leader in research and development and the furnisher and owner of launching crews and facilities."

These considerations, the council maintained, are the basis for urging defeat of the House-passed bill "unless its monopolistic features are removed by drastic amendment."

The council declared the advantages to the national interest of continued government ownership and control are "numerous," providing competition in research, quicker and more flexible programming and removing the threat of having foreign policy decisions "interfered with by a private consortium."

The objective of national policy in this area, it said, is utilization of all the knowledge of private and government resources.

Council, Goldberg Meet In Policy Discussions

Chicago—Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg termed relations between the Administration and the labor movement "excellent" and said both have the common objective of returning the nation to a full employment economy.

The AFL-CIO's "genuine concern" with unemployment, he told reporters after an hour-long meeting with the federation's Executive Council, has led it to propose a shorter workweek, whereas the Administration believes that congressional action on the President's legislative program would help solve high and persistent unemployment without the need to reduce hours of work.

The labor secretary said he had a "very cordial meeting" with the council and a "frank and candid" exchange of views. He said AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany expressed his views on the good relationships between the federation and the White House, noting that Meany also said the relationship does not mean that the labor movement owns the Administration or that the Administration owns the labor movement. Goldberg added:

"I subscribe to that statement 100 percent. This is how it should be in a democracy."

Common Objective

On the state of the economy, Goldberg said the AFL-CIO and the White House see "eye-to-eye" on unemployment—that it is too high and has existed for too long.

Both have a common objective of a full employment economy, he said, but the Administration believes the President's program is the best way to reach that objective, while the labor movement holds that in the absence of that program's adoption the shorter workweek is necessary.

He said in reply to a query that the Administration has not changed its point of view in opposing a reduction in the workweek, maintaining that a cut in hours worked should not be effected until full employment is restored.

In his press conference Goldberg also covered these points:

● The AFL-CIO is "very important" to the Alliance for Progress program and the Labor Advisory Committee set up under the program has "worked most effectively."

● He predicted that before Congress adjourns it will adopt a "substantial part" of the President's program and that with the actions of the first session a "creditable record will be achieved."

● The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity will not countenance any dilution of the executive order creating it and though it is encouraging voluntary cooperation, enforcement will continue. There have been some reports that the committee would rely only on a voluntary approach.

● The federal program of recognition to unions of federal workers is "turning out to be a very great success" and will result in a better government service. The government is currently preparing codes, he said, with which these unions will have to comply to assure recognition. The codes will deal with corruption, communism and democratic procedures.

● The labor movement's cooperation with the Missile Sites Commission has been "excellent" and the number of man-days lost at missile sites because of stoppages has been "insignificant."

● Collective bargaining settlements in the past year have been "sensible and moderate" and within the range of the incease in national productivity. These "constructive" settlements, said Goldberg, have contributed to price stability.

Internal Disputes Plan Progress Reported

Chicago—Of the 100 cases filed under the AFL-CIO internal disputes plan in its first seven months of existence, only 10 cases of violation of the constitution were recorded and only one of the 131 affiliates is currently in noncompliance with decisions under the plan.

These figures highlighted a report by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the Executive Council which revealed that 54 of the 100 cases filed in the period ending July 31, 1962, have been resolved through mediation and by mutual agreement without the necessity of a hearing or a determination by impartial Umpire David L. Cole.

Mediation is still in progress in 13 additional cases, Meany reported, "and there is every reason to believe that a number of these will be settled voluntarily."

The impartial umpire set up under the plan adopted at the 1961 AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach for handling a wide range of internal disputes between unions made determination in 14 cases and submitted four fact-finding reports to the council on "justification" cases. An additional 15 cases are now pending before the umpire or awaiting a determination.

Of the umpire's 14 determinations, violations of Art. XXI of the federation constitution which sets out the internal disputes plan were found in 10 cases. In the others the umpire found the action involved did not violate the constitution.

The Executive Council subcommittee set up to hear appeals from the umpire's decisions received seven appeals and denied five. One was withdrawn and another is pending.

Five complaints of noncompliance with determinations of the umpire were received, three arising from cases originating under the old no-raid procedure prior to adoption of the disputes plan.

Compliance was achieved in two of the five cases. Of the three where the subcommittee found unions in noncompliance, sanctions set up under the plan were imposed. In the case of one union, the Bookbinders, the noncompliance has been remedied and sanctions removed. Two of the noncompliance cases involved the Stonecutters, against whom sanctions remain currently in effect.

Gruening Wins Alaska Primary

Anchorage—Sen. Ernest Gruening scored a runaway victory for renomination in the Democratic primary here. One of the state's first two senators, he will be challenged in November by Republican Theodore Stephens, who served the last two years of the Eisenhower Administration as a top adviser to Interior Sec. Fred Seaton.

Gruening beat Robert L. Veach, an Anchorage school teacher, 14,500 to 2,400 on the basis of nearly complete returns. Stephens defeated his nearest GOP opponent, Frank Cook, 9,350 to 3,500.

Also renominated were two other Democratic incumbents, Gov. William Egan and Rep. Ralph Rivers. Egan will meet Republican Mike Stepovich, whom he beat two years ago, in November. Rivers is challenged by GOP nominee Lowell Thomas, Jr., son of the radio feature and travel reporter.

CANDID PHOTO catches AFL-CIO Vice Presidents David Dubinsky and Walter P. Reuther during a break in the Executive Council sessions.

'Political Vendetta' Laid to House Probe

Chicago—A special House Labor subcommittee has launched a "political vendetta" against the Ladies' Garment Workers "in the guise of an investigation" of alleged discriminatory and other improper practices, the AFL-CIO Executive Council has charged.

Accusing the subcommittee, which is headed by Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.), of "political blackjacking," Federation Pres. George Meany in a press conference here pointed out that a resolution authorizing the so-called inquiry had itself assumed the union's guilt.

The resolution, Meany observed, ordered an investigation of "the extent" to which the union had engaged in discriminatory and otherwise improper acts—not whether or not it had done so.

Spelling out what he meant by the phrase "political blackjacking," Meany observed that "some of the subcommittee members" did not receive the endorsement of New York's Liberal Party, with which the ILGWU has close ties.

A council statement backing the ILGWU declared that the union "bears one of the most respected and honored names in the trade union movement" and has "well and truly earned" this honor and respect.

It would "never fear a fair investigation," the council declared, and "we do not intend to stand idly by" while an affiliate is "smeared for political purposes" by "anyone in any political party at any level."

The resolution authorizing the Zelenko operation listed a series of categories of alleged misdeeds and law violations laid to the garment union and directed the inquiry to discover "the extent" to which it "engaged" in the practices.

The list included collective bargaining abuses alleged to be aimed at preventing garment industry wages from rising to levels of other industries, racial discrimination, improper practices in hiring arrangements in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act, offenses against the Bill of Rights, charitable and political contributions and the handling of welfare funds in violation of the Landrum-Griffin Act.

The council statement said that the language of the subcommittee resolution was "a conclusion false, uncalled-for, despicable," an affront to the "basic concept of American justice."

Puerto Rico Hearings Set on Pay Floors

Industry committees representing workers, employers and the public will begin hearings Sept. 26 in Puerto Rico to determine if minimum wages should be increased in several industries.

One committee will consider rates in the sugar manufacturing and alcoholic beverage industry. A second will make recommendations for construction, business service, motion picture and miscellaneous industry. Current legal minimums in both areas range from 70 cents to $1.09 an hour.

Answer to Sligh:

Meany Sees 'Hoax' in NAM's Cry of Business Profits Squeeze

The National Association of Manufacturers slogan alleging a so-called "profit squeeze" on American business is "pretty much of a hoax," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has charged.

A recent NAM economic analysis attempting to show some kind of relationship between higher profits and jobs for the jobless "is no answer at all," Meany said in a letter to the NAM's executive vice president, Charles R. Sligh, Jr.

The federation president pointed out to Sligh that the NAM analysis had been prepared as a reply to Meany's question on "how much profit business actually requires in order to create the 1.35 million new jobs America needs yearly" for population growth and "the additional 200,000 jobs a year" needed for workers "permanently displaced by automation."

The NAM document released by Sligh, Meany said, "speaks of many things" but unfortunately neither informs me nor the American people" how higher profits for business "will, in fact, be translated into jobs for the American people."

Instead, he noted, the analysis "blandly concedes" that "no one can say how much profit business needs to grow and provide more job opportunities."

While demanding "an unlimited profit rise with no guarantee of job growth at all," the NAM nevertheless inveighs against so-called "unearned wage increases insisted upon by unions," his letter said.

The NAM economic analysis grew out of a challenge issued by Meany at the White House Conference on Economic Affairs last May. The AFL-CIO president called on Sligh to make the NAM's position "crystal clear" on how "additional profits will be used to make jobs."

In a point-by-point reply to the NAM's document claiming a "profit squeeze," Meany wrote Sligh:

- Only a "statistical sleight-of-hand" allows the NAM to claim that corporation profits have been "squeezed."

In fact, corporation profits and dividend rates for the first quarter of 1962 were at "all-time highs," and preliminary reports show that in the second quarter "profits did even better."

- The earning reports understate the facts compared with figures prior to 1954, because a change in the tax laws then has allowed liberalized depreciation and research costs to be written off.

The bookkeeping rules now are "being changed once again" through depreciation revisions, Meany pointed out, and he cited an advertisement by the highly respected investment advisory service, Standard & Poor's Corp., declaring: "Revised depreciation rules will cause some companies to show lower reported net earnings but they will in fact be much richer in cash and have better dividend coverage."

- The understated profit rate—that is, dollars earned on capital investment—is less for the last five years than the "13.8 percent rate of booming" postwar years, Meany acknowledged. But in the last five years, he pointed out, the economy has been "near stagnation," millions of workers have been jobless or underemployed, and "about 15 percent of our existing productive facilities" are idle.

An underemployed worker on a part-time job "suffers a wage squeeze," his letter to Sligh remarked.

"Surely steel companies that operate barely at 50 percent of capacity can't reasonably demand the profit they would earn if operating at 90 percent," he added.

Meany bluntly conceded the NAM statement that "only prospect of profitability" and growth of capital can attract the investment of funds. But he pointed out that "sustained investment growth based on profit expectations cannot be achieved in a vacuum."

It is the prospect of expanding sales that allows prospects of expanded profits, his letter said.

The major source of sales, he said, is "60 million American families" which have a consumer demand responsible for "70 percent of the value of all goods and services."

Another major source is "purchases of goods and services" by the government, which at the same time provides out of taxes the highways, housing, schools and other public works on which business must depend for operations.

Appealing to Sligh for continuation of an "exchange of views" between the NAM and the AFL-CIO, Meany declared that to prevent a fifth postwar recession and create the basis for long-run sustained job and business growth, "enlightened public and private actions are now needed."

"The government role must now be a major one," he said. Public works expansion is "imperative," he wrote, and a tax cut that "quickly and substantially stimulates consumer sales is essential."

The NAM's influence in the past has been thrown against "almost every measure the American labor movement has espoused in the interests of working people and of the nation," he continued, but "ironically" what has been achieved despite NAM opposition "has profoundly aided business sales and helped to sustain high profit levels."

"It may still be difficult to reach common ground on large issues," he concluded, but "let us now seek common understandings on smaller ones at least."

Alliance Group Reviews Free Labor Institute

Chicago—The Labor Advisory Committee of the Alliance for Progress met with top Administration officials here to review the program of the labor-business sponsored American Institute for Free Trade Union Development.

Meeting with the unionists, headed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, were Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, Assistant Sec. George L-P Weaver, Kenneth Kelley, special assistant to the Agency for International Development Director Fowler Hamilton, and Erwin Trager, assistant to Teodoro Moscoso, head of the Alliance for Progress.

Meany, reporting on the meeting, said there was a broad survey of the first session of the institute, attended by 43 students from Latin American and Caribbean countries. He said the "institute is the connecting link between the U.S. and free trade unionists of Latin America."

The students will complete their three-month course Sept. 13, but their scholarships will carry them for nine additional months in their home countries where they will work for free trade unionism.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council voted an additional $100,000 for the institute, which comes out of the federation's Special Purpose Fund.

In discussing finances, Meany said that 23 percent of the AFL-CIO budget is currently being spent in international affairs, reaching almost $3 million a year.

In Washington, D. C., the Agency for Intl. Development announced a $210,000 Alliance for Progress grant to help establish a social projects department in the institute. An earlier grant of $250,000 was used in setting up seminars and establishing training centers for Latin American labor leaders.

The latest grant agreement was signed by Moscoso and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, head of the Communications Workers, as secretary-treasurer of the institute. Also present were Serafino Romualdi, executive director; William C. Doherty, Jr., head of the social projects department of the institute, and Assistant Labor Sec. George L-P Weaver.

Text of AFL-CIO Statement Supporting ILGWU

Text of statement by the AFL-CIO Executive Council supporting the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union:

The Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union, an affiliate of the AFL-CIO, bears one of the most respected and honored names in the trade union movement.

It has well and truly earned this respect and these honors. Under the leadership of Pres. David Dubinsky and his colleagues, the ILGWU has transformed an industry from sweatshops to decency within a single generation.

Today the character of this organization is under an unfair, unwarranted, political attack.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Education & Labor of the House of Representatives has launched a political vendetta against the ILGWU in the guise of a congressional investigation.

The very wording of the resolution by the subcommittee launching this attack demonstrates that the committee has already prejudged the outcome of its investigations.

The basic concept of American justice—that the accused stands innocent until proven guilty—has been viciously flouted by this subcommittee. The language of the resolution is more than an indictment; it is a conclusion: false, uncalled-for, despicable.

A mere recitation of only a few of the pioneering, praiseworthy successes of the ILGWU demonstrates this fact.

This is a union that has pioneered in ending discrimination and in providing employment for men and women of all races, creeds, and colors with full equality in wage rates.

This is a union that has made the democratic process its very lifeblood.

This is a union whose bookkeeping facilities, whose methods of honest and complete reporting to its members, whose standards of ethics have made its name synonymous with trade union morality.

This is a union that has withstood the attacks of Communists and racketeers, despite beatings by extortionists and hoodlums.

This is a union that has brought sunlight and decent homes, health and a measure of security, education and happiness into the lives of thousands who once were forced to live in a crowded, miserable industrial jungle.

This Executive Council of the AFL-CIO hereby extends to the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union its wholehearted support. We know the ILGWU would never fear a fair investigation. Its record is impeccable.

But we insist that neither this union nor any other unions of the AFL-CIO should ever be forced to endure political blackmail and to undergo a loaded investigation. We do not intend to stand idly by while our unions are smeared for political purposes by anyone in any political party at any level.

We hereby authorize the president of the AFL-CIO to do anything necessary to aid and support the ILGWU in this crucial moment in its history.

Text of AFL-CIO Statement on Shorter Hours

Following is the text of the AFL-CIO Executive Council statement announcing a legislative and collective bargaining drive to reduce the workweek to spread employment:

For 57 consecutive months, the unemployment rate has exceeded 5 percent. This is a statistic of suffering America and most especially her workers can no longer tolerate.

Workers have been patient through a succession of recessions, each of which has started from a higher plateau of unemployment than the last. We have explored every hopeful avenue, used all of our efforts at persuasion at the legislative and executive levels, acceded to advice and counsel to wait the better times that were certain to come.

Our urgings and demands for a wide range of remedial measures have been to no avail. Meanwhile, over this long period the general economic level has at no time reached the position at which full employment was even approachable. There is no reason to expect that position to be reached in the foreseeable future.

At this moment in history, the economy is again faltering. The promised upward movement of a year ago has lost its headway. There is every reason to believe the 1962 "recovery" has passed its peak, a peak so low that it barely registered on the one economic barometer most important to workers—the measurement of unemployment.

True unemployment is clearly much higher than the government statistics report. These statistics fail to measure partial unemployment (Americans working less than a full workweek through no fault of their own) and they fail to account for those hundreds of thousands who want and need jobs and who are not itemized by the government because they are not job hunting on a specific day for jobs they know do not exist. And hanging over the horizon, as ominous as an atomic cloud, is the automation yet to come—the substitution of electronic machines for human effort, which is barely at the threshold of its development.

The American labor movement has never feared progress; we do not today. But we are determined that the benefits of progress should flow in equitable fashion to all segments of our society—not just a privileged few.

Clearly the nation can brook no further delay. The time has come for a basic change in the fundamental terms of employment in the United States. One certain answer to the problem is to spread the work by reducing the hours each worker devotes to his job, measured either by the week or the year, while maintaining his total earnings. A shorter work period without a reduction in take home pay is the answer America needs, an answer that is more urgent since alternative solutions have been shelved.

We intend to achieve that goal.

We have not argued, nor do we argue today, that a 40-hour week is in the main an undue burden. We have repeatedly said we would welcome a full 40 hours of employment for every worker. That's what we want—a full-time job for every worker who wants a job. But we are completely convinced by the record of the past and the unmistakable shape of the future that this objective is no longer a practical possibility, even on a short-term basis, at today's 40-hour workweek, because the present political alignments have blocked effective actions that would achieve that end.

As we undertake this new campaign, we are conscious that many do not now agree with us. For reasons perhaps just as sincere as those that motivate us, they believe there are other steps that will achieve a full employment economy. These are steps we have supported, and we still support them. We would be happy to give them a chance to create full employment on a 40-hour basis now. But these other steps have not been taken; employment progress has not been achieved. And we owe our first duty to the workers of America and to their families. They are the prime victims; it is they we intend shall finally have some relief.

We believe our fellow citizens have a right to know that we intend to achieve this goal both through legislation and collective bargaining. Obviously the economy would not be benefited to the extent we believe necessary, if our shorter-hours goal were achieved only for organized workers. Therefore, we intend to proceed simultanously along two paths—to win both a statutory shorter workweek and a contractual shorter workweek.

Already many of our unions have reduced the work-year by winning longer paid vacations and more paid holidays and a number have appreciably reduced the workweek below the federal maximum. These efforts must be and will be greatly intensified.

To pass these gains on to other workers not in our unions, we intend to achieve changes in the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide penalty pay of double time for all hours worked over 35, to discourage evasion of our aim of a shorter workweek.

In order to implement this campaign and carry it to a successful conclusion, the AFL-CIO Executive Council adopts the following program:

1. A special committee of the Executive Council is hereby created, headed by the president of the AFL-CO and including four vice presidents to be designated by him. This committee is assigned the task of directing the drive for a shorter statutory workweek and rallying behind this campaign the full resources of all affiliated unions and the widest possible public support. As a first responsibility, this committee is instructed to draft amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act that will achieve the objectives set forth in this statement, insure the introduction of these amendments in the next session of Congress and to press vigorously for their enactment.

2. The president of the AFL-CIO is instructed to establish in the national headquarters a task force with this campaign as their prime assignment. He will assign to this task force such economists, lawyers, statisticians, legislative representatives, public relations specialists, educators and other headquarters personnel as may be necessary. This task force is to be instantly available to all affiliated unions to aid, assist, advise and counsel in collective bargaining in this area. In addition, this task force will be assigned to the special committee named above to aid in the legislative campaign.

3. Every state and local central body of the AFL-CIO is hereby instructed to give full and unstinting support to this effort and cooperate fully with the committee established above.

This is, as we have said, a matter of great urgency; yet, as realists, we know the battle will be long and hard and that victory will not be achieved easily. Historically, the great struggles to reduce the working hours of Americans have been long and hard-fought. Even in recent years, far less significant changes in the Fair Labor Standards Act have come only after bitter, drawn-out battles.

But the difficulties do not and cannot weaken our determination to succeed. This is an effort that is inseparably linked to the future of America. Our country cannot afford economic stagnation. It cannot long afford the unemployment it now suffers; and the unemployment that is sure to come, without this fundamental remedy, would be a world-wide disaster.

A floundering giant cannot give the free world the material or moral leadership which is America's inescapable obligation. We in the United States must, at this moment in history, recognize that our ability to utilize our own abundance, to mobilize our material and human resources to the fullest, is not simply desirable, but is paramount to the survival of human liberty.

Fifty-seven months of intolerable unemployment make this campaign mandatory; our country's well-being makes full employment a necessity.

Council Backs Rights Drive In Albany, Ga.

Chicago—The AFL-CIO called on the government "to make our constitutional guarantees meaningful" in Albany, Ga.

The federation's Executive Council said that the government should do "more than it has done" to guarantee basic freedoms in the Georgia city.

"We unconditionally and unequivocally support those who seek equality. The American trade union movement has always supported that fundamental position; we have not retreated one inch from that stand. We will never retreat," the council declared.

The federation saluted "the men and women who have gone to jail in Albany, Ga., rather than compromise their principles. They are the true spirit of America; they are our hope of a nation ultimately free of discrimination and segregation."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told reporters that the national position against discrimination must be asserted in the southern city. He declared that local officials there were "flouting the will of the nation."

Broader U.S. Wage Increases Backed

Chicago—Ample pay increases for all postal and classified federal workers were called for here by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Without specifying any particular bill, the council urged that the pay measure that emerges "offer more money to the lower levels" than would be provided by the Administration's program and that the increases become effective before Jan. 1, 1963.

URW's Bergmann Joins ILO Staff

Akron, O. — Ralph H. Bergmann has resigned as research director of the Rubber Workers to join the staff of the Intl. Labor Organization as deputy chief of its Industrial Works Div., with headquarters in Geneva.

Bergmann joined the URW staff 11 years ago and became research director in 1957. A native of Brooklyn, he was graduated from Cornell University in 1943 and after service with the Army during World War II, continued his education and won a Ph.D. in industrial economics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1950.

Council Launches Two-Front Drive To Spread Jobs by Cut in Workweek

(Continued from Page 1)

and the unmistakable shape of the future that this objective is no longer a practical possibility," the council added.

The statement acknowledged the sincerity of Administration opposition to a shorter workweek—expressed in statements and speeches by Pres. Kennedy and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. But noting that "present political alignments" have blocked "effective" measures to create jobs, it added:

"We owe our first duty to the workers of America and to their families. They are the prime victims; it is they we intend shall finally have some relief."

Collective bargaining progress to spread employment, the council noted, has taken and will continue to take several forms, including longer paid vacations and more paid holidays in addition to a reduction in the basic workweek.

Fight 'Long and Hard'

The shorter workweek drive, the council acknowledged, "will be long and hard-fought" as have been "the great struggles" of the past to reduce the hours of work. But the effort, the council said, "is inseparably linked to the future of America."

Meany told newsmen that the AFL-CIO does not consider a shorter workweek inflationary, that it is not a substitute for a tax cut and that the basic aim of the campaign is to achieve full employment in the United States.

The Executive Council's action carried forward a warning sounded by the AFL-CIO convention in December 1961 that "heavy unemployment will persist and grow even more disastrously" unless "major steps" are taken to stimulate "rapid growth in employment opportunities."

If economic growth is slow, the convention declared, "standard working hours should be cut at a rapid rate" to spread employment. With a more vigorous pickup, the change in hours could be more gradual, the convention resolution stated.

Action by the Executive Council to set in motion a full-scale nationwide campaign was foreshadowed by a number of union conventions during the past year which called for cuts in the workweek as unemployment remained persistently high and the industrial recovery rate tapered off.

In May, at the Clothing Workers' convention, Meany served notice that the AFL-CIO would launch its drive for a 35-hour week unless the nation's economy picks up "right soon."

Later, at the Garment Workers' convention, the AFL-CIO president told reporters that he would present a shorter workweek proposal to the Executive Council at its August meeting. A cut in hours with no reduction in pay, he declared, "would have a tremendous impact" on the high unemployment rate.

Ohio AFL-CIO Aide Named State Adviser

Columbus — Sec.-Treas. Elmer Cope of the Ohio AFL-CIO has been named a member of the State Advisory Council on Unemployment Compensation for a term ending July 28, 1967.

The council recommends changes in the jobless benefit law to the governor and the legislature. Cope, who was appointed by Gov. Michael DiSalle, succeeds Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., who resigned.

Danger Signals

THE RECOVERY FROM the last recession is beginning to sputter and may soon run its course. The human tragedy and economic waste of unemployment will become worse in the coming months unless an all-out government effort is started to counter the economy's downward drift.

The present economic weakness comes on top of brief and incomplete recoveries from the three previous slumps of the past nine years. One recession has followed fast upon another and the upturns have been getting weaker and shorter in duration.

Unemployment has moved up after each slump in steady succession and its level now is greater than at the start of any previous postwar economic decline. The unemployment rate has been 5 percent or more for the past 57 consecutive months, except in February 1960.

The pick-up from the most recent recession has been the weakest and briefest of all postwar upturns. The rises in production and employment have been less than before and the decline in unemployment has been smaller.

Unemployment has declined only 1.1 million or 22.9 percent in the 17 months from February 1961 to July 1962, according to government reports. But this weak improvement is even worse than the bare official reports indicate. In those 17 months, the civilian labor force declined slightly, although past population trends indicate that it should have grown by more than a million.

Part of this large missing group can be explained by the increase of about 350,000 in the size of the armed forces. Another small part of the missing group can probably be accounted for by the earlier retirement of men. But that still leaves hidden unemployment of a half-million or more—people who were not in the labor force in July, because job opportunities were not available.

In contrast, unemployment had fallen 23.9 percent in the 17 months after the low-point of the 1958 recession, even though there had been an increase of temporary layoffs as a result of the steel strike. During similar periods of upturn, unemployment dropped 29.7 percent and 54.9 percent, following the 1954 and 1949 recessions.

Last January the Administration estimated that unemployment would decline to a 5 percent rate by the end of this year—based on the expectation that total national production would reach $570 billion for the year as a whole. By mid-year, national output was at an annual rate of $13 billion below the Administration's expectations, clearly indicating the possibility of attaining a 5 percent rate of unemployment to be exceedingly remote. Continuation of recent economic trends will send the unemployment rate up to 6 percent or more by the end of the year.

As long ago as the start of 1962—only a year after the upturn started—a slowdown in the advance of production and sales became apparent. By May and June, signs of weakness were accumulating. Now, most major indicators of future activities are declining—danger signals that another recession may be in the making if effective counter measures are not taken.

We hope Pres. Kennedy is right in his optimism that there is "every reason for confidence" that another recession is not imminent. It is still our judgment that he should have asked for a tax cut now. The size and amount of a tax cut that will be needed a few months from now may well be much more costly.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Robert B. Cooney, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year: 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VII Saturday, August 18, 1962 No. 83

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

New Book Concludes:

Course of Events Seen Making U. S., UN Partners for Peace

FAR FROM REACHING its twilight period, "the United Nations, if it were not already in existence, would have to be created in the interests of the human race."

This quotation from a new study released by the Public Affairs Institutes in Washington, The U.S. and the UN—Partners For Peace, sums up the conviction of the author, Alexander Uhl, that in the UN we have the best instrument for achieving international peace and a better and more meaningful life for the citizens of the world.

"No matter how passionately attached we are to our own country and the magnificent progress it has achieved during the past two centuries," he says, "the historic fact is that for the first time in our history we are truly living in a world community which we, ourselves, perhaps have done more to create than any other power."

This study is being released at a time when vocal and powerful opponents of the UN are demanding that the United States get out of the international organization. The list of accomplishments of the UN recounted by the author provides, however, a convincing argument that it would be perilous for ourselves and the free world to take such a step.

For some 30 years Uhl was a foreign editor and correspondent. He witnessed personally the breakdown of the old League of Nations; Hitler's assumption of power in Germany and his early aggressions; the flouting of the league by Italy, Japan and the Soviet Union and the conquest of Republican Spain by Franco. In 1945 he covered the founding of the UN in San Francisco. Seven years later he helped to bring about a better understanding of the organization, at a time it was under bitter attack, when he wrote The Assault On the UN for the institute. Currently he is editor of Press Associates, Inc., a labor news service.

In the last two years, he notes, there has been a rise in demands that we get out of the UN, but these criticisms remain confined to "conservative groups in both parties, coming especially from those reactionary groups that appear to have lost faith in both parties and to be seeking an American version of an authoritarian state oriented to the right."

The evidence supports the belief that the responsible leadership of both parties, in organized labor and the public, overwhelmingly supports our membership in the UN.

The U.S. has no alternative, the author feels, but to work within the UN, even with its radically changed membership, to achieve our national and international objectives.

"If the United States is to exercise the kind of effective and peaceful world leadership that every American must hope it will," Uhl says, "it will have to face forward rather than to seek maintenance of a status quo that will not stay put."

HE FEELS WE CAN PROFIT much from the failures of the League of Nations in our work to make the UN a more effective instrument.

"The league," he writes, "came to an end partly because of the lack of an organizational structure that would give it sufficient power and authority, but mostly it had come to an end because the world's great powers were unwilling to accept edicts that went contrary to their own national interests, real or imaginary.

"They were unwilling to grant enough authority or power to an international body that would enable it to intervene decisively in a peace-threatening situation. On the basis of the observable facts, the world's great nations, with no exceptions, played sorry roles in the steadily deteriorating events that led up to World War II. The result was the disaster of World War II."

Much of the study is concerned with a dispassionate examination of the UN and whether it has been more effective than the League of Nations.

"On the whole," says the author, "the UN's record after 17 years would seem marked by fruitful accomplishments in many areas of international life. It has shown, far better than the League of Nations was ever able to show, that the safeguarding of world peace can be achieved despite limited wars such as we have had in Korea and Viet Nam."

The writer notes the role of the organization in the Congo crisis, in the intervention in the dispute between Israel and the Arab states, the halting of fighting in Kashmir, and the Suez crisis. He feels the many agencies of the UN are working soundly in "war-preventative" areas and illustrate the "scope of the activities that are being conducted by the UN in the interest of world peace and stability."

The U.S. and the UN—Partners For Peace may be obtained from Public Affairs Institute, 312 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., Washington 3, D. C., at $1 each.

Morgan Says:

Fluoridation of Water Works In Spite of What Its Foes Claim

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EDT.)

A REPORTER, HOPEFULLY, is always learning something. I was shocked, a few weeks ago, to learn of the deplorable condition of American teeth. The U.S. Public Health Service furnished statistics to support the charge that we are rapidly becoming a nation of dental cripples. I reported on this situation on July 12, adding the comment, endorsed by leading dentists, physicians, the American Dental Association, the American Medical Association and public health experts here and abroad, that one obvious, easy, proved and inexpensive remedy was the fluoridation of drinking water.

Morgan

It was then I learned something else: the passionate fervor, stubborn potency and staggering misinformation of the anti-fluoridation lobby. Listeners from coast to coast wrote to inform me that, whether or not I had holes in my teeth, I obviously had holes in my head.

Fluoride is a deadly cumulative poison, wrote a health food merchant of Portland, Ore. Fluoridation is "a pretty serious step away from democracy," warned a man from Saugerties, N. Y. A dentist of Red Bluff, Calif., declared "fluoridation of drinking water is one of the most insidious 'rackets' to date." The "aluminum trust," he charged, is behind the idea as a method to dispose of aluminum by-products. Implying a conspiracy against the critics of fluoridation by scheming bureaucrats, a lady in Sherman Oaks, Calif., wrote that "as long as minority opinions can be silenced, they will remain unheard and minority opinions."

The opinions of the anti-fluoridationists are not unheard. Though seldom clear, they have come through loud enough to defeat fluoridation in community after community. They are given some credit for blocking it in New York City. The U.S. government, the University of Michigan, other public and private institutions and individuals have spent large sums of money and incalculable man-hours in examining their claims and have found them, almost without exception, to be baseless or grossly misleading.

We pretend to be the best informed country in the world. But one of the ironic paradoxes of the age is that despite the availability of facts to disprove the charges against fluoridation, the public is so ignorant of them that the opposition has succeeded in bringing almost to a complete standstill the expansion of this method as an aid to dental hygiene.

This is not to say that fluoridation is faultless, that it is the answer to every dental problem or that every hamlet in the land needs it. Undoubtedly exaggerated claims have been made for it. Very likely public health officials have been inept and/or impatient on occasion in trying to meet a community's resistance to the process. But if one accepts the case of the opposition, then one must believe that the most responsible spokesmen of the medical and dental professions and the leading public health experts of the country are either idiots or criminals or both. This is just a little too sweeping to make sense.

FLUORIDE IN WATER can cause mottling of teeth. But this happens where water naturally contains too much fluoride. It does not happen in city water systems where fluoridation is controlled. Fluoride is a poison—in the same sense that sodium chloride, table salt, is poisonous if taken to excess. The aluminum industry has not bamboozled or corrupted health officials to provide a market for its slag. The fluoride used in water systems does not come from aluminum by-products and the quantity required is too infinitesimal to make its market important. These and other facts negating the opposition to fluoridation are available to anybody who wants them.

Some citizens who wrote me castigated the authorities for not concentrating on cleaning up the nation's diet, instead of tinkering with its water supply. As I reported on July 12, such experiments have repeatedly failed. A lady in Minneapolis furnished fresh proof of failure: some Minneapolis schools tried to withdraw "empty calorie" sweets from lunchroom counters. Students simply loaded up on candy at the corner drug store.

The luckless cause of fluoridation has received impressive support from a reliable source—the conservative British government. In a special 50-page pamphlet which the U.S. Public Health Service has just received, the British Ministry of Health reported the following conclusions from five years of detailed study in three separate areas:

1. Addition of fluoride to water supplies at a specified level (of 1 part per million) presented no technical difficulties. 2. Five years of fluoridation in the three areas brought about in each a substantial improvement in children's teeth. 3. Results so far are in line with American experience. 4. No evidence of harm from fluoridation was discerned despite continuous vigilance.

Washington Reports:

U.S. Warned Growing Shortage Of Doctors, Dentists Threatens

THE CURRENT SHORTAGE of doctors and dentists will become even more severe unless Congress soon approves the Health Professions Educational Assistance bill, Rep. John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) and Rep. Willard S. Curtin (R-Pa.) asserted in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"Just to hold the present ratio of physicians and dentists to population, we must increase the number of new students four times as fast in the '60's as we did during the '50's," Curtin declared.

"The vice president in charge of research for the National Cancer Society told us in committee that we have scientific knowledge available that could save half the 450,000 persons in this country who develop cancer each year. The incidence of economic loss, hardship, death and extended illnesses, because of lack of enough physicians and other health personnel affects not only those who contract cancer but other diseases."

THE PROPOSED legislation would provide funds on a matching basis for new medical schools and expansion of existing schools.

There would be $45 million for grants for construction of new teaching facilities to train physicians, pharmacists, optometrists, podiatrists, nurses or public health personnel; $15 million annually for training dentists; $15 million annually for replacement or rehabilitation of existing teaching facilities. A five-year student loan program of $72.3 million also would be authorized.

Student loans provided under the bill would be repayable over a 10-year period at low interest rates, with the first payment due three years after graduation.

Up to 50 percent of a loan might be forgiven at the rate of 10 percent a year for practicing in an area of shortage, for active duty in the armed forces or for employment by a public or non-profit agency. The loans would not be made directly by the federal government but by the school.

Dingell said that hearings have shown the serious need of the student loan program.

"Not only is the duration of medical school long, but the debt accumulated by the average student carries over into his professional life," he asserted. "We are finding that as a result of this situation, the number of new entrants into the medical schools is being held down."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

AFTER DR. FRANCES KELSEY of the Food & Drug Administration got a gold medal from Pres. Kennedy for her "outstanding" federal service in barring the drug thalidomide from the American market, an enterprising New York Times reporter dug up the two-year-old testimony of her predecessor on the pressures suffered by medical officers as they seek to protect the public from harmful side effects of new drugs.

In testimony before the Kefauver Senate anti-trust subcommittee, Dr. Barbara Moulton on June 2, 1960, charged that the FDA had become in many activities "merely a service bureau" to the powerful manufacturing drug industry.

She said that drug firms often sent four or five representatives at a time to argue for approval of a new drug. The visits would continue every day or two, she testified, until the approval was given.

She told the subcommittee that the attitude of officials "from above" was that the agency should maintain "a policy of friendliness" with the drug industry (this was when she consulted a superior about what she considered harmful side effects of a new sedative).

She said she was finally transferred from the New Drug Division of the agency at the request of a drug company, after she had been told that the drug firm itself would be the best judge of the safety of a new product. Now she works at the Federal Trade Commission.

Sen. Kefauver also has entered in the Congressional Record a long memorandum listing details of telephone calls, letters and personal visits Dr. Kelsey received from the manufacturer of thalidomide during the 18 months she refused approval for general use of the baby-deforming drug.

* * *

A FEDERAL AGENCY charged with protecting public health and safety should be free of such pressures. The manufacturing drug firms should be compelled to submit to more stringent regulatory measures. And Congress itself has responsibilities.

Dr. Moulton served in the FDA when it may have reflected the generally non-activist regulatory philosophy of the Eisenhower Administration—which in no way disparages the high conscientiousness and sense of public dedication of working professionals who are also civil servants.

Dr. Kelsey went through her 18 months of company pressure under a new Administration, when she was able steadfastly to insist that she did not consider the safety factor of thalidomide adequately demonstrated. In any Administration, however, it has long been a truism that a government regulatory agency may gradually be influenced heavily by the industry it is intended to regulate.

To protect an agency from that circumstance, both the Executive Dept. and Congress have a role to play. And Congress now has an opportunity to demonstrate, by new legislation tightening controls and giving wider powers to the FDA, that it wants the agency to function effectively.

* * *

THE U.S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE has decided that the House-passed bill providing equal pay for women workers doing equal work with men is a menace, despite acceptance of chamber amendments on the floor. The chamber has sent a letter proclaiming its undying antagonism to "injustice and inequity" but viewing with alarm actual passage of the pay bill.

Enactment would bring "another vast federal bureaucracy" and give the Labor Dept. "vast new powers over private industry," the chamber says.

Considering the state of affairs in the House, the chamber's cry of agony might be sufficient to prevent final passage of the bill if the Senate should modify the terms of the House measure; any amendment might be sufficient to bottle it up in the House Rules Committee.

The House bill was considered by the Administration to have some language vagueness. If it is nevertheless finally judged to be reasonably effective and enforceable, Senate passage of the exact measure would send it to the White House.

THE U.S. NEEDS twice as many medical students as it has just to keep even with the present inadequate supply of physicians, Rep. John D. Dingell (D-Mich.), left, and Rep. Willard S. Curtin (R-Pa.) agreed as both urged enactment of the Health Professions Educational Assistance bill at this session of Congress. They appeared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy

Credit Unions Training Experts To Help Families Plan Spending

By Sidney Margolius

SUBSTANDARD INCOMES in comparison to present high living costs still are the major causes of family money troubles. But many families with at least average incomes get into difficulties that could be avoided by more expert knowledge.

For two years the Credit Union National Association has been working on a program of training counselors to help families plan buying and spending to make the best use of their incomes. Credit unions always have done much rescue work, but now they are seeking to provide preventive services to stop troubles before they start.

Credit union leagues in 42 American states and Canadian provinces have such counseling programs in various stages of development, according to John F. Sullivan, CUNA's family financial counseling specialist. Some large credit unions have their own family financial counselors. Others are seeking to work out centralized preventive counseling services and prorating services (debt pooling to hold off pressing creditors).

Labor unions also are conducting similar consumer-education programs through their community services committees, often by providing consumer courses for union families.

Such programs by community organizations are urgently needed, especially since a national association of privately owned finance companies announced recently that it is planning to set up its own family counseling services.

In an interview Sullivan provided some valuable observations from his experience in the credit union program. Here are his frank answers to questions about how to keep trouble away from your door:

In experiences you have observed, and those of other credit union workers, what are the chief causes of family financial difficulties?

"My observations indicate these chief causes:

"1—Lack of long-range planning for major needs such as a new car, college education, major illness, etc.

"2—Status-seeking or keeping up with the Joneses.

"3—Inability to understand the total effect on the family pocketbook of almost unlimited credit buying. Many people use credit so freely that they don't even know the total amount they owe. All they know is the amount of monthly payments, which are used up to the hilt so that when an emergency arises there are no extra funds.

"4—Among the very young and newly married, the desire to begin at the level of living it took their parents years to reach.

"5—Again among the young and newly married, a complete lack of education in how to handle money."

What do you suggest as the main corrective actions families need to take to keep out of trouble and make financial progress?

"Use credit only for major purchases or relatively inexpensive items. For every-day-type purchases, do not use anything over 30-day charge accounts. Develop a spending plan that provides savings for future fixed expenses and begin putting funds aside to pay for at least part of the future fixed expenses. Keep installment payments, aside from mortgage payments, well under 25 percent of take-home pay. Build a time table indicating when payments for various items will be completed, thus making more funds available at later dates."

Do credit-union counselors find families will stick to a budget or spending plan when they get skilled help in working one out? Or are the people in trouble repeaters?

"Our local counselors generally find families will stick to a budget when they get skilled help in working it out. But to some extent that depends on the degree of skilled help. When a counselor works with the family's motivations and gets the member to cooperate in working out the solution, the results are amazing. But when less skill is used, and the credit union does all the work and the member does nothing for himself, those in trouble tend to be repeaters. We find that simply treating the symptoms with a consolidation loan or interceding with creditors to accept smaller payments meanwhile does not solve the basic problem. Effective counseling means getting the member to help himself on a more permanent basis while the credit union works out the immediate financial problem."

Copyright 1962 by Sidney Margolius

CONTRACT PROVIDING benefits totaling $6.25 a week for 6,000 agents of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. is signed at Boston. Left to right are: William O. Murdock, the company's industrial relations director; John Higgins, his assistant; Insurance Workers Sec.-Treas. William A. Gillen, who headed the negotiating committee; IWIU Vice Pres. Robert L. Ponsi and IWIU Vice Pres. Robert J. Nicholson.

'It Could Be a Wonderful World:'

Union Songs Heard On New Recording

UNIONISTS AT LABOR summer schools throughout the nation are among the thousands listening to a new record of union songs—It Could Be a Wonderful World.

The album, featuring such folk-singers as Ronnie Gilbert, Tommy Makem and the Tarriers, provides lively, melodious and foot-tapping versions of old favorites as Solidarity Forever, Roll the Union On, Which Side Are You On?, Sit Down, and We Shall Not Be Moved.

Other songs in the album include the title song, It Could Be a Wonderful World, Joe Hill, No Irish Need Apply, The UAW-CIO, Union Maid, All Together, The Mill Was Made of Marble, Song of the Guaranteed Wage, Too Old to Work and Automation. The album was produced by the Auto Workers Educational Dept. and Joel O'Brien Productions, Inc.

Words of all the songs are printed on the album's double jacket, with historical notes by Harry Fleischman, director of the National Labor Service.

"We Shall Not Be Moved" started as a miners' song of victory over a thwarted eviction attempt. During a 1931 strike of West Virginia miners, 106 families were evicted from company-owned homes. The League for Industrial Democracy was conducting educational programs for the union, and Mrs. Ethel Clyde, a philanthropist who had given the LID money for the educational work, was shocked at the sight of miners and their children sleeping in an open field without even tents. She put up money for rent so that they could get back into their homes. That night a choir of Negro union members started to sing new verses to an old hymn. They started out with:

"They're movin' out our furniture but we shall not be moved.

"The people of New York have decided—we shall not be moved.

"Just like a tree that's planted by the water, we shall not be moved."

Another song, "No Irish Need Apply," stems from the time of the potato famine of 1845-47 when thousands of Irishmen fled their starving country. In America, signs were soon posted "No Irish Need Apply," and this song was written to express the resentment of Irish workers.

While America has long signified opportunity to millions of poverty-stricken immigrants who were recruited to fill the insatiable maws of a growing economic system, when a depression came immigrants found themselves low men on the totem pole. Their color, nationality and religion were used to bar them from jobs.

The barrier of discrimination has been used in this country at various times against Irish, Jews, Poles, Chinese, Italians and many others. In recent years, those hardest hit have been Negroes and Latin Americans. The militancy expressed in this song is matched by the determination and struggle of the young people in the sit-ins and civil rights movements today.

Copies of the album, It Could Be a Wonderful World, are available at $2 each from the Auto Workers Educational Dept., 8000 E. Jefferson, Detroit 14, Mich.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Maybe Daisies Wouldn't Tell, But Who Likes Singing Weeds?

By Jane Goodsell

THE 20-FOOT flower bed in our back yard is a beautifully-tended mass of blooms. All spring long, I had nursed it tenderly, fertilizing and spraying, tying drooping stems to stakes and pinching back buds to encourage bushy growth.

Until this spring I had been a negative, lackadaisical sort of gardener. But then, never before had I grown plants which responded so magnificently. This year my blooms prospered and, just as the gardening manuals promised, I was rewarded with strong, vigorous growth and an abundance of blooms.

For the first time in my life, I felt qualified to enter into discussions about gardening. I spoke authoritatively about mulching and transplanting, and I developed strong opinions about which fertilizers were best.

It was a new experience for me—and terribly exciting. Each morning after breakfast, I rushed outside to see what new miracles nature had accomplished during the night. And I was nearly always rewarded by the sight of new green shoots springing from the ground.

And now I have learned that my carefully staked, tenderly nurtured, methodically fertilized plants did not spring from the daisy seeds I planted last year. My daisies are not daisies. They are weeds.

I WAS GIVEN this information by a friend who took me aside and broke the news in a hushed, funeral whisper. She said, as though she were informing me of a terrible disaster, "I hate to be the one to tell you, but there's something you ought to know . . ."

Okay, so I KNOW it! And just between you and me, I don't care! Not the slightest bit. I refuse to stop loving those plants simply because they've turned out to be weeds.

Never before have I had plants that burst from the ground with such a positive, chin-up attitude. Never before have I grown anything that prospered so abundantly, and bloomed and multiplied in such profusion. Why, I couldn't be so disloyal as to turn my back on those plants simply because other people call them nasty names. And, what's more, I think they're pretty. Now that their buds have opened, they are a mass of tiny, delicate lavender flowers.

They are an ideal ground covering, and I heartily recommend them.

Would anybody like a cutting to transplant?

Group Medical Practice To Be Studied for U. S.

The Group Health Association of America will undertake a major study for the government aimed at providing detailed information about patients in prepaid group medical practice plans, the treatment they receive, and their future medical needs.

A $62,300 grant by the U.S. Public Health Service will finance the first year of the study. The over-all goal, the Public Health Service said, is to improve out-of-hospital health services, particularly for the chronically ill and the aged.

GHAA is a national non-profit organization composed of group medical service plans in various communities, including a number sponsored or supported by unions.

Income, Retail Sales Up:

Factory Workweek Dips Sharply in July

By Robert B. Cooney

The Labor Dept.'s job report for July has revealed a greater-than-expected drop in the average factory workweek—the third straight monthly decline—and a continued high level of workers on part-time involuntarily.

These two factors are among the leading indicators relied on to assess the nation's economic health. Other indicators released by the Commerce Dept. were more favorable; they showed an advance in retail sales and a slight rise in total personal income.

The average factory workweek fell by 18 minutes to 40.4 hours in July, according to the Labor Dept.'s detailed report on the job picture. The workweek normally declines by 12 minutes this time of year.

Although the workweek has been edging downward since April, after seasonal adjustments, it was the longest for July since 1950, the report noted. It also said:

"There were 2.7 million non-farm workers on short workweeks because of economic reasons, virtually unchanged from June. The economic part-time group, discounting seasonal changes, has been edging upward irregularly since the beginning of the year."

The Labor Dept.'s summary job report issued Aug. 1 had shown a decline in unemployment of 450,000 to a total of 4 million. The key seasonally adjusted jobless rate dipped to 5.3 percent from June's 5.5 percent; the rate has hung at about 5.5 percent for the past six months.

Teen-Agers Get Jobs

The detailed report said the jobless decline in July "was concentrated almost entirely among teen-agers who found jobs in non-farm activities."

Seymour L. Wolfbein, Labor Dept. manpower chief, said the report indicated there was "certainly no deterioration" in the national economic picture. But, he continued, there also was no upward economic push which would make a dent in high-level unemployment.

Wolfbein pointed out the steel industry exerted a "drag" on employment and work hours again in July.

He noted it suffered a job decline of 41,300 last month to a total of 1.1 million—a larger drop than was experienced by any other industry and the third straight monthly decline in steel. The average workweek in steel also plummeted by 1 hour, 42 minutes in July, a larger-than-expected drop.

Some experts offered the view that steel was slumping because users still were working off stockpiles built up in anticipation of a steel strike which did not occur. Wolfbein observed that the industry also was feeling the impact on jobs of automation and other changes.

Labor Dept. figures show steel has regained only 54,000 jobs of the 193,000 lost during the 1960-61 recession. Total non-farm employment, in contrast, has regained all of its loss plus 1 million.

The auto industry has gained back all its recession loss of 187,000 jobs plus an additional 51,000, after adjustment for seasonal influences.

Employed at July Record

The July report registered a record for the month of 69.6 million employed; the total, however, was practically unchanged from June.

The total labor force, which includes the armed services, stood at 76.4 million in July, about a half-million higher than a year earlier.

The labor force, said the report, "continues to be below expectations of over-the-year labor force growth."

Older men, women in the 45 to 54 age group and teenage boys all showed year-to-year declines in labor force participation rates, it added.

The labor force is expected to grow by 1 to 1.2 million a year.

The Commerce Dept. reported a 2 percent advance in retail sales between June and July, pushing the total to $19.5 billion from June's $19.1 billion; this is still shy of April's record $19.6 billion.

Personal income edged up to an annual rate of $442 billion in July, about $1.3 billion higher than in June and a record high. Most of the gain was recorded in wages and salaries; manufacturing payrolls declined by $200 million on an annual rate, chiefly because of the slump in steel.

Stanley Sincavage, ABC Co-Founder

Philadelphia — Vice Pres. Stanley Sincavage of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, one of the ABC's founders, died here of a heart attack after collapsing following an address to members of Local 6 in connection with a contract proposal.

Born 50 years ago in Poland, he lived in West Wyoming, Pa., and had been in the baking industry since 1928. He helped organize Wilkes-Barre Local 321 of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers in 1936, served as president and business agent and was made an international representative in 1946.

He joined the Committee to Preserve the Integrity of the B&C Intl. Union in 1957, helped organize the ABC and was elected a vice president at the founding convention in 1958.

Surviving are his widow, Nell, a son and a daughter.

Pilots Open New Parleys With Southern

Memphis—Southern Airways has returned to the bargaining table here and preliminary negotiations with the Air Line Pilots have been conducted in what was described as a "hopeful" atmosphere.

The air line, whose pilots have been on strike since June 5, 1960, has complied with a Civil Aeronautics Board order requiring it to bargain with the union or risk revocation of its operating certificate.

The union reported that C.N. Sayen, its former president, represented it when talks were resumed. Under discussion were the terms of a back-to-work agreement and the proper seniority placement of more than 30 non-striking pilots who are, under the CAB order, entitled to keep their jobs.

An ALPA official said Southern has petitioned the board for clarification of the status of the strike-breaking pilots and that negotiations probably will be resumed later.

AGREEMENT on procedures for collective bargaining between the Labor Dept. and Local 12 of the Government Employes is signed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and John Thurber, left, president of the AFGE local. Standing is Adrian Roberts, past president of the local.

Goldberg, AFGE Local Agree on Bargaining

The Labor Dept. and a union of its employes have agreed on ground rules for collective bargaining—with an assist from an outside mediator.

The agreement paves the way for exclusive recognition of the Government Employes' Labor Dept. local when the union presents authorization cards signed by a majority of the more than 4,000 eligible employes in the Washington area.

When Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and officers of the AFGE local found themselves deadlocked over the composition of the bargaining unit and the definition of supervisors, they called in New York University Prof. Sterling D. Spero, an authority on public administration and unionism in the government service.

Spero's advisory opinion paved the way for an agreement which both sides hailed and which Goldberg—a mediator of some standing himself—commended to other government agencies as a demonstration of the value of third party participation.

All employes of the department except executives, high level supervisors, personnel officials and a small group of printing and reproduction service employes were declared eligible for the bargaining unit. Professional employes will be included in the same unit if a majority of them sign authorization cards. Supervisors may, if they wish, obtain recognition as a separate unit.

Goldberg noted that over the years the AFGE and the department have conferred and reached agreements on a wide range of issues including working conditions, promotion policies and grievances. The union, he remarked, "even without having been designated by a majority of employes, has in effect been their representative."

At the signing ceremony, Goldberg observed with a laugh that he was signing a union agreement for the first time as a representative of management. He termed the pact "a very sensible" step which should lead to better government through improved employe-management relations.

Pres. John Thurber of the AFGE unit said the union will launch a major drive for authorization cards and predicted that the Labor Dept. will become the first large agency, except for the Post Office, to enter formal collective bargaining relations with its employes.

Postal workers earlier voted overwhelmingly in a nationwide referendum for exclusive union representation under the collective bargaining policy instituted by Pres. Kennedy.

Compensation Benefits Rise In 6 States

Nine states made "modest" improvements in their workmen's compensation laws in this year's legislative sessions, the Dept. of Labor has reported.

The gains dealt mainly with increased cash benefits for injured workers and their families, the department's Bureau of Labor Standards said.

Benefit increases ranging from $2 to $8 a week were enacted in six states. Maximum weekly benefits were raised in New York and Virginia for all types of disability and death; in Maryland for total disability and death; in Kentucky and New Jersey for all types of disability; and in Rhode Island for specified injuries, the report said.

Maximum weekly payments for "temporary total" disability—the most frequent type of disability—advanced to $55 in New York, $48 in Maryland, $45 in New Jersey, $38 in Kentucky, and $37 in Virginia. Massachusetts and Rhode Island extended the time periods over which benefits for specified injuries are to be paid, and Alaska made provision for increased burial allowances.

Mississippi extended its workmen's compensation law to cover disability or death due to exposure to ionizing radiation, the Labor Dept. noted.

Four Freedoms, Inc., Gets Housing Loan

Four Freedoms, Inc., a union-sponsored project to provide housing for the elderly, has received a $3.691 million loan from the Community Facilities Administration to build a seven-story, 307-unit apartment in Seattle. The loan is the largest ever given by the government for a project providing housing for the elderly.

Labor Asks Poll Tax End In Virginia

Norfolk, Va.—The Virginia State AFL-CIO, meeting here in its seventh annual convention, called for repeal of the state poll tax, enactment of compulsory school attendance laws and opposition to the closing of public schools for any purpose.

Acting on recommendations by its Civil Rights Committee, the convention asked the incoming executive board to consider the establishment of a permanent Committee on Human Rights, endorsed fair programs for the training of workers, called for the elimination of voting restrictions tending to discriminate against workers, and urged strengthening of voting rights.

In resolutions passed by the 448 delegates in three days of sessions the convention urged the legislature to improve unemployment compensation laws and to repeal the "blank paper" registration law.

The delegates authorized the appointment of a full-time women's activities director, and approved reports by Pres. Harold B. Boyd, Sec.-Treas. Brewster Snow and COPE Dir. Julian F. Carper.

For the second successive year the convention was held at the Golden Triangle Motor Hotel where all delegates had equal access to housing, restaurant and recreation facilities.

Speakers included Pres. A. L. Redfearn of the Norfolk Union Labor Council, temporary chairman; Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.); Boyd E. Payton, Upper South director of the Textile Workers Union of America; Dir. John Livingston of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization, and Pres. John M. Elliott of the Motor Coach Employes.

TWU Dispute On Airline Sent to Board

By executive order Pres. Kennedy invoked the Railway Labor Act to delay for 60 days a Transport Workers strike against Pan American World Airways following a federal court's refusal of Pan Am's request for a temporary injunction forbidding the walkout.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill and Sec.-Treas. Matthew Guinan promptly announced the union would follow the legal procedures calling for continued work while an emergency board recommends settlement terms.

TWU members have worked at Pan Am since a former contract expired last May 31. U.S. District Judge John F. Dooling issued a temporary restrainer Aug. 1 to delay a walkout, but he turned down the airline's request to replace the restraining order with an injunction.

"Pan American has not exerted every reasonable effort to make an agreement," Dooling ruled. He held that the airline had made only limited proposals and invoked mediation procedures before completing direct negotiations. Pan Am officials said they would appeal his decision.

Labor-Management Advisers Name Aide

Jack Stieber, who has been director of Michigan State University's School of Labor & Industrial Relations, has been named executive secetary of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

The appointment of Stieber, an economist with wide experience in labor-management relations, was announced by Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges, chairman of the tripartite committee.

NEW PRESIDENT of AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept., Bowen A. Gritta, is sworn in by Machinists Pres. Al J. Hayes at meeting of department's executive board in Chicago. Gritta, who had been the department's secretary-treasurer, was elected to succeed James A. Brownlow, who retired recently.

Gritta Named President By Metal Trades Dept.

Chicago—Bowen A. Gritta was elected president of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. at a meeting of its executive board here. He succeeds James Brownlow, who retired recently. Gritta had served 12 years as the department's secretary-treasurer.

To succeed Gritta in the latter position, the executive board elected Clayton W. Bilderback, who has been general organizer in the Northwest for the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters since 1946.

Gritta, 56, joined the Sheet Metal Workers in 1926 in Galveston, Tex. He became business agent of Local 144 in 1927 and president of the Galveston Central Labor Union in 1935. At the same time, he served as business agent for the local Metal Trades and Building Trades Councils. In 1949, he was appointed general representative for the Metal Trades Dept. and a year later was elected secretary-treasurer of the department with headquarters in Washington.

Bilderback, also 56, after two years at Kansas State Teachers College joined Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Local 668 in Boulder City, Nev., in 1936. Two years later he moved to Redding, Calif., and was elected business representative of Local 662. As general organizer for the union, he has specialized in metal trades organizing and bargaining activities on the West Coast.

CLAYTON W. BILDERBACK

Texas AFL-CIO Votes Dues for COPE Fund

San Antonio—The sixth annual convention of the Texas State AFL-CIO has approved a per capita tax increase of 5 cents with 3 cents earmarked specifically for political education.

The additional 2-cent increase will be split evenly between the general fund and the state AFL-CIO's public relations and education fund.

The increase went into effect Aug. 1. The first in Texas since the 1958 merger of the former State Federation of Labor and the former Industrial Union Council, it brings the monthly per capita payment to a total of 13 cents.

The increase won unanimous voice vote approval from delegates at the convention here. Pres. Hank Brown and Sec.-Treas. Roy Evans said the political education levy will go into a "locked" account to be known as the COPE Citizenship Fund, to be spent only on recommendation of a five-man COPE administrative committee and with state executive board approval.

They said most of the funds will be held for use in 1964 elections and will not replace voluntary COPE dollar drives.

The 1-cent allocation to the state federation's general fund raises that fund's share of per caps to 9 cents. The 1-cent levy for public relations and education replaces a voluntary 2-cent levy collected last year.

The convention heard key addresses by Brown, Evans and Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) and elected these new vice presidents: L. V. Means, San Antonio; Dave Keeler, Mesquite; O. C. Yancey, Jr., Ft. Worth; Frank Parker, Big Spring; E. R. Jacobson, Jr., Austin; Billy Fielding, Grand Prairie; Jean B. Savoy, Pasadena; Robert N. Brown, Odessa, and L. Tom Fox, Houston.

Meat Cutters Boycott Big Canadian Tannery

Toronto, Ont.—The Meat Cutters have called for worldwide boycott of leather products made by A. R. Clarke, Ltd., Canada's largest tannery and a long-time citadel of anti-unionism.

The firm resisted efforts at unionization for 25 years until the Meat Cutters were certified in May 1960. Unable to obtain a first contract in two years of bargaining, some 450 members of Local 125 walked out at the end of June. The company is operating on a reduced scale, hiring newly-arrived residents as strikebreakers, the union said.

Rousing of Race Hate Banned:

NLRB Outlaws Propaganda To 'Inflame' Bias in Elections

The National Labor Relations Board, declaring it "does not intend to tolerate" election propaganda whose only purpose is to "inflame the racial feelings" of employes, has voted 4-0 to set aside an election lost by a union at two Georgia clothing plants.

Enunciating a policy which will be followed in the future, the NLRB drew a sharp distinction between "permissible" references to a union's racial policies and those which "calculatedly" influence race prejudice. It applied that policy to two elections held on the same day—July 21, 1961—and to objections filed by two losing unions.

Upholding the charge of the Clothing Workers that management of the Sewell Mfg. Co. had prevented a free election by inflaming race prejudice, the NLRB ordered a new representation election within 30 days at Sewell plants in Bremen and Temple, Ga., because of "segregationist" propaganda not germane to the election or the union involved.

At the same time the board found no reason for setting aside an election at the Allen Morrison Sign Co., Lynchburg, Va., where the Textile Workers Union of America lost by a 91-68 margin and charged the defeat was due to management's use of the race issue. Here the board ruled the employer had stayed reasonably close to the truth and that his propaganda was "permissible."

Voting in the Sewell case were Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Boyd Leedom, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown. The Allen-Morrison decision was signed by McCulloch, Fanning, Leedom and Philip Ray Rodgers.

Convention Action

The AFL-CIO, in its three most recent conventions, urged the NLRB to stop permitting employers to use race-hate propaganda to defeat union organizing campaigns. The 1961 convention denounced the use of "venomous" race-hate propaganda and urged the board to review every case where "false assertions and epithets are used" to arouse race hatred and to "preclude the holding of a fair election."

In the Sewell case, where a new election was ordered, the propaganda of the employer included a reprint of the June 4, 1957, issue of the Jackson, Miss., Daily News, with a four-column picture of Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers dancing with an African woman, the wife of a Nigerian diplomat, at a Geneva meeting of the Intl. Labor Organization. Under the picture was a news story headed "Race Mixing Is an Issue as Vickers Workers Ballot."

The racial propaganda of the Sewell firm, the board decided, "exceeded permissible limits and so inflamed and tainted the atmosphere in which the election was held that a reasoned choice of a bargaining representative was an impossibility." The union lost the election, 985-331.

The board disagreed with the acting regional director at Atlanta who ruled that company propaganda did not justify setting aside the election because of a previous NLRB ruling in a case involving the Sharnay Hosiery Mills, Inc., where employer statements were held to be "temperate and factually correct."

Some Propaganda Tolerated

Saying they were faced in the Sewell case with a claim that by a deliberate sustained appeal to racial prejudice the employer created conditions which "made impossible a reasoned choice of a bargaining representative," the four NLRB members said:

"There are propaganda appeals . . . which we do not approve or condone, but which we tolerate, leaving the proper weighing of such appeals to the good sense and judgment of the electorate.

"But the appeals made to racial prejudice in this case are different. The board does not intend to tolerate as 'electoral propaganda' appeals or arguments which can have no purpose except to inflame the racial feeling of voters."

In the Allen-Morrison Sign election, however, the board ruled that the employer's statements about the TWUA's position on segregation and on union contributions to civil rights groups were "temperate in tone, germane and correct factually."

The board said its policy will be, therefore, that so long as a party to an election limits itself to the truth and does not try to inflame racial feelings by "irrelevant, inflammatory appeals," it will not set aside an election on the ground that race questions were raised.

However, it said, "the burden will be on the party making use of a racial message" to prove that it was truthful and to the point, and where there is doubt that this is so, the doubt will be resolved against that party.

Examiner Rules Against ILGWU

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has ruled that the Ladies' Garment Workers committed unfair labor practices in interrogating employes coercively and otherwise discouraging participation in a union formed by staff members, the Federation of Union Representatives.

The trial examiner, George A. Downing, ruled against FOUR in rejecting a charge that two staff members had been illegally discharged for FOUR activities.

The ILGWU previously had pointed out that it had long bargained with and had contracts with unions of its employes who were not ILGWU members. It said in a policy statement, reaffirming a convention mandate, that it would not bargain with a union of ILGWU business agents, a "faction of officers" constituting "a union within a union".

The union had 20 days to file exceptions to Downing's intermediate report to the five-member NLRB.

Typos Vote Changes In Dues Structure

Cincinnati—Delegates to the Typographical Union's 104th convention have approved sweeping changes in the dues structure, overhauling the per capita tax system and increasing the floor of the strike benefit fund from $500,000 to $5 million.

The constitutional amendments will go to a referendum of the membership Oct. 10. If approved they will become effective Jan. 1 with changes in the bylaws and general laws adopted by the convention.

The convention was the first to endorse dues revision during the administration of ITU Pres. Elmer Brown, now in his third two-year term.

The proposition providing for a change in per capita tax would put it on a percentage basis, as are all other ITU assessments, instead of the present flat rate of $1 per member per month. The new rate would be 1.5 percent of the average full-time weekly wage rate of the membership, as determined annually by the ITU secretary-treasurer and published in the Typographical Journal, the union's official publication.

The considerable increase in the strike benefit fund floor would enable the ITU to pay strike and lockout benefits to its larger locals. Such benefits are 60 percent of the local scale for married members or those with dependents and 40 percent for those without dependents.

In several resolutions, the convention:

- Commended Public Printer James L. Harrison for "improving the morale" of employes of the Government Printing Office and his willingness to negotiate "fair wages."
- Opposed the taxing of union pensions.
- Urged stepped-up activity in the campaign for enactment of anti-strikebreaker laws at state and municipal levels.
- Urged support of the Portland Reporter, daily tabloid newspaper which began publication as a result of the Portland newspaper strike.
- Commended Histadrut, the Israeli labor movement, "for helping create a labor-minded, democratic state in the Middle East."
- Approved the Celler committee investigation of newspaper monopolies.

One of the surprise highlights of the convention was the Honolulu local's bid for the 1964 ITU convention. Since no other city competed, the sessions will be held in the nation's 50th state.

Kermit Eby Dies, Former CIO Staffer

Chicago—Kermit Eby, director of research and education for the former CIO from 1942 until 1948, died of cancer in Billings Hospital here after a long illness. He was 58.

Born near Wakarusa, Ind., he was an ordained minister of the Church of the Brethren whose interest in teaching led him into the executive secretaryship of Chicago Local 1 of the Teachers from 1937 to 1942. Previously he had taught in elementary and high schools in Indiana and Michigan and had been pastor of Baugo Brethren Church, Wakarusa. He was graduated from Manchester (Ind.) College in 1937.

After leaving the CIO he joined the faculty of the University of Chicago and was professor of social sciences at the time of his death. He also wrote widely and delivered a series of annual Religion Emphasis Week lectures at colleges.

Survivors are his widow, Rethe L., two sons, a daughter, his parents and four grandchildren. Funeral services were in Baugo, with burial in nearby Olive Center Church Cemetery.

By AFL-CIO Economists:

Budget Reform Held Key Growth Factor

Federal budget reform, long urged by leading economists, would be "a powerful instrument" for economic growth, according to an analysis by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research in the August issue of the American Federationist.

The analysis in the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine points up the value of a federal capital budget to separate the ordinary operating expenses of government from those expenditures and investments which add to the assets of the government or which will yield benefits in future years.

Under the present budget, described as "an archaic document of limited usefulness," this distinction is not made.

"As a practical matter," the article notes, "the failure to distinguish between investments and current outlays acts as a brake on the kind of fiscal and economic policies that are necessary to achieve a maximum impact of federal programs upon the economy."

Although the distinctions between the two types of budgets are necessarily complex to the layman, the concept of a capital budget is far from new, the article observes, pointing out that many large corporations, state governments and foreign countries use this method of keeping accounts.

Back in 1949, it notes, the first Hoover Commission recommended establishment of a capital budget. And Pres. Kennedy, in his budget message earlier this year, emphasized the "importance" of recognizing that the federal budget "includes substantial expenditures for loans, public works and other durable assets and capital items which will yield benefits in future years."

The President added, also, that expenditures for education and research add "to the nation's level of knowledge and skill and thereby increase the capacity to produce a larger national output in future years."

Urging that "the first long step" be taken toward budget reform, the article proposes establishment of a presidential commission "to study the problem and make findings and recommendations within a year."

The commission's report would then set the stage for implementing legislation, "accompanied by a full range of public hearings in appropriate committees of Congress."

A capital budget would not resolve differences over what kind of fiscal, economic or tax policies are required under given circumstances, AFL-CIO economists point out, but it would make it easier to analyze the economy and "provide the necessary information" on which economic decisions can be made.

The present budgetary system, the article declares, "overstates the amount of money that must be raised by taxes as well as generating pressures for new forms of federal taxation, mostly of the regressive type."

WHITE HOUSE LUNCHEON found the AFL-CIO Executive Council breaking bread with Pres. Kennedy in the state dining room. The President is at right center, with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany on his right and Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg across the table.

Democrats in Congress Pledge To Fight for Kennedy 'Job' Bills

Congressional Democratic leaders have told Pres. Kennedy that they will make every effort to pass the six bills which he said are needed to "speed up our economy" and provide "more jobs and more growth."

In his radio-television address to the nation, Kennedy asked "the help of Congress and the American people" in getting action on the measures before adjournment.

Here is the current status of the six bills:

PUBLIC WORKS: A bill authorizing $900 million for accelerated federal public works spending, including matching grants to cities and states, has been cleared for an early vote in the House. It would provide 150,000 new jobs, concentrated in areas of heavy unemployment. The Senate has already passed a public works measure, authorizing $750 million in immediate spending and another $750 million to be used if economic conditions worsen.

TEMPORARY EXTENDED UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION: With the expiration of last year's temporary program, Kennedy noted, 100,000 persons each month exhaust their regular state benefits without finding jobs.

In a quick response to the President's public appeal for action, House Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) announced that hearings will get under way Aug. 22. The bill must then clear the Rules Committee, pass the House and be acted on by the Senate.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: "In this country today we have one million boys and girls out of school, out of work . . . The youth employment opportunities bill would give them a chance to work . . . and I think it is better than having them standing on street corners without hope," the President said.

Legislation setting up a Youth Conservation Corps, modeled after the CCC of the New Deal era, and a companion public service employment program for the cities has had Senate committee approval for more than a year and House committee endorsement since March. It has languished in the House Rules Committee since then.

TRADE EXPANSION: Kennedy scored one of his few big victories in this session of Congress when the House passed his trade expansion bill intact, including the key adjustment protection for workers and companies which might be harmed by increased imports. The bill gives the President broad powers to negotiate two-way tariff cuts with the booming European Common Market, America's biggest customer. The bill is now in the hands of the Senate Finance Committee.

TAX INVESTMENT CREDIT: This proposal to cut the taxes of companies which invest in new equipment is the only item on the President's priority list not supported by the AFL-CIO. Labor considers it an unjustified windfall. The provision is included in an omnibus tax revision package which includes a number of measures aimed at closing tax loopholes and discouraging the export of jobs and capital to foreign "tax havens." The Senate Finance Committee has weakened the House-passed bill in a number of ways, including elimination of labor-backed withholding taxes on dividend and interest income.

COLLEGE AID: On paper, this bill which the President termed "the key to our economic and social advance" has progressed further than any of the other measures. It passed both the Senate and the House. But conferees have been deadlocked since early spring with no signs of agreement in sight. The Senate bill provides scholarship aid to students, which the House opposes. The House bill provides for grants and loans to private colleges, including church-supported institutions, which the Senate conferees oppose.

In addition to these measures, the President referred in his speech to a House-passed bill to raise postage rates and end a $600 million a year "deficit."

A week earlier, after a meeting with the President, Democratic congressional leaders also listed farm legislation, foreign aid appropriations, the communications satellite proposal, government employe pay raises, mass transit facilities, drug control, UN bond purchase and mass immunization bills as a part of the Administration's priority program.

Appeals Court Balks Firings by Railroads

(Continued from Page 1)

Firemen, Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors—followed up their court victory with an appeal to management to return to the bargaining table. Company negotiators had broken off negotiations after the unions had refused to accept a work rules package proposed early this year by a presidential commission.

In a joint statement, the unions declared that "the public will benefit" if management uses the court-ordered delay to return to the bargaining table.

"We would welcome a resumption of negotiations, devoid of the atmosphere of pressure, so that a fair and equitable solution can be worked out," the union statement said.

In other major developments on the railroads:

- A major advertising campaign was launched by the Railway Labor Executives' Association calling for a congressional investigation of the financial structure of the railroads "to expose once and for all the 'poverty' myth."

The first full-page ad, which ran in 33 leading newspapers, charged that the railroads were using a false plea of "poverty" in an effort "to create a favorable climate for escaping regulation, for smoothing the way for monopolistic mergers and consolidations, for reducing service and eliminating jobs."

In a companion letter to members of Congress, RLEA Chairman G. E. Leighty noted that U.S. railroads in 1960 had $11.4 billion in capital surplus and retained income, an increase of $4.4 billion from 1950.

- In Canada, a unanimous recommendation of a conciliation board for a wage and job security settlement involving 100,000 non-operating rail workers has been accepted in principle by both unions and management. It would provide an employer-financed job security fund, to be jointly administered. The fund could be used for such programs as severance pay, supplementary unemployment benefits, retraining and relocation of employes. In addition, union members will receive an 8-cent hourly raise over a two-year contract.

It was the first time in Canadian rail history that a conciliation board, which includes one representative each named by the unions, management and the government, had submitted a unanimous report.

- A three-year-old wage dispute between the Switchmen and 11 U.S. western and southern railroads was settled with a 5 percent retroactive increase. A 2.5 percent raise will date back to July 1, 1960, and an additional 2.5 percent to Mar. 1, 1961. Paid holiday improvements are still to be negotiated.

- A scheduled strike by the Railway Clerks against the Southern Pacific was averted as Pres. Kennedy named an emergency board to investigate the job stabilization dispute.

CORRECTION

Mrs. Amy Terry of New York, listed as a social worker in an article in the Aug. 4 issue of the AFL-CIO News on her appointment as an industrial training adviser in the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, has been instead an active member of Retail-Wholesale Dist. 65 for 21 years and has served on the district staff as organizer, employment office supervisor, chairman of the Harlem community group in the Civil Rights Dept., and in other posts.

CWA Expels 19 in Plot To Support Teamsters

Nineteen members of the Communications Workers have been expelled and two suspended following a verdict of guilty by a union trial court on charges of plotting to swing their 17,000-member Western Electric bargaining unit into the Teamsters.

The trial court, in five days of informal hearings, ruled that the expelled and suspended members had conspired to pull the bargaining unit out of CWA by stirring up mass secession movements.

Testimony was presented that the unaffiliated Teamsters—expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt leadership—was backing the secession movement with funds reported up to $500,000.

K. A. Silvers, former director of CWA's Western Electric Installation Unit, was among those ousted by the trial court, which was headed by W. Robert Hansen. Silvers declined to show up for the trial, announcing publicly that he was now working full time for the Teamsters.

Only six defendants presented their cases. Three others offered preliminary defenses or statements. All others were tried in absentia.

The CWA court was made up of laymen and union members, rather than lawyers. Prosecutor Glenn Watts, following the guilty verdict, pointed out that it had kept control of its procedures despite "very trying circumstances," including "shouting" and other disruptions.

Watts emphasized that the right of any individual to join a union of his choice was not involved, but the single issue of a conspiracy to assist and support the Teamsters in a "raid" designed to take a bargaining unit away from CWA.

The 19 expelled defendants formerly were members of five CWA locals. The two suspended defendants represent CWA Local 7290 in Omaha, Neb., and Council Bluffs, Ia. Trial of a representative of Local 9390, St. Louis, was postponed because the defendant pleaded illness.

Ten members from Local 3290, Atlanta, Ga., announced the local had seceded. Under court order, affairs of the CWA local were put in the hands of W. O. Stanley of the union staff, Pres. Joseph A. Beirne announced.

Absentee Ballots Challenged:

Vote Fraud Charges Raised in Tennessee Democratic Primary

By Willard Shelton

Nashville, Tenn.—A political scandal with national overtones has boiled up in the 5th Dist. Democratic congressional primary, in which incumbent Rep. J. Carlton Loser belatedly emerged as a challenged victor over Richard H. Fulton on the basis of absentee ballots counted amid widespread charges of irregularities and fraud.

Fulton campaigned against Loser on a straightout pledge to support Pres. Kennedy's program including the health care for the aged bill that Loser opposed. Labor gave active backing to Fulton.

In Washington a Justice Dept. spokesman said that charges of irregularities were "actively" under investigation to determine whether an improper ballot tally resulted in "dilution" of the votes of citizens cast legally.

Absentee ballots in this city's 2nd Ward, dominated by a local city councilman named Eugene ("Little Evil") Jacobs, turned a 143-vote margin for Fulton into a disputed 72-vote plurality for Loser.

Backed by affidavits gathered by the Nashville Tennessean and other sources, Fulton said he would carry a challenge to Loser's certification to the State Democratic Primary Board, scheduled to meeet here Aug. 22.

The tally of voting machines in Jacobs' 2nd Ward showed that Fulton carried it 619 to 590. The disputed absentee ballots went overwhelmingly for Loser—223 to 17.

Fulton carried Jacobs' home precinct 160 to 116 on the machines. Purportedly valid absentee ballots tallied from the precinct went to Loser 125 to 7.

In 10 days of turbulent political controversy, including public hearings of the Davidson County Primary Board that accepted the disputed absentee ballots, the Tennessean printed various affidavits from workhouse inmates and other persons who swore that they had neither applied for, marked nor returned as required by law the ballots tallied in their names.

The Justice Dept. inquiry, a high-ranking spokesman said, was launched to determine whether federally guaranteed rights were denied citizens in a federal election. U.S. Attorney Kenneth Harwell has requested a list of all election officials who worked in the 2nd Ward.

A state grand jury is scheduled to begin an investigation next month.

Mrs. Charles Houk, a member of the primary board, repeatedly charged irregularities in the absentee ballots from the 2nd Ward. She said she would file a minority report challenging the four-member majority's certification of the tally to the State Primary Board. Mrs. Houk is the wife of the Tennessee State AFL-CIO treasurer.

In one public hearing a school teacher, protesting the tally, asked what she should "tell my 7th grade pupils about good government." Respond-d State Rep. Charles Galbreath:

"I'll answer that. Tell them that right before the eyes of the city police, the county patrol and the FBI an election was stolen."

The scandal-tainted election took on national significance because of the sharpness of the health-care issue drawn between Loser and Fulton in the campaign. In another Tennessee congressional race, the 3rd (Chattanooga), the same issue played a major part in the defeat of incumbent Rep. James B. Frazier, Jr., by Wilkes T. Thrasher, Jr.

Frazier has been a member of the House Ways & Means Committee, usually considered a potent asset for an incumbent in southern states. In his case it appeared to observers to have damaged him because he was one of the conservatives who bottled up the Anderson-King health care bill.

PRES. KENNEDY SIGNS bill requiring payment of overtime rates after 40 hours a week or eight hours a day on all government-assisted construction, with the comment that it "represents progress long overdue." Previously, he noted, some contractors could work employes up to 56 hours at straight-time pay. Standing, left to right, are Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. Also present for the White House signing ceremony were BCTD Sec.-Treas. Frank Bonadio and Legislative Rep. Walter Mason.

IAM Wins 3-Year Pact At Republic Aviation

Farmingdale, N. Y.—Members of Machinists Lodge 1987 have voted 5-1 to ratify a new three-year agreement providing a full union shop and other major gains for 8,800 employes of the Republic Aviation Corp. The settlement ended the possibility of a renewed walkout.

Lodge Pres. Justin Ostro said the agreement was the best in the local's history and augurs well for future harmonious union-management relations.

IAM members struck Republic Apr. 2 and returned to their jobs June 16 in compliance with a court order. Union negotiators headed by IAM Vice Pres. Matthew DeMore listed these highlights of the new pact:

- Raises averaging 6.5 cents an hour this year, 7.5 cents next Apr. 1 and 8 cents on Apr. 6, 1964, will be added to old rates averaging $2.75 an hour. The cost-of-living escalator plan was retained with earlier increases frozen into the base rates.
- Management will make a contribution of $1 million to a severance pay fund, and then pay 5 cents an hour for each hour worked. Laid-off workers will get a lump sum payment of $50 per year of service to a maximum of $500.
- Group insurance coverage for members and their families is fully company-financed, with an increase of 2 cents an hour in company contributions. Improvements include payment of the full cost of a semi-private hospital room, an increased surgical schedule, and extension of insurance coverage for 31 days while on layoff or approved leave of absence.
- A new clause provides that no employe may be compelled to work more than 45 minutes a day outside of his classification.

Other contract improvements include three weeks' paid vacation after 10 years, company reimbursement for unlimited jury service, and an improved holiday pay clause. Principal non-economic items including seniority, promotions, subcontracting and grievance handling were satisfactorily resolved, according to the IAM.

As part of the settlement, it was agreed that all strike time will be counted toward seniority and toward eligibility for fringe benefits.

The union said that when the strike began the Republic employment outlook was poor. Since then the company has won a number of new contracts and predicts no decrease in employment during the year ahead.

1,007 Credit Unions Operated by Labor

Madison, Wis.—Labor unions now operate 1,007 credit unions, or 4.98 percent of the 20,902 in existence in the United States, statistics compiled for the 1962 Credit Union Yearbook show.

Most of them function in connection with AFL-CIO unions, including 118 operated by electrical workers, 87 by auto workers and 64 by carpenters.

U.S. credit unions in 1961 gained 801,300 new members and added $606 million to savings accounts. Total membership is 12.8 million, and savings have reached more than $5.5 billion.

Unions Asked to Back Equal Job Rights Steps

Chicago—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has "strongly recommended" to federation affiliates that they join with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity in statements pressing the drive against discrimination in employment.

In a letter to all AFL-CIO unions, Meany said, "We have been advised that the President's committee will propose to each of our national and international unions that it sign, jointly with the President's committee, a statement setting forth specific steps to be taken toward the attainment of their common objective of non-discrimination."

The federation president strongly urged unions to join in these statements "to give effect to the civil rights policy and program" adopted by the AFL-CIO convention in 1961.

Pres. Kennedy's order creating the committee, Meany wrote, "marked the beginning of a vigorous drive against discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin in federal employment and in all employment under federal government contracts."

The AFL-CIO has been working closely with the committee "in the development of a concerted drive against discrimination and for the widest acceptance of fair practices," Meany said.

The civil rights program adopted by the last convention called for elimination of segregation of local union membership on the basis of race or color, contract provisions barring discrimination in hiring and promotion, non-discrimination in apprentice training programs, fullest cooperation with the President's committee, passage of a federal fair employment practices act and enactment of enforceable state laws.

The President's committee is empowered to bar government contracts to firms practicing discrimination. A number of companies have signed agreements with the committee pledging to bar discriminatory practices. The joint statements to AFL-CIO affiliates recommended by Meany would be along similar lines.

Foes of 'Work' Given Time on Signatures

Oklahoma City—Opponents of a so-called "right-to-work" proposal in Oklahoma have won an additional 60 days to challenge a petition to put a proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot after reporting that more than one-third of the signatures examined were found to be "fraudulent and false."

Oklahoma Sec. of State William N. Christian granted the extension after attorneys for citizen groups opposing "right-to-work" challenged 50,000 of 145,000 signatures and said samplings indicated that many others would be invalidated through comparison with county voter registration books.

Approximately 78,000 of the total of 213,716 signatures on the initiative petition must be invalidated in order to keep the issue off the ballot. Some 65,000 signatures have not yet been given even a preliminary examination by the challengers.

William C. Kessler, representing a group of union officials, educators, business and professional leaders and farmers who have challenged the petitions, said in a report to the secretary of state:

"There can be little doubt that fraudulent and improper signatures to this petition were not only accepted but actually encouraged by some of the circulators . . . who were paid on the basis of each signature obtained."

In a preliminary check of signatures against the voter lists in Tulsa and Mayes Counties, Kessler reported a "high percentage" of signatures by unregistered persons.

"In Mayes County, our first check showed 75 percent of the petition signers either not registered or registered improperly," Kessler reported.. "A sampling of 4,700 voters in Tulsa County reveals less than 50 percent valid signatures."

The attorney said the petition examination turned up nearly 2,000 instances where the same name appeared more than once and cases where the same name appeared four times.

Right-wing groups, sparked by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's new Committee for Voluntary Unionism, launched the petition drive in January after "right-to-work" proposals had been killed in the state legislature.

Opponents of R-T-W had originally been granted 90 days to examine and challenge the signatures. Extension of the period for an additional 60 days to Oct. 16 bolstered their hopes of keeping the proposed contitutional amendment off the November election ballot.

8-18-62

Shoe Union Settles Strike, Wins 2 Votes

The United Shoe Workers have won bargaining rights at plants in Maine and Missouri employing nearly 900 workers and have signed a new two-year contract ending an 11-week strike in New York City.

The new contract is between the union's Joint Council 13 and the Dazzle Toes Sales Corp., makers of women's slippers. The plant had been picketed by the union and the New York City Central Labor Council on behalf of employes who rebelled against an alleged "sweetheart" contract between the company and an "independent" local union.

An election won by the United Shoe Workers at the Gardiner, Me., Shoe Co. was appealed by management to the National Labor Relations Board. After hearings, the board certified the union as bargaining agent.

In another NLRB election, employes of Sport Specialty Shoemakers Co., Chaffee, Mo., voted 228 for the United Shoe Workers and 191 for no union. Negotiations on a new contract have been opened by a negotiating committee representing Local 269.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, August 25, 1962 | No. 34

Meany Calls on U.S. to Spur New 'Surge of Progress'

25TH ANNIVERSARY of the national apprenticeship program was marked by talks from leaders of the three groups involved—labor, business and government. At the anniversary banquet, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Pres. Frank Burrows of the Associated Contractors of America and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg cited the need for more apprentices to meet the requirements of the 1960s.

Sees Government Role Indispensable

The nation needs a new "surge of progress" to meet the "fundamental needs of our society," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared and called on the government to play its "indispensable part."

Only the federal government, Meany said, "can provide the leadership, the ground rules and, when necessary, the direct economic stimulus to reach and maintain full employment."

The labor movement deeply regrets, he added in an address marking the 25th anniversary of the national apprenticeship program, that "the business world looks upon the federal government as an enemy to be feared."

"Surely it cannot be said," he added, "that the federal government has been an enemy with respect to this apprenticeship program; nor has it been a hostile force in financing research projects or in many other fields that are useful to business."

He urged business leaders to support "those broader government actions that will help free business and free labor to build a better, more prosperous nation."

The labor movement, he stressed, believes that the "moral and legal force of the federal government should be fully applied against all forms of discrimination, in every aspect of American life. We believe it is essential for the federal government to broaden its role in public education, in health, in old-age security."

Speech Topped Observance

Meany's address topped a day-long observance of the 25th anniversary of the apprenticeship program at a silver anniversary banquet. Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and Frank Burrows, president of the Associated General Contractors of America, also joined in the tribute to the program. The session was attended by over 500 leaders in the apprenticeship and on-the-job training fields.

Noting the anniversary aspects

(Continued on Page 3)

Labor Asks Drug Safety Protection

An Administration bill to give the public greater protection from harmful drug products has been backed by the AFL-CIO in House committee hearings — with the suggestion that even stronger safeguards are needed.

Appearing before the House Commerce Committee headed by Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller pointed out that the drug issue has been "exhaustively explored" in the past and that it would be "cruel and inhuman to delay action" any longer.

He cited the nation's "incredibly narrow escape" from general distribution of the "dangerous tranquilizing drug thalidomide" and reminded the committee also of testimony before the Kefauver Senate subcommittee of "unconscionable profiteering" in the drug industry.

"Here we have an industry," he told the Harris unit, "that tried its utmost to bulldoze a dedicated government employe" into clearing a drug that the employe —Dr. Frances Kelsey of the Food & Drug Administration— suspected was dangerous.

"Here we have an industry proven to have inflated its prices beyond all bounds," he said.

Biemiller said that when a mother has a sick child, she wants to be sure of the drug she is administering, and "she should have that confidence, and it is within the power of this Congress to give her that peace of mind."

Legislation to protect the public adequately, he said, should include these safeguards:

- Greater flexibility for the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare in acting on new drug applications.
- A requirement that new drug applicants keep records and furnish reports on experience with the medication both in the investigational stage and after approval for general prescription use.
- Strengthened authority for the HEW Secretary to remove approved drugs immediately from the market if their use reveals an imminent hazard to the public health.

Provisions Held Justified

Biemiller said these provisions are "fully justified" and declared they would free the FDA from undue pressure and enable the agency to make a thorough evaluation of all evidence involving each new drug.

Though the Administration bill, sponsored by Harris, does not include controls on pricing, Biemiller said labor is "urgently concerned over the high prices of many vitally important drugs" and believes

(Continued on Page 10)

Adjustment Aid Vital:

Council Urges Action On Trade Expansion

By Saul Miller

Chicago—Speedy Senate action on the House-passed trade expansion bill and prompt congressional steps to bring down the high price of drugs and ensure their safety and efficacy were called for by the AFL-CIO Executive Council here.

The council urged these actions on the final day of its summer meeting and also approved other statements warning of the military threat to democracy in Latin America and giving strong endorsement to the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation in its campaign to stamp out hunger and malnutrition in underprivileged areas.

On the trade bill, the council praised the House for performing a "major public service" in passing without substantial change the President's program, especially the trade adjustment assistance section to help firms and workers adjust to import competition.

AFL-CIO Position Reaffirmed

The statement reaffirmed the AFL-CIO position that the support of American labor for the trade bill "is wholly contingent upon the inclusion of these trade adjustment provisions so that a few workers and firms will not have to bear the burden of a program undertaken in the general public interest."

Speeding the legislation to the President's desk in the form approved by the House will strengthen the U.S., assure the continued unity of the Atlantic Community and preserve the "economic might of the free world," the council declared.

The statement on drug legislation noted that the thalidomide episode has highlighted the "complex and vital" issues involved in proposals growing out of investigations by the Kefauver Anti-Trust & Monopoly subcommittee.

(Continued on Page 12)

Zelenko Hit On Probe Prejudice

New York—A House subcommittee investigation of charges of discrimination and other improprieties by the Ladies' Garment Workers got off to a rough start here, with the subcommittee's special consultant, Herbert Hill, checked by members in the presentation of his own prepared testimony.

In a stormy scene, subcommittee Chairman Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.) was bluntly accused by ILGWU Vice Pres. Charles S. Zimmerman of having prejudged the issues in a television comment before the hearings on alleged "patterns of discrimination."

Zimmerman, former chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Civil Rights, angrily told Zelenko that the chairman had "found us guilty on television," had asked loaded questions and had not allowed the witness to correct mis-statements of alleged fact about the provisions of an ILGWU contract.

Zimmerman, threatened by Zelenko with a contempt-of-Congress citation, made it clear that his counter-charges were directed only at Zelenko and not at other members of the subcommittee. He reluctantly agreed, finally, to have the

(Continued on Page 12)

Nixon Challenged on 'Labor Boss' Slur

Long Beach, Calif.—Basic concepts of unionism have become a major issue in California politics.

The furor began when former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon recently denounced officials of the California State AFL-CIO as "union political bosses," saying he will "take my case over their heads directly to the union members in my person-to-person political campaign."

Nixon, the Republican nominee for governor who is seeking to unseat incumbent Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown, called Brown a "rubber stamp for everything the union officials want—right or wrong."

The uproar took place during the convention of the federation held here when Thomas L. Pitts, executive secretary-treasurer, said Nixon's remarks outside of the convention revealed his true attitudes toward organized labor.

Pitts noted that recently the Nixon for Governor Committee sent California employers letters saying it was "obvious" it would not have "access or entry to the union working man through any 'front door' approach."

The Nixon forces suggested the use of a "back door approach such

(Continued on Page 9)

70 Unions Back Plan For L.A. Organizing

Full cooperation of 70 national and international unions was pledged to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a two-day meeting of union presidents or their representatives in Washington on the federation's pilot organizing project under way in Los Angeles.

Target areas for the drive include workers in the hard and soft goods industries, government employes and hotel and restaurant workers.

Federation Dir. of Organization John Livingston outlined the results of a survey conducted by the unions showing approximately 750,000 unorganized workers in these fields. Five thousand cards produced by the survey give the names and locations of shops in which the unorganized workers are employed.

In his outline of the organizing plan to the union representatives, Meany pointed out that the Los Angeles area now has a population of roughly 7 million and is growing by leaps and bounds in industrial importance. He said the organizing drive was a job for the international unions and their locals in cooperation with the AFL-CIO. He said that no union in the Los Angeles area has its potential fully organized and that the unions there are extremely enthusiastic about the program.

Meany emphasized that local

(Continued on Page 3)

ORGANIZED LABOR staged a rally in City Park, Du Quoin, Ill., to demonstrate support for Packinghouse Workers Local 156 in its strike against the Du Quoin Packing Co., which started 10 months ago, and against an attempted raid by the Teamsters. Here are some of the 220 strikers showing their appreciation of the backing.

Striking UPWA Local Repels Teamster Raid

Du Quoin, Ill.—Members of Packinghouse Workers Local 156, on strike for nearly 10 months against the Du Quoin Packing Co., repulsed a raid by the unaffiliated Teamsters and defeated them 172 to 37 in an NLRB election. The company challenged seven ballots.

There was expectation that contract talks, suspended since early in June, would be resumed shortly.

Morale of the strikers was given a big lift here at a labor rally in City Park attended by nearly 1,000 people.

The rally followed a motorcade of about 150 cars carrying hundreds of union members from Illinois and nearby states. Delegations included union members from industrial and building trades unions, typographical union groups and a number of locals of the unaffiliated Mine Workers in Southern Illinois.

Most of the cars carried signs indicating support of the UPWA strike and condemning the Teamsters' raiding attempt.

Telegrams of support and encouragement were read from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. Attendance was urged on locals and central bodies in the area by AFL-CIO Reg. XIV Dir. Daniel J. Healy, and Assistant Dir. Edward S. Haines spoke at the rally.

UPWA Sec.-Treas. G. R. Hathaway termed the rally "one of the most heartening demonstrations of trade union solidarity" in his experience and expressed hope it would persuade the company to end strikebreaking activities and negotiate in good faith. He noted that the wage rate is more than 70 cents an hour below the industry average and that other contract items were substandard.

UPWA Dist. 1 Dir. Charles Hayes told the rally that company representatives had approached an official of the Meat Cutters with alternative propositions for supplanting UPWA as the bargaining agent.

"This officer of a sister AFL-CIO union refused to have any part of the company's strike-breaking activities," Hayes said.

RCIA Local Makes Scholarship Grants

Buena Park, Calif.—Fourteen college scholarship grants totaling $5,000 have been awarded for the coming school year by Retail Clerks Local 324. Faculty representatives of five area colleges chose the winners

Steel Leaders Oppose Curbs On Bargaining

Chicago—Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers and Joseph L. Block, chairman of the board of Inland Steel Co., said government has the right and the responsibility to define the national interest in union-management negotiations but must not impose restrictions on the parties to collective bargaining.

"I quite agree that government shouldn't merely meddle, 'McDonald said. "But I also believe that it should be a full partner with labor and management in a cooperative effort to solve our mutual problems, sensibly and equitably, in order that our nation can go forward to economic growth."

Block declared government may not use "any means it pleases to implement its view, regardless of the absence of enabling legislation."

Free speech and a free press prevail in the economic area as they do in all others, and, of course, we must be ever vigilant to assure their preservation," he said.

Block and McDonald were principal speakers at the 4th annual labor-management executives luncheon during the Chicago Int. Trade Fair. The luncheon was sponsored by the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry. Title of their discussion was the "Need for Better Cooperation Between Labor, Management and Government."

They agreed that steel labor and management have come a long way since the 116-day strike in 1959. They said procedures for cooperation written into the 1959 contract paved the way for this year's peaceful and early non-inflationary settlement.

McDonald said he was glad the Steelworkers was only an observer of the steel price-increase furor of last spring. Block said he was shocked at the use of power by the Administration, but said the government had a right to state its position.

Walsh-Healey Atomic Safety Rules Offered

Thousand of workers would receive increased protection against the hazards of radiation under a proposal by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg to incorporate health and safety standards in Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act regulations.

The proposed regulations would prescribe limitations for employe exposure to radiation or to airborne radioactive material and require the supplying of monitoring equipment to employe. They would also require employers to maintain records of radiation exposure for all employes for whom monitoring is required and to advise employes, on request, of individual exposure.

Special provisions also were offered for the protection of male employes under 18.

The Labor Dept. called the proposals "minimum standards necessary to protect employes" who work on federal contracts involving radiation hazards. It described them as similar to Atomic Energy Commission standards.

It's Good He Didn't Use a Power Shovel

Anchorage, Alaska—It was an unfair labor practice, the National Labor Relations Board has decided, for an employer to hand Equipment Operator Gary A. Smart a shovel and to order him to dig a 20-foot ditch under two sets of railroad tracks, then to fire him when he tossed a shovelful of dirt at his foreman.

The reason that it was unfair, the board said, was because the assignment was in retaliation for Smart's action in doing his duty as financial secretary of the unaffiliated Mine Workers, Local 1239. Smart took the names of three company supervisors off the union's dues checkoff list. The supervisors feared they would lose union health and welfare benefits. The contract excluded supervisors.

The board adopted Trial Examiner C. W. Whittemore's recommendation that the Mrak Coal Company, Inc., be ordered to restore Smart to the operator's job from which he was fired last year, and to give him lost pay.

Morgan Cancellation Cited:

Labor Renews Bid For Station Probe

The AFL-CIO has renewed its demand for a Federal Communications Commission investigation of a Birmingham, Ala., radio station which it charged with "arbitrary action" in cancelling a network radio program sponsored by the labor federation.

In a letter to FCC Chairman Newton Minow, the AFL-CIO said the commission had apparently accepted the "self-serving and devious" response to its original complaint against WBRC, a station owned by the Taft Broadcasting Co. Noting that Minow had urged elevation of "the standards and balance of radio and TV programming," the AFL-CIO complaint said:

